From there, it was smooth sailing, as Baylark – on 2nd-and-5 from his own 30-yard line – turned a run up the middle into a 60-yard breakout play down the right sideline to the New Hampshire 10-yard line. Baylark caught a nine-yard Coen strike and pounded it into the end zone from the 1-yard line on the next play for the first score of the game.

"In the first half we come right down the field and score," Brown said. "I feel real good about our offense and the way we performed. I thought we did a good job of moving the football and creating balance."

Coen finished with 231 yards in the air, two touchdowns and one pick on 19-for-28 throwing.

Santos and the UNH offense put up 17 points in the first half, including a monstrous 87-yard run by Chad Kackert on the Wildcats' first play from scrimmage, tying the game at 7-all. The drive: one play, 87 yards, 40 seconds.

"As a defensive play-caller, you don't feel too good when [UNH] takes the first one 87 [yards] on you," Brown said. "I wasn't feeling very good at that point because we worked very hard to get off on the right foot on our first drive, and it kind of felt like I let the troops down.

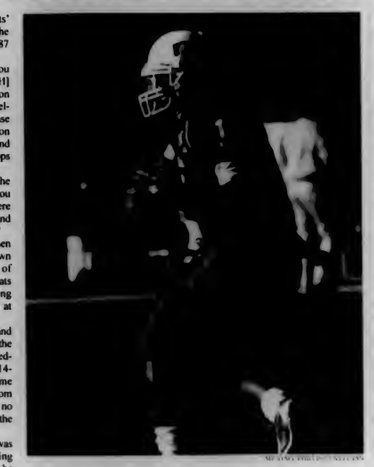
"It's 7-7 and it's like starting the game over again," he added. "So you just start competing again. We were just a little late on the rotation and they executed the play very well."

UMass tight end Ian Jorgensen caught a Coen pass for a touchdown and a 14-7 lead at the 8:56 mark of the second quarter, but the Wildcats picked Coen on UMass' ensuing drive and started their possession at the Minutemen's 39-yard line.

Santos took full advantage and hit Levan in the right corner of the end zone for a touchdown after shedding a few tacklers to tie it up at 14-all. The Wildcats went into halftime with a 17-14 lead after kicker Tom Manning nailed a 41-yarder with no time left, and Brown changed the game plan for the second half.

"The decision at halftime was real simple: We're not letting [Santos] run around anymore," he said. "We're going to get after him. If it works, it works. If it doesn't, so be it."

It worked. The Wildcats didn't score in the second half and the Minutemen, after a late-game scare and Hatchell's dramatic knock-down, won the biggest game on the biggest stage.



MICHAEL SWEENEY/COLLEGIAN

Junior wideout J.J. Moore led UMass in receptions on Saturday with six. He finished the game with 60 yards receiving and a 13-yard punt return.

"I couldn't be happier for our staff and our players," Brown beamed. "We've talked about having quality in all three phases, and all three phases – offense, defense and kicking – had a hand in this W today. It was just a great opportunity for our guys to play in a game of this magnitude."

Now it's on to Montana and the national semifinals with the biggest game in Division I-AA football just one win away.

Santos unsuccessful under heavy pressure

QB PRESSURE from page 10

the right outside linebacker's stunt was called off and the left outside backer blitzed.

"They run a slide protection to utilize the back and bring the back to one side or another then full slide to the other – it's a good way to do that," Brown said. "We just sent the opposite guy off the edge and read the back, so we had two guys that were in read."

A sack played a key role on UNH's final drive. Two plays before Jason Hatchell's pass deflection saved the game for the Minutemen, Burris and Brandon Collier hauled down Santos for a loss of three yards. The play turned a 2nd-and-9 situation into 3rd-and-12.

The very next play Ball caught an 11-yard pass along the right sideline that came up just short of the first-down marker. Santos said more than anything else, the constant pressure he faced Saturday forced him into poor decisions.

"The big thing today was the pressure they put on us all day," Santos said. "They did a great job of game planning, like I said, [UMass] really put some heat on us and made it uncomfortable for us out there."

Brandon Freeman even got into the mix. The reserve defensive back sacked Santos for a loss of three yards early in the third quarter. UMass brought just about everybody at one point or another.

"I think we brought every position on the field today with the exception of the free safety," Brown said, with Brandon Smith occupying the only spot not to rush the passer. "We're certainly trying to create as much havoc as we can. All we're really trying to do is get the ball back for the offense in good field position and get off the field."

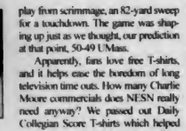
Blitzes are a staple of Brown's defensive packages. Each week, he and his players say the key to victory is getting pressure on the opposing quarterback. A lot can come from pressuring the offensive backfield. It decreases the amount of time a quarterback has to go through progressions. When a team is forced to rush a play, the timing is thrown off.

"That's just what we do here," said senior linebacker Brad Anderson. His interception in the fourth quarter was a direct result of pressure on Santos. "We're very aggressive, and to have as many guys have sacks all across the board – corners, safeties – it just goes to show you that we like to get after the quarterback, and we're not afraid to bring it."

And bring it they have. Through 13 games this season, the Minutemen took down the quarterback 36 times for a loss of 222 yards. In comparison, UMass quarterback Liam Coen has hit the turf just 14 times.

A fan's perspective on a wild weekend

Nick Belanger



Matt Belliveau

This column is in no way, shape or form objective, first and foremost. We were Minutemen fans this weekend, not Collegian editors.

As a fan, you're a slave to the masses, when someone yells "let's go UMass," you clap five times, and join right in chanting. After four games in two days, including the biggest football game this campus has seen since 1998, our voices are shot, our feet hurt and our hands are sore from clapping. As fans we are the "home (field, court, ice) advantage," so why shouldn't we suffer battle wounds.

UMass, Niagara

Who the hell is Niagara, and what made them think they were in the same class as the Mass Attack? The Mullins Center is a tough place for a visiting team, a crowd full of liquored up hostile undergrads can be unforgiving to a visiting team, even if no one has ever heard of them.

We parked what seemed like a mile away from the Mullins Friday night, but thanks to good hustle we got in just in time to snake a couple of seats right on the ice.

Juliano Pagliero, Niagara's goalie, was a big sieve, so much so that former defenseman, turn captain forward Mark Matheson netted his first career hat-trick against the pathetic Purple Eagles. But to be fair, Matheson could light up any collegiate goalie, on any given night, except of course Jon Quick, who actually resembles a brick wall between the pipes.

The final score was 6-2 UMass, a nice warm up for the main event of the weekend: the showdown with UNH.

Game of the century

Saturday's playoff matchup wasn't about Ricky Santos vs. Liam Coen, in fact it wasn't even about UMass vs. UNH. In our minds, and for any true UMass football fan it was all about future NFL receiver David Ball vs. future NFL hall-of-famer, Brandon London, or as we know him "B.L.," "B-lon," "Beast" and of course "the great 81."

London is every fan's dream and every cornerback's nightmare; a division I-AA version of Terrell Owens. He has size, speed, strength, cat-like reflexes and a mouth so loud we could hear him over the marching band. Before the game even started, we witnessed B.L. jawing with the UNH sideline. We assume he was calling out the much shorter, slower and over-rated David Ball.

Before kickoff we predicted shoot-out, and we assumed that the last team with the ball would win. And like most fans trying to guess the outcome of a game, we were wrong. Well, half-wrong.

The first possession went well. B.L. set the tone by making a 22-yard catch on second down when the Minutemen were pinned deep inside their 20. Steve "Beast Mode" Baylark then took over, breaking a 60-yard run, and then eventually the games first score, from the 1.

UNH would respond with its first play from scrimmage, an 82-yard sweep for a touchdown. The game was shaping up just as we thought, our prediction at that point, 50-49 UMass.

Apparently, fans love free T-shirts, and it helps ease the boredom of long television time outs. How many Charlie Moore commercials does NESN really need anyway? We passed out Daily Collegian Score T-shirts which helped us get feeling back in our extremities. Seeing liquored up fans fight over cheap (but wicked cool) shirts was a little more fun than it should have been.

We are pretty sure every fan had the same reaction at halftime, "How are we down to UNH right now, and how do we get through the 20-minute halftime without killing ourselves? (We aren't big band guys.)

Six dollar sausage grinders, extra onions baby!

As far as we're concerned, those sausage grinders turned the tide of the game in favor of UMass. The Minutemen took their first offensive possession all the way down the field to the 5-yard line, where the drive stalled, setting up what we assumed to be the game-tying field goal.

Again, we were wrong.

Fake field goal and turnover on downs. Thankfully, the Hatchell brothers, James "I scare young children" Ihedigbo and the UMass defense shut-out Santos, Ball and company for the entire second half.

Somehow, one of us knew what needed to happen next.

"Hey Matt, they need to stretch the field out. London, post route to the end zone."

Next play, 31-yard go-ahead touchdown to B.L.: UMass 21, UNH 17.

Did we mention London's a beast?

That wasn't even the highlight of the night though, that was reserved for our row's drunk 17-year old who decided she was going to run, not walk, down the cement stairs.

Again, one of us knew what was going to happen next.

"Hey Matt, that girl is going to fall down those stairs."

Two seconds later, splat…ouch. She shook it off, good times.

Jack on another three and an unbelievable 4th-and-1 stop, (thank you Jason Hatchell), UMass is now bound for Montana. UMass 24, UNH 17… VICTORY!

Hoop time

We knew it was a long-shot, we knew it was unlikely, but we were all hoping for an upset. And for about 10 seconds it looked like we might have one. Then BC, most notably Jared Dudley, got mad.

James Life did what he does best, draining a three to cut BC's lead to five with 15:48 remaining in the game and sending the entire crowd into a (drunken) frenzy.

Then BC did what it does best; shut us all up with a 20-3 run, capped off by an insane Dudley screaming directly at the full student section in front of him.

Not good times. Very depressing. It was clearly 2-1 out there all night, the referees had already decided BC was winning that game long before it had started (no, we're not bitter).

BC still sucks.

But we're OK now. We have bigger things on our minds, trying to figure out how the heck we're going to get to Montana.

Nick Belanger is the Collegian Editor in Chief, Matt Belliveau is the Collegian News Editor.

Hatchell brothers own New Hampshire

John and Jason finish both UNH games in similar fashion

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

There were 125 plays during Saturday's playoff clash between the Massachusetts football team and New Hampshire. But once again, the game came down to just one snap.

The Wildcats had the ball facing a fourth-and-one from the UMass 6-yard line, with 33 seconds remaining in the contest. UMass was leading 24-17. The fans were pushing the decimals at a sold out McGuirk Stadium. Several sportswriters got out of their seats in the press box to make sure they caught every second of the play that was about to take place.

UNH quarterback Ricky Santos stood in the shotgun formation, while receiver David Ball stepped into the right slot. Santos pointed at the Minuteman defense, and barked out to his teammates. Then the ball spun into his hands, and Santos sprinted out to the left side of the field, fired a pass, trying to hit Keith Levan, who was open in the end zone. UMass linebacker Jason Hatchell was battling with an offensive tackle, but managed to reach up and knock Santos' pass away.

"Ricky was going out, and I see his eyes, and it seemed like he was going to throw a flat ball, or a hitch to the outside, and I just jumped at the right time," Hatchell said.

The defensive effort paved the way for quarterback Liam Coen to kneel down three times on the following series, and solidified the Minutemen's (12-1, 7-0 Atlantic 10) NCAA Championship quarterfinals victory over New Hampshire (9-4). The Minutemen will try and advance to the National Championship game on Friday at 7:30 p.m. when they face Montana in the NCAA semifinals.

Since UMass is the No. 3 seed and Montana is No. 2, the Minutemen played their final contest of the season in Amherst on Saturday.

Following the game, UNH coach Sean McDonald said he opted to run the sprint out left with Santos on the final play because he wanted to go for the touchdown, rather than just the first down.

"We thought we'd get the play right in there and get the touchdown, we thought we were going to score on that play," McDonald said. "We were going for the win, going for the score."

The play drew comparisons to the regular season match-up between UMass and UNH. In that contest on Nov. 4 in Durham, the Wildcats were trailing 28-20 after scoring 17 second half points. The final play of the contest came on a fourth down and goal from the UMass 13-yard line, with Santos trying to get it done at home.

On that play, Santos took the snap, ran to his left. After feeling pressure from Minutemen defenders, he attempted to pitch the ball to the left, but UMass defensive tackle John Hatchell swatted the ball to the ground.

After Saturday's game, UMass coach Don Brown noted the similarities between the Nov. 4 final play and the Dec. 2 one.

"It was just a great play, and almost like a deja vu scenario, it's the same thing as up in Durham," Brown said. "And I guess that's really what separates us, is one play in both games. I thought we did a good job of holding the blitz until the end, and were able to get a hand on it and bat it down."

Since both final plays were made by the Hatchell brothers, Jason Hatchell said his brother John convened on the field after the final defensive play on Saturday.

"[John Hatchell] came right up to me after the play, and he said 'Man, we're some Wildcat killers,'" Jason Hatchell said.

The final play on Saturday capped off one of two close finishes at McGuirk this season. On Nov. 11, with the Atlantic 10 Championship on the line, the Minutemen were trying to ward off Maine. After cutting the UMass lead down to 10-9, Bears kicker Devin McNeil pushed the ensuing extra point try, and the Minutemen snuck by for its closest win of the season.

Cahoon focuses less on the trap in 2006

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

During the 2003-04 season, the Massachusetts hockey team was not exactly an offensive force in Hockey East. The Minutemen reached the finals in the conference tournament that year, but their success was based on their ability to score goals in transition, before the opposing squad can recover.

UMass coach Don Cahoon calls it a "trap game," forcing the turnover and putting the puck in the net in one smooth play.

This year's version of the Mass Attack has much more firepower in its arsenal, but with Cahoon behind the bench on game night, the Minutemen still know how to set a trap.

"If you go back three or four years when we had a little bit of success, we played solely a trap game," Cahoon said. "We were pretty effective at getting transition offense off the trap. [On Friday night], one of the things that wasn't noted was how well we did trap when we had to."

Off the initial faceoff in the third period, junior P.J. Fenton helped ice the victory for the Minutemen. Cory Quirk lost the faceoff, but Fenton made a smart play in swiping the puck from a Niagara defenseman. Fenton nearly lost his balance while going for the puck as he flailed his arms trying to regain his footing.

He held onto both the puck and his skates and beat the defender to get a clear shot at the net. He squared up and fired a high shot over goaltender Juliano Pagliero's left shoulder.

Pagliero stopped the shot, but the puck bounced out of his glove and over his head. It landed behind him and slid into the net, giving UMass a 3-1 lead.

Sophomore Cory Quirk made a similar play in last Tuesday's tie against Boston University. The centerman disrupted a pass along the Terriers' blue line, stole the puck and skated all alone toward the net, scoring on an athletic move that beat John Curry for the goal.

Later in Friday's game, the Minutemen were successful at the trap again. Freshman Will Ortiz forced a turnover in the neutral zone, stealing the puck and quickly sending it up the ice to teammate Chris Capraro. The senior then sent a centering pass to Mark Matheson, who scored the easy goal, the second of his three on the night.

With a much-improved power play and a number of new players demonstrating creative scoring abilities, the trap is no longer the focus of the Cahoon-led team.

Quirk, Fenton, Capraro and Chris Davis have each showed they can put the puck in the net on any play, and Matheson's rebirth as a forward gives the Minutemen another scoring option. Scoring on chance plays and opportunistic goals have become secondary to scoring goals through puck movement and taking advantage of power plays.

"We're not a trapping team," said Cahoon, "but there are certain situations where you're at a disadvantage if you don't trap."

Niagara entered the game on a seven-game unbeaten streak and on the verge of breaking into the national polls. A win over No. 19 UMass would have been a huge step in that direction.

The Purple Eagles showed they could beat the Minutemen in the second period, outplaying the Maroon and White for all but the final 30 seconds of the middle frame. Forcing turnovers and converting them to points helped the Minutemen pull ahead for good and keep the Niagara offense at bay.

"We set up and we organized," Cahoon said. "We created several turnovers. P.J. and a couple of other guys had transition plays. So I was really happy with the way we trapped tonight."

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!

POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL

Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP

- Direct Billing to Insurance Company
- Locally Owned & Operated
- 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
- UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates

Potter's Collision Repair

Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

AMHERST HAIRSTYLISTS
Caren's Place

New in Town?
Come in and get the attention you want!

Men • Women
Walk-Ins Welcome

- Students always $22 shampoo & cut •
- Specialization in MULTI-COLOR HIGHLIGHTS •
- Free haircolor consultation • Facial & body waxing •
- Threading now available! •

EVERY MONDAY & TUESDAY
FACIAL WAXING
1/2 PRICE!
10-4

Tel: 253-1200
Mon-Fri 10-6 Sat 10-4
40 Main St. Amherst
WWW.CARENSPLACE.COM

UMass gets a wake-up call

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Mullins Center was sold out for the first time in five years on Saturday night. Everybody showed up, except for the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

Seniors Stephane Lasme and Rashaun Freeman gave their best effort in the 84-73 loss against Boston College, but the Minutemen need to be more than just a two-headed monster, and it showed on Saturday.

Lasme and Freeman were the clear-cut leaders for UMass in the loss. Lasme finished the game with a career-high 24 points and grabbed 11 rebounds. It was his 12th career double-double and his fourth of the season. Freeman scored 16 points and had eight boards of his own. Both forwards shot 8-for-11 from the field.

While they can't do it themselves, nobody has a problem depending on the duo too much, it's other players not knowing their roles and trying to be the hero when guaranteed points are posting up under the basket.

"The problem is, some guys want to be the man, but Stephane Lasme and Rashaun Freeman are the men on our basketball team, and that will not change," Ford said. "They are the go-to guys. They are the base of our basketball team. They are the guys we have to go to every single time. The other guys have to make sure they play their role. They just didn't get much help tonight."

Junior Gary Forbes – who was expected to be a big factor with his big-game experience in the ACC – did not have the game everyone had hoped for. Forbes shot 4-for-17 from the field, went 1-for-5 from behind the arc and only made 2-of-6 free throws. He finished the game with 11 points, but it was the misses on easy shots that left a sour taste in everyone's mouth.

With the game still fairly close at 32-21 in favor of the Eagles, Forbes drove into the lane like a man on a mission and soared through the air in a moment reminiscent of Michael Jordan's glory days. The end result wasn't quite the same, as the highlight-reel one-handed jam that could have put UMass within nine points late in the first half, turned into a missed dunk and an easy fast-break bucket by BC's Sean Marshall on the other end of the floor.

It wasn't the turning point of the game by any means, but it exemplified the type of night UMass had outside of Freeman and Lasme's stellar play.

"We needed those points right there," Ford said on Forbes missed dunk. "There were a whole lot of other things besides that dunk that [Gary] could have done better."

"[Ford] just told me to make the basket," Forbes said. "I should have made it. It was an easy shot, but it was just a long day."

The Minutemen finished the game shooting 41 percent from the field and 17 percent from the three-point line, compared to Boston College's 52 percent from the floor. UMass went into halftime shooting only 35 percent from the field, and went a dismal 1-for-12 from behind the arc in the first 20 minutes.

Combine that with UMass' poor defense, and not even the first Mullins Center sell-out since 2001 can be of much help.

"We'd rather win and learn, than lose and learn," Ford said "There are some things that can come out of this that will hopefully make us a better team. I said before this game, this wasn't a make-or-break game. It would have been a great game to win and move on from. How do you respond to that? Just getting beat in your own gym in a big game better wake them up, and realize we have a lot of room for improvement. We're not a good basketball team right now, not for where we want to be eventually. Getting punched at home pretty good should wake you up a little bit."

"I don't know if any of these players have played in any big games while in college. There haven't been any big games where you're expected to be a good team in front of a sold-out crowd. We need more of these experiences, and we've got a lot more coming."

Louisville and Kentucky are on tap for the month of December for the Minutemen. The wake-up call can't come soon enough.

Minutewomen win seventh game of year

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the highly publicized Massachusetts men's basketball game versus Boston College and the football team's dramatic victory over New Hampshire on Saturday, many sports fans forgot that the women's basketball team (7-1) hosted a game of its own against Northeastern University (0-5).

The Minutewomen kept their dominating season going, beating the Huskies by a score of 58-50.

UMass	58
NU	50

Though the outcome notched another victory under UMass' belt, coach Marnie Dacko admitted that it wasn't the prettiest looking win.

"I'm happy for the kids. But what I talked to them about in the locker room was that I just don't feel we're playing to our potential and I think that's what we need to do," Dacko said.

She reiterated, however, that no matter what kind of kinks need to be fixed, Saturday's game went under the win column.

"It's a win," Dacko said. "[I'm glad we] were able to get this W."

The game wouldn't have been much of a success if not for the contributions of juniors Pam Rosanio and Kate Mills and senior Tamara Tatham. The trio combined for 49 of the team's 58 points.

Rosanio tallied a team-leading 22 points in the matchup, going 7-for-14 from the floor (including two three-pointers) and draining 6-of-8 free throw attempts.

The 5-foot-10 psychology major displayed her normal intensity, running up and down the court like a woman possessed and doing anything within her power to help out her team.

She registered two steals, two assists and six total rebounds in addition to her team-high point total.

"I'm so excited that we won again. Nothing feels better than winning, especially today because it's such a big day for UMass," Rosanio said after the game. "We're all really pumped. I mean, we know it wasn't our best performance. We're not to [the point] where we should be – we all know that. But a win is a win and we know what we did wrong and we know what we have to improve on and we're going to do that for the next game.

"It's exciting," Rosanio added when asked to comment on her stellar game. "But I know I missed a bunch [of shots]. I missed so many layups and [Dacko] is on me about that all the time. I don't care what I'm putting up [on the stat sheet]. I want to help the team win."

Mills was UMass' second-leading scorer on the night. She racked up 17 points, sinking 8-of-11 shots, including her only free throw.

She added five boards, three assists and a steal as she continues to be one of the more reliable jerseys on the floor.

"She was 8-of-11 shooting and I'd like her to shoot 20 times [per game]. She has four turnovers because of her indecision to go to the basket," Dacko said.

"It's really good for us, just to keep rolling. We always like to shoot high percentages, so it definitely felt good," Mills said. "But the last couple of games we've really been struggling [with our shooting percentage] and that kind of takes away from how proud we are of our other stats. For everybody, I think it's a confidence thing."

Many 6-foot-1 power forwards have a reputation of being too lumbering to actually put anything in the net. Mills, however, exhibits the contrary.

She has good hands and shows solid poise in the paint. In fact, Rosanio says that Mills has the greatest finesse on the inside of anyone on the team.

"She has the nicest touch around the basket," Rosanio said. "She's just an animal inside. She can power you in and then she'll take you outside and she'll knock down a shot right in your face."

Tatham registered 10 points – going 3-for-9 from the field and 4-of-7 from the foul line. What really grabbed people's attention, however, were the 18 rebounds that she pulled down.

"She did a great job on the boards," Dacko said. "She's working on keeping the ball chest and chin high. This is what she's capable of doing, and I'm happy for her."

"Eighteen boards – that's insane," Mills commented.

Freshman sharpshooter Kim Benton lagged in all stat columns, however. The 5-foot-5 Springfield, Pa., native, usually a deadeye from the perimeter, went 0-for-5 Saturday night – all her shots coming from behind the three-point line.

Dacko is going to need her pint-sized point guard, as well as the rest of the UMass bench, to step up if the Maroon and White wants to fare well in its next contest – a Wednesday night game at Hartford (4-2).

Huskies out-swim Maroon and White

By Jen Millent
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's basketball team wasn't the only group from Amherst fishing for an upset on Saturday. The Massachusetts women's swimming team headed to Northeastern hoping to knock off a talented Huskies team. The Minutewomen performed well, but still fell to the Huskies 160.5-139.5.

The Minutewomen are now off until after the new year. Their next meet is the Loyola Invitational in San Juan, Puerto Rico on Jan. 6. The next month will consist of a brutal training regimen for the Minutewomen. Maintaining their status is crucial to their goal of peaking for the Atlantic 10 Championships.

UMass coach Bob Newcomb knew that defeating the Huskies would be difficult, but wanted to see how the team would perform against superior competition.

"Everybody was a little bit tired, and their performances weren't quite where they were the last time we swam," Newcomb said. "But I didn't really expect them to be."

The Minutewomen took first place in four events. Senior captain Liz Lovejoy was responsible for all three of the victories in individual races. She also participated in UMass' victory in the 400-yard freestyle relay along with junior Allison Volpe and freshmen Kathryne Chaliki and Elizabeth Walsh.

UMass swimmers fell in the first two events. However, they secured second-place points in both events. This, paired with Lovejoy's victory in the meet's third race, the 200-yard freestyle, put the Minutewomen in great position for the remainder of the day-long competition. This was one of her best performances of the season.

"Actually, she swam faster than I thought she was going to," Newcomb said. "I was real happy with her three individual swims. It was pretty impressive. Her [200-yard freestyle performance], I thought was an outstanding race. She's just getting better and better, she knows what she can do and she just goes out and executes."

But the Minutewomen faltered, losing the next three races before Volpe won the 50-yard freestyle with a time of 25.57. Volpe has been one of the team's most consistent performers this season. Newcomb credits her great season to a change in mindset.

"[Allison] is another one that really decided that this year she's going to make a difference," Newcomb said. "She's a totally different individual. She's so much more relaxed. She's not stressing about swims that aren't as fast as she thinks they should be. She's just getting up meet after meet, race after race."

The scores of the UMass divers, taken from the Harvard Invitational that occurred on Nov. 19, helped the Minutewomen's cause. Senior Mary Jenkins won the one-meter dive and finished second on the three-meter plank. Sophomore Sarah Horstmann recorded a second-place finish in the one-meter event.

In the three-meter dive, NU stole first-place points from the Minutewomen. Diver Brooks Wallace, of Northeastern, won the event with a score of 240.75.

Absent from the top spot in both events was UMass' most prolific diver – reigning A-10 Diving Champion Karen Upperco.

Amongst the other Minutewomen that swam well, but did not win, were sophomore Jackie Porter and freshman Kathryne Chaliki.s.

Porter finished second in the 100-yard breaststroke. Her time of 1:12.69 fell short of the 1:10.09 pace established by Northeastern's Alexis Kalevich. Porter has been one of the team's best in the breaststroke for the last two years.

Chaliki.s' finished behind Lovejoy in the 100-yard freestyle. She also swam the third leg in the team's victory in the freestyle relay. The freshman's performance has provided the Minutewomen's already deep freestyle unit with another weapon. She won the 100-yard freestyle at the BU Invitational, defeating swimmers from several other schools. Lovejoy did not compete in the event that day, however.

Sophomore Taryn Prout continued to excel in freestyle distance races. She finished second in the 1,000-yard freestyle event with a time of 10:55.81.

The Minutewomen's individual medley group did well for the team's cumulative score. Junior Sam Dermty recorded the best finish for the Minutewomen in the event. Her 2:13.22 mark was less than a second off the winning pace. Sophomore Christa Narus scored three points for her third-place finish.

The Maroon and White took the top three spots in the 400-yard freestyle relay. Not only did it win the event, but the team's B- and C-teams finished in second and third place respectively.

Northeastern sophomore Alexandra Doty won two events for the Huskies. She won the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 1:00.33. Then she proved her versatility, winning the 200-yard backstroke by more than two seconds with a time of 2:12.30.

IN CONCERT
Saturday December 9, 2006
7:30 PM
Bartlett 65 (Auditorium)
Five College Students $8.00 • General Public $15.00
To purchase tickets call the FAC Box Office at 413-545-2511 or 800-999-UMASS
UMASS AMHERST

Winter-Session Housing

Taking a class this winter?
Need a place to stay?
Great rates available.

Howard Johnson
Econo Lodge
University Lodge

413-586-0114 413-582-7077 413-256-8111
www.hampshirehospitality.com

Mills, Tatham and Rosanio carry UM

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The flurry of wins for the Massachusetts women's basketball team (7-1) in the early going has been a bit of a surprise to some. With a 14-17 record last season – and without a winning season since 1998-99 – the Minutewomen weren't expected to start off this well.

While the expectations for the team were modest, the same couldn't be said for junior Kate Mills. A Second-Team All-Conference selection last year, in only her sophomore season, has put a lot of pressure on her coming into 2006-07.

Mills handled the pressure quite well, leading the team in scoring in each of UMass' first four contests. Her 16.4 points per game leads the team, and she also leads the team in blocked shots. She's been deadly from the floor, connecting on 51-of-84 shots – good for a robust 61 percent.

A lot of the attention for the hot start has been paid to Mills, causing junior Pam Rosanio and senior Tamara Tatham to be lost under the shuffle. In the last four games, it has been a combination of Rosanio and Tatham – not Mills – that has led the team in scoring. The play of the two has not gone unnoticed by UMass coach Marnie Dacko.

"Tamara is extremely athletic out there, she's like a colt," she said. "She's really come into her own. She's so hard to stop and she can take on the whole team herself when she comes to play.

"Pam is a hard-nosed kid," she continues. "She has a strong desire to win. She plays more of a complimentary role, creating for other people. Her game is really improving."

Tatham has scored in double figures in four straight games, averaging 14 points and 12 rebounds per game in the process. She has compiled three double-doubles in that stretch; including a monstrous 10-point, 18 rebound performance in the 58-50 win over Northeastern (0-5) on Saturday.

"That's crazy, I didn't realize she had that many rebounds," Rosanio said. "That's ridiculous. I'm so proud of her. She's been doing tremendous for us on the boards. Eighteen is a lot."

"That was amazing," Mills said, echoing Rosanio. "She has the talent to get that every game if she wants to. It's very difficult to stop her down low, and when she's in the flow of things you can't stop her."

"[Tatham] did a great job on the boards and that's what she's capable of doing," Dacko said. "She's kind of too nice, and I want her to be mean and ugly on the court. When she has that in her, and continues with that intensity, she can really help carry the team."

Although Tatham had her way under the glass, it was Rosanio who took control on the scoreboard – notching a season-high 22 points. It marked the second consecutive game she led the team in scoring.

Rosanio has displayed that she's not just a scorer, ranking third on the team in rebounding and assists per game. Her hustle and intensity on the court is in many ways more important than her 13.4 scoring average to the team.

"She's a vocal leader for the team," Dacko said. "She gives her all every time she's out there. She does the unselfish thing, creating opportunities for her teammates. She's always the first one up the floor on the break and that hustle makes her the player that she is."

While Rosanio is not recognized as a team captain, the rest of the players know and appreciate what she brings to the table.

"She's always talking to us, trying to get us going," Mills said. "She tells us what we need to do differently and what adjustments we have to make. On the court people look up to her, and they should. She plays her heart out and that motivates us."

"Pam goes out there and gives us so much energy," Tatham said. "We all see it and it rubs off on all of us."

The trio of Mills, Rosanio, and Tatham scored 49 of UMass' 58 points on Saturday, leading the team to victory.

"I'd like more balance in the scoring," Dacko said. "But you know what? I'll take it."

Dacko knows if the early trend continues, someone new will step up and lead the team in scoring for the next four games.

Minutemen use meet to experiment strokes

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's a long season, but for the Massachusetts men's swimming team, it is always beneficial to practice swimming in a competitive setting. Swimming at the Nutmeg Invitational on the campus of Yale University in New Haven, gave the Minutemen an opportunity to experiment with different strokes and events.

On Friday and Saturday, the Maroon and White took on competition from Fordham, La Salle, Syracuse, Yale and Williams College during the three session invitational. The divers did not compete at the meet, but instead participated at the Rutgers Diving Super Splash in Piscataway, New Jersey.

The team takes a month break from meets before resuming competitive play on Jan. 6 at the Loyola Invitational in San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Coach Yarworth allowed his swimmers to choose their own events at the meet.

"I wasn't as concerned with how we were competing with the other teams as much as I was with individual effort," Yarworth said. "With a lot of the kids, I wanted them to focus on specific things they needed to work on, rather than the times or the competition."

Consequently, most of the team decided to swim in events that they have less experience with. The two most popular races were the 50-yard free and the 100-yard butterfly, with 12 swimmers each.

"Since the kids were allowed to choose their own events, some of them elected to enter the ones that were a little less stressful," Yarworth said.

This concept probably explains why the Minutemen had zero entries in the 800- and 1650-yard freestyle races.

Junior A.J. Vozella won the only event of the meet for the Minutemen. He took first place in the 50-yard freestyle with a time of 21.58 seconds. Chris Pool of Yale finished in second, 0.34 seconds behind Vozella.

"One thing A.J. wanted to do was knock out a big time in the 50 [-yard free]," Yarworth said. "His time should be pretty high up in the A-10 conference."

The Maroon and White also took third place, as senior Evan Swisher swam a 21.95. Swisher fared well in the 400-yard individual medley, taking second place. The senior finished the race in 4:09.09, but was still a full three seconds behind a swimmer from Williams College. To cap off his weekend, Swisher took sixth in the 200-yard breaststroke.

The Vermont native managed to have a strong weekend despite not swimming in one of his best events – the 200-yard backstroke. Swisher is a versatile swimmer by nature, as his individual medley specialty requires him to be proficient in all four strokes.

In the 100-yard butterfly, Zack Priest took third place with a time of 52.49 seconds. Priest led a bevy of UMass swimmers into the event – which yielded three top 10 finishes and seven in the top 20.

Yarworth elected not to enter any teams into the relay events. "We were focusing on individual effort," Yarworth said. "So [the relay events] were not appropriate for what we wanted to do."

The meet was also the team's first look at Atlantic 10 competition this season. La Salle, picked to finish third in the conference behind UMass and Saint Bonaventure, won four events. Fordham, meanwhile, had no first place finishes.

Syracuse won seven of the 18 races over the weekend. The Orange have a team laden with both senior leadership and young talent, but the squad lost its first Big East Conference meet of the year to Pittsburgh in October.

One of the more surprising results of the invitational was Division III member Williams College swimming to victory in three events. Host Yale also won three races to round out the competition.

SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD OR COMICS
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

9								5
		7	8	3	1	2
	2						4
		3	6		5	4
	4						2
		2	7		9	6
	6						3
		4	5	7	3	1
2								8

ACROSS
1 Loyalty
4 Quip
8 Pinch pennies
14 In days past
15 Karamazov brother
16 Full of trees
17 Slothful person
19 Temper
20 Web locations
21 GOP gathering
22 Had supper
23 Listening devices
28 Avail oneself of 30 Yiddish
31 Leg joint
35 Cucumbers
37 Fades
38 Stay sleeping
39 Screen stars
41 Permit to 42 Technique
43 Came film
44 Part of HOMES
46 Bridge coup
47 Judge's weight by filling
48 Saki's real name
50 Lacking cordiality
51 Safe-deposit box location
54 ISS partner
57 Actor McKellen
58 Wind-borne soil
61 Called back
63 Northeast African nation
66 Garden of "Oklahoma!"
67 Metrical unit
68 Back of the bus
69 Take stock of 70 Unfettered
71 Cartoon scream

DOWN
1 Impudent words
2 Citrus fruit
3 Spoke impudently
4 Picture puzzle
5 Ms. Gardner
6 Standard on the links
7 Stop
8 Proust character
9 Hides
10 Server or Wood
11 Mental impulse
12 Coil entrance exams
13 Old-time journalist Ernie
18 Thousand dollars
21 On a perch
24 June honorees
25 New Testament book
26 Four-bagger
27 Annoying fits
28 Bathsheba's husband
29 Inch along
32 Cenic dessert
33 Fragrant broom
34 Opponent
36 Narrow openings
40 Provincial verses
45 Bobbie the ball
49 Seaside rock formation
52 Burns wildly
53 Tic-tac-toe win
54 Columnist Buchwald
55 Salty seven
56 Curving courses
59 Trig function
60 Carrier bag
62 Exist
63 Studio apt.
64 Rocky crag
65 Weeding tool

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DELANO'S
TONIGHT:
TEAM TRIVIA!
WEDNESDAY NIGHT:
DJ/ KARAOKE WITH PAULIE V
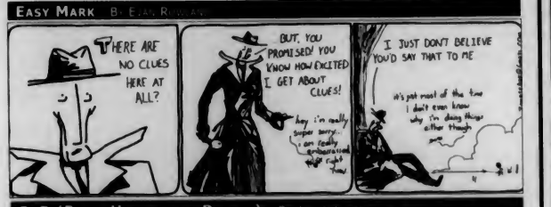
(TICKET NIGHT)
PINOCCHIO'S FOOD SPECIALS
DURING TRIVIA, MUNCHIES,
PIZZA, AND MORE...
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"In the end, everything is a gag."
—Charlie Chaplan

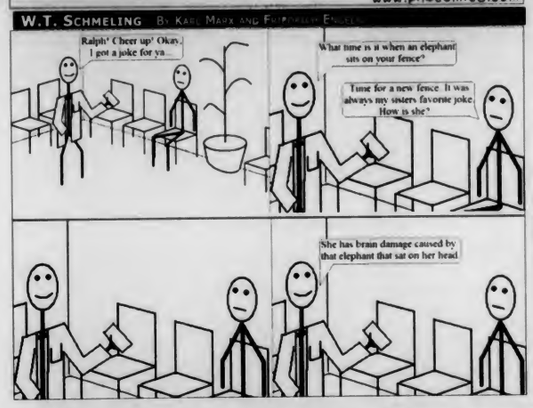
EASY MARK By Evan Roberts



THERE ARE NO CLUES HERE AT ALL?
BUT, YOU PROMISED! YOU KNOW HOW EXCITED I GET ABOUT CLUES!
hey, i'm really super sorry... i am really embarrassed right now
I JUST DON'T BELIEVE YOU'D SAY THAT TO ME
it's just most of the time I don't even know why I'm doing things either though

PHD (PILED HIGHER AND DEEPER) By Jorge Cham

W.T. SCHMELING By Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels



Ralph! Cheer up! Okay, I got a joke for ya...
What time is it when an elephant sits on your fence?
Time for a new fence. It was always my sisters favorite joke. How is she?
She has brain damage caused by that elephant that sat on her head.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN NOW HIRING
Positions Available:
Dish Washers
Copy Machines
COMICS EDITOR
Brown Noses
Cork Board
Apply Now!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You and all your scheming will leave you atop a throne of ruin.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
A word document can be reformatted to take up more space only so much.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You're not fooling anyone when you say, "it's going good."

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Your lover has been working as an elf at the mall to save up to give you a present.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Be cautious with your work. Save everything as often as you can.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You will repeatedly take the Lord's name in vain during the up coming weeks.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
When it's all over, you won't have to worry anymore.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Sometimes cheating is just as hard as actualling doing a good job.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You will wake up to a janitor vacuuming next to your computer kiosk in the library.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You will drop out of college and become a millionaire basketball playing, rapping, actor.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Sometimes the best thing to do, is just go to bed.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your parents will admit to a slew of drug experiences while drunk over Christmas.

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun Wed
Thurs Sat
(413) 549-6073

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Try out Army ROTC's Minuteman Battalion and join the wave of the new greatest generation. No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 or www.umass.edu/army-rotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 bedroom apt. available for sub-let for spring 07 semester. $392.50 plus utilities. Call 561-346-6054

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Driver needed. Contact see-moshuttle at: 413-586-1120

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

HOUSE FOR RENT

Lake Wyola 4 Bedroom $800 plus utilities 413-584-7345

Cute 2 to 3 bedroom house, neat, on bus stop in Northampton Available mid December. No pets $1300.00 Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

ROOM FOR RENT

1 bedroom available for spring semester. $400 a month including utilities. 3 male roommates, across from bus stop call 781-492-5588 for more details.

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

TRAVEL

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions, Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849 Great group discounts

TRAVEL

Alternative spring break Now taking applications Trips to New Orleans, Birmingham and Mississippi Delta. Space is limited, email: umassasb@gmail.com

Classified Advertising with the Collegian is easy.

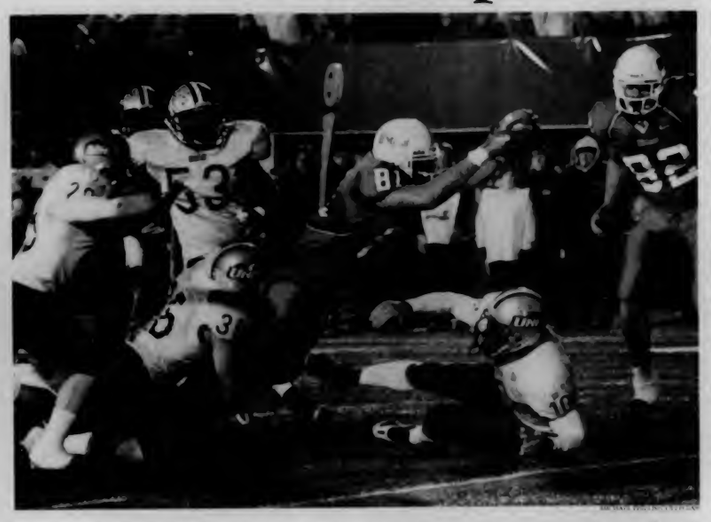
Just visit www.dailycollegian.com and submit your classified online.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, DECEMBER 4, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Next stop: Montana



UMass senior wide receiver Brandon London reaches into the end zone to give the Minutemen a 21-17 lead in the third quarter of Saturday's 24-17 quarterfinals win over New Hampshire. It proved to be the game-winner, as well as London's 15th career touchdown reception.

Pressure on Santos makes the difference

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

New Hampshire quarterback Ricky Santos was not the Walter Payton Award candidate on Saturday the A-10 has seen all season. He threw for a un-Santos-like 129 yards with one touchdown and a costly interception. Much of that was due to the Massachusetts football team's blitz package and constant pressure it put on the quarterback.

The UMass defense kept Santos on the run throughout the entire game. Once again Minuteman coach Don Brown put together a blitz scheme that broke down the UNH blockers, forcing Santos and the rest of the offense out of rhythm.

UMass sacked Santos a total of six times on Saturday, recorded by five different players. David Burris led the way for the Minutemen, taking down Santos twice for a loss of 10 yards. In all, the Wildcats lost a total of 29 yards as the result of sacks.

After the game, Santos conceded that Saturday was the most pressure he's been under all season long.

"They did a great job of scheming us differently than what they did last time," he said. "They found ways to get guys in spots where we didn't have blockers. I could have made better decisions definitely also, so that definitely contributed."

In UMass' 28-20 win over UNH on Nov. 4, the Minutemen sacked the quarterback four times for a loss of 31 yards.

Although Santos and wide receiver David Ball are the key components to the Wildcats' offense, Brown keyed his blitzing schemes around the running backs – Robert Simpson, Chad Kackert and Chris Ward. Depending where the running back lined up determined where the UMass pressure came from.

According to Brown, UMass had two players reading the running back before each snap. Depending on where the back motioned to, that linebacker blitzed. If the play called for the right outside linebacker to stunt – and the running back remained on his side of the field – he blitzed at the snap of the ball. However, if the running back went in motion to the other side,

See QB PRESSURE on page 7

Eagles soar over Minutemen

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Saturday night, the culmination of a successful day in UMass sports came to an ugly end when the Boston College Eagles defeated the Massachusetts men's basketball team, 84-73, before a sold-out crowd at the Mullins Center.

UMass	73
BC	84

The Minutemen (6-2) played a wounded Eagles team (4-2), which entered Saturday with early losses to Vermont and Providence and looked beatable at the outset.

Senior co-captains Stephane Lasme and Rashaun Freeman played aggressive basketball and kept the Minutemen in the game when things looked dire.

Freeman finished with 16 points and eight boards and Lasme notched his fourth double-double of the season with 24 points and 11 boards.

On Wednesday, UMass travels to Boston to play the Boston University Terriers at Agganis Arena at 8 p.m.

"We had a workman-like effort from our big men again," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "Those guys [Lasme and Freeman] are just workhorses inside and we just lay on them. We depend on them so much.

"[Lasme] was just so tired out there," he added. "He was worn out because we're going to him on offense, we're expecting him to rebound and in the second half we came out pressing, and we put him on the front of the press as well. So we're basically saying, 'Steph, go out and win the game for us.'"

Lasme was all over the court. He began the game with a thunderous dunk over BC big man Sean Williams after Williams came from the weak side to try and block Lasme's shot. That sent the sell-out crowd into delirium and gave UMass a false sense of security.

"I think [our players] thought that the environment was going to get them off to a great start," Ford said. "I think that they thought that it was just going to be automatic. It doesn't work that way. I think tonight, our guys thought that they were going to jump out on BC. They thought that it was just going to be automatic."

The Minutemen hung with the Eagles early on, and took an 11-8 lead at the 15:29 mark of the first half after senior James Life knocked down a jump shot.

The Eagles went on a 10-2 run from that point, as swingman Sean Marshall knocked down two free throws and forward Shamari Spears tossed in a lay up to make it 18-13 BC with 11:55 remaining in the first.

UMass had trouble finding consistent scoring throughout the game. Junior transfer Gary Forbes had a sub par night when the Minutemen desperately needed his offensive presence. Forbes went 4-for-17 from the field and 1-for-5 from downtown.

The Eagles used a 2-2-1, three-quarter court press intermittently, and it gave the UMass backcourt fits. Sophomore guard Chris Lowe and freshman guard Tiki Mayben struggled offensively against the Eagles' 2-3 zone in the half court, and didn't knock down any outside shots.

Lowe looked tentative on offense and went 1-for-4 from the field, and Mayben shot 50 percent from the floor but went 0-for-3 from beyond the arc. Mayben finished with 10 points and nine assists.

"I thought early [Lowe and Mayben] weren't attacking the way that we wanted to," Ford said. "When you get other guys coming in with guards coming in, they have to make a more positive impact. You can't get into the game and immediately turn it over or immediately run somebody over. I don't have a lot of patience for that. Maybe I need to. Maybe I need to give those guys a little more patience."

The Minutemen's defense left much to be desired. Boston College ran its usual flex offense, and UMass guards got lost on screens and allowed passes into the post with regularity.

"Defense is something that we really need to work on," Lasme said. "Everybody on the team knows it. Everybody is trying hard to play defense. We're not going to win by outscoring everybody. I don't think we're that good. We need to work hard on defense, harder than we have been."

"[BC] came in and shot 52 percent in our house," Forbes said. "That's something we really need to work on."

The Eagles had four players in double figures in scoring, led by Marshall with 19. Jared Dudley, averaging almost 21 points per game this season, scored just 11 points but dished out seven assists and grabbed eight rebounds. Williams scored 16 with three blocks in 26 minutes of action.

Ford's team rests at 6-2 heading into its matchup with the Terriers on Wednesday, and its only two losses (Pittsburgh and BC) came at the hands of ranked or previously ranked teams.

However, the Minutemen struggled to score in one of the biggest games of the year. Ford knows that his team has a long way to go.

Senior forward Stephane Lasme finished Saturday's loss with 24 points and 11 rebounds. It was his 12th career double-double.

Senior forward Rashaun Freeman scored 16 points and grabbed eight rebounds in Saturday night's 84-73 loss to Boston College.

Quirk's goal gives UMass momentum

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Just because a game doesn't factor into the Hockey East schedule, doesn't mean it has no meaning.

That's the mentality the No. 19 Massachusetts hockey team brought with it into Friday night's game against College Hockey America's Niagara – a game in which the Minutemen came out on top, 6-2, at the Mullins Center.

UMass	6
Niagara	2

Currently the Minutemen (7-3-2, 4-2-1 HEA) sit in the middle of the conference pack while staying nationally ranked. Given the big win over the Purple Eagles (8-6-3, 4-3-1 CHA) – a team that received 38 votes in last week's poll – and their 2-2 tie with No. 9 Boston University last Tuesday, the Minutemen may move up when the new rankings come out today.

"This game was an important game to us in the simple fact that – we don't want to get too far ahead of ourselves – but one of the things you're working towards is winning enough games you're under consideration for the NCAA Tournament," UMass coach Don Cahoon said.

Despite competing in a lesser conference, Cahoon knew the Purple Eagles have the talent to challenge the Minutemen.

"When you go head-to-head with that team and you come back to add all of that up, it becomes a critical game. We didn't take them lightly at all."

Play was even through a period and a half on Saturday. Despite the Minutemen's 1-0 lead, neither team had much offense to speak of early in the second period. It wasn't until Niagara's Cliff Ketchen tied the game at one apiece that play picked up.

Ketchen received the puck low in the offensive zone and went for the wrap around. Skating behind the net, from goaltender Jon Quick's right, Ketchen reached around and stuffed it in past his leg pad.

According to Cahoon, the second period has given UMass problems all season long. Opponents have outscored the Minutemen 12-10 in the second period. That trails the 13 and 15 they've scored in the first and second periods respectively.

But a late goal by Cory Quirk on Friday made sure the Mass Attack wasn't outscored in the second frame. He netted his team-leading eighth goal of the season with just four ticks remaining on the clock.

As his slashing penalty expired, freshman Will Ortiz stormed out of the penalty box and fired a shot. A Niagara defender blocked the puck, which left it right out front of goalie Juliano Pagliero. Quirk was there and had enough time to deke once before sending it in past Pagliero.

The goal gave UMass the game's momentum heading into the second intermission.

"Cory Quirk's goal at the end of the second period was pivotal in giving us the cushion that we'd had earlier in the game," Cahoon said. "It gave us a chance to sit back and really just go out and play the third period and not be fearful that the team had turned the wrong way in the second."

The Minutemen tallied four goals in the final period – including two of Mark Matheson's first-career hat trick. But it was junior P.J. Fenton who wasted little time in giving UMass some insurance.

Fenton scored 20 seconds into the period off a transition – something the Minutemen have done well this season.

He stole the puck at the blue line and stumbled while skating towards the net. Fenton regained his balance and unleashed a wrist shot across his body that Pagliero snagged with his glove. But the puck squirted out behind the goalie and bounced over the line for Fenton's fifth of the season. A Niagara defender tried unsuccessfully to dive and stop the puck.

"It's going pretty good as of late and I feel pretty good out on the ice," Fenton said. "His five goals are equal to the amount he posted all of last season. It's just nice to be scoring some goals again. Tonight I got a lucky bounce, but it's nice when the puck is going in for you."

The pretty goals kept coming for the Minutemen in the third. At 6:37, Ortiz slapped a puck out of midair for his second goal of the season, and a 5-1 UMass lead. Pagliero stopped a Chris Capraro shot, but the rebound shot straight into the air. In perfect position at the left post, Ortiz batted the puck into the air.

"I was just driving to the net and saw the puck in the air," he said. "I was there and the puck came up, I tried to figure out a way to put it in. I don't think there was [enough time to think], it was mostly instincts."

Matheson capped his terrific night with just over 10 minutes remaining in the game. After Pagliero denied a wrap around try, he crashed the net and finished the play. It was the first time he's scored more than one goal in a game. He opened the scoring at 3:41 of the first.

UMASS VISITS MERRIMACK | PAGE 10

HOLIDAY MOVIE SEASON BEGINS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

FLURRIES : HI: 38 LO: 21 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 2006

Coalition reacts to dorm patrols

BY LORAINE BURGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Cannabis Reform Coalition set up its second appointment with Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Michael Gargano at the University of Massachusetts last Friday to try to convince him to stop the routine patrolling of dorm rooms.

The Cannabis Reform Coalition is a group on campus whose main goal is to legalize marijuana in the state and eventually in the country. Recently, it's been more focused on the UMass campus alone because of the routine police patrolling that has been taking place in dorms.

According to Jon Werner, co-president of the coalition, the "knuckling down" that has been occurring is the result of a 20/20 news special that aired on national television announcing that the UMass is a "dangerous school."

The Board of Trustees responded to the news by asking that Gargano stop this reputation from prospering. Gargano then proceeded to ask the Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor to regulate searches in the dorms on campus, in hopes of decreasing the use of narcotics on school grounds.

Students were divided on their opinions of the searches.

"I think it's very hypocritical," said junior Angie Graves. "We're being told constantly that we're adults and we should act like it, but we can't even be trusted with what we have in our own rooms."

"I think it's pretty clever," said Greggory Kleciak, another UMass student. "I'm not against what the police are doing."

Werner said that policemen around the age of 25 have been patrolling the halls of dorm buildings out of uniform, wearing regular clothing and sports jerseys and blending in with the students. They knock on doors posing as residential assistants and even pizza deliverers, and the moment a student welcomes them into their room, the police have every right to search anything in the room in plain view.

"Police are trying to stop every single illegal action from happening and it's getting out of control," said senior Christian Perez. "It's aggravating because I'm 21 and I still can't have a certain amount of alcohol in my room."

"Every time someone gets arrested, and this is happening much more frequently, they're immediately suspended for being an 'imminent threat to the community,' so you get the idea that these people are really violent, and that's not true," said Werner. "Pot smokers are less likely to be violent than alcohol users."

An even bigger shock for these students is that the Higher Education Act of 1997 states that students with a single narcotics offense on their permanent record makes them ineligible for state and federal financial aid.

At the start of the semester, the Cannabis Reform Coalition set up an appointment with Gargano to discuss his policies. The appointment was set for Oct. 23, and just days before they were to meet, Gargano canceled the meeting because their reason for the discussion was unclear, according to Werner.

The group made another appointment for Dec. 1, this time preparing themselves. They created an outline of all of their talking points and the goal they were trying to achieve – to stop the patrolling of dorms. They had a petition that included 1,600 signatures stating specifically what they wanted. Their statement matched that of a ballot question that appeared on the Student Government Association referendums slightly over a month ago, and it passed by 88 percent.

UMass Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Michael Gargano.

However, Sunday, Nov. 26, five days before the planned meeting between Gargano and the coalition, Gargano's secretary called Werner to cancel their second appointment.

Gargano's secretary told Werner that the Vice Chancellor could not change the policy, and that it was not meant to decrease the violence on campus. It was to get rid of the reputation UMass holds as a party school.

"I honestly wasn't expecting him to change his policy when we met with him, but I was expecting him to at least defend his policy," says Werner. "I think he thinks we're an insignificant organization."

According to Gargano, however, he sees this new policy from an entirely different perspective. He holds the pride and accomplishments that have been seen from past UMass graduates as his reasoning behind keeping the school running successfully.

"We have a responsibility to

See CANNABIS on page 3

MADD launches campaign to eliminate drunk driving

MADD is pushing for a twice-per-year crackdown and frequent enforcement efforts that include sobriety checkpoints and saturation patrols in all 50 states.

BY ALYSSA MONTALBASO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Driving without having to worry about drunk drivers on the road may be a possibility in the near future. Mothers Against Drunk Driving, more commonly known as MADD, has recently launched a national campaign called Campaign to Eliminate Drunk Driving, aiming to erase drunk driving completely.

Since the program's inception in 1980, there has been a 40 percent decrease in alcohol-related traffic fatalities, according to a press release. They have helped save over 330,000 lives. Now they are planning to completely eliminate drunk driving.

To eliminate drunk driving completely, MADD has come up with a four-point plan.

"It's a little frustrating to see the numbers plateau," said David Delullis, communications director for MADD in Massachusetts. "The crime of drunk driving is 100 percent preventable. We are taking full advantage of law enforcement and existing technology."

The first step of the four-point plan involves intensive high-visibility law enforcement. MADD is working with the state police as well as some local police.

"At the end of 2006, the Massachusetts state police would have conducted more sobriety tests than in the last 20 years combined," said Delullis.

MADD is also pushing for a twice per year crackdown and frequent enforcement efforts that include sobriety checkpoints and saturation patrols in all 50 states. Eighty-seven percent of Americans support the use of sobriety checkpoints, but 10 states still prohibit the use of them, according to the press release.

The second part of the plan is to fully implement current alcohol ignition interlock technologies. This includes making an effort to require alcohol ignition interlock devices for all convicted drunk drivers.

Ignition interlock devices prevent intoxicated people from driving their vehicles. It is an in-car alcohol breathing device that prevents a person from starting up a vehicle if it detects a blood alcohol level above a pre-set limit. The District of Columbia and 31 states do not require these devices.

Smart Start, one manufacturer of ignition interlock services and technology, claims on its Web site that there have been 4,774,194 alcohol starts prevented by the company's devices.

The third part involves the exploration of advanced vehicle technologies through the establishment of a Blue Ribbon panel of international safety experts. This panel will "assess the feasibility of a range of technologies that will prevent drunk driving," according to the press release. The technologies must be affordable, reliable, set at legal blood alcohol level and unobtrusive to sober drivers.

The final part of the plan is to mobilize of grassroots support. MADD and its more than 400 affiliates are trying to make the goal of the removal of drunk driving a reality.

Delullis thinks that this campaign will decrease the number of drunk drivers.

"This campaign has gotten a lot of attention nationwide," he said.

At the University of Massachusetts, campus police are also trying to prevent as much drunk driving as possible. In September, the campus police worked with the state police to set up a sobriety checkpoint.

See MADD on page 3

U.N. ambassador forced to resign

BY MICHELLE OSORIO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite support from President Bush, U.N. ambassador John Bolton was forced to resign after the Senate declined to confirm his appointment. Bolton was temporarily appointed by Bush during Senate recess in August 2005 and was awaiting confirmation for a year from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Bush expressed his disappointment in the Senate soon after its decision not to confirm Bolton by saying he had loyally served his country and made great headway as a spokesperson for the United Nations in the short time since his appointment.

The president also expressed worry over how the relationships with U.N. nations would fare after Bolton's resignation.

"They chose to obstruct his confirmation, even though he enjoys majority support in the Senate, and even though their tactics will disrupt our diplomatic work at a sensitive and important time," Bush said to the press on Monday. "This stubborn obstructionism ill serves our country, and discourages men and women of talent from serving their nation."

Bolton will leave his office when Congress formally adjourns in January and his appointment time expires. President Bush attempted to have Bolton nominated a second time but due to Democratic control of the Senate, the chances of appointment weren't favorable.

The new chairman of the Senate Foreign

John Bolton (center) is congratulated by U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, after being installed by President George W. Bush as ambassador to the United Nations at the White House in 2005.

Relations Committee, Democratic Sen. Joe Binden of Delaware, said he saw no need to consider Bolton a second time.

In the past year, Bolton has been at the forefront of negotiations during the highly televised North Korean military and nuclear activities and Darfur's struggle for peace. He has also publicly called for the resignation of all top U.N. officials when Ban Ki-moon replaces U.N. chief Kofi Annan Dec. 31.

No real reason was given for Bolton's decision.

"After careful consideration, I have concluded that my service in your administration should end when the current recess appointment expires," he wrote in a letter addressed to the president and dated last Friday.

It is still unknown as to who will be taking Bolton's place in January to resume talks with North Korea and Iran.

Boston to mandate training for bouncers

Phil Sweeney, operations manager of the Glenn Hospitality Group, testifies at a hearing at the City Hall in Boston, yesterday.

BY MELISSA TRUJILLO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON – Bouncers and other security staff at the city's bars and nightclubs would have to undergo training and a background check under a law being considered by the City Council after the slaying of a Boston woman who was last seen alive at a New York City bar.

"Imette's Law," which was the subject of a hearing Monday, is named for Imette St. Guillen, the 24-year-old Boston woman who police say was killed by a bouncer with a long criminal history.

City Council President Michael Flaherty said he began working on the proposed law before St. Guillen was killed, after seeing a pattern of alleged incidents between bars' security and patrons. The Boston Licensing Department received 84 reports of bouncer on customer violence between 2004 and June 2006.

Under the proposed law, all bouncers, doormen and floor staff of the city's bars, clubs and other establishments that serve alcohol would have to undergo a background check looking for violence histories and undergo training on how to prevent problem patrons from entering their businesses and on how to deal with them if they do. A timetable has not been set for a vote on the law.

At the hearing, Flaherty said he hoped the law would help staff "recognize a situation before it spirals out of control" and prevent incidents like the death of St. Guillen.

St. Guillen's body was found in Brooklyn Feb. 25 after she was raped, strangled and suffocated, allegedly by parolee Darryl Littlejohn, who has pleaded not

See BOUNCERS on page 2

Cultural preconceptions influence professions

BY EDDIE JACOVINO
DAILY ORANGE (SYRACUSE)

SYRACUSE, N.Y. – In January 2005, then-President Lawrence Summers of Harvard University cited gender differences as a reason why men dominate math and science fields.

His statements created controversy and led to his eventual resignation, but the question remained as to why men are traditionally associated with some fields and women with others.

Administrators at Syracuse University said the reason is cultural while there are differences between the genders, males and females are raised believing certain professional fields are acceptable for one gender before the other.

"Men and women have different learning styles," said Sue Corieri, director of enrollment management for the School of Information Studies. "But it's not a quality issue; it's not better or worse."

The two most popular undergraduate fields for both genders are business and the social sciences, according to a 2005 study by the National Center for Education Statistics.

Engineering and information sciences are very popular among men, while education and health-related sciences are popular among women, the report stated.

At SU, student enrollment in these fields reflects cultural norms, but recent statistics show a trend towards gender equality, which administrators said is the result of both changes in the greater society and efforts made by the university.

Nationally, engineering schools average 12 to 13 percent women, said Associate Dean Can Isik of the L.C. Smith College of Engineering and Computer Science.

In 2005, however, 16 percent of graduates from ECS were women, according to a report released by the Office of Institutional Research and Assessment.

But simply being above the national average isn't satisfactory, Isik said.

ECS hosts events such as "Introduce a Girl to Engineering Day" every year, and encourages women to take math and science classes in local high schools, said Kathleen Joyce, admissions director for ECS.

Many women aren't drawn to engi-

See PROFESSIONS on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 64

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherd Widnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPY ED Sean Duram
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Prutz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smollet
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dilisantis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, DERIVING ITS ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE MASS. COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DI WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Megan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Duram, Matt Belliveau

Training to address possible bar scenarios

BOUNCERS from page 2

guilty to murder charges.

New York City recently instituted a law requiring establishments to prove they are in compliance with state law, which requires security guards to undergo background checks, training and registration.

"Please understand that my family does not wish to see unreasonable burdens imposed on any establishment or individual," St. Guillen's mother, Maureen, wrote in a letter to Flaherty supporting his proposal. "However, the safety of patrons is paramount. Bouncers are there to provide protection, and patrons must be able to put their complete trust in them without having to worry about that the bouncers themselves might be a danger."

James Staples, co-owner of Guest Intervention Strategies, testified Monday that bar and nightclub security face a barrage of possible problems each night, including underage drinkers, overly intoxicated patrons and aggressive customers. His company offers a five-hour, $225 course addressing those issues.

Staples said employees with added training could be less likely to resort to physical violence, because they've learned other tactics. The businesses' owners also could be eligible for insurance discounts after the training.

"We believe without question that there is a need for training all employees," he said in support of the proposal.

Peter Christie, president and chief executive officer of the Massachusetts Restaurant Association, said he supported training and background checks, but opposed making them mandatory for all businesses.

He said smaller bars could struggle with the cost of training, especially with the frequent turnover in the industry. Many already conduct in-house training.

"The last person in the world that wants to have any problems is the person who owns the club," he said.

Christie also questioned if the bill would be a disproportionate response to the problem. He compared the 84 incidents reported with the hundreds of thousands of bar customers each year.

Saudi women can sell (not drive) cars

By Donna Abu-Nasr
Associated Press

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — Saudi women still can't drive cars, but they can sell them. Potential buyers can go to an all-women showroom here, for the first time, other women will help them choose a car and answer questions about horsepower, carburetors and other automotive features.

Neither the saleswomen nor the female buyers can take the car out for a test drive because women are banned from driving in Saudi Arabia — even though they have been allowed to own cars for decades and hire male drivers. Almost half the autos belong to women.

The kingdom's strict interpretation of Islam has long limited what women can do outside the home, seeking to keep them from coming into contact with men who aren't relatives.

So touchy is the issue of women driving that people who previously called for dialogue about whether Saudi Arabia should remain the only Arab nation that bans female drivers have been largely silenced by a wave of condemnation from conservatives. Mindful of those sensitivities, the Riyadh car dealership that opened the all-women showroom asked that its name not be used.

The seven female saleswomen at the spacious showroom insist they aren't pushing for female driving but only providing comfort for women who want to buy cars and don't like to go to dealerships run by men. With the sexes segregated in schools, restaurants and banks, interaction between salesmen and women customers is awkward for many Saudis.

"I don't support women driving even if a permission is given for them to do so, because the society is not prepared for such a step," said Widad Merdad, one of the saleswomen, which is privately owned

See WOMEN on page 3

Amherst Police Log

Friday, Dec. 1

1:47 p.m.

Police received a report that a laptop was stolen from an unlocked vehicle on Grantwood Street. The computer was valued at $2,500. Police have no suspects.

2:02 p.m.

A female reported that she was awoken on a couch in her Brandywine Apartments home by an unknown male asking for money. The reporting party described the male as a white 35- to 45-year-old wearing a dark hat and dark pants. He left when confronted by a resident but returned at 1:32 a.m. on Saturday and was seen looking through the sliding glass door in the back of the apartment, according to police. This case is under investigation by the Amherst Police.

2:16 p.m.

A woman reported that she was given fake money orders by someone from England for the renting of her apartment. After the money orders were cashed, the party that sent the money orders said that he/she no longer wanted the apartment and asked for the money to be wired back to him/her. The bank that cashed the money orders is seeking reimbursement from the reporting party, according to police.

10:06 p.m.

Angel Rivera of 138 Cedar St. in Springfield, Mass. was arrested for operating a motor vehicle after suspension of his license and not having an inspection sticker. An Amherst police officer stopped Rivera on East Pleasant Street..

Saturday, Dec. 2

4:59 a.m.

Kevin Christopher Leboeuf of 37 Hammond Road in Natick, Mass. was arrested for operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol, possessing a class D drug, being a minor in possession of alcohol and speeding. Leboeuf was stopped by an Amherst police officer for speeding on Main Street and failed a field sobriety test, according to police. During a search, police found marijuana in his possession.

8:59 a.m.

Police received a report that a car was broken into on Pleasant Court. The glove compartment was open but nothing was taken, according to police.

9:44 a.m.

Police received a report that an elderly male driving a silver sedan struck a parked van in a parking lot on College Street. There was some damage to the left rear bumper, according to police. An RP said the male attempted to leave the parking lot after the accident but repeatedly ran into the lot's curbing.

1:42 p.m.

Police received a report that an elderly woman, operating a gold Ford Taurus, struck the side view mirror of a parked car on Amity Street. The reporting party saw the Taurus swerve away after the collision and continue driving, despite the RP's attempts to get her to stop. Police were unable to locate the car whose mirror was struck, but did locate the operator of the Taurus.

8:53 p.m.

Police received a report that a deer ran into the driver's side of a Jeep on Bay Road. There were no injuries, but there was damage to the vehicle. The deer was stunned after the collision, and then ran into the woods, according to police.

9:29 p.m.

Paul Dennis Nugent of 421 Main St. in Leeds, Mass. was arrested for disorderly conduct and defrauding a restaurant after he refused to pay his tab at Rafters, a sports bar and restaurant at 422 Amity St.

Sunday, Dec. 3

1:18 a.m.

John Christopher Thornton, 23, of 163 Shepard St. in Chicopee, Mass., Robert Henry Ilyde, 26, of 306 Dalton Div Road in Pittsfield, Mass. and Timothy Christopher Richard, 26, of 20 Parker St. in Agawam, Mass. were arrested for unlawful noise. According to police, there was loud music coming from their Pufflon Village residence.

3:18 a.m.

Shawn A. Laperle of 120 Central St. in Athol, Mass was arrested for operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol and failing to stop or yield. Laperle was stopped on South Pleasant Street and failed a field sobriety test.

4:20 a.m.

A pizza delivery person reported that he was struck with a beer can after a dispute over a payment with several males who were angry because the delivery to their Pufflon Village home was late, according to police. The delivery person was not injured. This case is under investigation by the Amherst Police.

4:24 a.m.

John Thomas Canty, 18, of 35 Huntington Road in Milton, Mass. was arrested for attempting to commit a crime after police observed him trying to gain access to a condo on Amity Place. According to police, Canty was highly intoxicated and didn't provide a justifiable reason for attempting to enter the residence.

4:28 a.m.

A female reported that her purse, containing bank cards, was stolen during a party on Northampton Road. She cancelled her bank cards but discovered that they had been used at a gas station since the last time her purse was in her possession.

6:01 a.m.

A beer bottle broke a glass window at Chicago Pizza, 150 Fearing St., setting off the building's alarm, according to police. There are no suspects.

12:06 p.m.

Police received a report that a red clay brick was thrown through the rear window of a car sometime between 11:30 p.m. on Saturday and 6:30 a.m. on Sunday at the vehicle owner's home on Gatehouse Road, according to police. The window is valued at $200.

12:44 p.m.

Police received a report that the doorway window of the John Edwards Attorney office, 437 Main St., was spray-painted. According to police, a white spray can cap was found close to the door and will be checked for finger prints.

3:16 p.m.

Police received a report that a driver's side mirror was broken off of a Honda Civic. According to police, the vandalism occurred sometime overnight on Dec. 2.

Monday, Dec. 4

12:18 a.m.

Police received a report that a woman was slapped in the face by a male and her purse was thrown on the roof of Judie's Restaurant, 51 North Pleasant St. The female did not wish to press charges. The restaurant's manager agreed to retrieve the purse in the morning, according to police.

Compiled by Kevin Foley

Experts find men advance before women in non-traditional jobs

PROFESSIONS from page 1

neering until they are already at SU, Isik said.

"To even get [females] to think about engineering is a high school advising issue," he said.

This year's ECS incoming class is about 20 percent women, Isik said. That figure is expected to increase before graduation because of the current retention rates among men and women.

Thirty-four percent of the students enrolled in IST are women, according to an Information Studies report. This year's freshman class is 41 percent female.

IST tries to hire a balanced faculty to create a welcoming environment for female students, Corieri said.

Clubs such as Women in Technology promote interest in the community by planning days to bring females on tours of the college, said club President Fatima Espinoza, a second-year graduate student in information management.

On a recent trip to New York City, Corieri said she only had enough time for one recruiting visit and chose an all-female school.

Any time there is an underrepresented population, the IST admissions office puts additional effort into attracting members of that population, she said.

"If we weren't sensitive to that, then we wouldn't be effectively influencing the profession," Corieri said.

In other cases, society seems to be challenging the gender bias on its own.

The number of men interested in teaching is increasing, especially in elementary education, said Laurie Deyo, admissions coordinator at the School of Education.

But in 2005, only 17 percent of graduates were men, according the OIRA report.

"Traditionally, education has been a gendered field," said Dean Douglas Biklen. "The culture has, in effect, said 'this is women's work.'"

Incoming classes have increased from 16 to 20 percent men in the past three years, according to a report from SOE.

"Families are letting go a little bit more," Deyo said. Parents are more accepting of their son becoming a teacher, and the societal stigma is fading, he said.

Many high schools have introduced programs where students can become part of the elementary teaching process, she said. This gets men thinking about education at a younger age.

Men who want to teach aren't being laughed at anymore, Deyo said.

Fields in the College of Human Services and Health Professions are subject to the traditional association of women within the domestic sphere, said HSHP Dean Diane Murphy.

Currently, the notion is being challenged by the fact that more women are entering the workplace, Murphy said. This disrupts the traditional gender roles and makes formerly domestic duties, such as child care, professional.

Some HSHP fields, especially sports management, are relatively new, and not necessarily subject to traditional inequality, Murphy said.

While enrollment in HSHP is 82 percent women, according to a report, the sports management program is about 70 percent men and hospitality management is balanced, she said.

One problem is men rise to the top of non-traditional professions faster than women do, Murphy said. This contradicts the cultural perception that women are more adept at these roles.

The NCES study showed one year after receiving a bachelor's degree, men's average salaries are greater than women's, regardless of the field.

"Starting salary — that's a serious issue," Corieri said. You're kind of on a level playing field, you'd think."

In business, these figures relate to the concept of the glass ceiling, which meant women couldn't rise above a certain level in management, said Clint Tankersley, associate dean of undergraduate programs at the Whitman School of Management.

The glass ceiling has been disappearing in the past 10 years, Tankersley said. He cited Carly Fiorina, the former president and CEO of Hewlett-Packard.

Female students also hold leadership positions in many of Whitman's student groups, he said. In fact, the presidents of nine undergraduate groups within the school are women, according to a pamphlet at the visitor center.

Study results of the starting salaries of graduates with bachelor's degrees in other fields were flawed, however, according to Isik and others.

The study grouped engineering, math and the hard sciences to show that men in these fields make on average about $10,000 more than women one year after graduation.

However, men are more concentrated than women in engineering when compared to math and the sciences, and engineering jobs tend to pay more, Isik said.

Pay differences for men and women who have a bachelor's degree in history are unreliable because those people are typically not working in the historical fields, said Craige Champion, chairman of the history department.

Business and the social sciences, fields that are popular among men and women at the national level, are similar at SU, but still show a slight male dominance.

Numbers of women interested in management were high in the '80s, dropped in the '90s and are increasing again, said Russell Hamilton, associate dean of undergraduate recruiting at Whitman.

Currently, it seems businesses are extremely interested in women, he said. As a result, women are interested in pursuing business.

Join us for a look at the impact of new media on...
Just about everything!

Journalism 2.0 -
How Technology Is Changing the Media, Journalists and Consumers

FEATURING

Sreenath Sreenivasan
Professor, Columbia Graduate School of Journalism Visiting Professor, Poynter Institute, The Tech Guru. WABC-TV. New York Founder, Streetips.com.

Memorial Hall, University of Massachusetts Amherst
Tuesday, December 5, 2006 5 p.m.

Reception Immediatly Following the 2006-2007 JOURNALISM PROGRAM LECTURE SERIES on BROADCAST AND THE MEDIA

Come early for FREE pizza and gift card raffle!

Funded by David '79 and Teena Kantor

Police urged to set up sobriety checkpoints

Prime Minister Stephen Harper announces that his government will soon introduce legislation to give police more power to test drug-impaired drivers.

MADD from page 1

"I think we have been fairly successful with the difficult amount of activity," said Sergeant David Black, instructor of the Police Academy in Standard Field Sobriety Testing.

According to Sergeant Black, the average person pulled over for drunk driving is college-aged, between 18 and 22 years old. People under 21 who are pulled over for being under the influence and refuse to take a breathalyzer test can lose their licenses for up to three years.

Drivers 21 years or older who are pulled over for being under the influence and refuse to take a breathalyzer test can lose their licenses for up to six months.

Freshman Sam Talbot said he appreciated the efforts of the campus police to cut down drunk driving on campus.

"I think it is good that they are out there not just to get kids in trouble, but to help them and make sure that the students safety is their number one priority," he said.

"It's just not worth the risk of not only getting your license taken away, but of hurting someone else. The consequences of driving under the influence are far too great," said freshman Jenn Beviga.

"I think that it is a realistic goal that in the future there will be zero drunk drivers on the road," Delullis said.

UMass expects 25,000 applicants

CANNABIS from page 1

the governor, legislature, Board of Trustees, president's office, faculty, staff, students, parents and alumni to provide a safe environment," explained Gargano. "Our students at UMass Amherst have encouraged the University to have more stringent and forceful policies. Our students have shared they do not want the raucous behavior associated with alcohol and substance abuse."

Gargano said that the quality of our school is a reflection of the people in it, and the faculty that work for it. Many of the students have a yearning to learn, to go on to do great things, and to make the University proud.

This year, UMass is expecting to receive over 25,000 applications for admissions, a number that has increased by 10,000 in the last three years. Gargano believes this increase in interest is due to the reputation UMass has for its academic quality rather than for its "party school" image.

"The majority of students want to combine the academic life of the University with a co-curricular education to provide full value," says Gargano. "Students want to move freely around the University without concern for unruly behavior or other types of behavior that infringes upon their education."

The Cannabis Coalition Reform was formed at UMass in 1991, and it is the oldest continuously-run student organization on campus. It includes over 200 students on campus, and they're affiliated with the National Organization to Reform Marijuana Laws (NORML), a much larger group made up of lobbyists.

Anyone interested in joining the group can attend their regular meetings on Monday evenings at 7 p.m. in room 322 of the Student Union.

Female drivers banned

WOMEN from page 2

and – like many in Saudi Arabia – offers a range of cars.

While the introduction of car saleswomen into the work force may seem a gain for Saudi women, some say that for every step forward, women suffer other setbacks.

Saudi writer Maram Mekkawi cited a recent incident in which female doctors attending a conference in the same room as men – a rare event in the kingdom – were asked to leave because one speaker refused to address a mixed group.

The women left, sparking outrage among other women.

In a column in Al-Watan newspaper, Mekkawi said the women doctors wouldn't have been kicked out had Saudi society not programmed them to accept such humiliation.

"I'm sorry to say that I have found in the Western world men and women with much more manly stands than ours here, where we claim a monopoly on values and principles," Mekkawi wrote.

"Would I be blamed if I felt like a third-class or even 10th-class citizen?" she added.

Some people wonder if the new all-women showroom will meet the fate of a similar business forced to close shortly after it opened in Jeddah a few years ago.

Helicopter plunges into lake killing four U.S. Marines

By Kim Gamel
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Four U.S. Marines died when a Sea Knight helicopter plunged into a lake in volatile Anbar province, the military said Monday, raising to 13 the number of American troops killed during a bloody weekend in Iraq.

It was the second military aircraft to go down in a week in Anbar, a stronghold of Sunni insurgents, although the military said mechanical problems rather than gunfire had forced the emergency landing on Sunday.

"The pilots maintained control of the aircraft the entire time," the military said.

A Marine was pulled from the water but attempts to resuscitate him were unsuccessful. The bodies of three missing Marines were found in a subsequent search, the military said. Twelve other passengers survived.

Lt. Col. Christopher Garver, a U.S. military spokesman, declined to provide details about the twin-rotor CH-46 helicopter's mission or the reason for its forced landing, saying the incident was under investigation.

The helicopter, from the Third Marine Aircraft wing, had the ability to land and taxi in the water in case of emergency. It came down in Lake Qadisiyah, a huge reservoir behind the hydroelectric dam at Haditha on the Euphrates River.

The deaths came on a weekend in which nine other U.S. troops were killed, including five in Anbar. The weekend's violence pushed the total number of American service members who have died since the war started in March 2003 to at least 2,901.

A U.S. fighter jet also crashed last week in a field, killing the Air Force pilot.

Iraqi state TV, meanwhile, reported that Iraqi police found half a ton of explosives, including suicide belts and roadside bombs, in Anbar – a province the size of North Carolina that stretches west from Baghdad to the borders of Syria, Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

High numbers of U.S. casualties as well as a recent spike in violence between Shiites and Sunnis have contributed to doubts about the war in the U.S. These concerns were considered a major factor in the U.S. Democratic congressional victory.

President Bush told one of Iraq's leading Shiite politicians, Abdul-Aziz al-Hakim, in a White House meeting Monday that the United States was not satisfied with progress in Iraq.

"I assured him that the U.S. supports his work and the work of the prime minister to unify the country," Bush said, referring to Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki. "Part of unifying Iraq is for the elected leaders and society leaders to reject the extremists that are trying to stop the advance of this young democracy."

The president is under pressure to draft a new blueprint for U.S. involvement in Iraq. A bipartisan commission – headed by James A. Baker III, former Republican secretary of state, and former Democratic Rep. Lee Hamilton of Indiana – is expected to present its recommendations to Bush on Wednesday.

The group is expected to recommend gradually changing the mission of U.S. troops in Iraq from combat to training and supporting Iraqi units, with a goal of withdrawing American combat troops by early 2008.

The violence persisted Monday, with at least 13 people killed in attacks nationwide. The victims included Sabil Ibrahim al-Dulaimi, a 36-year-old Sunni news editor with the private, independent Dijlah radio station who was gunned down in his car on his way to work.

Al-Dulaimi's slaying raised to at least 93 the number of journalists killed in Iraq since the Iraq war began, according the Paris-based Reporters Without Borders.

Police also found 56 bodies in Baghdad and the province of Diyala, northeast of the capital.

Forty-eight of those were handcuffed, blindfolded and shot before they were dumped in two different areas of the capital — 18 on the Sunni-dominated western bank of the Tigris River and 30 on the eastern side, which is largely Shiite.

Judge approves FAFSA aid denial, dismissing lawsuit

Students for a Sensible Drug Policy filed a lawsuit against Department of Education Secretary Margaret Spellings to eliminate Question 31 on the FAFSA, which asks about a students drug convictions while receiving federal aid.

By Lindsay Fuston
Oregon Daily Emerald (U. Oregon)

EUGENE, Ore. — A federal judge recently dismissed a lobby group's lawsuit to abolish a drug conviction-related financial aid requirement that has denied aid to nearly 200,000 college students during the last decade.

Question 31 on the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, which asks whether a student has been convicted for the possession or sale of illegal drugs while receiving federal student aid, prompted the Students for a Sensible Drug Policy to file a lawsuit last spring against U.S. Department of Education Secretary Margaret Spellings to eliminate the provision.

Students who answer 'yes' are denied aid for at least a year or until they complete a rehabilitation program to battle their drug usage.

SSDP, a grassroots, student-run organization that "dares to resist the War on Drugs," alleged that the FAFSA question was unconstitutional, but U.S. District Judge Charles Kormann granted a government motion to dismiss the lawsuit on Oct. 27.

"Basically, we were thrown out of court," said SSDP Campaigns Director Tom Angell.

SSDP dubbed the provision the "Aid Elimination Penalty" because they said it kicks students out of school who rely on federal aid, Angell said.

SSDP argued that the FAFSA question violates the "double jeopardy" clause of the Fifth Amendment because "denial of educational loans to students convicted of a drug offense constitutes an additional criminal punishment," according to case documents.

Kormann disputed the group's claims, saying the Supreme Court has "long recognized that 'revocation of a privilege voluntarily granted ... is characteristically free of punitive criminal element.'"

"Ineligibility is automatic upon conviction of a controlled substances offense. In that respect, the behavior to which the ineligibility applies is already a crime," Kormann said in his 16-page dismissal document.

One of SSDP's main arguments centers on how no other FAFSA question inquires about criminal activity, so a student who commits a violent crime, such as rape or murder, can still receive government money instead of "a student caught with a single marijuana cigarette," Angell said.

The Higher Education Amendments of 1998, which created the law, states, "If we want to ensure safety on our Nation's campuses, it is vital to keep them drug-free."

Want to change your undergraduate major to nursing?

We announce the opening of Transfer Application period for current UMASS Amherst undergraduate non nursing majors to apply to change their undergraduate major to the Nursing major. Due date for transfer application is December 13, 2006.

We are pleased to invite the transfer applications of current undergraduate non nursing majors who wish to apply to the Nursing major in the school of nursing. Transfer applications for the School of Nursing will now be reviewed. All information on eligibility for transfer is contained at the website www.umass.edu nursing (see transfer notice banner on the home page!)

Don't Delay!

Holiday Dinner
with All of the Trimmings!

Please join us on Tuesday, Dec. 5th from 5 to 9 pm
in all DCs

Menu:
Whole Roast Turkey (local)
New York Strip Steak
Cider Glazed Pork Loin
Spinach Stuffed Portobello Mushrooms
Mashed Potatoes (local)
Onion rings
Butternut Squash (local)
Roasted Root Vegetables (local)
Eggnog Bread Pudding
Choice of Hot Mulled Cider or Cold Cider (local)

Be A Local Hero
Buy Locally Grown

DINING SERVICES
UMass Amherst

Corrections

The article printed Dec. 1 entitled "Who's threatening society?" contained a comment from Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Michael Gargano's secretary on the University's news policies concerning marijuana arrests. She was not speaking on behalf of the University.

In a photo caption above yesterday's article entitled, "Experts offer possible causes for campus pond temperature," the head of Biodrawversity at UMass was improperly named. His name is Dick Satthorst.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." - Voltaire

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM

A peace-symbol wreath is displayed at the Bell Tower Park Building in Pagosa Springs, thus declaring peace with Lisa Jensen.

Peace, love and Satan

Debbie Friedman

Just a few days ago, in a serene suburb of Colorado, a Grinch tried to steal Christmas. Or at least ruin it.

A local woman from the town of Pagosa Springs decided to ring in the holiday season with the most atrocious, unthinkable, inappropriate household decoration imaginable. A peace sign-shaped wreath. That's right, she hung up that despicable symbol of harmony and love for all the men, women and children to see. And she didn't even think about all the ignorant people in the town she might offend. Can you believe the nerve?

I mean, the nerve of the people in that town, who threatened to fine an innocent woman, Lisa Jensen, $25 a day until she removed the wreath. Her homeowners association claimed the fines were a reaction to several resident complaints. Apparently some people from Pagosa Springs felt and still do feel the peace sign wreath is a symbol of Satan and is sending an anti-Iraq war message.

Coming together for the holidays does not mean we should all become politically apathetic for a month.

Jensen defended herself by saying she was not intending to be anti-war by putting up the wreath and that to her it just represents "a spiritual thing." She told the board the wreath was staying up until after Christmas, no matter what.

Bob Kearns, who is the president of the homeowners association which fined Lisa Jensen, initially argued that the boards' action was justified because, as he said, "if you let one go up you have to let them all go up."

But luckily for Lisa Jensen and peace loving people all over the world, the board changed their tune and revoked the fines a week later, after the mainstream media put a spotlight on how absurd the whole thing really was.

Yet, even with this recent reconsideration by the board in Pagosa Springs, it's still amazing that this became an issue in the first place. Something is terribly wrong with the world when a peace sign is equated with Satan, and peace and love turn into two politically partisan words. Shouldn't a figure that traditionally represents spiritual harmony be a welcomed addition to the holiday season anyways?

It seems that Mr. Kearns and several people from the town failed to see that a peace sign is not an ideology. It's an icon, for sure, but what is attached to that icon is completely relative to what a person feels it should be.

Jensen sees it as a sign of spirituality. Others unfortunately see it as Satanic and defiant. But no matter what, she has a right to have this peace sign shaped wreath on her house just as anyone has the right to fly a Confederate flag or put a menorah in their window.

Besides, what really ruins the holiday spirit is the commercialization of Christmas. Just one day after Thanksgiving, the air waves are flooded with Christmas commercials and jingles all enticing us to spend money as a way to ring in that holiday cheer.

We are so bombarded with Christmas that by the time it actually comes, it's almost impossible not to be tired of it. This seasonal marketing barrage trains everyone to view the holidays in a materialistic way, which is a lot more destructive than a peace sign could ever be.

The reason this wreath caused a stir stemmed from the fact that some people consider it to be divisive during a time of year when we are all supposed to come together. However, coming together for the holidays does not mean we should all become politically apathetic for a month.

Christmas spirit and pro-war sentiment are not one of the same. And dissent does not take a holiday vacation – especially during a time when Washington politicians are running around like chickens with their heads cut off, and the situation in Iraq is quickly becoming a bloody Civil War.

Ms. Jensen, who was not trying to make a statement, found herself taking a stand. She stood up for the right we all have to express ourselves. She also stood up for the symbol of peace, which has never done anything to deserve being demonized like it was in Pagosa Springs.

Hundreds of people from around this county stood up with her, calling Jensen to offer their support. Some even offered to help pay the fines the board initially threatened her with.

That's what holiday spirit is really about – coming together for a good cause instead of feeling threatened and getting angry when it looks like people may move apart.

As for the real Grinch of Pagosa Springs, Mr. Kearns, well he has a few things to learn about holiday spirit. After five members of his board voted against taking forceful action to make Jensen take down her wreath, he fired all of them. Nothing says Merry Christmas like "You're fired."

Debbie Friedman is a Collegian columnist.

Bill Trimarco and Lisa Jensen stand next to their peace wreath at their home near Pagosa Springs.

Digital disaster, Part One: education & media

Brad Leibowitz

It could just be me, but judging from the recent events surrounding the releases of "PS3," "X-Box 360" and "Wii," I have no other option but to declare the world has gone berserk. Aside from the comical aspect of teenagers trampling one another to get their hands on "Mario Galaxy," there is a darker side of current happenings.

For years, video games have been creeping into the popular lexicon of teenagers the world over. This trend hit its high a few years back with the introduction of Sony's "PS2." For the majority of players, its release meant more time spent staring endlessly into a never ending virtual world. Conversely for the outsider (such as me), it marked another contraption to stage off maturity and civic duty among my peers.

However, now as the problem undoubtedly has become more pronounced, this atrocity has surfaced as not only a mating problem but a problem that lies at the systemic core of each and every one of us. At the base of our epidemic problem lay two aspects: the teachings of our parents/educational systems and digital media/video games. Although they seem unrelated, I assure you both present a severe complication for the future.

My folks both took part in the counter culture movement of the 1960s. Seeing the atrocities of their government hand in hand with thousands of others, my parents went forth to stir up the idle masses to right the wrongs of the people in power.

However, as time has passed by and our parents birthed a new generation, somewhere along the line their renegade mind set changed. Where once they fought against Nixon and the Vietnam War, now they watch "CSI: Las Vegas" while President Bush takes away their social security. Essentially, an entire generation of renegades went from rebellion to following, from saying "fight the power" to "just do it."

I fear that if something is not done, in 50 years our children will have no rights, and will know that we failed them by playing PS3 instead of voting.

Herein lies the problem: The education we received from our parents was one of following laws and playing by all the rules. Rather than being encouraged to rebel and speak out (as our parents once did), we have been taught to keep our mouths shut so to live a life scratching out dollars in some ever buzzing office.

Instead of being taught how to speak out against injustice, our parents turned a complete 180 by teaching us exactly the opposite. Somehow, whether they sold the American dream down the river or because they bought into the never ending commercialism of shiny objects, our parents sold us short. They gave us luxury over hardship, fluff over substance and instilled passivity over upheaval.

Within this context, we are lacking the basic tools and know how of questioning, uprooting and retooling our government. The passive quality, defined as falling in line with law, is only one part of the equation. To add to this, the luxury aspect comes into play with the introduction and mass marketing/consumption of technology: More specifically, the electronic consumption of media and video games.

On a whole, the national consumption of text-based media (papers) is down across the board. According to the Audit Bureau of Circulations, the average circulation of daily newspapers dropped by 2.6 percent over a six-month period in 2005. To add to this, the circulation of Sunday papers dropped by 3.1 percent during the same time period. On the whole, the circulation for national dailies leveled at 45.2 million (in 1984: 63.3 million).

For years, papers have been the way citizens the world over have received their news. Yet, as this trend changes over to digital media, the reporting which was once highly celebrated by the national mainstream is now on the back burner. In a world where the Tuesday morning breaking news was broken the night before on yahoonews.com, reporters such as Carl Bernstein are a dying breed.

Now, it's not only the online media which scares me, it's the notion that due to online media the truly breaking stories, which will undoubtedly be in print, will go unnoticed.

In the same fashion as papers, literature is also being put to rest. As papers represent our present novels, be it non-fiction or fiction, represent our collective human past and possible future. As the saying goes, if we forget the past, history will repeat itself. More importantly, as a generation we aren't just forgetting the past, we are consciously choosing to ignore it.

I fear that if something is not done, in 50 years our children will have no rights, and will know that we failed them by playing PS3 instead of voting. So I present this question: If we have no stake in the past and we choose to know nothing of our present, where are we headed?

Answer: Slowly but surely, we are headed to the fifth level in Final Fantasy: End Times entitled "The government's screwing us over, but it's alright, you just made 50 million gil and saved the world from the evil Sephiroth."

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist. Look for his "Part Two: video games – the evil of our time" in an upcoming issue.

Acknowledge the right to live

Alberta Colakovic

The use of animals in education is cruel and purposeless. It teaches the dissector to have little respect for life and to perceive organisms only as numerous cells placed in appropriate arrangements to create a functional system of organs and consequently a functioning mechanism.

Should students be permitted or required to dissect the body of an animal killed for the purpose of being dissected? It is taught that the structural organs of the body of all mammalian organisms are similar and serve the same functions. The organisms lectured about in biology are examined through their similarities to humans rather than through their differences.

However, if it has been proven that the similarities among mammals are immense, then it is logical to suppose that the natural reactions felt by all mammals are similar to a certain extent. No one can argue that pain is not felt by all mammals and that the least advanced of these organisms retains the ability to feel sadness, fear and joy, among other senses.

It does not take much observation to perceive these states of mind in people nor in other mammals. If these emotional states are considered to be real and not just the responses of a well-designed mechanism, then to cause pain or fear or sadness in any mammal is cruelty.

Darwin, a proponent of dissection, claimed "There is no fundamental difference between man and the higher mammals in their mental faculties ... The difference in mind between man and the higher animals, great as it is, certainly is one of degree and not of kind."

As a biology student, I would disagree with the idea that the similarities among mammals are of greater importance than differences. Surely, there is more to an organism than its mating, eating and fighting behavior, for these behaviors can clearly be applied to humanity to a greater extent.

Its livelihood may include complex interactions among members of a species, specific techniques in obtaining food, let alone surviving in harsh environmental conditions.

How can students be expected to value life if only the dead form is placed before them as a yellowed, rigid corpse, for their exploration of its internal partitions?

There is much more to the study of an organism other than its internal structure, far more than a simplified analysis of its necessary survival behaviors.

The organ systems, circulatory, reproductive and nervous systems of smaller mammalian species serve identical functions as in the human body, but the forms, sizes and shapes of these organisms are tremendously varied. Not to mention that their modes of life are incomparable with our own. The argument taken on by propellants of animal dissection in education is that the similarity of the organism in question can be used to teach the organ structures that represent life in less advanced organisms.

If these organisms, however, are less advanced but comparable to humans in their internal structural forms, then their similarities take on a greater importance than their differences, and if so, their right to life should be acknowledged and merited.

Dissection is most often used as an educating technique in the fields of natural science, especially in biological studies which is defined as the study of life paradoxically. Are students not expected to learn to respect life and view it with wonder and admiration?

How can students be expected to value life if only the dead form is placed before them as a yellowed, rigid corpse, for their exploration of its internal partitions? In order to study biology, one should be exposed to the study of life. The purpose of the field is to study the processes of the living rather than the dead.

Hence, biology should be redefined as the study of the bodily processes and forms of the nonliving. I end this criticism with a quote from Arthur Schopenhauer: "The assumption that animals are without rights, and the illusion that our treatment of them has no moral significance is a positively outrageous example of Western crudity and barbarity. Universal compassion is the only guarantee of morality."

Alberta Colakovic is a UMass student.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

FANS REPRESENTING 'ZOO MASS'

Twenty-six years ago, I too called myself a UMass student. I loved my four years in Amherst – where I met life-long friends, played and watched UMass sports, joined a sorority, received an invaluable education and felt part of an outstanding community that made me proud to be a student and alumnus of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Well, at Saturday's playoff football game against UNH I was far from proud – especially to have any association with the UMass students who sat in and around us – (and sadly enough, we tried three different stadium sections).

While the outstanding efforts of the football team and the world class UMass Marching Band did not disappoint me, the UMass student fans did. Driving two hours to the game from Boston with my husband, two sons – ages 9 and 13 and a 13-year-old friend, we were looking forward to an exciting afternoon of UMass playoff football.

We however, experienced a social scene we didn't expect. Given the drunken and other obnoxious behavior of the many student fans around us, not to mention the commonplace vulgarity, we were forced to move our seats three times just hoping to find a place where UMass students were not falling on top of each other drunk, or antagonizing UNH fans with profanity. It was as pathetic a sight as an alumnus of UMass could experience. In our second set of seats, my 9-year-old son had two male students fall on top of him and land so hard on him that we thought his hand was broken.

So, while I thank the football team and the UMass band for their outstanding performances on Saturday, I ask the UMass students who are unfortunately reviving an age old "Zoo Mass" label – stay home.

The athletes and musicians who are making a name for our Commonwealth's flagship University don't need you or your immaturity, poor judgment and un-sportsmanlike conduct.

To the football team and marching band ... make us proud in Montana ... fortunately your obnoxious fans will be somewhere else embarrassing themselves. They had no idea on Saturday that it was about you and the University that you represent and not them.

Chris H. Baker
UMass Alumnus

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT!

THERE IS A 550 WORD LIMIT.

AND PLEASE INCLUDE YOUR NAME.

Send letters to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Holiday movie season begins

By Kate Bauer
Collegian Staff

Ah, the holiday season. The time once a year when everything seems merry and cheerful, but in fact is usually something straight out of a Weird Al Christmas parody – that agonizing week of finals, the pain of finding that perfect gift for the boyfriend/girlfriend, nothing but stale TV specials, and facing the grandparents.

It's also that time of year where Oscar season kicks in, and the movie theatres are packed with "serious" and "thought-provoking" movies like "The Fountain" or "The Good Shepard." So if you're not interested in seeing something that might put a damper on that holiday spirit, you can always head to the theatre to check out those "other" films released during the holiday season – the cheesy Christmas flicks.

On Dec. 8, Warner Bros. releases "Unaccompanied Minors," starring Wilmer Valderrama as an airport employee stuck with looking after a group of kids of divorced families snowed into a Chicago airport on Christmas Eve.

Also released Dec. 8 is "The Holiday," starring Cameron Diaz and Kate Winslet as two down-on-their-luck ladies who decide to switch homes for the holiday. There's even some horror mixed into all of this holiday fun with the release of "Black Christmas," which is coincidentally being released on Dec. 25. The movie is a remake of a 1974 slasher flick where a psychotic killer starts attacking several hot sorority girls.

In the past few years, holiday movies have seemed to reach a continuingly higher level of absurdity, and this season doesn't look like it's getting better. Take the "The Santa Clause" franchise, for instance. The first, just simply called "The Santa Clause," was a great film, filled with good laughs and a great story about a father learning about the important things in life.

Now, whoever's dense idea it was to make a second and third "Santa Clause" must have drank too much spiked eggnog. While the first film was interesting and a unique story, the next two were just sloppy seconds in an attempt for a studio to make an extra buck.

As you've probably noticed, this is a trend in Hollywood, with movies like the "Scream" and "Pirates of the Caribbean" franchises (yes, even though Johnny Depp is fabulous, the second movie pretty much sucked – which gives me little hope for the third).

"Deck the Halls," starring Danny DeVito and Matthew Broderick, is just another holiday flick to add to the masses. Steve Finch (Broderick) is the resident Christmas guy in the small fictitious town of Cloverdale, Mass. A control freak to the extreme, Finch is so occupied with making sure that this year is a perfect Christmas that he doesn't pay much attention to his family, and is more concerned with what kind of ridiculous sweaters he's going to make them wear for the family Christmas photo.

But Finch's perfect holiday plans are put to the test with the arrival of his new neighbor, Buddy Hall (DeVito). Buddy, a career salesman still working out what it is he wants to sell, one night gets it into his head that if he can put enough lights on his house, then it can be seen from space. Buddy's antics start to take a toll on Finch's nerves, and soon everyone in town is consulting Buddy for X-mas advice instead of Steve. Duels and hi-jinks ensue between the two, with each event increasingly more ridiculous than the last.

In one attempt at trying to make the guys get along, wives Kelly (Kristin Davis) and Tia (Kristin Chenoweth) force their husbands to sit together during a performance at the annual Winterfest Fair. Watching three mystery girls dancing along to a

See DECK THE HALLS on page 6

Mathew Broderick (left) and Danny Devito (right) play neighbors who are competing for the best Christmas lights display in 'Deck the Halls.'

Starhawk coming to UMass on Thursday

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Staff

Starhawk, a self proclaimed witch, will be speaking at Smith College on Thursday, Dec. 7 at 7:30 p.m. in the Helen Hills Chapel. Her lecture entitled "Holding the Vision of Global Justice: Keeping Our Spirit and Courage Alive" will focus on how to make the world a better place in spite of war.

Starhawk co-founded the Tradition of Reclaiming in the 1980s. Much like Catholicism is to Christianity, Reclaiming is a smaller faction of the larger Pagan religion. While Reclaiming is based in San Francisco, the Tradition has spread across the US and even to Germany and Great Britain.

Reclaiming praises the Goddess and works with nature to help the community. The majority of reclaiming members call themselves witches and during the summers, witch camps are held. Witch camps are held in the woods of various areas and there, witches of all races, ages, ethnic backgrounds, sexualities and genders come together to study magic, which includes trance work, healing, drumming, dancing, chanting, storytelling, guided visualization and energy work.

Reclaiming is considered an activist Tradition. As an activist Tradition, the members are constantly looking at how to better the world around them. Community members often participate in political actions directed toward non-violence, social justice and a healthy planet, according to Vibra Willow in an essay published in 2000 entitled "Reclaiming: History."

The ideas of the members are published in a quarterly magazine, "The Reclaiming Quarterly." While the magazine is currently on a hiatus, the most recent issue, which was published in summer of 2005, can be viewed on their Web site, reclaimingquarterly.org.

Since Wicca religions have no Bible and look toward no one leader, there are many factors that come into the practices and beliefs of a Tradition. Starhawk's "The Spiral Dance: A Rebirth of the Ancient Religion of the Great Goddess" has become a major source of information for most Traditions. Starhawk has recently re-released this work, including a new introduction highlighting the impact the book has made.

Starhawk has written 10 books, her most current being "The Earth Path: Grounding Your Spirit in the Rhythms of Nature," which was released in 2004. She has also released numerous essays on topics such as Hurricane Katrina and the war in Iraq.

Starhawk also has a new four-CD set, "Earth Magic." In "Earth Magic," Starhawk talks the listener through magic exercises. Earlier CDs include "Wiccan Rituals and Blessings" and "Wicca for Beginners."

Another project that Starhawk has recently released is the documentary "Signs Out of the Time," which is about archeologist Marija Gimbutas, whose work on the goddesses of Europe have affected the Neo-Pagan movements. The documentary was made with filmmaker Donna Read, who has also worked with Starhawk on such movies as "The Burning Times."

Activist Starhawk is the author of over nine books and many essays. Her latest project is a documentary about Marija goddesses.

Tickets for the event are available at the door only and cost $12 for general admission and $6 for students or people of low income. All proceeds will go towards the Men's Resource Center for Change, the newly formed Five Rivers Council and the Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts.

An environmentally aware reading list

By Clayton Brostowin
Collegian Columnist

In this week's environmental article, the SEAA invites you to pick up a good book and read, and gain some insight on the environment. As an avid reader, I thought about all the books that have an environmental message. These differ in technical knowledge required, use of plot and philosophy vs. scientific investigation. They include science journals, textbooks (no one reads those for fun, right?), books that use basic science, science fiction, books that discuss the humanitarian aspect, poetry and almost any genre. This article is to encourage everyone to learn more about the environment, whether by picking up a book, taking classes, reading the news or becoming involved in an environmental group. On to the books:

"Silent Spring" – This is the classic of environmental science. "Silent Spring" was written in 1962 by Rachel Carson and was a major factor in the modern environment movement, which was intensifying in the '60s. The book discusses the affects of pesticides on animals, plants and all of humanity and what we should do about it. It raised the issue of carcinogens and all the effects these pesticides were having on humanity. These consequences were unexpected and, if continued, would be extremely detrimental to the health of the global environment and to us. This book caused the removal of DDT, a major pesticide at the time, and allowed the later created EPA to regulate pesticides. While the book is a little old and some of the issues are now less of a problem, it is a good introduction to the environment because of its importance in the history of modern environmentalism. This book uses scientific fact to prove its point, but to read it one does not need a deep understanding of biology or chemistry.

"Our Stolen Future" – This book is considered to be a continuation or next generation copy of "Silent Spring." Where "Silent Spring" discusses the effects of pesticides on the environment, "Our Stolen Future" covers the new, broader range of chemicals that have adverse effects on humans and on the environment. Written by Theo Colborn, Dianne Dumanoski and John Peterson Myers and published in 1997, this book talks about the various unexpected effects on humanity through our use of chemicals. "Silent Spring" brought our attention to how pesticides were causing cancer, and now "Our Stolen Future" says that we have been too narrow-minded. Aside from cancer, the various chemicals that are created by humanity can cause sterility, birth defects, mental retardation and a weakening of the immune system. The worst thing is that no one can tell how much damage these are causing since everyone, even newborns, are contaminated with these chemicals. These chemicals come from almost anywhere, from pesticides, factory chemicals, medicine, and plastics. This book also uses scientific fact and does not require an intense knowledge of biology or chemistry.

As an example of one of the above mentioned books that is not science-based, I offer:

"The Gods Themselves" – This is an award winning science fiction book written by an award winning science fiction author. The book was written by Isaac Asimov in 1972 and it is a comment on humanity's addiction to energy and particularly oil. in the book, a new source of unlimited, perfectly safe energy is found. The process involves a transfer of energy between our universe and a parallel one. Or is it perfectly safe?

Some of the characters are worried that this energy will have a negative effect, and it does. To find out more, you'll have to read it, but the themes of the book are a reflection on not investigating our effects on the environment before we act, and showing that energy is protected from all scrutiny – look at the current situation with oil. Finally, it paints a negative picture of the future in which every new technology is used to solve the problem created by the current technology, but in fact, there is never an end – everything has consequences.

There are a lot of other books that I would recommend and here is a list of some: "Guns, Germs, and Steel" by Jared Diamond – A Pulitzer Prize winner; "Ishmael" by Daniel Quinn; "Into The Wild" by Jon Krakauer; "It's All for Sale" by James Ridgeway.

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

Waits' latest release is a triple disc album

By Alex Hornbeck
Collegian Staff

It's difficult to know where to start when discussing "Orphans," the new Tom Waits triple-disc set. A compilation of previously unrecorded songs, tough-to-find soundtrack contributions, and various covers, "Orphans" is nothing if not substantial. It's an almost overwhelming collection of 56 tracks – a challenging listen if attempted all at once. Luckily for the listener, Waits has meticulously divided the collection into three distinct sets, entitled "Brawlers," "Bawlers" and "Bastards," which together stand as both one of the year's best and one of Waits' personal best.

Waits has always been a master of conveying a distinct mood or emotion through the unified sound of an album. "Blood Money" in 2002 presented melancholic tales of woe and loneliness through tender woodwind-backed ballads. On 1999's "Mule Variations," Waits dabbled in sparse, fractured Americana to great success. The underrated and overlooked "Real Gone" of 2004 found the singer/songwriter relying on his voice for much of the album's percussion, creating a twisted, beatbox-fueled ride. Elements of all these albums combine to form "Orphans," a work most successful when viewed as three separate collections with three distinct styles of song.

With "Brawlers," Waits presents a 16-track set of relatively straight-forward blues-tinged tunes. The disc opens with "Lie To Me," a brief, haunting rocker that sets the sonic stage for the rest of the disc. While most of the songs here are Waits originals, the audience is treated to a few covers, including the 1950s hit "Sea of Love" (previously recorded by such artists as The Honeydrippers and Cat Power) and "The Return of Jackie and Judy," originally a Ramones song, which is one of the most endearing covers on any of the three discs. Gone is the punk edge of The Ramones' original. While these guitars are loud, they're drenched in reverb, creating a welcoming backdrop for Waits' playful, mischevious croon.

The disc's lyrics are as potent as any on Waits' other albums. "Fish in the Jailhouse" serves up the story of an inmate who plans on breaking out of prison with a skeleton key fashioned from fish bones culled from supper. "Road to Peace" is perhaps the most direct song Waits has ever recorded, a seven-minute commentary on the Israel/Palestine conflict. It presents Waits at his most scathing and his best, a truly effective and touching song that's tough to forget.

"Bawlers" contains softer numbers, many with string or woodwind accompaniments which hearken back to the sound of 2002's albums "Alice" and "Blood Money." Waits is just as effective singing ballads as he is rocking out "You Can Never Hold Back Spring" showcases Waits' tender side as he espouses upon the nature of the passing of the seasons. "Little Man" finds Waits solo with a piano and saxophone, reminiscent of his early years on Asylum Records.

While this disc is a beautiful repose between the rock 'n' roll of "Brawlers" and the bizarre oddities of "Bastards," the slow numbers tend to run into one another. A little more variety in the tracks chosen for "Bawlers" may have proved more exciting.

"Bastards," the third and final disc, opens with "What Keeps Mankind Alive," a Kurt Weill song that originally appeared on a tribute compilation to Weill. Here, Waits is at his most orchestral and melodramatic, with flourishes of trumpet, cymbal and xylophone throughout, climaxing with the fervent claim that "mankind is kept alive by bestial acts." Similarly demented tracks make up the brunt of the disc.

"Dog Door" is a stand-out track, with an industrial, persistent beat accompanying grimy falsetto which later engages in a call-and-response with Waits' lowest grumblings, all before being assaulted by waves of noisy guitar. Throughout the set are spoken-word interludes, backed by the various creakings and clankings for which Waits has become known. "Bastards" is a truly manic collection and sounds delightfully fit for the asylum.

Each of the three discs found in "Orphans" creates its own musical world. Each is successful – "Brawlers" especially so, perhaps the greatest single disc Waits has produced since the epic "Rain Dogs." "Orphans" further establishes Tom Waits as one of the country's most continually creative artists and is well worth the time to explore.

Rent a classic holiday movie this year

Karen Winokur/Collegian

Classics like 'National Lampoon's Christmas Vacation' still hold up to be the better Christmas movie for your dollar when compared to the newly released Christmas movies such as 'Deck the Halls.' Another Christmas classic is 'A Charlie Brown Christmas.'

DECK THE HALLS from page 5

pop-themed Christmas song, the guys start to get rambunctious, and start calling out "Hey sexy" and "Who's your daddy," only to have the girls turn around to be revealed as both Finch and Hall's daughters. The men are so shocked they run into a nearby church to rinse their eyes out with holy water. Now, does this really come off as a film you'd bring a kid to see?

For a PG rating, this flick sure has a lot of sexual references. Apparently, Buddy and Jia have a pole in their bedroom, and the town's chief of police is a closet cross dresser. Upon first meeting the Finches in their PJs one early morning, Buddy jokes, "Looks like someone came out to say hello."

The movie is crude, and there isn't much to laugh at. Sure, DeVito's always fun to watch, but relying on two well-known actors like DeVito and Broderick doesn't cut it for this lame film. And just to note — no way do two parents less than 5 feet tall like Buddy and Jia produce two 6-foot blond models (Sabrina and Kelly Aldridge from MTV's "8th and Ocean")!

So instead of spending your $5.50 on this clunker, I'd recommend heading to the rental store instead of the theatre. Pick up some holiday favorites like "Home Alone" or "National Lampoon's Christmas Vacation." And there is an endless amount of holiday classics, like "A Charlie Brown Christmas," "A Christmas Story," "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer" (though those stop-motion characters kind (Sabrina and Kelly Aldridge from MTV's "8th and Ocean")!

So instead of spending your $5.50 on this clunker, I'd recommend heading to the rental store instead of the theatre. Pick up some holiday favorites like "Home Alone" or "National Lampoon's Christmas Vacation." And there is an endless amount of holiday classics, like "A Charlie Brown Christmas," "A Christmas Story," "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer" (though those stop-motion characters kind of creep me out), and of course, "How the Grinch Stole Christmas" either the cartoon or Jim Carrey versions are good.

Check out ew.com for a list of the top 10 holiday flicks, which includes all of these listed. So grab that glass of eggnog, turn on that holiday flick and sit back and enjoy. And look forward to that nice long holiday break.

Want what you have, not what you don't

Jasmine Monteiro

It's no surprise that suddenly you want to talk to that guy you previously wouldn't give a second chance. And I'm not shocked that you conveniently gave that girl a call – two months later. You may not realize what you are doing or why you're doing it, but it's quite easy to see. You're just following suit with the widely popular trend of wanting what you can't have.

Have you ever bumped into that guy you were dating for a little while and wondered what happened to him? Nowadays there are many situations where people stop seeing each other because they lose interest. It seems that more and more people are in it for the chase rather than for the catch. It's obvious that no one believes anything should come too easily, especially relationships. It's almost as if we've been trained to believe this.

We hear it all the time. Good things come to those who wait, so we do. But when we finally figure out that we could have what we want, we don't want it anymore. Why? There are a couple of different reasons: we're either not ready for a relationship like we had previously thought, or we realize that the infatuation phase has passed.

I think the biggest problem for some people is that they get into a routine. When we see something we like, we want to pursue it aggressively. We approach someone, maybe ask for their number, and then the games begin, literally. On one hand, no-one wants to think that their efforts go unnoticed. On the other hand, we also don't want to be obsessively stalked.

That's why this becomes a double-edged sword. Everyone seems to want a happy medium between being the aggressor and being the chased. We all want to be wanted, but we don't want to do all the work either.

Sometimes it's easy to get caught up in the lust and butterflies. Everyone likes the idea of having a new beau, but many fail to understand that there's more to it than that. If you want one thing, there's no point in trying to convince yourself you want something different. And if you don't know what you want, at least be honest about it. It's always possible that when you find the right one, you'll realize it rather quickly.

The biggest thing you need to look at is what category you fall into when it comes to the initial pursuit. If you constantly find yourself doting over someone one minute and pushing them aside the next, there's a good chance you're not ready for commitment. Or you're thoroughly confused.

It's possible that you could be stuck in the stages of infatuation and sweaty palms. It's the beginning phase where everything is new, exciting and different. It's a good feeling – we all love it – but you have to realize that it doesn't last forever.

While most people recognize this, some people need to be shown the light. The game is getting old. If you're into someone and you want to be persistent, don't do it halfway – if they're worth it, they'll stick around.

Frustenfield continues with injury

By Cary Darling
Mct Campus Newspapers

Blue October lead singer and guitarist Justin Furstenfeld was running around the bases following a performance at a Tampa minor-league baseball diamond in May when he slid into home and into a hospital.

He broke his right leg in several places and needed immediate surgery. Things were just starting to get back to normal for him when, three weeks ago, he slipped in the bathroom and re-injured it.

"I need to drink more milk," he says with a laugh by phone, recuperating among friends and family in Lincoln, Neb.

Most of the current Blue October tour has been canceled except for the Texas dates. After all, Texas is home for the San Marcos quintet. "I'll get out there in a wheelchair if I have to," Furstenfeld says.

Dealing with a bum leg takes a little blush off the rose of success. The band's most recent album, "Foiled," went gold (selling more than 500,000 copies) and peaked at No. 29 on Billboard's charts. It has spawned a couple of big hits, "Hate Me" and "Into the Ocean."

This follows on the heels of Blue October's 2003 track "Calling You" gaining airplay and being included on the "American Wedding" soundtrack. Their grunge-lite sound, spiked with poppier moments, seems to be what the "modern rock" listener wants, as the band is rivaling Los Lonely Boys as the most popular Texas rock band on the radio these days.

The leg injury, though, was certainly not Furstenfeld's first brush with the medical system. Much has been made of how the band's lyrics, such as in "Hate Me," stem from the singer-songwriter's struggles with depression and drug abuse. He has been in and out of therapy since he was 14.

"There was so much stuff going on in my head. The only way to get it out was through writing poetry and stories," remembers Furstenfeld, 30, who says he's totally clean these days. "I've been on and off meds for depression, and I used my music as a crutch. I have no idea [why I was like this]. Some people have different chemicals in their brains, and I think darker than most people. But you keep yourself healthy, keep your head on straight, make a goal for yourself that day and you get through it."

Furstenfeld sometimes plays solo shows under the name Colorado 5591 because that was the number he was assigned during his institutionalization. He formed Blue October in the mid-'90s with his brother Jeremy on drums and Ryan Delahoussaye whom he met while a student at Houston's High School for the Performing and Visual Arts on violin, mandolin and piano.

In the late '90s, they relocated from Houston to San Marcos, where Jeremy was studying at Texas State University. Today, they're rounded out by guitarist CB Hudson and bassist Matt Noveskey.

The band gained a cult following with the albums "Consent to Treatment" (2000), "History for Sale" (2003) and "Argue With a Tree" (2005). But they broke through to mainstream visibility big-time with "Foiled."

"It comes as a shock," Furstenfeld says. "I never expected this. I never asked for it. I just wanted to make music and use it as a therapy tool. It's weird getting popular, and people want to get into your head, asking you where [your ideas] come from, when you don't know yourself."

Not all critics are buying what Blue October's selling. In a savage Houston Press piece that ran in June subtitled "Justin Furstenfeld Orders Us To Hate Him. We Obey," writer John Nova Lomax dismissed "the 12-steps lingo-ridden lyrics" and knocked the group for aping My Chemical Romance by caking on the makeup for a Jay Leno appearance.

"I really don't read a lot about myself," Furstenfeld says. "I didn't get into this to get famous, so I didn't know what the Houston Press said. But if I wear Converse [shoes], will I then be wanting to be The All-American Rejects? The next time I play Houston, I think I'll put on extra makeup."

Aging O'Neal seeking new roles

By Richard Huff
New York Daily News

Tatum O'Neal stars in MyNetworkTV's new telenovela "Wicked Wicked Games," and it will likely be her last.

"I don't think I would do a novela again," O'Neal said last week, noting the heavy work load involved in a five-nights-a-week drama. "To be honest, you have to be in your 20s. I'm in my 40s."

She's 43.

MyNetworkTV, the Fox-owned network that was created after the demise of UPN, exclusively airs telenovelas Monday through Friday, with weekend recap shows.

"Wicked Wicked Games" stars O'Neal as a sophisticated beauty who was left broken-hearted after a lover dumped her for another woman, played by Joan Severance. Twenty-five years later, O'Neal's character is trying to destroy the guy who ditched her.

The show will launch Wednesday at 8 p.m. EST along with "Watch Over Me," a new telenovela starring Dayanara Torres as a grad student engaged to a ruthless multimillionaire businessman. "Watch Over Me" airs at 9.

Producers shot 65 episodes of each show over a period of four months, meaning the cast worked six long days every week, and on multiple episodes daily.

"I did not audition for this one," O'Neal joked. "They probably wouldn't have gotten me. It's just so much work."

Torres said the difficulty with the telenovela work schedule is that so much of it is shot out of sequence, leaving the actors with little emotional guidance for their characters.

O'Neal is no stranger to hard work. Last season, she was in the cast of FX's "Rescue Me," and negotiations are under way to have her back next season. It's just the large volume of work in such a short period of time that made "Games" so demanding, she said.

And it's not that she didn't have some idea. Her father, Ryan O'Neal, who starred in the prime-time soap "Peyton Place," once warned her about the work load on that type of show.

"We shot so fast, your energy is never down, you've got to move on, move on, move on," she said.

O'Neal plays an over-the-top character who is very angry at her former lover. She's almost a cartoon, O'Neal said.

"I think it's fun to be big and have permission to take your acting ability and be as big as possible with it," she said. "There was no bar set for me. ... I just went off the deep end."

The production pace and lower-than-average budget for an hour-long prime-time series do have an impact, though.

"Sometimes the rush and trying to fit in so many scenes in a day," Torres said, "it cuts maybe a bit of the performance."

O'Neal said she expects the shows to do well with viewers, but added she told producers they need to be careful with the schedule.

"It makes it difficult for the show to be as great," O'Neal said. "It's very difficult when they're cutting corners and whatever. If they ... start putting a little more money into them, I think you will have a huge success."

Actress Tatum O'Neal stars in'Wicked Wicked Games,' a telenovela. The show airs weekly on the new network MyNetworkTV.

PREMIER MASSACHUSETTS NIGHT CLUB
Earn $$$$ for school or fun
ARE YOU INTERESTED IN DANCING?
Earn average $400 a night!
Waitresses/Shot Girls Wanted
No Experience Necessary
Flexible hours
Positions open immediately...
Call for more details!
Anthony's Strip Club
(413)246-0299

ARTS & LIVING
IS HIRING
A POSITION IS AVAILABLE FOR AN ASSISTANT ARTS EDITOR.
FOR MORE INFO EMAIL ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM OR STOP BY THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN THE CAMPUS CENTER.

Line changes bring UM more success

HOCKEY from page 10

will also miss tonight's game with an injury.

"The difference is sometimes just a fresh face," said Cahoon. "A lot of these guys have played with one another at different points in their career, but the three people that I put together haven't been together, but two of them have been together."

A perfect example is Cahoon's current top line, where Quirk and Davis have been paired together all season. Early on they were grouped with Capraro, and the line saw a lot of success. Cahoon made the switch of Capraro for Fenton, and the transition has been nearly seamless.

"There's a lot better feel [for each other], and if they pay attention to what we do systemically, then they have a tendency to pick up off one another," Cahoon said. "I'm comfortable with the lines the way they are. There will be a minor adjustment or two over the weekend."

The Mass Attack will have a 20-day break from hockey after the home-and-home series against BC. The Minutemen won't be back in action until after Christmas, when they travel to Minneapolis for the Dodge Holiday Classic.

The tournament out west marks the final non-conference games on the UMass regular season schedule, as Hockey East play picks up for good during the first week of January.

Karen Winokur/Collegian

Junior forward P.J. Fenton has seen renewed offensive production this season. His five goals equal his total from all of last season.

Brower makes Maroon and White debut

Mr. Mac Thibodeau/Collegian

Mr. Mac Thibodeau/Collegian

After injuring himself during the preseason, transfer Etienne Brower made his debut for the Minutemen this Saturday at the Mullins Center.

Sophomore Chris Lowe has been splitting time with freshman Tiki Mayben at the point, but played just 16 minutes against BC.

UMASS BASKETBALL from page 10

ers simply played behind the man, allowing the entry pass into the offensive player in great position, usually on the low block. This allowed great scorers like Sean Williams or Dudley a one-on-one situation in the post, which is basically a guaranteed basket for prolific scorers.

The Eagles have extremely talented offensive players who can make impossible shots – i.e. Williams fadeaways over Lasme – and if the Minutemen wanted to win Saturday's game, they needed to make sure that BC didn't get any easy baskets. They failed to do that and the Eagles had control of the game about midway through the first half.

Offensively, the Minutemen weren't much better. Freeman and Lasme had some success on the interior, but the team seemed to go away from them as the game wore on. Swingman Gary Forbes had a terrible night from the field, going 4-for-17 for 11 points and missing some crucial lay ups throughout the game. Forbes has scored in double figures in every game of the season.

Freeman got his points through offensive rebounds and hustle plays against BC's 2-3 zone, and finished with 16 points. He has scored in double figures in all eight games this season. In 93 career games, Freeman has scored in double figures in 72 of them.

Lasme had a similarly impressive performance, leading all players in scoring with 24 points and ripping down 11 boards in the loss. It was Lasme's third career game with 20 or more points.

Mullins Magic? Not quite

The Mullins Center sold out for Saturday's UMass-BC game for the first time since Feb. 17 of 2001, when the Minutemen hosted the Temple Owls. Bruiser Flint was in his final season as head coach of UMass then, and John Chaney still paraded the Temple sidelines.

There were no sell-out crowds during the Steve Lappas era, although the upset over No. 3 UConn in 2004 came close. The Mullins Center wasn't full at the start of the game, but once word traveled that the Minutemen had a chance for the victory, students filled the upper sections of the arena and packed the place.

Saturday's crowd nearly matched that atmosphere. The fans were loud and the students, decked out in full UMass garb, filled the student sections behind each of the baskets.

When Lasme opened the game with a monstrous aerial dunk over Williams, the noise was almost deafening. UMass coach Travis Ford is hoping for similar turn outs for the rest of the season, although the Minutemen might have missed their opportunity to impress.

"I thought our crowd was tremendous," Ford said. "I'm just disappointed that we couldn't get them a win. That's all I wanted to do was to try and win for them, no other reason."

The next home game is on Dec 28 against Yale.

Splitting time

Sophomore point guard Chris Lowe and freshman Tiki Mayben continue to split time at the point guard position. In some games this season, they have split time right down the middle, but on Saturday, Mayben got the majority of the minutes. Lowe played just 16 minutes against BC while Mayben registered 30. Neither of them played well, consistently turning the ball over against BC's three-quarter court trap.

Lowe and Mayben will have to be more aggressive offensively in future games. The twosome looked tentative at the start but picked up the intensity later on when the Minutemen were down big in the waning minutes.

Luke Bonner and Dante Milligan played a combined 11 minutes on Saturday and went scoreless. The two back up big men had one rebound each in the loss. Forward Etienne Brower made his first appearance for the Minutemen on Saturday after suffering an injury in the preseason. He played four minutes and gathered two rebounds. His one shot attempt – a three-pointer from the left wing – was an airball. Tiki Mayben scored 10 points in Saturday's loss. It was the first time he has scored in double figures since the season opener against Dartmouth. Most of his points came at the end of Saturday's game with the win practically out of reach. Mayben also added nine assists.

Ball ends prolific career with a loss

UMASS FOOTBALL from page 10

Ball's success goes back to his sophomore year when he made his first significant impact on the national scene.

In his second year with the Wildcats, he was a First Team All-American and the Atlantic 10 named him to its First Team. Ball finished second in Division I-AA in receiving yards per game, third in total receiving yards and sixth in receptions per game.

In 2005, he was a preseason All-American and finished seventh in the voting for the prestigious Walter Payton award. He was the Sports Network's National Player of the Year and set UNH records for career receiving yards (3,541), career receptions (211) and career touchdown receptions (45).

This season was more of the same. Ball broke the all-time touchdown receptions record (held by Jerry Rice) when he surpassed the 50 mark, and was named the Vermont Male Athlete of the Year.

When UMass and UNH met for the first time this season on Nov. 4 in Durham, N.H., Ball had two touchdown catches, one in the third quarter and one in the fourth. On Saturday, he had no touchdown catches against the Minutemen, the first time in his career that he hasn't caught a touchdown pass against UMass.

"I'm done playing college football," Ball said at the postgame press conference Saturday. "It was a great career for me, and I could not have done it without my teammates. We started something here at the University of New Hampshire and I know that the people they have brought into this program are going to continue to carry that out."

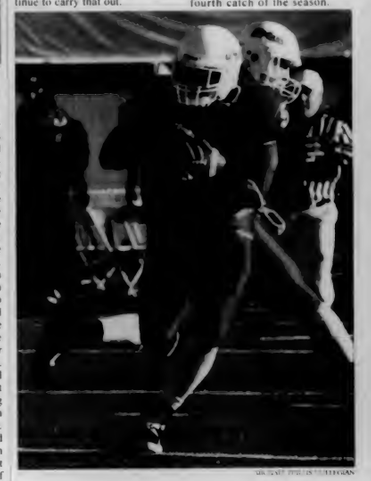
Baylark does it again

UMass senior captain Steve Baylark led his team offensively against New Hampshire on Saturday with a 198-yard performance on the ground. He broke free for a 60-yard run on UMass' first drive, the longest of his career.

"I just hit the hole tight and slid outside," Baylark said about the 60-yard run. "It was a good play and a good call."

Baylark finished off UMass' first drive with a one-yard touchdown run. It was his 45th career touchdown and 40th career rushing touchdown. Baylark has 1,638 yards on the season, the third-best single-season performance in UMass history. . . . Linebacker Brad Anderson's interception of UNH quarterback Ricky Santos in Saturday's game was his second career interception – the other came against Delaware in 2004. . . Lineman David Burris leads UMass with 7.5 sacks on the season. He had a team-high 14 tackles against New Hampshire this weekend.

Saturday's game against rival UNH sold out. The last time that happened was over 30 years ago, when 18,100 fans packed into McGuirk in 1973. . . . Wideout Brandon London caught his 15th career touchdown, which ties him for fourth all-time at UMass. London has nine touchdown catches this season, which is fifth-best all time for a single season. . . . Tight end Ian Jorgensen caught a touchdown pass for the second week in a row against UNH on Saturday. His previous grab came against Lafayette in the first round of the postseason and it was his first career scoring reception. His second career touchdown reception on Saturday was his fourth catch of the season.



Mr. Mac Thibodeau/Collegian

Senior running back Steve Baylark played a key role again for the Minutemen against UNH. He ran for 198 yards on 23 carries.

Appalachian State, Youngstown State and Montana advance

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Appalachian State continued its run to a second-straight national championship Saturday afternoon – the Mountaineers strolled over Montana State, 38-17.

Junior running back Kevin Richardson scored four touchdowns for the Mountaineers, becoming ASU's all-time leader in both career rushing touchdowns (47) and rushing touchdowns in a single season (24).

He kicked off the scoring at 10:13 of the first quarter. After forcing a MSU three-and-out, the Mountaineers took over at their own 49-yard line. They ate 51 yards up in just under three minutes before Richardson punched it in from two yards out.

Another Bobcat three-and-out gave the Mountaineers the ball on the MSU 18. Richardson scored his second touchdown to cap off a three-play 18-yard drive. ASU led 14-0 as time ran out in the first quarter.

MSU wasn't finished however, a fumble recovery allowed the Bobcats great field position – they took over at the ASU 40. Freshman running back Aaron Mason capped off the five-play 40-yard drive with a four-yard touchdown to cut the ASU advantage to seven.

Another Mountaineer turnover, this time an interception thrown by freshman quarterback Amanti Edwards, led to a 32-yard field goal by MSU kicker Jeff Hastings, chopping the ASU lead down to four.

The Mountaineers added three of their own with less than a minute remaining in the half to take a 17-10 lead into the locker room.

The third quarter didn't change much between the two teams. Edwards – 16 yards – and Mason – four yards – traded touchdown scampers and ASU was in front 24-17 heading into the game's final quarter.

Safety Corey Lynch returned to the ASU defensive backfield after injuring his elbow in early November. On the first play of the fourth quarter, Lynch intercepted a pass thrown by MSU wide receiver Michael Jefferson.

Trick plays typically lead to large gains – or turnovers – and at a crucial point in the game, MSU decided to take the risk. They gave the ball to Jefferson who looked to throw, but Lynch stepped in front of the Bobcat receiver and returned the ball 27 yards to his own 49.

An eight-play 51-yard drive ended as most did for the Black and Gold on Saturday. Richardson scored his third touchdown of the day, this time on a one-yard run.

Senior defensive tackle Omarr Byrom forced a fumble after sacking MSU quarterback Jack Rolovich on the ensuing drive. Fellow tackle Daniel Orelbar scooped up the fumble at the MSU 3-yard line. Richardson followed shortly with another one-yard touchdown run to put the game away for the Mountaineers.

Illinois State vs. Youngstown State

Currently, most talking heads and so-called experts of college football have their eyes on the state of Ohio because of the Ohio State Buckeyes and their potential BCS National Championship victory.

But there is another college football team in Ohio with a national championship on its mind. The Youngstown State Penguins defeated the Illinois State Redbirds Saturday evening, 28-21, to advance to the national semifinals of the NCAA Division I Football Championship.

The Penguins defense recorded four timely interceptions – including one with just over a minute left to slam the door on the Redbirds comeback attempt.

ISU made the game's breakthrough at the 9:35 mark. Senior wide receiver Laurent Robinson caught a four-yard pass from quarterback Luke Drone for the game's initial score.

Drone pioneered the 75-yard drive in less than five minutes with a combination of efficient passing and a lot of Marcus Mason. Drone found T.J. Peterson for a 17-yard score to cap off the drive.

On the drive, Mason earned five times for 32 yards – he would finish the game with 138 yards rushing on 26 carries.

The Redbirds marched right down the field on their next drive, but stumbled and eventually missed a field goal.

ISU forced the Penguins to punt, preventing a 10-point swing. The Redbirds took the field at their own 12-yard line.

Pierre Rembert led the Redbirds march into Penguin territory. But once again the Redbirds cost themselves points when Drone threw his second interception of the game.

YSU capitalized on the drive in this case, the Penguins ran 10 plays for 70 yards culminating in a two-yard touchdown run by quarterback Tom Zetts to capture the lead and all the momentum.

The half ended with the Penguins up by seven and they padded their lead with two third-quarter scores. The first came on a 28-yard pass from Zetts to Rory Berry just under three minutes into the period, the next on a two-yard run by Mason for a 28-7 lead.

The Redbirds' attempt to get back in the game began when they started a drive just outside Penguin territory. ISU reached the Youngstown 3-yard line and Drone found Robinson on 4th-and-goal for the group's second hook up of the contest – this made the score 28-14.

A poor punt from YSU's Joe Bishop gave the Redbirds the ball at their own 25. But the Redbirds couldn't take advantage, promptly throwing an interception and setting the Penguins up for a score that would've effectively ended the game – if they didn't fumble on the next play.

Camero Siskowic stripped Mason forcing a fumble recovered by James Temple. The Redbirds' offense set up shop on the YSU 38.

The Redbirds would score on a seven-yard touchdown run by Drone to bring them within a score.

ISU intercepted a Zetts pass on the next drive. They came from down by 21 at the start of the fourth quarter to down seven with three minutes remaining and now had a chance to tie the game and save their season.

But they just couldn't get it done. Drone threw his fourth interception of the game and YSU ran out the clock to advance to the national semifinal.

Southern Illinois vs. Montana

The Montana Grizzlies welcomed the Southern Illinois Salukis to Washington-Grizzly Stadium on Saturday. Although the Saluki defense held an upstart Grizzly offense to just 20 points, SIU couldn't do enough and its season ended with a 20-3 defeat.

Montana kicker Dan Carpenter hit a 43-yard field goal after a seven-minute drive to open the game.

SIU looked to respond but could not. The Grizzly defense stifled a typically powerful SIU offense. Montana forced the Salukis into three consecutive three-and-outs.

The Grizzlies added to their lead in the first minute of the second quarter. Montana's drive started with 5:55 remaining in the first quarter at its own 31-yard line. The varied Montana offense moved the ball 69 yards in 14 plays using a multitude of weapons.

Quarterback Josh Swogger got the Grizzlies into position and found Craig Chambers open for a four-yard score. Montana wiped 6:40 off the second quarter clock on this drive.

The Salukis failed to move the ball again and punted. Montana forced the Salukis to punt on seven of nine possessions in the game. The other two drives for SIU ended on a field goal and their last possession resulted in a loss of downs during a late rally effort.

SIU held Montana scoreless in the third quarter and started the fourth trailing 13-0. SIU had the quarter's initial drive and scored its first points of the game to cut the lead to 10.

Rather than turn to his running game to jest run the clock out, Montana coach Bobby Hauck decided to put the game away for good. The Grizzlies spread the field and came out firing.

The drive lasted just under four minutes and amassed 79 yards before reaching the end zone. Swogger hit Chambers for the duo's second score of the game.

Winter-Session Housing
Taking a class this winter?
Need a place to stay?
Great rates available.
Howard Johnson
Econo Lodge
University Lodge
413-586-0114 413-582-7077 413-256-8111
www.hampshirehospitality.com

Best friends Rosanio, Feldman meet on court

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Leaving the Mullins Center with a victory over Northeastern (0-5) on Saturday improved the Massachusetts women's basketball team's record to 7-1, but it also gave junior guard Pam Rosanio some serious bragging rights.

The game meant a little extra for Rosanio as it pitted her against her best friend and NU standout sophomore Ashlee Feldman. Both went to high school in Pennsylvania, but they met in New Jersey, where they played on the same AAU team. Their first encounter wasn't exactly conducive to a budding friendship, but they moved past the rough start.

"I'll never forget the first time we met because she gave me a black eye [in practice]," Feldman said. "It was the worst black eye I've ever got in my life. It stayed for like two weeks. She also gave me this cut on my knee that wouldn't stop bleeding. It was the very first practice we had as a team."

"I don't think she liked me very much after that," Rosanio said, laughing. "Her eye was black and she was bleeding, so we didn't exactly get off on the right foot, but we became friends and had a lot of fun together."

Entering Saturday's contest, Feldman held the edge in scoring average, besting Rosanio's 12.1 points per game with a 15.7 average of her own. But it was Rosanio who got the last laugh in this matchup with a game- and season-high 22 points. Feldman led her team in scoring as well, but it took her 18 shots to record just 12 points.

"I will say she definitely got me this game," Feldman said reluctantly. "Pam played awesome. She was aggressive on offense and defense and I thought she played a really good all-around game. I played awful. I know I was the leading scorer on the team but she definitely got me this time. She's 1-0."

"It's funny because you want them to do well, but not too well," Rosanio said. "She got 12 points but we got the win, so I was happy. We both wanted to have our best games, and prove to the other person who's better. She didn't have her best game but she still played well."

There was a lot of anticipation for this game for each player, as both Rosanio and Feldman had this game circled on their calendars.

"It was such an ongoing thing, when I first saw that we were playing UMass I was so excited," Feldman said. "Our family was so excited, too, because our moms were best friends as well. They traveled up together and made a big weekend trip out of it."

"We called each other twice before the game and we talked a little about how our teams compare," Rosanio said. "I just wanted to win this game so badly, maybe more than ever."

The two joked around a little bit before the tip-off but once the game started it was back to normal.

"Shooting 3-pointers is her main thing so I told her that she's not allowed to shoot," Rosanio said. "She told me that I wasn't allowed to rebound, but once the game gets started we don't even think about that anymore."

"You think about it before the game, but once it's time to play you just block it out," Feldman said. "There wasn't any trash talking or anything like that. You just have to go out there and play."

While they enjoyed a little ribbing before the game, each has great respect for the other's ability.

"Even though I'm a year younger, I would look at her and say to myself that she's type of player I wanted to be," Feldman said. "She never stops moving and never gets tired out there. I love her game."

"She's a terrific shooter," Rosanio said. "She can shoot the ball from anywhere with her range. She's added to her game and can she's developed a lot since we played together."

Rosanio may have gotten the best of Feldman on that particular day, but the question of who is the better player is open to debate. Well, not if you ask Rosanio.

"Me, of course," Rosanio said jokingly. "No, I think we both bring different things to the floor. She has a better shot maybe but I might play better defense or something"

"I'm going to have to say when it comes to shooting 3's, I'll get her, but when it comes to driving to the basket she'll get me," Feldman added. "But right now I'm going to have to go with her overall, because they beat us and I don't have anything to back it up with."

Shockers withstand late Syracuse rally

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

NCAA Basketball

The Wichita State Shockers (6-0) survived a second-half comeback from the Syracuse Orange (7-1), defeating them 64-61. The Shockers jumped out to an early first-half lead with a 27-1 run. They pushed the lead out to as many as 23 but basketball is a game of runs and the Orange went on a run of their own. Syracuse held Wichita State to one field goal in the final 9:24, going on 21-2 run to tie it at 61. Orange senior forward Demetris Nichols blew a fast break lay up with 21 seconds left to take the lead.

Nichols scored at least 20 points in his last three games but only scored six points on 2-for-14 shooting against Wichita State. Shockers senior forward Kyle Wilson scored 17 points and closed the game out with free throws.

In the latest USA Today ESPN Coaches Top 25 poll, the Shockers moved up from No. 22 to No. 16. Syracuse dropped seven spots to No. 21.

Noah is fine but Florida isn't

After Florida's junior point guard Corey Brewer was diagnosed with mononucleosis there was concern that starting center junior Joakim Noah would be infected after feeling ill. Noah had been diagnosed with upper respiratory infection and all he needed was rest.

Noah and the No. 4 Gators (7-2) lost to the unranked Florida State Seminoles (5-2), 70-66. Seminoles senior forward Al Thornton led the charge with 28 points. Thornton sealed the game, nailing two free throws with four seconds left.

Florida State came into the game struggling. The Seminoles lost back-to-back games by an average of 20 points. Noah could not be found, only scoring two of his 11 points in the first half. The Gators dropped in the rankings this week to No. 7.

A new No. 1, 2 and 3 ranking

The UCLA Bruins take over the No. 1 ranking almost by default when Ohio State lost to UNC. The Bruins (6-0) did not play any ranked opponents last weekend but nevertheless they are undefeated and coming off a 61-38 thrashing of UC-Riverside (3-5).

Pittsburgh (8-0) also moves up one spot with the Ohio State loss. Senior center Aaron Gray leads the Panthers through eight games with an average of 16 points and 10 rebounds.

North Carolina (6-1) moved up three spots to No. 3. After losing a shocker at home against Gonzaga, the Tar Heels won their next three games against Tennessee, No. 1 Ohio State and Kentucky.

The wait is over: Greg Oden debuts

Ohio State freshman Greg Oden played his first collegiate game. Oden had missed the first seven games after undergoing surgery to repair a torn ligament in his right wrist. Ohio State (7-1) defeated Valparaiso (2-4) 78-58.

Oden scored his first basket on a left-handed free throw. He still does not have full range of motion with his right wrist but his impact in the middle disrupted Valparaiso.

Oden scored 14 points (8-of-15 free throws), brought down 10 rebounds and blocked five shots in only 23 minutes of action. Freshman guard Daequan Cook led all scorers with 20 points.

Ohio State lost its No. 1 ranking after losing to North Carolina. However, the Buckeyes are ranked No. 4 and with Oden back they might climb to the top again.

Teams that cannot follow up after big wins

Last week, the defending champion Florida Gators were defeated by Kansas, giving the Jayhawks a top-five ranking. The Jayhawks obviously overlooked DePaul and gave away a 14-point lead in a 64-57 loss.

Demons senior guard Sammy Mejia took over the last three minutes of the game. He scored back-to-back 3-pointers and then proceeded to hit a fadeaway jumper in the face of two Jayhawk defenders as if it they were playing street ball. Mejia had a game high in points (23), rebounds (8) and steals (2).

Kansas fell out of the Top 10 this week and is ranked No. 13 in the nation.

Marquette (8-1) is another team that defeated a top-ranked team only to fall at home against an unranked team. Two weeks ago, the Golden Eagles went into Duke and came out victorious. They were ranked as high as ninth in the country.

This week the Golden Eagles lost to North Dakota State (5-2), 64-60. The excuse that they played on back-to-back nights isn't good enough because both teams played with tired legs. North Dakota State senior forward Andre Smith scored 26 points and had three steals on the defensive end.

Marquette and North Dakota State both hit four 3-pointers except Marquette attempted 20 and North Dakota State shot only eight. The Bisons (5-2), who moved to Division I in the 2004-05 season, are starting to make a name for themselves. Earlier in the season they lost to Texas Tech by four and defeated Princeton, 57-50.

NFL players deserve guaranteed contracts

Dallas Cowboys unfairly released kicker Vanderjagt

Domenic Poli

Life is tough in the NFL. One minute you're on top of the world, getting paid millions of dollars to play a great American sport, the next you're handed your walking papers and told to make yourself comfortable in the unemployment line. And, as it turns out, the NFL's no-guaranteed-contracts rule has recently sponsored yet another sudden roster change.

By now you all know that the Dallas Cowboys cut placekicker Mike Vanderjagt and signed Martin Gramatica in his place. But was it, perhaps, too drastic a move?

Let's examine this from an unbiased angle.

We all know that the Canadian-born kicker doesn't hesitate to flap his gums about anything and is a bit of an acquired taste in the locker room but was cutting him midseason the right/fair thing to do?

Vanderjagt is 230-for-266 in field goal attempts in his career and 377-for-379 in PATs. That's not too shabby if you ask me. And let's not forget his perfect 2003 season, when the former Pro Bowler went 37-for-37 in field goals and 46-for-46 in extra points.

And the West Virginia grad was no flash in the pan, either. His 85.6 accuracy rate is tops in league history and his streak of 42 consecutive successes is also the highest number in the record books.

Despite all this, however, Cowboys head coach Bill Parcells cut the 36-year-old veteran on account of this season's inconsistency. Vanderjagt was 13-for-18 in field goal attempts, making for the lowest percentage (72.2) of his nine-year career.

First of all, those aren't completely atrocious numbers – especially when you look at them through a microscope. Three of his five shanks hit the upright, while a fourth was blocked due to a missed blocking assignment by a Dallas lineman.

Apparently, these made the Tuna a little too uneasy and the normally picture-perfect kicker was booted to the sidewalk. The fact that the Cowboys cut Vanderjagt only 11 games into a three-year, $5.4 million deal (with a $2.5 million signing bonus) only strengthens the voice of the message: We want you the heck out of here.

It's certainly a cutthroat, dog-eat-dog world out there when someone, normally among the best in his profession, is let go before given a chance to turn things around. Some inadequate numbers to start a season and a guy is told to put his profile on Monster.com.

"I'm approaching it with a real positive attitude," Parcells said at a press conference after Vanderjagt was released. "I'm just hoping things take a turn for the better. The last four, five weeks, I don't think he was hitting the ball, to the point where I think it made us play the game a little differently.

"It's just a confidence thing," Parcells continued. "When it starts affecting how you're playing, you've got to try something else."

With No. 13 no longer suiting up for them, the 'Boys are now relying on Gramatica to pick up the slack.

Nicknamed "Martin Automatica" when he helped propel the Tampa Bay Buccaneers to a Super Bowl in 2003, the former third-round draft pick out of Kansas State had seemed to be slowly riding off into the sunset and was out of the NFL last season. However, he has recently been making some encores.

Gramatica was cut by the New England Patriots in the preseason when the Pats opted for rookie Stephen Gostkowski. He made his most recent cameo when he played for the Indianapolis Colts for three games, in place of an injured Adam Vinatieri. He went 9-for-9 for PATs and made his only field goal attempt. The 20-yarder against the New York Jets was his first since 2004.

For a short span of time, the Argentine-born journeyman was revered as one of the finest kickers in NFL with a fiery passion for his work and it is great to see him with the pads back on. But it's unfortunate that his comeback had to be at the expense of one of his peers.

In almost a cruel irony, the Cowboys' newest acquisition hit a 46-yard field goal as time expired to hoist Dallas to a 23-20 victory over the New York Giants on Sunday.

He also nailed kicks of 35 and 41 yards (missed a 44-yarder) and booted two extra points. But, my question is: How much time has that bought him?

Vanderjagt has made numerous clutch field goals and now he's looking for a new source of income. How long will it be before Dallas sends Gramatica packing for a botched kick?

Hey, don't roll your eyes at me. I'm not talking crazy here. Vanderjagt had been known as "Mr. Solid" over the last few seasons, and a single blunder cost him a roster spot.

Now, I know that "Vanderjerk" isn't going to win any Man of the Year awards – he struggles to get along with teammates and often gets himself into trouble with the things he says to the media. And I wouldn't say that I'm overly saddened by his release, but it makes one stop to think about what life in a world without guaranteed contracts is like.

Even Terrell Owens thinks his now-ex-teammate got shafted.

"I don't see what he did wrong to warrant him being cut," the outspoken wide receiver said in a press conference. "Going into the Colts game, the guy was 12-of-15. That's still a high kicking percentage. He didn't lose any game for us. If I had to put myself in the mix, I feel like I lost some games and I'm still here, so it's just unfortunate."

Any way you slice it Vanderjagt is still the most accurate kicker in league history and a few shanked kicks (and the lingering memory of that Steelers game when his miss sent the Colts home early) lost him his job.

I stand by my somewhat unorthodox philosophy that kickers are the most important, and underappreciated members of a football team. Think about it – they've got it rough. They are called pseudo-football players and told to shut up and do their jobs, and when the human being side of them comes out, they start looking for a new job – that's just harsh.

I don't know what it's like to be a placekicker, but I sure wouldn't want to be one in the NFL. That's all I can say.

Falcons should trade an out of place Vick

Quarterback's skills not suited for Mora's West Coast offense

Jeremy Rice

Michael Vick is the most physically gifted athlete in the NFL today. No other single player in the league can claim to have the three most valuable appendages on his team. Vick's legs and left arm win the Atlanta Falcons at least eight games a year. The problem is: those same limbs often lose just as many games.

Vick may be head-and-shoulders above most anyone else in professional football, but when was the last time the team with the most talented athlete won the Super Bowl?

Sure, they've been close. Reaching the 2004 NFC Championship game after going 11-5 in the regular season showed what Michael Vick can do for a team. However, he can't do that consistently. He can't maintain his extremely high level of play week by week or year by year, at least not for the Falcons.

The only way Atlanta and Vick will ever reach their respective potentials is separately. I know this is hard for most Falcons and Vick fans to swallow, but it's simply too easy to see where the Falcons could be with Matt Schaub behind center.

And to see this happen, I've come up with the perfect solution: the Falcons should trade Michael Vick to the Oakland Raiders. I'm sure you're all wondering why on earth I think this would or should happen, but if you take a second to look at the potential, it's all too perfect.

Jim Mora Jr.'s entire career as the Falcons' head coach has been centered on fitting his team to Michael Vick's abilities and style. Every year the preseason talk in the NFC South is whether Mora's West Coast offense has been properly molded to suit the needs of Vick and his underachieving receivers.

All that shows is that the project was doomed from the start.

You should never try to mold 52 other players and an entire coaching philosophy to one player, regardless of his talents.

Vick has essentially two things going for him: his innate ability to run anywhere and everywhere on the field and make even the best defenders look like high school benchwarmers, and one of the most beautiful deep balls you will ever see.

However, neither of those assets is as valuable in the efficiency-based West Coast offense as they could be in an offense like Oakland's. Art Shell instituted a deep-passing game complemented by power running and ball control, and has tried to make it work using quarterbacks like Aaron Brooks, Andrew Walter and Jeff George. Kerry Collins tried and failed to succeed in the system last year.

But where each of them failed, Vick could flourish. Trying to make a mobile gunner like Vick run an offense where accuracy is key and short, high-percentage passes are the foundation of the system is futile.

He will never be as successful making three-step drops and firing quickly as he is taking a seven-step drop, making his reads, and then either launching a deep ball to Randy Moss or scrambling for a first down.

This is why Vick is one of the most sacked quarterbacks in the last five years. Mora is leaving him close to the line of scrimmage, making it harder to escape the rush if there is no one to throw to. In Oakland, a porous offensive line is less of a liability if your quarterback is dropping back seven steps and has the agility of a wide receiver.

Schaub on the other hand, has demonstrated an ability to command Mora's offense like Vick never has. In his limited time on the field, Schaub has put together some impressive statistics.

In 2005, Schaub played in seven games, compiling a 98.1 passer rating, throwing for 495 yards and four touchdowns. Vick's best passer rating in a season came in 2002 when he finished with at 81.6.

The biggest hurdle in making this trade possible is simply getting everyone in Atlanta to let go of No. 7.

Back in 2001, the Falcons traded up to the No. 1 overall spot to draft him, and have been working on developing him into a winner ever since.

He is the reason the Georgia Dome is filled every Sunday and the reason the Falcons sell any jerseys at all.

But wouldn't the Super Bowl DVD sales and banner-hanging ceremonies make up for the loss in No. 7 jersey sales? Basically, if the team wins, people will forget all about Michael Vick.

And for Oakland, the Raiders couldn't ask for a better situation than to get Michael Vick in the Silver and Black. They are a near lock for a top-five pick in next year's draft, and would most certainly have to give that up to Atlanta and more to get Vick, but it would be worth it for both teams in the end.

Schaub has already shown he can seamlessly enter a game and keep the offense going in Vick's absence, so Atlanta would have no transition period, no rebuilding years, just an immediately improved offense with much more efficient passing.

The Raiders are rebuilding anyway, and having a quarterback that fits the system perfectly and has six years experience in the league already makes sense.

Walter has shown no signs of being able to take the reigns for the Raiders in the future, and no quarterback they draft next April will be any farther along.

Like most Al Davis teams, the modern version of the Raiders is built to win now.

Randy Moss is entering the second half of his career, and Lamont Jordan is in his prime as a running back. Inserting Vick into the mix eliminates the need to rebuild much of this team.

Oakland's defense is actually one of the better groups in the league, and the running game would improve simply due to the threat of a passing game and of course, Vick's ability to run.

In the interest of winning football games, this trade makes sense, but I fear it may make too much sense.

It would take a lot of soul-searching on the part of the Falcons to even consider giving up on Vick, but in the end, it may be their only chance to bring the Lombardi Trophy to Atlanta.

Jeremy Rice is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at Sports@DailyCollegian.com.

A grade dispute?

Teacher, roomate or job concerns?

Billing problems?

...or any other University .elated problems?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP

(confidentially, of course)

Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community

823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Peter Forgetta
collegiatecomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

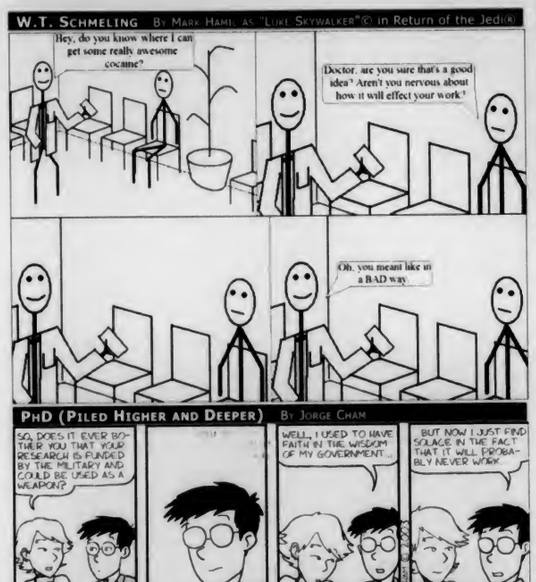
	1			8	3	4
4					2
			2		5	8
	5		9		1	6
8						3
		2	5		3
	1	7		3
	6					5
9		5	4		2

Quote of the Day

"I like work: it fascinates me. I can sit and look at it for hours."

—Jerome K Jerome

W.T. Schmeling By Mark Hamil as "Luke Skywalker"© in Return of the Jedi®

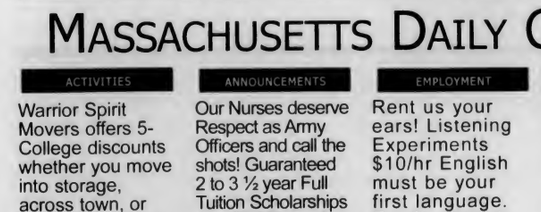


Hey, do you know where I can get some really awesome cocaine?
Doctor, are you sure that's a good idea? Aren't you nervous about how it will effect your work?
Oh, you meant like in a BAD way

PhD (Piled Higher and Deeper) By Jorge Cham

SO, DOES IT EVER BOTHER YOU THAT YOUR RESEARCH IS FUNDED BY THE MILITARY AND COULD BE USED AS A WEAPON?
WELL, I USED TO HAVE FAITH IN THE WISDOM OF MY GOVERNMENT...
BUT NOW I JUST FIND SOLACE IN THE FACT THAT IT WILL PROBABLY NEVER WORK.

Easy Mark By Evan Rowland



oh yeah, look at me, hey!
I'm going to fly in that
SO HARD!
what i'm doing right now
I'm ENAMORED WITH YOU, Kat
what i am having an awesome time right now

ACROSS
1 Sis or bro
4 Overhaul
8 Motto or slogan
9
14 Rocky pinnacle
15 Kuwaiti ruler
16 Wanderer
17 Fuss
18 Fireside yarn
19 Excursion
20 Aluminum wrapping
22 Haven or Bonnie
23 Not hip at all
24 Walking like a duck
28 Capital of South Korea
29 Damage to a degree
30 Family car
31 Paraphrases
34 Egnoret film, "Madame ___"
35 Have a meal
38 Portal
40 Statute
41 Political group
43 Baltimore birds
45 Greek letters
47 Travel stopover
48 Tabernacle table
52 In an agitated state
54 Furrow
55 Lift one's voice
56 Floating bridge support
57 Tranquil
60 Series or sort lead-in 61 Tango number
62 Golfer Gary
63 Unwrap
64 Waikiki garland
65 Bandleader Herb
66 Actress Gertrude
67 Blunder

DOWN
1 State of affairs
2 First-aid topical
3 Denver gno
4 Changed gear?
5 Online messages
6 Pickle flavoring
7 Mine's yield
8 Haughty
9 Nags
10 Diamondback or sidewinder
11 Pierre's pal
12 D.C. bigwig
13 Work unit
21 Two squared
22 Attained with difficulty
24 In a state of armed conflict
25 Graven image
26 Shuffle go
27 Chew on 29 Anchoring attempt on 32 Court
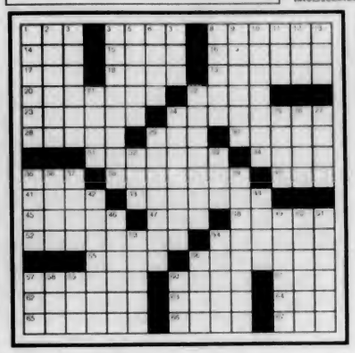
33 Actor Meyer
35 Recedes, as the tide
36 Away from the wind
37 Carry
39 Longing
42 Atwood novel
44 One armed bandit
46 Black eye
49 Play a flute
50 Confessor
51 Impressionist painter
53 Mutinerers
54 Hopeless case
56 Meerschaum or carrick
57 Mineral spring
58 Building extension
59 Quiz's done
60 Unholy ordeal

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
FALL SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT • Trivia Night
WED • Open Mic Night (all are welcome)
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006 Valley Advocate Readers Poll
COMBO ALL credit cards accepted
163 Sunderland Rd - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net



Best Bar Around
Seven Os
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
12/8/06
FRIDAY
Foggy Depot
12/9/06
SATURDAY
Damon Reeves
Student Band Wanted.
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8708
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
Next To Cinema Arts

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You have some difficult decisions to make concerning pedophilia.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You'll never beat Dr. Robotnik.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
If you just washed your clothes regularly, you wouldn't have to use so much deodorant.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You have nimble little fingers. It's very attractive.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Asymmetrical people can't be trusted.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will be one of those neck-down fat people in a 20/20 episode on obesity.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Get serious, you need lip balm.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Just you wait. You will have a very embarrassing fall when it starts snowing.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Despite all the evidence, you still believe you have a chance at passing.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
For some people, horse tranquilizers make a lot of sense.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You are running out of time. The semester is almost over.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
All this hard work can't possibly pay off. Though, they make it seem as if it will.

Sudoku
Crossword
Set yourself on the Comics page
Collegiancomics.com

THANK YOU FOR READING THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Warrior Spirit Movers offers 5-College discounts whether you move into storage, across town, or across the country. Several Years experience. Book now 413-422-1038 warriorspiritmovers@yahoo.com

Announcements

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Announcements

Our Nurses deserve Respect as Army Officers and call the shots! Guaranteed 2 to 3 ½ year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/amyrotc

Apartments for Rent

1 bedroom apt. available for sublet for spring 07 semester. $392.50 plus utilities. Call 561-346-6054

Brandywine Apts. 1 beds available starting now or Jan.1 www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Entertainment

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

House for Rent

Lake Wyola 4 Bedroom $800 plus utilities 413-584-7345

Cute 2 to 3 bedroom house, neat, on bus stop in Northampton Available mid December. No pets $1300.00 Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

Room for Rent

1 bedroom available for spring semester. $400 a month including utilities. 3 male roommates, across from bus stop call 781-492-5588 for more details.

Services

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Travel

Alternative spring break Now taking applications Trips to New Orleans, Birmingham and Mississippi Delta. Space is limited, email: umassasb@gmail.com

Classified advertising with The Daily Collegian is easy!

Submit your classifieds online at www.daily collegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM visits lowly MC

Tie with Boston University and win over Niagara moves Mass Attack up to No. 16

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a convincing 6-2 victory over Niagara on Friday, the Massachusetts hockey team (7-3-2, 4-2-1 Hockey East) turns right around and dives back into conference play.

No. 16 UMass visits North Andover tonight to take on floundering Merrimack (1-12-1, 1-8-0 HEA). After losing to Northeastern Saturday, 2-0, the Warriors find themselves in the basement of Hockey East.

Merrimack has just one win and one tie on the season, something a number of other coaches have been surprised about. Cahoon is no different in that respect, and is not expecting an easy victory tonight.

"The one thing I know they will do is compete, and they've done that all year," Cahoon said. "The worst thing that could happen is for us not to respect them, and not to be prepared to go out and play at our best."

The Minutemen have not played many conference games in the past month (first-place New Hampshire has played 11 conference games in all compared to UMass' seven), so tonight is an opportunity for the team to improve on its current fifth-place standing.

"I don't think we should spend a lot of time thinking about Merrimack," Cahoon said about preparing for the game. "We should prepare in terms of knowing what their tendencies are as we would any other game, but we should focus on our own level of play and our own level of preparedness. If we bring a good performance, the rest of it should take care of itself."

With a pair of games coming up this weekend against No. 6 Boston College, this mid-week matchup against Merrimack could quickly become a trap game. But with two conference points on the line, UMass coach Don Cahoon believes his team's focus is where it should be.

"They know the schedule," said Cahoon. "A big part of playing well in those games later [against BC] is preparation and playing well going into it. We don't have to look by Merrimack, we need to just prepare and come to play."

The last two games saw a shake-up at the top of the lineup, with sophomores Cory Quirk and Chris Davis joining junior P.J. Fenton on the top line. After the moves paid immediate dividends in the 2-2 tie against Boston University, Cahoon kept the new lines intact for Friday's game against Niagara.

Cahoon's players rewarded him with six goals coming from the top two lines, including a hat trick from center Mark Matheson, who led Cahoon's second line — consisting of Matheson, Chris Capraro and Will Ortiz — to a 10-point night.

"We just tweaked a couple of lines," Cahoon said. "Now they will probably be tweaked again because we've got a couple of guys dinged up. We're just going to try to get a little bit of new blood into the next three games."

Forward Alex Berry will miss at least one more game before returning from the knee injury that sidelined him in the 8-1 win over Connecticut. Kevin Jarman

See HOCKEY on page 7

Senior captain Matt Anderson has scored 23 points (eight goals, 15 assists) in his eight career games against Merrimack. Tonight the Minutemen travel to North Andover to take on the Warriors.

Continued success depends on taking advantage of power play

Looking at the beginning of the Massachusetts hockey team's early-season success, it's easy to see why the Minutemen climbed to No. 14 in the national polls as recently as two weeks ago, and currently sit at No. 16. The Mass Attack puts the puck in the net when it matters the most — on the power play.

At one point, UMass had scored a man-advantage goal in six straight games. Overall the Minutemen scored a power-play goal in eight of their 10 games this season. The team's record in those games is 5-2-1, opposed to 2-1-1 without a power-play goal.

Not a big disparity, but a disparity nonetheless.

Ask anyone involved in Hockey East games and they'll tell you the same thing. To win league games you have to score on the man advantage.

In recent weeks the Minutemen hit a lull on the power play. Their last power-play goal came on Nov. 25 in a 4-3 loss at Union. Since then, UMass tied BU last Tuesday and beat Niagara last Friday. Now the Minutemen enter a critical stretch in their season with three games left before the semester break.

A continued drought in power-play production could spell doom for the rest of the season.

All three of the next games are against conference opponents. Merrimack tonight and a home-and-home against BC this weekend. If UMass wants to pick up six, or any, conference points, it will need to regain its past successes on the power play.

"Up until a week or so ago it played a very significant role," UMass coach Don Cahoon said of the power play. "I think we're — I don't want to say stale — but we're not as sharp as we were a couple of weeks ago. So we need to get up on our toes a little bit and play with a little more sense of urgency on [the power play]."

Jon Pelland

A power-play goal played a large role in UMass' biggest win of the season, a 4-2 triumph over New Hampshire on Oct. 28. That was the beautiful play Will Ortiz made carrying the puck up the right boards. He toe-dragged the defender leaving him stumbling at the right face off circle, and dished to Matheson. The senior finished the play around goaltender Kevin Regan.

These are the opportunities teams like UMass need to take full advantage of — man-advantage goals against tough opponents. When the UNH's, BU's and Maine's of the world give teams opportunities, capitalizing is a must.

If the UNH win is an example of the Minutemen capitalizing, then last Tuesday's game is the opposite. BU sent its fair share of bodies to the box, but the visitors mustered little in the way of power-play chances.

It's hard to think the Minutemen are succeeding on the power play when they lost a key cog to graduation last year. Marvin Degon manned the point for UMass and converted eight goals on the power play a year ago. Entering the season, the void left by Degon was a big question mark for the Minutemen.

In the early going, Cahoon has chosen to go with seniors Mark Matheson and Mike Kostka at the point. Both choices are good ones. Both are experienced and very poised with the puck. Matheson and Kostka have shown this season they have what it takes to quarterback the Minutemen when the opposition is in the box.

"It starts at the top with Mark Matheson and Mike Kostka and their ability to advance the puck through the middle of the rink and make good decisions with the puck," Cahoon said. "Fundamentally, we do things that are better. Our passes are more tape-to-tape, and our speed of the exchanges is quicker, where there's not much stick handling."

What this all translates into is that the Minutemen must keep up, if not improve, their power-play production if they want to stay amongst the nation's college hockey elite.

There's no doubt the Minutemen have proven they can score on the power play, now they have to prove they can sustain it.

Cahoon keeps saying the hockey season is young, but if the Minutemen can in fact keep up their success on the power play, there's no reason this team won't be contending in the conference come March.

—Jon Pelland is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at Sports@DailyCollegian.com

Punter Christian Koegel took advantage of a rare opportunity on Saturday. He kicked a 66-yard punt against New Hampshire.

Koegel boots second-longest career punt

UNH loss effectively ends David Ball's historic career

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts punter Christian Koegel hasn't had many opportunities to significantly impact a football game this season. But on Saturday, in the biggest game of the year, Koegel got his chance — and he came through in a big way.

Koegel had three punts in Saturday's game against New Hampshire in the postseason quarterfinals for a total of 120 yards, a 40 yards-per-punt average. His first came in the second quarter and wasn't one of his best, traveling 36 yards to New Hampshire's 26-yard line.

In the third quarter, however, Koegel completely turned the field position game around with one swift and powerful kick.

UMass Football

UMass held a 21-17 lead and UNH punter Matt Henry had just buried the Minutemen at their own 2-yard line. UMass quarterback Liam Coen charged forward on a 1st-and-10 sneak play for two yards.

Running back Steve Baylark — 23 carries, 198 yards with a touchdown in the game — ran up the middle for six more on second down but Coen couldn't connect with tight end Ian Jorgensen on 3rd-and-short and the Minutemen were forced to punt.

Koegel stood a couple of yards into his end zone, and it looked like quarterback Ricky Santos and the UNH offense were going to have dominating field position.

But Koegel, with the wind at his back, boomed a low, spiraling kick that rolled all the way down to the Wildcats' 24-yard line. It was a 66-yard punt, the second longest of his career and his longest of the 2006 season. The Minutemen were only up by four points at that stage in the game, and if Koegel's punt was anything less than outstanding, Santos would have taken his first snap in UMass territory.

"I was excited," Koegel said after the game. "I think that was the only time during the whole year that I had the whole field to punt into. It was really one of those things where you step up at a time where your team needs you. I haven't been needed a lot this year, but finally I was."

"We have a lot of confidence in this guy [Koegel]," UMass coach Don Brown said. "He's made a lot of pressure kicks in the three years I've been here. You talk about turning field position around at a time when we badly, badly needed it — that was the time."

BALL'S OUT

On Saturday, the career of one of college football's most productive and dynamic receivers ended at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. David Ball, New Hampshire's big-time senior playmaker, suited up for his last game as a college football player.

The Massachusetts football team ended his career with a 24-17 win over the Wildcats in the quarterfinals of the Division I Football Championship. Ball had six receptions for 54 yards in the game, including a clutch grab in the waning minutes of the fourth quarter on New Hampshire's last drive.

See UMASS FOOTBALL on page 7

Loss to BC exposes UMass' weaknesses

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's basketball team had the same problem on Saturday night against the Boston College Eagles that it had all of last season: scoring. Add its subpar defensive effort and you get the 84-73 loss, which wasn't as close as the score.

UMass Basketball

The Minutemen switched in and out of man-to-man defense, sometimes showing their weak 2-3 zone that allowed Jared Dudley (11 points, eight rebounds, seven assists) and Sean Marshall (a game-high 19 points) to shoot at will.

When UMass played man-to-man defense, BC ran its flex offense, which is essentially the option offense of basketball. It is the same thing run over and over and over again with a few variations here and there, hoping that somewhere in the 35-second shot clock, the opposing team will break down defensively and get caught on a screen.

But it didn't take the whole 35 seconds for the Minutemen to break down. The flex offense's primary option is a baseline screen set near the weak side block for a guard on the weak side baseline, who goes shoulder-to-shoulder with the screener and rolls directly underneath the basket.

That is the first option. And UMass gave it to the Eagles every single time. Senior James Life got caught on that baseline screen every time, and it resulted in a lay up for BC on many occasions.

Other times, the UMass defend-

See UMASS BASKETBALL on page 7

Stephane Lasme threw down this dunk to begin Saturday's game against BC. He scored 24 points and grabbed 11 boards in the game.

Collegian Athlete of the Week

After a three-week hiatus, the Collegian Athlete of the Week returns to honor senior Mark Matheson. The forward on the Hockey team recorded his first career hat trick in a 6-2 win over Niagara on Friday night. Matheson had never scored more than one goal in a game prior to last weekend.

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

Wilt Chamberlain scored 100 points in 1962 to set the all-time record for points scored in an NBA game. He held the record for second-most points in a game with 78 until Kobe Bryant scored 81 last season.

WARRIORS SHUT OUT MINUTEMEN | PAGE 10

STUDENTS BOOM IN 'STRINGS GALORE' | PAGE 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 42 LO: 33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 2006

A dirty debate:

The 'F' bomb has been dropped, but has it failed to shake things up?

BY STELLA CERNAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's never heard coming from the mouths of the characters on standard television, nor is it printed in textbooks. It is subliminally presented in advertising and unregulated or "restricted" media. It is, however, heard in the homes, workplaces, and schools of many Americans.

What is "it"?

To some, "it" represents America's historic fight for free speech, while to others it stands for the vulgarities the nation must fight against. It is simply the "F-word," a profanity coming to a theater near you.

Steve Anderson, director of last year's, R-rated documentary, "The Aristocrats," has emerged with a new, and perhaps equally dirty, documentary called "F---."

The film includes numerous interviews on the controversial word with well-known faces ranging from Drew Carey to Justin Timberlake. A variety of comedians also appear in the film, along with adult film stars Ron Jeremy and Tera Patrick, who contrast the conservative disapproval of the word's usage.

However, "F---" is not all fun and games as movie critics mention. The film not only dives into origins of the "F-word," but also touches upon the controversial debate between the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) and free speech.

Like today, the "F-word" did not appear in historical documents, yet experts trace the word's origin to around the 1500s. According to most English dictionaries, the word spawned from the Swedish word "fokka," meaning to engage in sexual intercourse, and the Dutch word "fokken," meaning "to breed."

But as the film makes clear, many Americans connect the origins of the word to creative myths and legends. Some false derivatives, which people believe, come from acronyms such as, "Fornicate Under Command of the King," or "For Unlawful Carnal Knowledge."

In the beginning of the 20th century, the celebration of the "F-word's" 400th birthday paralleled with the birth of mass media and communication. As a result, the "F-word," among other profanities, was seen more than it had been previously. The 1970s marked not only the word's appearance in the Oxford English Dictionary, but the beginning of its frequent appearance in movies.

"I hear it used the most in movies, like 'Scarface,' and in music," said University of Massachusetts student Matt Lecesse. "Since people act similar to what they see and hear, it makes sense that the word's usage would spread." Although Lecesse recognizes the power of the word, he doubts that Anderson's film will make enough controversial waves throughout the media and society.

"Since it is a small, independent film, it won't be a big deal," Lecesse said. "But if it was advertised to be something as big as say, 'Star Wars,' then a lot of people would complain."

Another aspect of the film addressed by students is the lack of shock value for the film's title.

"The movie is asking for trouble in order to get publicity," said UMass student Travis O'Deane. He added that he won't be seeing the film because "the word has lost a lot of meaning."

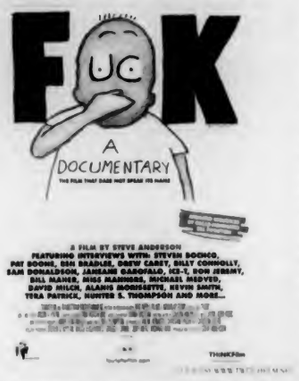
"It's a generational thing; our generation has over-used it," O'Deane said.

Critics of the film agree with the standpoint of O'Deane and Lecesse. They feel that with the outpour of movies, such as "Southpark: Bigger, Longer and Uncut," and the tremendous controversy surrounding Eminem and censorship in the music industry, a film whose title is a curse word is not all that shocking.

Has the "F-word" lost all its power? Has our generation become immune to curse words in general?

UMass sophomore, Yael Borenstein admits to the overusage of the word in conversations among friends. However, she still feels that the word has not lost its shock value or its historic flair for being risque.

"I am always a little bit alarmed when I hear people say it really loud in public," Borenstein said. "It is still not something that is used in the mainstream media. I think it depends on the age group. In college everyone uses it because no one cares."



F UC K
A DOCUMENTARY
THE FILM THAT DARE NOT SPEAK ITS NAME
A FILM BY STEVE ANDERSON
FEATURING INTERVIEWS WITH: STEVEN BOCHCO, PAT BOONE, BEN BRADLEE, DREW CAREY, BILLY CONNOLLY, SAM DONALDSON, JAMEANE GARDFIELD, ICE-T, DON IMUS, BILL MAHER, MISS MANNERS, MICHAEL MEDVED, DAVID MILCH, ALANIS MORISSETTE, KEVIN SMITH, TERA PATRICK, HUNTER S. THOMPSON AND MORE...
THINKFilm

The new documentary by Steve Anderson, 'F---,' discusses the controversy over the profane word and the history behind its meaning.

See F-WORD on page 3

Blue Wall employees cause uproar

BY CHRIS HYNES
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Two weeks ago, many student employees of the Blue Wall Cafe opened their email accounts to find a message from Assistant Manager of Retail Dining Services, Andrew Boyle, notifying them that their hours had been cut.

The elimination of shifts was cited as a result of budgeting decisions regarding the operating budget for Retail Dining Services, according to a secondary email sent out by Boyle on Nov. 13.

"We cut hours from areas where the workforce exceeds the business and tried to be fair all the way around," Boyle explained in the follow-up email.

Complicating the situation even further, Boyle claimed that he received a "crude, blunt, expletive laced email from an anonymous person," following the cuts and addressed this in a subsequent email.

"Just like with any other department, we have a budget we need to adhere to. The hours had gotten a little over budget," said David Eichstaedt, manager of Retail Dining Services. "We tried to cut the hours fairly and tried to do it as reasonably as we could."

But the uproar from students appeared to have an effect on the upper management. When asked about the hours that were reduced, Eichstaedt explained that a lot of the hours that were originally cut had already been restored.

"The reinstatement of hours had a lot to do with the ways the hours were cut," he said. "Some students had more hours cut than others, so we tried to even things out a bit and make it fairer for everyone involved."

"I understand the budget but being a student worker, you need some income," said UMass freshman Ben Walworth. He is one of the students whose decreased shifts were handed back to him, thanks in large part to positive comments from co-workers.

"Some people got almost all of their hours cut. If you applied for a job there, you did it for a reason- to make money. And by slashing everybody's hours, that makes it impossible," Walworth said.

While many student hours were cut, the work time for professional staff remained untouched. Due to their unionization, the professional staff's hours cannot be decreased, leaving management with student hours as the only ones available for elimination.

However, according to Eichstaedt, this reduction of hours is an occurrence that is not specific to this year.

"We have a budget. I think what happens every semester is we run short at the beginning. You start adding shifts and sometimes, you add a few too many," he said.

Alps are warmest in 1,300 years | page 2

Unlike the photo above, unseasonably warm weather this autumn has caused concern in Austria's ski resorts, like the 15,771-foot Mont Blanc, where slopes are still largely covered in green grass instead of snow.

Water war brews along Mexico

A wall separates Sonora, Mexico from the U.S., reinforced by the U.S. Border Patrol in Nogales, Arizona. About 6,800 youngsters have been repatriated to northern Sonora after crossing the Arizona border.

BY DAVID KRAVETS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — The Bush administration is urging a federal appeals court to allow part of a canal separating California and Mexico to be lined with concrete to stop millions of gallons of water from seeping south of the border.

A lawsuit seeking to block the project argues that shutting off that seepage would be detrimental to farmers and others in Mexico.

The lining is proposed along a portion of the 82-mile All-American Canal that delivers Colorado River water to crop land on both sides of the border about 100 miles east of San Diego.

The U.S. government says Mexico already gets 489 billion gallons of Colorado River water legitimately each year under a 1944 treaty and isn't entitled to the seepage, which provides a farming lifeline in Mexico.

A Justice Department attorney told a panel of three appellate judges on Monday that Mexicans have no right to the water, which is also the lifeblood for 500,000 acres of U.S. farmland.

The lining project will provide enough water for 135,000 new homes in the San Diego area.

All three judges suggested during oral arguments in the case Monday that people in Mexico might not have legal standing to assert a claim for the water in U.S. courts.

"How does a constitutional barrier against takings of property in the United States apply to somebody's property in Mexico?" Judge John Noonan asked.

The San Francisco-based appeals court temporarily blocked construction of the $210 million, 23-mile-long lining in August after Mexican busi-

See WATER on page 3

New MySpace tool to help block online sex offenders

BY ANICK JESDANUN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The popular online hangout MySpace said Tuesday it will develop technologies to help block convicted sex offenders, the site's latest attempt to address complaints about sexual predators and other dangers to teens.

MySpace is partnering with Sentinel Tech Holding Corp. to build and deploy within 30 days a database that will contain the names and physical descriptions of convicted sex offenders in the United States. An automated system will search for matches between the database and MySpace user profiles. Employees will then delete any profiles that match.

Parents, school administrators and law-enforcement authorities have grown increasingly worried that teens are at risk on MySpace and other social-networking sites, which provide tools for messaging, sharing photos and creating personal pages.

About 12 percent of all MySpace's visitors in October were under 18, according to comScore Media Metrix. The tracking company counts Americans who visit the site at least once in a given month, so the proportion of teens may actually be higher based on time spent.

The aim of such sites is for users to expand their circles of friends — and critics say those circles sometimes come to include sexual predators. Wired News said a recent investigation turned up hundreds of profiles for convicted sex offenders.

Forty-six states now maintain registries containing more than 550,000 convicted sex offenders, each with its own rules on what information the public may obtain, as well as when and what can be done with it.

"How do you analyze those different databases and analyze them against our, right now, 135 million user profiles?" said Hemanshu Nigam, MySpace's chief security officer. "We came to the conclusion (that) there was absolutely no real way to do this in a real-time, scalable fashion."

Instead, Sentinel will build a search tool for MySpace using data from aggregators such as LexisNexis Inc.'s Seisint unit, said John Cardillo, the Miami-

See MYSPACE on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 65

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Sean Durum
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Prutz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dollantis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Buonjiskuskul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB EDITOR James Hahr
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LUX, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADCAST SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Bellveau

COPY EDITOR
Matreya Hughes

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

PRODUCTION STAFF
Nicholas Belanger

Austrian ski resorts concerned about Alps' warm weather

BY VERONIKA OLEKSYN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria—Europe's Alpine region is going through its warmest period in 1,300 years, the head of an extensive climate study said Tuesday.

"We are currently experiencing the warmest period in the Alpine region in 1,300 years," Reinhard Boehm, a climatologist at Austria's Central Institute for Meteorology and Geodynamics said.

Boehm based his comments on the results of a project conducted by a group of European institutes between March 2003 and August 2006. Their aim was to reconstruct the climate in the region encompassing the Rhone Valley in France to the west, Budapest, Hungary to the east, Tuscany, Italy to the south and Nuremberg, Germany to the north over the past 1,000 years.

Boehm said the current warm period in the Alpine region began in the 1980s, noting that a similar warming occurred in the 10th and 12th centuries. However, the temperatures during those phases were "slightly under the temperatures we've experienced over the past 20 years."

Humans first had an impact on the global climate in the 1950s, Boehm said, noting that at first, the release of aerosols into the atmosphere cooled the climate. Since the 1980s, however, greenhouse gases such as carbon dioxide and methane have warmed it up, he said.

"It will undoubtedly get warmer in the future," Boehm said.

Sponsored by the European Union, the project sought to homogenize climate data collected in the Alpine region over the past 250 years. Climate reconstruction focused on seven parameters, including temperature, sunshine periods and cloud cover. Tree rings and ice core measurements were also taken into consideration.

The unseasonably warm weather this autumn has caused concern in Austria's ski resorts, where slopes are still largely covered in green grass instead of snow. Many, such as St. Anton am Arlberg, have had to postpone the start of their skiing season and some have tried attracting tourists with alternative programs, such as hiking.

Austrian ski resorts usually open at the end of November or early December.

Wilma Himmelfreundpointner, deputy director of the St. Anton Tourist Office, said the resort has the capability to cover 80 percent of its slopes with fake snow. But the current mild temperatures and sunshine make that an impossible option at the moment, she said.

"What can you do? One can't change the weather," Himmelfreundpointner said, adding some tourists go on day trips to nearby glaciers in order to ski.

In some cases, organizers have had to be creative to make sure their events take place as planned.

In Hochfilzen, Tyrol, organizers of an upcoming international race went to the Grossglockner — Austria's highest mountain — to get snow they needed to prepare their track.

It took about five days to truck between 7,000 and 8,000 cubic meters (9,200 - 10,500 cubic yards) of snow from the Grossglockner, said organizer Thomas Abfalter.

Tourists travel to nearby glaciers to ski since the snow on the Alps is impossible to retain with the recent mild temperatures and sunshine.

2 out of 3 UMass students have 4 or fewer drinks when they party.

Based on a 2006 CCPI survey of UMass students

We got the facts from you.

Campus and Community Coalition to Reduce High Risk Drinking

University Health Services
Health Education

Cell phone-cancer link disputed

BY LAURAN NEERGAARD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON—A huge study from Denmark offers the latest reassurance that cell phones don't trigger cancer. Scientists tracked 420,000 Danish cell phone users, including 52,000 who had gabbed on the gadgets for 10 years or more, and some who started using them 21 years ago.

They matched phone records to the famed Danish Cancer Registry that records every citizen who gets the disease — and reported Tuesday that cell-phone callers are no more likely than anyone else to suffer a range of cancer types.

The study, published in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute, is the largest yet to find no bad news about the safety of cell phones and the radiofrequency energy they emit.

But even the lead researcher doubts it will end the debate.

"There's really no biological basis for you to be concerned about radio waves," said John Boice, a Vanderbilt University professor and scientific director of the International Epidemiology Institute in Rockville, Md. "Nonetheless, people are."

So Boice and colleagues at Copenhagen's Danish Cancer Society plan to continue tracking the Danish callers until at least some have used the phones for 30 years.

This so-called Danish cohort "is probably the strongest study out there because of the outstanding registries they keep," said Joshua Muscat of Pennsylvania State University, who also has studied cell phones and cancer.

"As the body of evidence accumulates, people can become more reassured that these devices are safe, but the final word is not there yet," Muscat added.

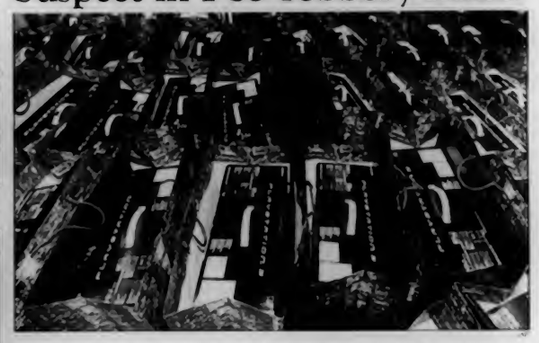
Researchers have found no risk of cancer from the radiofrequency energy released from cell phones, penetrated into the brain's outer edge.

Cell phones beam radiofrequency energy that can penetrate the brain's outer edge, raising questions about cancers of the head and neck, brain tumors or leukemia. Most research has found no risk, but a few studies have raised questions. And while U.S. health officials insist the evidence shows no real reason for concern, they don't give the phones a definitive clean bill of health, either, pending long-term data on slow-growing cancers.

For the latest study, personal identification numbers assigned to each Dane at birth allowed researchers to match people who began using cell phones between 1982 and 1995 with cancer records.

Among 420,000 callers tracked through 2002, there were 14,249 cancers diagnosed — fewer than the 15,001 predicted from national cancer rates. Nor did the study find increased risks for any specific tumor type.

Suspect in PS3 robbery killed



Violence broke out at the chaotic U.S. launch of Sony's PlayStation 3, as game fans mobbed stores nationwide to grab limited stocks of the must-have computer console.

WILMINGTON, N.C.—A young man accused of robbing a fellow college student of two new PlayStation 3 video game consoles was shot and killed — possibly while holding a game controller, his roommate said — by officers sent to arrest him.

Peyton Strickland, 18, was killed Friday at a house he shared with three roommates, Sheriff Sid Causey said.

"If this boy would've come to the door, opened the door, we probably wouldn't be talking," the sheriff said Sunday.

Roommate Mike Rhoton said Strickland was unarmed when he got up from playing a Tiger Woods golf game but may have been holding a controller when he went to the door as officers bashed it in. Strickland's dog, a German shepherd, also was shot to death.

The sheriff said Strickland was shot by members of a specially trained team who went to help university officers serve arrest warrants. Causey said officers considered the arrest a high-risk situation.

"Anytime that someone beats a person severely and commits an armed robbery, I certainly would consider him a risk and a danger," Causey said.

Authorities promised Monday to fully investigate the shooting.

"No one is above the law and no one is beneath its protection," District Attorney Ben David said. He declined to discuss details of the case.

The State Bureau of Investigation is examining the case and three deputies on the team were placed on paid leave, normal practice whenever officers fire their weapons, Causey said.

Arrest warrants alleged that Strickland, a student at Cape Fear Community College, and a University of North Carolina-Wilmington student stole two PlayStation units from another UNC-Wilmington student Nov. 17, the day the consoles were introduced.

The sheriff said the robbery victim waited three days in line to buy the units for $641 each at a Wal-Mart. He was unloading them at his campus apartment when one man beat him to the ground while another took the consoles, Causey said.

The second man named in the warrants was arrested at another address and released on bail Saturday, authorities said.

The nationwide introduction of the Sony game system was marked by rowdy crowds and store stampedes. One buyer waiting in line at a Connecticut store was shot by robbers.

—Associated Press

Trucker found guilty for murder

BY JUAN A. LOZANO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON—A truck driver was convicted Monday in the deaths of 19 illegal immigrants crammed into a sweltering tractor-trailer in the deadliest human smuggling attempt in U.S. history.

The jury will return on Wednesday to begin hearing evidence on whether Tyrone Williams, 35, should get the death penalty.

It was the second time Williams was found guilty in the case; an appeals court said the earlier verdict was flawed and ordered a new trial.

The federal jury deliberated a little more than four days before convicting Williams on all 58 counts of conspiracy, harboring and transporting for agreeing to drive the illegal immigrants from South Texas to Houston in 2003.

The more than 70 immigrants packed into the airtight trailer clawed desperately at the insulation, broke out the taillights and screamed for help as the heat climbed inside. Nineteen suffocated or died of heat or dehydration.

Williams abandoned the trailer at a truck stop near Victoria, about 100 miles from Houston.

Defense attorney Craig Washington said his client was not responsible for the deaths because he didn't know the immigrants were dying until it was too late. Washington blamed another smuggling ring member for causing the deaths by overstuffing the trailer.

Prosecutors said Williams was responsible for the deaths because he didn't free the immigrants or turn on the air conditioning.

Williams showed no reaction when the verdict was read. He accepted a long hug from his lawyer before being led away by U.S. marshals.

"I am deeply disappointed," said Washington, a former congressman.

Williams, a Jamaican citizen who lived in Schenectady, N.Y., is the only one of 14 people charged in the case to face the death penalty.

Tyrone Williams was found guilty for the death of 19 immigrants.

Corrections

In a photo caption above Monday's p. 1 article entitled, "Experts offer possible causes for campus pond temperature," the source of the information in the caption was incorrectly named. The source's correct name is Dick Nathhorst, a capital project manager at the physical plant. Nathhorst is not the head of the Amherst environment consulting firm Biodrawversity. Its head is Ethan Nedeau. Although Biodrawversity was named incorrectly in this column yesterday as a UMass entity, Biodrawversity, in fact, is not part of UMass.

Court decision favors native Hawaiians

A new decision from the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals gives first priority to native Hawaiians when admitting students into the Kamehameha Schools.

BY DAVID KRAVETS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO—A divided federal appeals court ruled Tuesday that a private school in Hawaii can favor Hawaiian natives for admission as a means of helping a downtrodden indigenous population.

The 8-7 decision by a 15-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals overturned an earlier ruling by three of the same judges that the Kamehameha Schools policy amounted to unlawful discrimination.

In Tuesday's decision, the majority noted that the case was unique because Congress has singled out the plight of native Hawaiians for improvement, just as lawmakers have done with Alaskan natives and American Indians.

The admissions policy "furthers the urgent need for better education of Native Hawaiians, which Congress has repeatedly identified as necessary," the court said.

The case was brought by a white student excluded because of his race.

Admission to the elite school is first granted to qualified Hawaiian students, and non-Hawaiians may be admitted if there are openings available. Only one in eight eligible applicants is admitted to the school, which serves about 5,400 students at three campuses.

Seven Republican judges opposed the policy; eight Democrats on the court supported it. Three dissenting judges wrote separately that civil rights law prohibits a private school from denying admission because of race.

Eric Grant, the plaintiff's attorney, said he would appeal to the Supreme Court. "Discrimination in favor of native Hawaiians and against other persons is racial discrimination," he said.

Hawaii Attorney General Mark Bennett urged the court to uphold the policy, citing Congress' decision in 1991 to provide grants to the Kamehameha Schools and offer preferential loans to native Hawaiians.

Congress "could not intend to bar an admission policy that it was supporting," he said.

The Kamehameha School was established under the 1883 will of Princess Bernice Pauahi Bishop as part of a trust now worth $6.8 billion. The trust subsidizes tuition and is designed to help remedy some of the wrongs done during the U.S.-backed overthrow of the Hawaiian kingdom in 1893.

The decision came a day after the Supreme Court suggested during arguments in a different case that it might ban the practice of race-based admissions in public schools, even if the policy was intended to create racial harmony.

The last time the Supreme Court ruled on a similar issue was in 2003, when justices banned the use of rigid formulas that award points based on race for admission to the University of Michigan and its law school.

But the court that same year also permitted colleges to consider race as part of a "holistic review" of every application.

Justices question school diversity plans

BY MARK SHERMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON—A half century after the Supreme Court outlawed state-sponsored school segregation, five of nine justices indicated Monday that school systems may run afoul of the Constitution by using students' race to promote diversity.

Cases from Seattle and Louisville, Ky., brought the divisive issue before the court for the first time since 2003, when a 5-4 ruling upheld the limited consideration of race in college admissions to attain a diverse student body.

A decision against the school districts could imperil similar plans in hundreds of districts nationwide and leave public school systems with a limited arsenal to maintain racial diversity. A ruling is expected by next summer.

In Monday's cases, parents sued after their children were denied admission to the schools they preferred because of their race. The school policies in contention were upheld by federal appeals courts and are designed to keep schools from segregating along the same lines as neighborhoods.

Justice Anthony Kennedy, who could hold the decisive vote as the swing justice since Sandra Day O'Connor's retirement, joined his conservative colleagues in expressing deep skepticism about the programs.

School districts court trouble by "characterizing each student by the color of his or her skin," Kennedy said during the argument over the Seattle case. "It seems to me that should be allowed, if it's ever allowed, as a measure of last resort."

Lawyers for the parents and the Bush administration said the plans violate the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment, enacted after the Civil War as part of the effort to remedy the effects of slavery.

The issue presents a unique challenge to Louisville's schools, which spent 25 years under a court order to eliminate the effects of state-sponsored segregation. The Jefferson County, Ky., school board, which encompasses Louisville, decided to keep much of the court-ordered plan in place to prevent schools from resegregating.

"What's constitutionally required one day is constitutionally prohibited the next day? That's very odd," Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg said, sentiments shared by her three liberal colleagues.

In a reversal of sorts, the court's liberals spoke in favor of local control of education policy.

Francis Mellen Jr., representing the Louisville schools, called the plan a success story that enjoys broad community support, including among parents of white and black students. Joshua McDonald, the child whose situation as a kindergarten student led to the lawsuit, was admitted to his school of choice beginning in the second grade.

Still, Kennedy wanted to know whether a school system that succeeds in freeing itself from court supervision can use a student's skin color as a basis for assignment.

"We've never said that. That takes us on a very perilous course," he said.

Kennedy's line of questioning indicated to some civil rights advocates at Monday's session that their side would have a hard time prevailing in these cases. "It's even more difficult to win these cases now and it was never easy," said Theodore Shaw, director counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund.

Chief Justice John Roberts and Justices Samuel Alito and Antonin Scalia also expressed concern about the school plans. Justice Clarence Thomas asked no questions, but he has consistently voted against racial preference plans.

Scalia derided the school systems' policies as a "whatever it takes" approach that improperly classifies people on the basis of race.

Attorney Michael Madden, representing the Louisville school district, said race is but one factor, that it is relied on only in some instances and then only at the end of a lengthy process.

Madden drew a distinction between the Seattle school program and the subject of the court's 2003 decision, which narrowly approved the University of Michigan law school's affirmative action admissions program.

"This is not like being denied admission to a state's flagship university," Madden told Roberts. The Seattle students are "not being denied admission, they are being redistributed."

Seattle suspended its program after parents sued.

Outside the court, affirmative action supporters bearing "Fight For Equality" placards marched on the sidewalk in a brisk wind. A parent-teacher group from Chicago and several civil rights groups were among those sponsoring the demonstration.

Demonstrators chanted "Equal education, not segregation" and "We won't go to the back of the bus, integration is a must." Among the crowd were representatives of the National Organization for Women, the NAACP and students from Howard University.

Though outnumbered, there were some in the crowd from the other side.

"Regardless of how well-motivated, allowing the state to engineer racial mixing only creates racial stereotypes and increases racial tension," said Jerry Pell, president of the Center for Individual Rights, a public interest law firm. "The court needs to put an end to state-mandated tinkering with race."

The Bush administration took the side of the parents who are suing the school districts, as it had intervened on behalf of college and graduate students who challenged Michigan's affirmative action policies in 2003.

Solicitor General Paul Clement, the administration's top Supreme Court lawyer, said the Louisville and Seattle plans essentially used illegal racial quotas.

Clement said school districts have an unquestioned interest in reducing minority isolation but only through race-neutral means.

That comment provoked Justice David Souter to remark that school systems "must bide the ball," seek racial diversity without relying on race.

"The whole point is to achieve a value which comes from mixing the races," Souter said.

The cases are Parents Involved in Community Schools v. Seattle School District No. 1, 05-908, and Meredith v. Jefferson County Board of Education, 05-915.

Students discuss desegregation at a high school football game in Louisville, Kentucky, Monday, the U.S. Supreme Court will hear oral arguments from parents who challenge policies that use race to determine where children go to school.

MySpace to stop sexual predators

MySpace said yesterday that it will offer, within the month, a technology to identify and block convicted sex offenders from the popular online social network.

MYSPACE from page 1

based company's chief executive. The database, to be updated monthly, will include details such as names, age, hair color, height, scars and tattoos.

The News Corp. site, however, won't be using Sentinel's technology to verify the ages and identities of users to ensure they're not adults posing as teens — a change urged by many lawmakers and law-enforcement officials.

Cardillo said his service would be ineffective for such a purpose given the site's large teen population. Children don't have public records the same way adults do, he said, so the technology can't rule out whether an adult is posing as a teen online.

"What we'd rather do at this point is solve problems we know we can solve," Cardillo said.

Image-recognition software and other techniques are being considered to identify sex offenders who do not use their real names. In the meantime, Cardillo said, the database technology won't catch everyone but "will be highly effective." He declined to elaborate or provide any quantifiable targets.

Nigam said MySpace would consider making the database, to be called Sentinel Safe, available to rivals.

Parry Aftab, executive director of WiredSafety.org, credited MySpace for trying but said a database was no panacea.

"People who are registered sexual offenders will just not be themselves now (and) the people who they really need to protect kids from in most cases are not (convicted) sexual offenders," she said. "They are people who haven't been caught yet. It's a great PR (public relations) move but frankly I don't think it's going to make anyone safer."

In a statement, Connecticut Attorney General Richard Blumenthal dismissed the database as ineffective without age and identify verification.

But Nigam said he sees the database as part of a larger strategy that includes education and partnerships with law enforcement. He also said governments ought to require sex offenders to register e-mails they use to help sites like his screen profiles.

"We have to do everything we can in every different angle," he said.

In June, MySpace adopted new restrictions on how adults may contact the site's younger users and request to view their full profiles, which contain hobbies, schools and additional personal details. That, too, was criticized as ineffective because adults may simply register as teens to skirt the restrictions.

Aftab warned parents not to reduce oversight of their kids.

"They see this, they may misunderstand and think it will keep sex offenders off the site," she said. "The fact that it sounds more effective than it really is, that's a big problem."

'F-word' definition debated

F-WORD from page 1

But regardless of the frequent use of the word in recent decades, the negativity associated with the word has not left the instincts within today's generation.

"I always thought the concept of swearwords was weird but if you take away the fact that they're forbidden then why use it?" said Borenzstein. She believes it is the concept of the word, not the word itself that truly has a powerful standing in society.

This opinion, paralleled with the view of older generations, is not frequently recognized by most college students who use profanity in everyday speech and grew up with artists like Eminem.

Anderson's film addresses the recent trials of the FCC and parent groups who advocate family-friendly programming and stricter media censorship.

"The FCC is a government-appointed agency that citizens had no control over electing," said Leeesse who studies law. "If people want censorship, they should vote for it. If you don't want to listen to something, change the channel," he added. "And if you don't want your children watching something, then be a better parent and teach them not to, or set parental controls on your television."

No matter what controversies or criticisms surround Anderson's documentary, there is something special about the word. Even in an article concerning it, the mere fact that a four-lettered word cannot be said in its entirety proves that, although not as powerful as it once was, it is anything but obsolete.

Battle grows over Colorado River

WATER from page 1

ness interests and U.S. environmental groups sued.

The lawsuit claims there would be significant job losses on the Mexican side of the border as thousands of acres of crops would turn to dust, that Mexican wells would become polluted without the seepage and migratory birds would be threatened if wetlands disappeared.

R. Gaylord Smith, an attorney for Consejo de Desarrollo Economico de Mexicali, a Mexican business group, argued that the U.S. has abandoned rights to the water.

Judge Sidney Thomas said the U.S. might have abandoned the water, but that doesn't mean "somebody else acquires it."

Malissa Hathaway, another attorney for the business group, argued the canal project would be detrimental to both sides of the border.

"No one has looked at the economic effects of taking land out of production," she said.

Water consumption spurred by breakneck growth in Southern California prompted Western states to complain they weren't getting their share of Colorado River water. The dispute resulted in a water redistribution deal that included the lining project as California settled for less water.

Colorado River water first flowed to California's and southeast in 1901 on the Alamo Canal, which dipped into Mexico. California farmers soon decided they needed a canal completely within the United States, leading to completion of the All-American in 1942.

The Bush administration has urged a federal appeals court to allow the lining of a canal with concrete to stop water from seeping south of the border.

Want to change your undergraduate major to nursing?

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST 1863

We announce the opening of Transfer Application period for current UMASS Amherst undergraduate non-nursing majors to apply to change their undergraduate major to the Nursing major.
Due date for transfer application is December 13, 2006.

We are pleased to invite the transfer applications of current undergraduate non-nursing majors who wish to apply to the Nursing major in the school of nursing. Transfer applications for the School of Nursing will now be reviewed. All information on eligibility for transfer is contained at the website www.umass.edu/nursing (see transfer notice banner on the home page!)

Don't Delay!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No class at UMass?

A letter from the Editor

Fallout from Saturday's win over UNH continues as UMass fans are now under-fire from members of the community, alumni and the media for their behavior at Saturday's game.

A column entitled "No Class at UMass" appeared in the New Hampshire Union Leader yesterday, by Joe Sullivan, a bi-weekly sports columnist. Joe apparently had a less than stellar time at the game Saturday, due solely to the UMass fans, in particular student fans, calling them "cretins and boors."

Cretins and boors, cretins and boors, oh my.

To quote Mr. Sullivan himself, "Most members of the UMass student body that I encountered repulsed me. And we're not talking one or two undergrads, we're talking much bigger numbers."

I assume Sullivan had no intention of writing anything about the game before attending; otherwise he would have sat in the press box. Rather, Sullivan sat amongst the masses where he was repulsed by the behavior, and language of student fans. So, Sullivan decided to air it out in his column, but, in doing so he insulted the entire University.

To say UMass fans have no class is a ridiculous generality. Shame on you, Joe Sullivan. When you resort to name calling and generalizing, you sir, are no better than the students that you were so offended by.

"Cretins and boors" exist at any game, on any campus, nationwide. Sullivan says UMass fans have no class; well, Sullivan, perhaps sports fans in general don't have class. The behavior I witnessed Saturday was no different than I've seen at any game, be it high school, college or professional. And by far the worst behavior I witnessed was from that of the intoxicated middle-aged adults surrounding me in the stands.

I wonder if Sullivan would have written his column had he not been insulted by one fan in particular. In brief, Sullivan was called an "'Expletive' cripple" by one college-aged UMass fan.

Calling an older gentleman a cripple? I hope that the individual who said that is reading this, so he realizes that he is indeed a cretin...or in terms a younger generation would understand, a complete ass.

I hope student fans realize that their behavior at sporting events reflects on the University as a whole.

Sullivan, on behalf of the entire student body let me apologize to you. The individual who said that did indeed have no class, and it's a shame that individuals like that can be viewed as representatives of the University as a whole.

It's a shame that while thousands of students are enjoying the game, supporting UMass and in no way causing any trouble, the behavior of a few can lead anyone, not just Sullivan, to assume that UMass fans have no class. I hope student fans realize that their behavior at sporting events reflects on the University as a whole.

But no class at UMass? Give me a break Sullivan. As a sports writer, I mean columnist, you've seen enough games to know fans will be fans, and college kids will be college kids. As a professional writer you should know better than to make bold insulting generalizations based on one bad personal experience. Save that type of journalism for the bloggers.

UMass fans have plenty of class, UMass fans have pride, and UMass fans should be proud of the fact that they sold out McGuirk Stadium for the first time since 1973. I witnessed the game from the stands as well, and what I saw was an excited, passionate University community coming togeither to support our Minutemen.

Saturday Dec. 2 was a day that made me proud to be a Minuteman. UMass students proved that when a big game comes up, they can be some of the best fans in the country. Bravo.

Joe, I'm sorry you were insulted by a UMass fan. I'll tell you what, next time UMass plays UNH I'll save you a seat in the press box so you don't have to sit with those "cretins and boors" that make up UMass.

Nicholas Belanger is the Collegian Editor-in-Chief, and he can be reached at Editor@dailycollegian.com. Joe Sullivan's column can be found at www.unionleader.com, his e-mail address is attached.

Opting-out not so bad

Jackie Hai

In my hometown of Lexington, Ma., trouble is brewing and parents are suing. Suing the town and public school system, that is, because they don't want their children learning about homosexual-headed families in elementary school.

Irony aside – I mean, we are talking about a Left-leaning town in Liberal Massachusetts here – it's a debate that is as divisive as it is muddled.

Lexington was catapulted into the national spotlight by a series of events over the past 18 months that began when local resident David Parker confronted school officials at Estabrook Elementary School over a storybook his son brought home.

The book, "Who's in a Family," normalized same-sex parenthood by placing it in an equal light as families with heterosexual parents, single parents, foster parents and so on.

Parker and his wife, who identify as deeply religious followers of the Judeo-Christian faith, would have none of that. At a meeting with Joni Jay, the school principal, Parker requested parental notification prior to any class discussion surrounding homosexuality and the right to opt his children out of them. Jay declined to meet his requests, Parker refused to leave and when the school had to be closed for the night, he was arrested for trespassing and escorted away in handcuffs by police.

Conservative groups and like-minded parents rallied around Parker; Liberal townsfolk and civil rights activists rallied around the school. The clash of values seemed to come to a head in September 2005, when crowds of sign-wielding parents, teachers, kids, members of the religious right and progressive left faced each other in a tense stand-off in the town center.

Eleven months later, parents Joseph and Robin Wilfrith vocally opposed the reading of "King and King," a fairytale picture book about gay princes, in their child's fourth grade class at Estabrook. Last April, the Parkers and Wilfriths filed a civil lawsuit against the town of Lexington and its public schools. They argued that refusal to give parental notification and opt-out rights is a violation of Massachusetts' sex education policy, as well as a violation of their religious freedom under the Constitution.

The Lexington school administration continues to stand firm, as they should. The general consensus among school officials is that the letter of the sexual education opt-out law has nothing to do with discussions about households and families. Giving in to the lawsuit's demands is seen as a betrayal of community values: inclusiveness, diversity and equality for all people and all types of families.

While I agree with the school system's stance, the problem with this debate is that the two sides are taking aim at each other from opposite ends of an arena, but losing each other's messages in the crossfire.

There is a tangle of issues at stake: parents' rights, gay rights, religious freedom, inclusive education and legal interpretation. The extreme right seems to filter pro-diversity and anti-discrimination initiatives through what they perceive as a threatening "homosexual agenda." The extreme left sees most of the opposition's arguments as propagating ignorance and hate. It doesn't have to be this way.

Back when I was in second grade, there was a boy in our class whose family's religion prohibited any kind of learning about the human body or modern medicine because it was a sin against God. His parents obtained an opt-out allowance from the school so that any time the subject came up, this boy left the room and sat in the hallway or library.

It wasn't a big deal. The rest of us kids didn't wonder if there was something wrong with the human body or medicine; we just thought the one kid who left was a little funny, but it was also OK to have different beliefs. We were a pretty accepting bunch, thanks to the Liberal education we had already been receiving.

Based on that experience, I have enough faith in the inclusive education curriculum to posit that even if religious parents succeeded in opting their children out of talks about homosexual-headed families, the overall effect would be minute.

If by some long shot, the Parkers and Wilriths won their case, what's the worst that could happen? If their children leave the classroom, the teacher can always address it by leading a class discussion on different belief systems.

If by some long shot, the Parkers and Wilriths won their case, what's the worst that could happen? If their children leave the classroom, the teacher can always address it by leading a class discussion on different belief systems. Kids get to try some critical thinking, and life goes on.

But what about the children of religious parents, one might ask? Won't they get indoctrinated with discriminatory beliefs, and doesn't that hinder progress in improving the human condition?

Well, yes and no. Religion can evolve as well: in the 16th century, the Catholic Church couldn't come to grips with Galileo debunking the belief that everything revolved around the Earth. Society has moved past that now, along with a slew of other archaic and draconian beliefs.

Not all religious people opposed to homosexuality are bigoted, violent hate mongers. Homosexuality is not a sinful abomination. These statements don't have to be mutually exclusive, but many who engage in politically charged discourse act like they are. Until we rise above blanket statements and generalizations, there will continue to be anger and misunderstandings.

Jackie Hai is a Collegian columnist

Cultural learnings of controversy

Michael Dennis

"Jagshemash! I like you! High five!" The eminent Kazakh reporter, Borat Sagdiyev, has created a language all his own. His smattering of peppy catch phrases, fragments of Hebrew and overall absurdity has taken America and its movie theatres by storm.

Of course, none of this would be possible were it not for British comedian Sasha Baron Cohen, who created the Borat character as one-third of the world's premier trifecta of television journalists (along with British gangsta Ali G and the wildly flamboyant Austrian fashionista Bruno).

With the release of his film, "Borat: Cultural Learnings of America For Make Benefit Glorious Nation of Kazakhstan," the mustachioed, musty-suited buffoon went from a cult hero on "Da Ali G Show" to a truly controversial international figure.

The government of Kazakhstan has openly deplored Borat for promoting untrue and hurtful depictions of the nation. In doing so, they have played into Cohen's hands in a way that he couldn't have even scripted, and have provided further fodder for his act. The fact is that he did not choose Kazakhstan as Borat's homeland because of any political agenda he had against them – rather, as he has stated, he chose it because he knew most Americans (and many Europeans, for that matter) knew next to nothing about the nation.

The government's virulent reaction begs the question as to why, as an entire country pitted against one singular comedian, they can't take his absurdity in stride. Kazakh diplomats would be wise to use the opportunity to educate Americans about their nation, rather than launching into a suspiciously vigorous line of denial.

The majority of those who participated in the film seemingly can't take any of his antics lightly, either. Among them are the supposed Kazakhs (who in reality are Romanians) in the opening and closing scenes of the film. Many Romanians have expressed outrage with their treatment, accusing producers of underpaying them, and one even claiming in an ABC News report that "if I see Borat, I will kill him with my own hands."

Similarly angry reactions have come from the wacky frat boys in the RV, who in filing a lawsuit against the producers claim that Borat got them drunk before they signed their release forms. (I can just hear it now – "No, Borat, we don't want to drink your alcohol. We never touch the stuff.")

Objections have also been raised by the producer of the TV news station, WAPT, where Borat's on-air antics supposedly got her fired for having booked him on the show.

A simple Google search (or a dose of pop-cultural savvy) would instantly have revealed the true nature of Borat, which begs the question – is it really Cohen's fault that she was fired, or was she simply not a very good news producer?

Say what you want about the moral quandary it presents, but without a little deception, the whole concept of Borat would not be possible. The main purpose of the character is to reveal what someone will say in front of a camera when they think the footage will only be shown in a remote third-world nation.

He leads people to say or do things based on his own foolish statements or bizarre actions. He coerces racism and ignorance out of people, rather than relying on trick editing or false statements to create something out of nothing. Chances are that, such as in the case of the man at the Virginia rodeo who openly concurs with Borat's homophobia, no notion was expressed that wasn't already in the mind of any one individual.

In all the hysteria over supposed improprieties, no one has stopped to ask certain key questions. Namely, why did participants sign release forms and accept supposedly small cash amounts for their troubles? If they were so concerned about the way they would be depicted onscreen, why did they not fully read the release forms and grill the producers?

The answer is that retrospect is a hell of a thing, and since they can't go back and change the past, the next best thing is to try and sue. For all the griping and legal action, common sense would dictate that the best way to handle such a situation is to sheepishly admit having been tricked, try to enjoy the attention and move on.

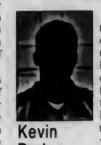
That's precisely what the Jewish couple who operate the bed and breakfast from which Borat and Azamat escape did. Though they'd enjoy a bit more compensation for their troubles, in an interview with the Boston Globe, the husband went so far as to call Cohen "a master actor" and declare, "He puts people in a mental environment where they can't think straight. No director can teach you that."

Racially and culturally motivated entertainment certainly isn't anything new, back to the days of white men crudely performing in black face, to Richard Pryor, to Jewish standup comedians. But in terms of the sheer magnitude and willingness to put oneself on the line for the sake of sending a message of the ridiculousness of it all, Sasha Baron Cohen and Borat are in a class all their own.

Michael Dennis is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY SIDE-SHOW ENTERTAINMENT.COM

Conservative opinion not correct



Kevin Dooley

Amidst all the final exam preparations and holiday shopping, this columnist has only one thing on his mind: sex – sex education that is. But sex is the last thing on the mind of the religious right, who, in their Puritan-like mindset, are pushing for abstinence-only sex education in public schools. This crusade by the religious right doesn't bode well for a nation already having problems with preventing teenage pregnancy levels and promoting safe-sex practices.

The Boston Globe reported on Nov. 17 that President Bush appointed Boston-area gynecologist Dr. Eric James Keroack to oversee the federal government's family planning efforts. Dr. Keroack is well-known for his anti-abortion and advocacy for abstinence programs here in the Bay State. In fact, in 2003, Dr. Keroack wrote in a PowerPoint item during a presentation that "Pre-marital sex is really modern germ warfare."

We shouldn't encourage teenagers to have sex, and abstinence is definitely the safest and healthiest option in preventing pregnancy or an STD. But it is not safe to conclude that hormonal and curious teenagers, even those raised by Conservative, religious parents, will always, in fact, choose abstinence. Do I need to remind those associated with the religious right that we are sexual creatures by nature meant to reproduce, at least to a certain extent? Religion doesn't automatically alter the blueprint of humans.

According to a study quoted in a Reuters report, 93 percent of American men and 80 percent of American women between the ages of 18 and 59 were not virgins on their wedding night. So much for abstinence, huh?

Sex is one weird thing in this nation. It's oppressed and shunned by everyone publicly, but it is one of the foundations of this country. I could make a very safe bet in saying more people at this point watch pornography than go to the movies.

On a lighter note, why do you think George Washington is on the $1 bill? It's because he was a guy whom a lot of women had a big crush on back in the day. He was the Tom Cruise or George Clooney of colonial America, minus jumping on Oprah's chair and getting Danny Devito drunk before talking with Rosie O'Donnell and Barbara Walters on the "View."

But I would be remiss if I didn't mention UMass is one school clearly at the forefront of sex education and promoting safe sex practices.

In fact, three of the states making up the Bible Belt – Arkansas, Mississippi, and Texas – ranked in the top five states in 2000 with the highest rates of teenage pregnancy.

What other school holds a "Condom Olympics" like this one did last Friday? I wonder if governor-elect Deval Patrick hung around to witness students testing their condom knowledge and picking up their sex toys after he delivered his speech at the Campus Center earlier that day.

And what other school has so many posters hanging on the walls of its dormitory hallways? Our Resident Assistants are keeping native Amherst poet Emily Dickinson's spirit alive with their wonderful similies and metaphors pertaining to sex.

"Sex is like a Marathon," "Sex is like Track and Field" and my favorite, "Sex is like Field Hockey." If any of you happened to venture over to one of the best college sports newspaper sections in the country and read the coverage of the UMass field hockey team this season, you would know field hockey conjures no thoughts of sex for this columnist, but I digress.

According to guttmacher.org, each year almost 750,000 teenage women aged 15-19 become pregnant, and 95 percent of those pregnancies are unwanted. Despite the teenage pregnancy rate in this country being at its lowest level in 30 years, we still have the highest rate of teenage pregnancy and births in the western industrialized world. In a report from the Guardian in 2004, the United States has 53 births per 1,000 teenagers.

Now let's look at the track record of Conservative states and their effort to prevent teenage pregnancy.

Conservative states, which not coincidentally include the Bible Belt states that are in staunch support of abstinence-only programs, boast some of the highest teenage pregnancy rates in the country. In fact, three of the states making up the Bible Belt – Arkansas, Mississippi, and Texas – ranked in the top five states in 2000 with the highest rates of teenage pregnancy.

In fact, another Conservative state, Kansas, voted 6-4 last March "to change the state's health education standards to mandate parental consent for sex education courses." This is the same state that is still debating if evolution should be taught in the classroom, by the way.

And according to USpolitics.about.com "during President Bush's tenure as governor of Texas from 1995 to 2000, with abstinence-only programs in place, the state ranked last in the nation in the decline of teen birth rates among 15-17 year olds." Do you notice a trend occurring among the Bible Belt states and their inability to prevent teenage pregnancy?

Frankly, the religious right preaching to those who are in support of teaching protected sex are morally corrupt and are on God's naughty list. Their preaching is getting more annoying than the "SingStar Rocks" video on the Collegian's Web site.

It's about time we realize something: A good amount of teenagers are having and will have sex, even in the state of Texas, President Bush.

Kevin Dooley is a Collegian columnist.

Racing for the big seat?

Michael Shulman

With a little less than two years before the presidential election, the race to gain the spotlight is in full effect. Hot off their big wins in the House of Representatives and Senate, the Democratic Party has been busy pushing forward toward nominating a presidential candidate.

Early hints from Senators Barak Obama and Hilary Clinton have jolted the field and made an early statement about who the real players will be in the upcoming months. In fact, their notoriety and popularity has forced many hopefuls to either not run or begin their run very early like in the case of Iowa Governor Tom Vilsack.

Along with former Sen. Mike Gravel of Alaska, Iowa Gov. Tom Vilsack has already filed with the Federal Election Committee and they have begun their campaigns before Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Obama have had a chance to command the media's attention. This open race for the presidency has set up an interesting dynamic as lesser known democratic politicians attempt to gain some much needed financial backing and win over voters, positioning themselves as alternatives to some of the bigger names in the party.

Pollsters and political operatives have been out in New Hampshire, Iowa and other states with early primaries finding out the political climate and positioning their candidate to win the party's nomination. Editorials are being written, strategies are being formed and the public is already being forced into election frenzy.

The USA Today Gallop poll from Nov. 9-12 surveyed people on who they would vote for in the democratic primary and Sen. Clinton received 31 percent, more than any other candidate. However, the bad news for Mrs. Clinton is that 12 other names were mentioned, and this large field may pose problems if any gain momentum early in the election season.

A similarly open field in 2004 allowed Sen. John Kerry to pick up some strong support in the early primaries, which carried him to win the nomination. All of this means that no candidate is a lock, and the fight for the White House will be a long one and will more than likely not be decided early in the primary process.

The current frontrunner for the democratic nomination is Sen. Clinton. Many people remember her as the active First Lady who was a major policy maker in her husband's administration, working on healthcare policy as well as for children and women's rights. Her public personality led her to run for United States Senate. She is currently the Junior Senator from New York, and has positioned herself to be a strong representative for the Democratic Party.

Many people remember her as the active First Lady who was a major policy maker in her husband's administration, working on healthcare policy as well as for children and women's rights.

But she has also appealed to many Moderate Republicans, which is evident in her support from the upper counties of New York State. Unfortunately, for Sen. Clinton her time in the public eye has led to much criticism, and the Republicans have made her their target against the Left. Her highly visible public image will play a factor in her bid for the nomination, but we cannot yet say if it will be a positive or a negative.

Her opponents for the Democratic nomination have already been using her popularity against her positing themselves as alternatives to the partisan politics and mainstream policies that are unable to appeal to both Liberals and Conservatives.

One of the more interesting candidates who has not yet officially announced running for President is Illinois Junior Sen. Obama. Currently, the only African-American serving in the Senate, Obama has become a fresh face in politics reaching national popularity as the keynote speaker at the 2004 Democratic National Convention.

His energy, eagerness and his passionate address to the Convention made him a new leader in the party. Mark McKinnon, a senior adviser to Sen. John McCain, Republican of Arizona and a likely presidential candidate in 2008, said, "I think Barack Obama is the most interesting persona to appear on the political radar screen in decades."

He added, "He's a walking, talking hope machine, and he may reshape American politics." His vigor and personal warmth have been seen as a contrast to the more cold and professional Clinton and therefore he has emerged as the powerful underdog in the fight for the nomination.

It looks as though the battle for political power is never-ending, and with the conclusion of one election comes the start of a new battle. The next two years will be filled with stump speeches, Sunday morning television interviews and the continued blogging phenomenon.

The race for the Democratic nomination will prove to be an interesting battle that will dictate the future policies of the party and the race between Sen. Clinton, and her closest competitor Sen. Obama will make a lively competition indeed. We will see first-hand the professional politics of veteran Sen. Clinton versus relative newcomer Sen. Obama.

"For all the excitement Mr. Obama's potential candidacy has stirred, he remains a 45-year-old first-term senator who is largely untested in national politics," and it will be interesting to see how voters react to him in a crowded Democratic field. The country is already suffering from election withdrawal, and the upcoming 2008 Presidential Election is looking like a real contest of ideas that is sure to spark our fever for politics.

Michael Shulman is a Collegian columnist.

More of a breather please

John Gruenenfelder

The election has passed, the election season has come to a close and everybody can take a minute to relax. But, it seems that these days a minute is all you get. The upcoming presidential election has already become the buzz of the news world.

Last week Iowa governor Tom Vilsack became the first to announce his candidacy for president and has begun a five-state tour to get the campaign going. While Vilsack is the first to make it official, people all over are wondering about the almost certain, but not yet announced, campaigns of Senators Clinton and McCain. And most recently, the New York Times reported that even freshman Sen. Barak Obama is shaking things up with his "maybe" response when asked if he will be running.

If citizens become burned out from the constant flow of election news, our democracy will be that much worse for it.

All of this has occurred in less than one month after the November election was held.

Surely all of this posturing must seem a bit premature. I certainly think so. Moreover, I think the public could use a bit of a breather before the next onslaught begins. If this pace keeps up we could be seeing political burnout amongst potential voters and I'm fairly certain the candidates want to avoid that situation.

Perhaps the politicians are taking a cue from department stores. The decorations go up ever earlier. This year, Christmas decorations went up right after Halloween, giving Thanksgiving a miss altogether. We'd probably see campaign signs on street corners already if it weren't for strict signage laws.

More likely is the need to raise money in increasingly large amounts. Provided a candidate meets certain criteria they are eligible for federal matching funds for the primary campaign. These funds are not that large by today's election standards, and also impose spending limits on the campaign so many candidates forego them.

In the 2004 election both Bush and Kerry turned down matching funds. By getting out early a candidate can raise more money. The money is not just for them, either. Proving to the party heads that he or she can raise a lot of cash can go a long way in earning the party's nomination.

Regardless of what motivates this early campaigning, it really needs to be curbed. If citizens become burned out from the constant flow of election news, our democracy will be that much worse for it. And even if that doesn't happen, all of the existing or potential candidates being talked about in the media already hold an elected office. They have work to do now. As much as Gov. Vilsack's supporters might like to see him elected, aren't they at least a little annoyed that his campaigning will mean less work done in Iowa?

The nation as a whole deals with absentee politicians in the couple of months leading up to an election out of necessity. If somebody is up for re-election, then they're going to need to do some major campaigning. But before and after that time frame we expect them to do the jobs for which they were elected.

As strange as it sounds, I recommend tuning out. The political machine runs largely on volunteers. I can't in good conscience tell people to stay away from the process, since, if anything, citizens need to be more involved with politics. But, there is a time and place for such activity.

If you get an urge to volunteer, don't do it. At least not yet. When 2008 rolls around then give it your all. In the same way that shopping at Wal-Mart only encourages their practices, so too does a steady flow of manpower signal the early bird politician that they're on the right track.

Students, judging by the low voter turn out for young people, aren't particularly taken with early election fever. And I think most would be surprised to see the UMass Democrats or the UMass Republican Club setting up a table in the Campus Center. That is a good sign. We should be safe on campus until well into February.

Remember, you can make a difference. If a political shill comes walking your way, try to run in the other direction. And if you're forced into a confrontation, make sure said shill knows why you are unhappy.

November is too early for Christmas, and 2006 is too early for the 2008 election. It's not like anybody has possibly made up their minds at so early a date. We don't even know what incredibly stupid laws and scandals our elected officials will present to us in 2007.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist

Digital Disaster Part Two: The evil of our times

Brad Leibowitz

Not a day goes by which I don't recall fond memories of my older brother and me playing "Sonic the Hedgehog." We spent endless nights figuring out the best ways to beat Sonic the fastest; as an 11-year old, this seemed like a great way to spend time. To be honest, it was.

That was 9 years ago and now, being four months shy of 21, those are the fondest memories I have of video games. Not because every other video game I have invested time in doesn't compare to Sonic, but because upon turning 15, I simply lost interest.

My brother is now on the verge of turning 26, and I love him dearly. He, like a lot of mid 20-something-year-olds, is planning on buying "PS3" (hopefully off the back of a truck). I fear he, like the majority of video game consumers, is stuck exactly where Sony, Microsoft and Nintendo supplanted them to be: in neutral.

Next time you're in a mall, take the opportunity to wander into "Best Buy." Upon entering, make a b-line over to the video game section. Tell me you're not impressed. Tell me when you see the superb life-like graphics, that you're not impressed. That the little tot with a smile on his face doesn't bring a smile to yours. It's damn near impossible.

Myself included, in the same situation, I am highly impressed. Awed by the 11-year-old's reaction, and by the evolution of video games. I began with "Duck Hunt," progressed to "Sonic" and graduated with "GoldenEye 007." However, where once I was taken by "GoldenEye 007," these days I find my feelings while staring at the TV in "Best Buy" to be that of dismay. The child playing the game isn't a cute 11-year-old anymore, rather it's my brother. My brother, a good man with a bright future. A future being made dimmer by the monumental progression of Sony, Nintendo and Microsoft.

My older brother aside, the main problem with Sony, Nintendo and Microsoft is while they are stuck on forward, they have every one of its major consumers stuck on pause. From a young age, these corporations are hooking kids. It's the old adage, as happy as a kid in a candy store. Yet, instead of the candy being a chocolate bar, its "Gears of War" or "Virtual Fighter 5."

But really, you have to hand it to them. Over the years, Sony, Nintendo and more recently Microsoft have had the brains and the know how to design one hit game console after another. More importantly, all three know how to appeal to their market, even when what they are selling depicts scenes of violence or warfare.

From an early start, with games like "Contra" those companies all used the 'kid in a candy shop' approach. If the kid wines enough and begs enough, eventually, no matter the content of the game or the amount of calories in the chocolate, the parent will give in. Today, the average age of the buyer is 40. Infiltrate the minds of the kids to get the money of the parents…a genius age old ploy.

But what happens when those kids aren't kids anymore? What happens, as it is happening today, when the average age of gamers is an un-remarkable 33? As of 2006, 44 percent of all players range from 18-49 years-old. As for the content of the games, 47 percent of all games are either rated for "teenagers and up," or "mature."

Now, I know what you're thinking, "We've heard this all before. The problem with video games is the content of its material." No, it isn't. A game like "Gears of War" or "Grand Theft Auto" which uses theft, beating and general violence to woo its intended costumers doesn't scare me. It is, always has been and always will be human nature to crave what no sane person can do, i.e. blowing up a small town, robbing a bank or beating someone without mercy.

Be it using AIM for five hours a night, or playing "X-Box 360" for several hours a week, the increasing trend in technology is fostering an increasing tendency in anti-social behavior.

What scares me, is coupled with how we now receive our media, the trend points toward a much more introverted, anti-social world. Be it using AIM for five hours a night, or playing "X-Box 360" for several hours a week, the increasing trend in technology is fostering an increasing tendency in anti-social behavior.

As I see it, there is a direct correlation between the national progresses of digital interactive entertainment to the national drop in papers/novels (readers). Both, although providing information to the user, impart information in a wholly opposite manner.

The former provides information to its user which can be solely used in a specific virtual world, no where else. The latter provides information to its users, which conveys details about the world at large and everything it encompasses. Digital interactive media vs. human face to face relations.

In the end, I find it ironic that this piece will be more widely read online than in print. Talk about a slap in the face. But hey, if I can tear my brother away from PS3 this winter break to read this, then who knows, we all might still have a chance at a bright future.

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist

Joy and the holiday season

Andrew Freeman

Every Christmas, I find myself wanting less. I no longer feel the holiday's consumerist joy of waiting in anticipation, unwrapping presents and finally delighting in a long-sought product. It has evaporated for me into the mists of childhood.

Of all holidays, this one is most linked with the concept of happiness. Whether catching up with relatives, receiving gifts, listening to its innumerable songs or drowning in eggnog, Christmas promises nearly every pleasure imaginable. Its "tidings of comfort and joy" ring from our malls and televisions, an overwhelming cacophony of consumerist fantasy.

Christmas joy, for many, means presents. Whether it's the big screen TV or the "Playstation 3," adults and children alike seek pleasure in products. Moreover, the acquisition of the year's "it" product becomes an obsession. Endless lines, shoppers trampling one another for the latest purchase, even robbery, characterize this mania at its most extreme moments.

But the happy fantasy of Christmas goes beyond mere consumerism, and into the realm of the past. Many elements of Christmas appeal to nostalgia, to childhood memories. The 1984 movie "A Christmas Story," which recounts a man's recollection of Christmas as a boy in the 1950's, is played 24 hours a day on a cable station each Christmas Eve.

Childhood memories are often halcyon because children do not perceive the stresses of family life. It was years before I saw the fractures in my extended family: the petty politics, the bitter resentment that kept one uncle from sitting at the same table as his brother. If another uncle had screamed obscenities at a party when I was three instead of a teenager, the episode would not linger in memory.

Every year, Christmas brings presents and family gatherings for those who celebrate it, but happiness is another thing entirely. Happiness is ephemeral and fleeting; the satisfaction a present offers diminishes over time, replaced by a new want.

One of the Christmas movies to be released this year is "The Pursuit of Happiness," starring Will Smith. The film, based on a memoir by Chris Gardner, sells itself as a story of the American Dream.

In the trailer, we see Smith, a single father, struggling to provide for himself and his son, while seeking to advance his career. He takes on a prestigious unpaid internship at Dean Whitter, after seeing the sports car one of the company's stockbrokers was driving. Gardner had to live on the streets and in homeless shelters while working at one of the richest companies in the country.

But looking at his dream, it amounts to gaining "prestige" and growing wealthy; no matter how many shots there are of him hugging his son, it is a shallow selfish pursuit.

Clearly, Gardner's perseverance and hard work are meant to inspire us to achieve our own dreams. But looking at his dream, it amounts to gaining "prestige" and growing wealthy; no matter how many shots there are of him hugging his son, it is a shallow selfish pursuit. It is the pursuit of money, not happiness; anyone equating the two ought to see the movie "Scarface," where wealth brings paranoia, insanity and ultimately death.

Moreover, it is unseemly that a company should benefit from an individual's labor while allowing him to live on the streets. In another era, the unpaid internship, which more and more defines the workplace, would be called something different: slavery. Employees should feel their labor has value, and while money may not bring about happiness, lack thereof can lead to misery.

"The Pursuit of Happiness" is a vehicle to convey the philosophy and demands of the marketplace, which likes cheap labor and selfless sacrifice from its workers. Linked to the advertising of the film is "The Ultimate Internship" contest, which solicits college students to work for various companies. Four of the eight internships are unpaid or around minimum wage, which would certainly work for well-off students, but might trouble those who actually need money.

Ultimately, happiness is a subjective concept. Some find it in their work, and truly believe they have dream jobs. But not everyone can find or keep their dream job, and it is foolish to hold everyone to this standard. Some find it in the pursuit of money or products, the relentless quest for novelty and entertainment.

Many individuals, however, realize the essential hollowness of these endeavors, which at most offer escape from reality, never peace or contentment.

I have found the most lasting and profound happiness comes from relationships with those that I love, whether friendship, family or romance. Such relationships can be difficult to maintain, they can wither or explode; nevertheless, they are more valuable to me than any sum of money or any product.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist

MR. PRESIDENT.
MR. WEBB.
SO... UH... HOWS YOUR SON?
OH, JUST GREAT! HE LOVES IRAQ AND CAN'T STOP RAVING ABOUT ALL THE FUN HE'S HAVING!
HE ASKED ME TO THANK YOU ON BEHALF OF HIS UNIT FOR ALL THE EXTRA BODY ARMOR AND FOR THE EXTENDED TOURS... HE SAID HE'S GETTING A GREAT TAN!
WELL, ER... THAT'S GOOD TO HEAR!
...THAT went better than expected...

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bezanson booms from students' 'Strings Galore' performance

BY SYDNEY TOWNE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Music professor and faculty coordinator Kathryn Lockwood gave high praise for the student concert on Monday night in Bezanson Hall.

Classical music gets a bad rap. It is known to most college students as stuffy, boring; maybe something professors listen to in their spare time. There are those who listen while studying, or in those moments of life when quiet contemplation needs a soundtrack. Then there are people whose passion is music. They understand it. They feel it. They play it.

On Monday night the Bezanson Recital Hall was filled with the music of twenty-five such classical string students. It was a chilly evening when the professionally dressed musicians took the stage in groupings that varied from three to eight. They were playing pieces they'd only begun working on in September and would be moving on from once the concert was over.

"I think it's wonderful to watch them," said organizer and UMass music professor Kathryn Lockwood. She praised their ability to put together such a beautiful concert with what she said was minimal coaching and practice. Indeed, for the casual listener, the concert could have been professionally performed.

Playing music older than the university at which the concert was held, the students displayed a passion for their studies that often seems lacking in other fields. The depth of their sound mimicked the richness of the wood on their instruments. The only abrasive noise was the single item that fell from a listener's lap with a thud. Even the tuning of the violins and cellos had elegance.

Lockwood said that the strings' professors select the pieces, but that the requests of the students are acknowledged. Those works ranged from the traditional Mozart and Beethoven that began the night to the more contemporary Klengel whom the cello choir played toward the end of the evening. In all, fourteen works by nine different composers were put together in a seamless manner.

The crowd that gathered inside the blond wood walls of the hall grew throughout the first half to around seventy-five. Although the audience shrunk towards the end of what was a two and a half hour concert those who stayed seemed happy that they had.

Lockwood, commenting to an audience member at the conclusion of the concert, said that if they enjoyed this concert they should think about attending the Chamber Music festival in the spring. It is a longer and perhaps more complete sampling of this type of music because it features performances by all of the instrumental sections.

Listening with glasses in lap and even at times with closed eyes some gave the impression that any visual however controlled and benign might distract from the full enjoyment of the music. By removing the chairs and music stands and even the musicians themselves from their minds perhaps it is easier to hear the complexity of the works.

There were particularly physical students who interacted with one another as they played. The stories told by these musicians and their instruments were enhanced by that interplay. At times each of the instruments in a group of five seemed to be telling its own tale, yet never was there disunity in the music. That is a feat that both the composers and the musicians deserve credit for.

The concert proved to be a welcome respite from the final weeks of classes, at least for those in the audience. Even for the novice classical music listener the experience of watching true musicians perform was worth walking across campus. It helps one realize why this music is the classic and why it is the standard by which all music should be judged. Almost two hundred years haven't dulled the beauty of these works by Schubert or Handel and these musicians proved it.

Beer book draws readers

BY MICHAEL HARDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Disclaimer: The Daily Collegian does not support underage binge drinking.

Drinking beer in America returned to its prowess when Gerald R. Ford took office in 1974. He was the type of man that you could kill a six-pack of Budweiser with.

This is the introduction of "The Complete Book of Beer Drinking Games," written by Andy Griscom, Ben Rand, and Scott Johnston. The book explains 50 of the most fun drinking games to play. The old standbys are in here, Quarters, Thumper, and Beer Pong, as well as many lesser known games, such as Famous Names, Fuzzy Duck, and Slush Fund.

The three writers came up with the idea of the book during their college days as a joke. They decided to write it anyways and the book has become a collegiate phenomenon. They have sold over 500,000 copies and they managed to do a publicity tour during Spring Break. Now that the beer drinking masters are adults, they find that they cannot escape their beer gaming past. Scott Johnston has been recognized as the beer drinking guy in Hong Kong, while on a business trip. Yet, they still find themselves playing Thumper at weddings.

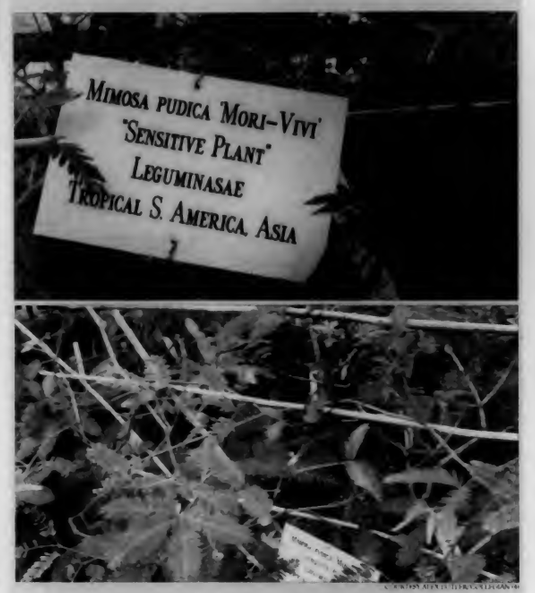
The 50 drinking games are separated into five categories by "Boot Factor." This should not be too difficult to grasp. A "Boot Factor" of one means that there is little-to-no chance of tossing your cookies in those games. A "Boot Factor" of five means that you will most likely be screaming at the bushes by the end of the game.

Before they explain the games, there is a Gaming Etiquette chapter. This is essential to one's beer drinking game experience. Most people have heard of these rules, but only for certain games. The serious beer gamer will use the rules for every game that they play. There is no pointing, no saying the word "drink," no profanity, and a ten minute warning for when you plan on leaving the game, among others. The last rule is to prevent those gamers who surreptitiously disappear, when it is their turn, to must likely reverse drink.

Throughout the book, there

See BEER on page 7

Durfee this week



Durfee's Mimosa Pudica 'Mori Vivi' or "Sensitive Plant" actually interacts with observers. Slide your finger along the leaves of this plant, and watch as it folds in on itself.

A Durfee volunteer works at making a holiday wreath for the holiday plant sale. Along with the wreaths, holiday baskets are also available – both decorated and plain.

Marie Antoinette, too clueless in new 'Abundance' novel

Kirsten Dunst stars as Marie Antionette, the new 'clueless' subject of Sena Nashund's new historical novel "Abundance."

BY CHERYL TRUMAN
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Marie Antoinette started out as what we today would call dumb as a stump.

In "Abundance," Louisville, Ky., writer Sena Jeter Naslund's new historical novel about Marie Antoinette, she was an extra princess in an Austrian royal family where children were not so much treasured as whelped for political benefit. Marie Antoinette was never much of a reader, never caught on to the political desperation that ignited the French Revolution and persisted in stunts such as creating faux impoverished villages for her own playtime when France was stuffed with authentically impoverished villages filled with the starving.

"Abundance" portrays Marie Antoinette as intellectually incurious, lacking in conscience and morally ambiguous. (On the plus side, she liked flowers, was a decent mother to her children and rarely overate.)

She liked to gamble and loved to flirt. Although she professed love for Louis XVI, her great ape of a husband, her heart belonged to a Swedish nobleman with whom she shared numerous, largely chaste declarations of undying devotion. What the Swede sees in Marie Antoinette the reader of "Abundance" never knows.

Marie Antoinette was not the economical type, although she loved pretending she was. Living 200 years before Princess Diana convinced the world that pricey couture was cool if you also opposed land mines and hugged the terminally ill, Marie Antoinette sadly lacked the services of a canny publicist.

Still, even Marie Antoinette's mother, the Austrian empress Maria Theresa, thought her daughter was clueless. Antoinette's brother, Joseph II, emperor of Austria, predicted that she and her king would end in a catastrophe of their own making (which they did). After misreading the seeds of the French Revolution – in one telling episode, the couple convince themselves that moldy bread is in fact painted for dramatic effect – Louis and Marie Antoinette attempt to go with the flow of the bloody new regime, then try to escape, and finally resign themselves to die with dignity.

This last part they manage pretty well.

Unfortunately, it's the way people live that generally speaks for them, rather than the moments when they die. And in those moments when they're supposed to be living and leading, the king and queen fail repeatedly. They aren't politicians or even particularly adept at reading political currents across Europe – even when the facts are laid out before them by savvy family members and adroit counselors. In an era when the successful monarch knew that the appointed-by-God line was hooey and that success went to the smart, Antoinette and Louis carried on like they ruled France from the pages of People magazine.

Marie Antoinette at least could claim that her main job was ornament, but even there she was something of a washout. The truly successful ornamental queen accessorized with a full womb and had a passing grasp of whether her subjects loved her or were merely being assembled for an impromptu round of monarch worship. Marie Antoinette are beer related lists that include different ways to say "drunk" and "throw up." There are also lists on what makes a classic beer drinking bar. Some of the essentials are a good jukebox of rock, Motown, Sinatra, and no rap, cheap pitchers, a broken neon sign, and bushes outside for late night watering.

See MARIE on page 7

A collection of drinking games

BEER from page 6

The writers also take time to share some stories and offer advice such as Cool Party Tricks. The art of can crushing can show the party your manliness, while pouring beer on your head, a classic party trick, simply creates laugher. It is recommended, say the authors, to perform this trick right before you are passing out.

An interesting game in the Boot Factor One category is "Burnout." All you need is a dime, a wide mouthed glass, a napkin, and a lit cigarette. First, you stretch the napkin of the glass, and rip off the excess so that the top of the glass has a cover. Then place the dime in the middle of the cover. The players will take turns burning holes into the napkin, until the one fool whose burn hole drops the dime into the glass. It is his turn to drink his beer. This game can get extremely intense, and is fun to play at parties, because people wander over to see what the ruckus is about.

The Shot-A-Minute game, more commonly known as a Power Hour is put in the Boot Factor Four category. The object of the game is to down a shot of beer every minute for one hour. The veterans will opt to play the Century Club, which is the same idea, except instead of 60 minutes, the game lasts for 100 minutes. Most novices will be talking to 'Ralph' on the big white phone before this game ends.

The Boot Factor Five games are not recommended for the average human. Only those who can morph into savage animals should attempt these games. The 100 Beer Club requires an entire weekend to play. The point is to drink 100 beers from midnight Thursday to midnight Sunday. That averages out to one beer every 43 minutes, should you stay awake for the entire weekend. It is advised that you drink at a steady pace and keep a physician's phone number nearby.

If you find yourself bored with night after night of the usual drinking games, go purchase "The Complete Book of Beer Drinking Games" to spice up your drinking experience.

Beer pong and other games are featured in "The Complete Book of Drinking Games", a new book by Andy Griscom, Ben Rand and Scott Johnston.

Mysticism brought to Harvard Square with 'Altered States'

BY SHEA DONOVAN-MCELANEY
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
MUSIC CRITIC (SUBCONTRACTOR)

BOSTON — Boston has many choirs — from the a cappella groups of our various colleges and universities to the professional niche choruses such as Voices Rising and the Cantata Singers, to large acts such as the Boston Gay Men's Chorus. Talented and wonderful as the aforementioned are, none is as singular and innovative as the Boston Secession.

Started in 1996 as a "laboratory for modernizing professional vocal performance" by artistic director and conductor Jane Ring Frank, the Boston Secession was named for artist Gustav Klimt's co-operative, the Vienna Secession, which "created a sensation by displaying paintings at eye level for the first time." Frank hoped to bring something similar to vocal music that would draw people in.

Judging by their recent performance of "Altered States: Mysticism in Music," Frank's vision is bearing ripe fruit. Boston Magazine referred to the chorus glowingly, credited Secession with "revitalizing the concert experience." These are not empty words.

The chorus performed "Altered States" at the First Church in Cambridge, Mass., outside Harvard Square. The cross-shaped sanctuary provides a suitable reverential space, which also happens to have acoustics perfect for soloist Mary Sullivan's soaring, angelic soprano. Highlights of the show included such diverse music as Benjamin Britten's "Rejoice in the Lamb", the 12th-century nun Hildegard von Bingen's chant "Rapture" sung to an arrangement of the Beatles' "Let It Be"; the sonic meditation "Get Your Rocks Off" by Pauline Oliveros, in which the singers circle the audience, bang rocks and speak pre-assigned and spontaneous words, as well as works by Orlando di Lasso, George Crumb and others. Boston Secession is known for its creativity and exactness. Both were in full force this night: Every note, every line, every bang of a rock was perfect.

Listeners of National Public Radio and Somerville, Mass., residents got an additional treat. The show was narrated by Ellen Kushner, one-time local author and host of NPR's "Sound and Spirit." Kushner's jose de vivre and ironic wit made a lovely counterpoint.

The chorus released its first CD entitled "Afterlife: German Choral Meditations on Mortality" in 2005, on local label Brave Records (www.bravercords.com). They're currently at work on their second CD, which is due out in 2007.

Fans of choral or experimental music should not wait to hear the Boston Secession. Their season runs from November to April. Upcoming shows include "Unlucky in Love" on Friday, Feb. 2, 2007, "Surprised by Beauty: Minimalism in Choral Music" on Friday, Mar. 16," and "Mother Tongue: The Music and Meter of the English Language" on Friday, Apr. 17. Another fan favorite that is not on this year's schedule but bears repeating is the Secession's version of Jean Cocteau's black-and-white foreign masterpiece, "Orfeo" (Orpheus.) The choir scores the film, occasionally even replacing the dialogue. Superb.

Artistic director and conductor Jane Ring Frank brought her Boston based choir, "Boston Secession" to Cambridge's First Church, Monday.

ARTS & LIVING
IS HIRING
TODAY IS THE LAST DAY FOR APPLICATIONS!
A POSITION IS AVAILABLE FOR AN ASSISTANT ARTS EDITOR.
FOR MORE INFO EMAIL ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM OR STOP BY THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN THE CAMPUS CENTER.

The UMass Theatre Guild will be performing "Macbeth" on Thursday and Friday night at 8 p.m. and on Saturday at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. The play will be portrayed in 1940's Chicago and centers around the mafia. Each night should be filled with an interesting, magical element. It will be taking place in the Student Union Ballroom and tickets are $8 for the general public and $5 for students/children/seniors. –Mike Hardman, Collegian Staff alternately moralizes like a biddy, refusing to speak to her grandfather-in-law's influential mistress, Madame du Barry, and fritters away money because she sees herself as put-upon and in need of entertainment.

Antoinette all-excess, glamour

MARIE from page 6

In one of "Abundance's" extended set-pieces, Antoinette spends an obscene amount of time and drama trying to convince her subjects that she didn't actually buy an expensive piece of jewelry, the point she misses is that she has bought an excessive amount of real estate, furnishings, paid flatterers, jewel-encrusted cups, paintings, landscaping and clothing. In the end, it's a distinction without a difference, and Marie Antoinette can grasp neither.

True, Antoinette might never have said "Let them eat cake" — in Naslund's book, at least, Antoinette doesn't have the sarcastic oomph to pop out that nugget — but the cliché about not seeing the forest for the trees? Now that could have been her invention.

Marie Antoinette's husband, alas, was a pork chop of a king who managed to get her pregnant only with the most extreme of effort and would rather spend his time hunting; one supposes that if he had a TV and remote control, the French monarchy might have ended right there. Louis rarely had an original thought, misinterpreted the works of the era's philosophers and received bad advice, which he managed through sheer serendipity to make even worse.

But despite the pitiful tale of the end of the French monarchy, this is Marie Antoinette's season to shine in pop culture. Hollywood darling Kirsten Dunst stars in Sofia Coppola's glossy "Marie Antoinette," which has received mixed reviews. A child's book in The Royal Diaries series, "Marie Antoinette: Princess of Versailles," wisely concentrates on the Austrian-stranger-in-France theme, ignoring that whole guillotine unpleasantness.

A few years ago, master British biographer Antonia Fraser kicked off Antoinette-mania with her 2001 book, "Marie Antoinette: The Journey."

Naslund's book title, "Abundance," is ironic. While Marie Antoinette had abundance, she was repellent; when she was finally reduced, by fear and loss, she became a character worth knowing more fully. Naslund's irony is a pretty thing.

While this was Marie Antoinette's season to shine in Hollywood, the Princess of Versailles is portrayed as intellectually incurious and morally ambiguous.

CONGRATULATIONS
100 YEARS & MORE
'06 PHRAT '08
The Rho Kappa Chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc. would like to congratulate our brother chapter Alpha Kappa Chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc.

FRUSTRATED? PUZZLED? DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

No goals for UM as Warriors dominate

HOCKEY from page 10

the crease in time to stonewall Ortiz and preserve the Warriors' 1-0 lead.

At the 7:09 mark of the second period, UMass went on the power play. UMass received a two-man advantage 40 seconds later when Merrimack's Ryan Sullivan went to the penalty box on a tripping call.

The Minutemen peppered Watson on the advantage but couldn't beat the Merrimack netminder. UMass' best chance during the five-on-three came when Matheson teed up a slap shot from the right point. But Watson was there again kicking the shot away with his left pad.

As the penalty expired, Sullivan left the penalty box and positioned himself in front of the UMass blue line. Forward J.C. Robitaille spotted Sullivan after gaining possession of a loose puck.

He sent the puck down the ice to Sullivan who kept himself onside and skated in alone on Quick. He deked right before sending a wrist shot just under Quick's blocker to give the Warriors a 2-0 lead.

UMass had another two-man advantage a few minutes later but Watson was up to the task again.

UMass sent a barrage of shots on the Merrimack cage but couldn't slip one past Watson and the second period would end with the Minutemen facing a two-goal deficit – UMass held a 16-5 shot advantage in the period and a 31-15 edge after the first two periods.

"That was the game, not getting enough done when we had a chance to get it done and not staying patient enough and organized enough to keep the pressure on them throughout the game," Cahoon said.

In the third period, the Minutemen appeared to fatigue early on while Merrimack looked fresh throughout.

"Once the first five minutes of the period went by, I thought [Merrimack] kept their legs a little bit and we didn't do much the last 15 minutes of the period," Cahoon said.

The Warriors protected their two-goal lead while allowing just six shots in the game's final period.

Merrimack added a goal late in the third period when the Warriors capitalized immediately after another UMass power play.

Watson passed to Derek Pallardy who skated up the left side into the UMass zone with Rego trailing him. The UMass defender followed Pallardy past before he sent the puck in front of the net to Rego who slid it past Quick to put the game away with 1:41 remaining.

Dennehy upends Minutemen

COACH KENDALL CUTLIPAN

Coach Don "Toot" Cahoon and the Minutemen lost 3-0 to Merrimack on Wednesday night. Cahoon is in his seventh season with UMass.

CAHOON from page 10

"Mark is a real good teacher," Cahoon said. "He's quick on his feet. He's a student of the game. [He has] requisite skills to become a head coach."

Taking on a struggling hockey program with aspirations of future success is something Cahoon is well acquainted with after reviving hockey in the Pioneer Valley. He now sees Dennehy working toward the same goals at a rival school.

"He's taken on a couple of real tough jobs in going to Fairfield and coming [to Merrimack], and I'm pretty familiar with that situation," said Cahoon. "I think he's got the perseverance to stick through it and make it right.

"We were together for eight years, so we know each other pretty well. We shared a lot of thoughts, and I learned as much from him as he did from me, I'm sure," said Cahoon.

Despite the obvious precedent of his first win over Cahoon, Dennehy's focus was on his team's second win of the season. Nonetheless, the matchup must always standout on the schedule for the two former benchmates.

"He's just a class act," Dennehy said. "All I can say is there is no one in the hockey world that I have more respect for than Don Cahoon."

The Warriors remain in the Hockey East basement, but are now inching toward closing the gap. Tuesday was the team's final game of the semester, so the importance of the win overshadows the accomplishment of its coach.

"When you're where we are, you need any wins you can get, so that's most important," said Dennehy. "These aren't my wins. They're the players' wins, so I'm happy for them."

Cahoon and the Minutemen have one more weekend of hockey before their holiday break. The upset at the hands of the Warriors could give the team incentive to play well against No. 6 Boston College.

"Every game in our league I expect [the team] to be up for," Cahoon said. "This loss will stick and it will hurt. This game is all about relief when you win and absolute misery when you lose. We're all miserable until we are able to get a win under our belts."

Cahoon assured that the misery came from losing to a one-win team and not from being handed his first defeat to Dennehy.

"The players get to have a little bit of ecstacy [after a win], but the coaches don't, that's for sure," he said. "This is a hard loss, but there's plenty of hockey to be played, and it's a long season."

Minutewomen remain consistent

Freshman point guard Kim Benton (left) and junior forward Kate Mills (right) are a big part of UMass' stellar 7-1 start this season. The Minutewomen take on the Hartford Hawks tonight.

BY DOMINIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Just keep rolling along. That's all UMass coach Marnie Ducko wants her women's basketball team to do. The Minutewomen (7-1) head to Hartford University (6-3) today to square off against the Hawks, as Massachusetts looks to keep its current winning streak alive.

To do that, however, UMass will need solid performances from the same players that have helped bring the team to where it is now.

MILLS LEADS ACROSS THE BOARD

Junior forward Kate Mills is the team's co-captain and leads the Maroon and White in almost every statistical category. She has racked up 131 points, and averages 16.4 points per game. She has a field goal percentage of 61.16 blocked shots, and a 80th free throw percentage – all team-leading.

Her seven steals, 14 assists and 53 total rebounds – though not the team's best – rank among the top few.

Mills admits that the team didn't play to its full potential in last Saturday's 58-50 win over Northeastern but that pulling away with a victory against the Huskies was an important confidence-booster heading into tonight's game. The only thing now is to focus on the task at hand.

"I think the most important thing for us is just to play our game and not get wrapped up in the hype about playing a good team like Hartford," Mills said. [We need to] concentrate on what we can do [like] hit free throws, make layups. I think we missed at least twelve layups [against Northeastern] just little things like that we know we can control. If we focus on that there's no doubt that we can pull off a win."

PAM'S GAME

Junior Pam Rosario plays with a kamikaze-like approach to the game. She is always the first player to dive on an errant, light for a rebound or stuff an opposing player's layup. Her feistiness and grit have proven to pay off on her stat sheet.

Rosario has amassed 117 points on the season – the second highest on the team – and averages 13.4 per game.

She has a 462 field-goal percentage thus far, along with sinking 29-of-45 free throw attempts and a .333 percentage from behind the arc.

But her contributions aren't limited to just draining buckets. She has also accumulated 11 steals, 19 assists and 53 boards.

Rosario consistently looks like a crash-test dummy, sprawled all over the floor after pouncing on a loose ball or trying to break up an opposing player's breakaway.

"Pam always goes down like a pile of bricks," Ducko said. "But, that's her game."

A THREE-POINT MACHINE

One of the most pleasant surprises to the 2006-07 season was the addition of point guard Kim Benton. The 5-foot-5 freshman burst onto the UMass scene at the beginning of the year and has since established herself as an important add-on.

Benton joined the Minutewomen with a fiery and intense style of play and has proven to have a knack for three-pointers. She is 11-for-37 from the perimeter, with a percentage of .297. The abundance of threes for the first-year student has been decreasing as of late, as many of her attempts have taken an unfortunate bounce off the orange rim.

But Ducko isn't worried about the recent decline in Benton's three-pointers and says she still has the green light on offense.

IN REBOUND HEAVEN

Tamara Tatham, the team's lone senior, started the season off slow. It seemed to take the sport management major several games to finally get into the swing of things, but she has lately broken into her stride.

She has a .405 shooting percentage and has tallied 77 points so far. Perhaps Tatham's most valuable aspect, however, is her jumping ability. She has pulled down a total of 81 rebounds, 24 offensively and 57 defensively. Tatham contributed immensely to this number last Saturday when she left the Mullins Center with 18 boards.

"She's really coming into her game," Rosario said. "And she's going to be really hard for people to stop her."

UMass W. Basketball

Xavier gets national attention

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Atlantic 10 men's basketball teams have been unsuccessful thus far against top 25 teams and that doesn't bode well now that one of their own is nationally ranked, at least for this week.

The Xavier Musketeers (6-1) were ranked 24th in the Associated Press poll prior to Tuesday night's game against Detroit and are off to their best start since the 1997-98 season when they went 6-1 through the first seven games en route to their first ever A-10 Championship. It is the first time the Musketeers have cracked the AP poll since the 2002-03 season when they went 26-6 and advanced to the second round of the NCAA tournament. Xavier has three players on its roster scoring in double figures this season and has seven players averaging at least five points a game.

A-10 Basketball

FLYING UNDER THE RADAR

While most of the A-10 basketball world was focused on UMass' (6-2) much anticipated contest against in-state rival Boston College before a sold-out crowd of 9,493 at the Mullins Center Saturday, 11 other A-10 teams were in action on one of the busiest days of the year in the young season. The A-10 had a poor showing Saturday, going 4-8, but the Dayton Flyers were one of those four teams to pick up a win and have been well under the radar this season, quietly amassing a 6-1 record. In their most recent win, the Flyers took down Holy Cross 69-53 Saturday after trailing 29-27 at halftime. Dayton shot 60 percent from the field and a remarkable 60 percent from the three-point line.

Dayton, however, is hoping a repeat of what happened last season doesn't transpire this year. It began last season with an 8-3 record, but then had its season derailed due to injuries, finishing with a 14-17 record.

STILL NOT GETTING IT DONE

The Rhode Island Rams defensive woes have been well documented early this season, but so far the message hasn't gotten across to the Rams. Rhode Island surrendered 95 points to the Providence Friars on Saturday and allowed Providence to shoot 51 percent from the field, and were out-rebounded 44-20. Rhode Island allowed 86 points to Boston College on Nov. 25. Its best defensive showing prior to Tuesday night's game against Brown University came when it defeated Iona 85-60. For the season, the Rams have allowed 80.5 points per game, which ranks last in the A-10, and are allowing opponents to shoot just under 48 percent from the field. Duquesne ranks last in the A-10 in field goal percentage defense (52.9).

But what one can't take away from the Rams this year is their high octane offense. Rhode Island sits atop the A-10 in scoring, averaging 81 points per contest and has three players shooting better than 46 percent from the three-point line. The Rams have not scored less than 77 points a game this season.

STATS CAN BE DECEIVING

At first glance, the Saint Louis Billikens should have had no problem defeating Southern Illinois, limiting the Salukis to just 38.9 percent shooting from the field while out rebounding them 23-20.

The Billikens' downfall, however, was when it came to taking care of the basics. Saint Louis shot a miserable 56 percent from the charity stripe and committed 15 turnovers, while the Salukis made 85 percent (17-20) of their free throws and committed seven fewer turnovers, which may have been the difference in Southern Illinois' 65-56, win.

Saint Louis ranks ninth in the A-10 in free throw percentage, shooting a modest 66 percent from the line and has committed 11.4 turnovers per contest. Rhode Island ranks last in the A-10 in turnovers, averaging just fewer than 18 per contest.

WORKS BOTH WAYS

The three-point line brought both heartbreak and celebration for the La Salle Explorers this past weekend at the Hawkeye Challenge hosted by the University of Iowa. Junior guard Darnell Harris buried a three-pointer at the buzzer to defeat Texas Pan-American Saturday, 64-63. Harris had 15 points in the win.

But the Explorers fell victim to the three-point line just one day earlier, falling to Coppin State by a three-point shot with 18.8 seconds remaining.

COMING OUT OF NOWHERE

Saturday was a whole different story for Temple Owls sophomore forward Sergio Olmos, who posted a career high of 11 points and 11 rebounds in Temple's 75-49 win over Long Beach State. Olmos is averaging 21 minutes per game this season and has four points and five rebounds per contest.

RIVALRIES RENEWED

Besides all of the rivalries that will kick off later this month when the A-10 begins its conference schedule, the Fordham Rams and St. Joseph's Hawks squared off against non-conference rivals Manhattan and Drexel University, respectively.

Fordham had lost its last five meetings to the Jaspers before coming away last Thursday with a 70-66 win. The rivalry dates back to the 1911-1912 season.

Meanwhile in Philadelphia, the Hawks weren't as lucky in attaining bragging rights in the state of Pennsylvania after losing to Drexel 72-56. Drexel picked up the win despite turning the ball over 23 times to the Hawks.

Senior forward Justin Cage and the Xavier Musketeers are now ranked No. 24 in the nation, according to the Associated Press poll.

3-Bedroom Apartments Available Now!
Mill Valley E·S·T·A·T·E·S
CALL FOR DETAILS:
253-7377
MILLVALLEYESTATES@WINNCO.COM

Winter-Session Housing
Taking a class this winter?
Need a place to stay?
Great rates available.
Howard Johnson Econo Lodge University Lodge
413-586-0114 413-582-7077 413-256-8111
www.hampshirehospitality.com

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SET YOURSELF COMICS
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

5		4			6	1	3
				2				9
		9	3		8
6	3			8			5
				3
	9			5			7	3
			1		2	5
4				6
	6	1	5			3		8

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Table seasoning
5 Forays
10 Ann or May
14 Hebrew month
15 Singer Fisher
16 Ida. Russe
17 Start of a motive?
18 Rides air currents
19 Raven or robin
20 Helper in wrongdoing
22 Landed properties
24 Preordains
26 Actor McKellen
27 Tolkien creature
28 Cabana site
33 On the qui vive
36 Carried along
37 Atlantic food fish
38 Escapes
39 Loudness units
40 Part of LP
41 Kimono holder
42 Males only affairs
43 Showy bloom
44 Body shop quote
46 Make heir
47 Instant lawn
48 Chosen one
53 Peach State
57 Side-to-side
58 Mystique
59 Metropolitan
61 Dieter's word
62 Emancipated
63 Intended
64 Well-known cartel
65 "What Kind of Am I?"
66 Uses emery
67 Bivouac shelter

DOWN
1 First course
2 Baked brick
3 Bi-again binders
4 Some racehorses
5 Act offended
6 Revere
7 State north of Nev.
8 Ominous
9 Activity periods
10 Havana natives
11 Came to roost
12 Remove a peel
13 Conclusions
21 Delicate color
23 "The ___ of Gang"
25 Munchers
29 Underground assets
30 God's reproduction
31 Puts on 32 Tense
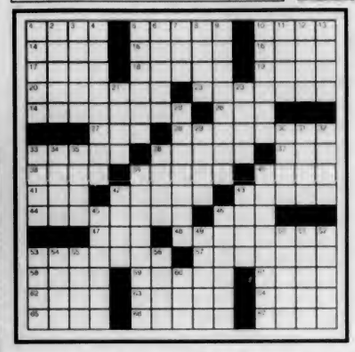
33 Burn ointment
34 Scientists' offices
35 Send out
36 Gravy server
38 Football mixture
40 Round Table knight
42 Pomated tog
43 Wordsworth or Tennyson
45 Middle Eastern country
46 Inclines
49 Large African antelope
50 Nonsense
51 Consumed
52 Vote for
53 Fish landing tool
54 Currency introduced in 1999
55 Cookie treat
56 Kind of rug
60 Prohibit

THE HARP
FALL SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURS: • Llama Lasagne
FRI: • Irish Seisiun
SAT: • Dan Kaplan Band
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
CC/MC & AE Credit cards accepted
163 Sunderland Rd - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6800 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"It's only when you look at an ant through a magnifying glass on a sunny day that you realise how often they burst into flames."
—Harry Hill

EASY MARK BY EVAN ROWLAND
PHD (PILED HIGHER AND DEEPER) BY JORGE CHAM
UM... HOLD ON, PROF SMITH. I KNOW I DID SOME WORK THIS WEEK.
YOU KNOW, SLACKERWAY...
YOU'VE BEEN WORKING FOR ME FOR QUITE A FEW YEARS. THERE'S NO NEED FOR FORMALITY. YOU DON'T HAVE TO CALL ME "PROF SMITH".
...YOU CAN JUST CALL ME "DR SMITH"
WHATEVER YOU SAY, DR SIR...
YOU'RE RIGHT. IT'S KIND OF AWKWARD. LET'S GO BACK TO "PROF".
www.phdcomics.com
W.T. SCHMELING BY WES CRAVEN
Bad news... you're turning into a zombie
What?! You're an idiot! That only happens in movies!
Excuuuuuuuse me. I just thought a "zombie" sounded cooler than a "leper"



BEST BAR AROUND
Seven Ox's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
12/8/06
FRIDAY
Foggy Depot
12/9/06
SATURDAY
Damon Reeves
Student Band Wanted
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
NEXT TO CHEESIDE APTS.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
The call of the wolf beckons you. Drop your things, become the animal.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
For every action there is an equal and opposite reaction. Holds true for burritos.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You inspire people to do stupid things.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
People don't notice you. Maybe you'd make a good cat burglar.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Don't give up, someday you will do amazing things.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Ain't nobody humpin' around. Bobby Brown thought you should know.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Hellraiser's looking for you. He knows you've escaped.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Drugs will make you do terrible things—like your homework! LOL!!!

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Your best isn't good enough is it? You're going to have to do better than that.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You don't have any friends in North Korea.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
One day you'll be Miss Co-ed.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You will make a lot of money as a nude model for art students.

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Be and Do something Bigger than yourself. Learn, Lead, and Succeed with Army ROTC Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly. Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 bedroom apt. available for sublet for spring 07 semester. $392.50 plus utilities. Call 561-346-6054

Brandywine Apts. 1 beds available starting now or Jan.1 www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

HOUSE FOR RENT

Lake Wyola 4 Bedroom $800 plus utilities 413-584-7345

HOUSE FOR RENT

Cute 2 to 3 bedroom house, neat, on bus stop in Northampton Available mid December. No pets $1300.00 Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

1 bedroom available for spring semester. $400 a month including utilities. 3 male roommates, across from bus stop call 781-492-5588 for more details.

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906

SERVICES

1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

TRAVEL

Alternative spring break Now taking applications Trips to New Orleans, Birmingham and Mississippi Delta. Space is limited, email: umassasb@gmail.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ultimate Warriors

Merrimack's Watson stands on his head in upset over UMass

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

NORTH ANDOVER — The No. 16 Massachusetts hockey team (7-4-2, 4-3-1 Hockey East) had a chance to leapfrog the Boston University Terriers and tie itself with the Boston College Eagles for third place in Hockey East last night against the Merrimack Warriors (2-12-1, 2-8 HEA). But the Minutemen failed – dropping a 3-0 decision to the last-place Warriors at Lawler Arena in front of the 888 in attendance.

UMass' next action comes against BC this weekend in a home-and-home set with the Eagles.

The Maroon and White dominated possession for most of the game and held a physical advantage over the Warriors, but Merrimack capitalized on its offensive opportunities and a rode a 37-save performance by goaltender Patrick Watson to victory.

"I thought, in the first two periods, we actually played pretty well and Watson was really big in several instances," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "You don't want to give a team like that a one-goal lead, never mind a two-goal lead."

UMass committed three penalties in the opening period. The Minutemen escaped the first Merrimack power play without yielding a shot. But on the second MC man advantage, the Warriors converted.

UMass	0
Merrimack	3

Defender Brock Wilson lined up a shot from the point and UMass sophomore goaltender Jon Quick couldn't corral the rebound. After a scrum in front of the net, Merrimack forward Matt Byrnes chopped at the puck, forcing it into the air where forward Justin Bonitatibus batted it into the net to give the Warriors the 1-0 lead.

Merrimack goaltender Patrick Watson kept the Minutemen off the scoreboard in the period, turning away 15 shots, – including blanking the Minutemen on two UMass power plays.

The second period began strongly for the Minutemen, senior center Mark Matheson won the opening faceoff and senior winger Chris Capraro gained possession and headed for the offensive zone along the right boards.

Matheson followed along parallel to Capraro and found himself open in between the two faceoff circles. Capraro sailed the puck the cross to Matheson who one-timed at Watson. Watson stopped the puck only to give an open rebound to freshman right wing Will Ortiz. Ortiz fired at the open net but Watson slid across

See HOCKEY on page 8

Sophomore goaltender Jon Quick let up three goals in last night's 3-0 loss to Merrimack. The Minutemen begin a home-and-home with BC on Friday.

Dennehy defeats old team as Cahoon's squad gets shut out

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

NORTH ANDOVER — A headscratcher inside J. Thom Lawler Arena Tuesday night resulted in the Massachusetts hockey team missing out on a chance at two points in the Hockey East standings, but an underlying theme followed the two men standing behind the two benches that night.

Merrimack coach Mark Dennehy earned his first win over the Minutemen since leaving the UMass coaching staff to take the head coaching position for the Warriors at the beginning of last season.

Merrimack upended the Minutemen for just its second conference victory this season, but more surprising was the fact that the Warriors shutout the Mass Attack for just the fourth time in the 36-year series between the two teams.

UMass was 9-1 in its last 10 games against the Warriors, but could not find a way to sustain its success against the last-place team in Hockey East. The last time the Warriors walked out victorious over the Minutemen was Nov. 6, 2004.

UMass coach Don Cahoon was 12-4-1 against Merrimack before Tuesday night's loss, and 3-0 against his former associate head coach, Dennehy. Despite the Warriors' record, Cahoon saw nothing surprising from Merrimack out on the ice.

"I've watched them on tape," said Cahoon. "They haven't had a lot of success winning and losing, but they've competed real hard and they skated real well. They had a goal or two lead, and it makes it real tough. That's why it's a great league, because anybody can beat anybody."

Cahoon and Dennehy worked together for eight years – five at UMass and three at Princeton – before Dennehy departed for Merrimack. Dennehy joined Cahoon's staff at Princeton in 1997, and stayed through the 1998-99 season.

The next year, Dennehy took the head coaching job at Fairfield for one season, but returned to work with Cahoon when the latter took the reigns at UMass. Dennehy worked under Cahoon for the first five years of Cahoon's tenure in Amherst.

The pair have gone from rivals, to partners, and back to rivals.

Cahoon won two national championships while playing for Boston University in the 1970s. Dennehy wore the Maroon and Gold at Boston College, though his playing days came a decade after Cahoon played.

Now, after coaching behind the same bench for a number of years, the two find themselves on opposing sides once again in Hockey East. Cahoon expressed his respect for his former assistant after the game.

See CAHOON on page 8

Minutemen ship up to Boston

Brower returns to BU, hopes to get team back on right track

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

The last time the Massachusetts men's basketball team lost, it came out the very next day and turned things around against Northeastern University in the Colonial Classic. There was less than 24 hours to think about the loss to Pittsburgh the night before.

UMass (6-2) finds itself in a different situation this evening as it travels to Agganis Arena to take on the Boston University Terriers (3-4) at 8 p.m., just four days after an 84-73 loss to Boston College at the Mullins Center.

The Minutemen had plenty of time to reminisce about their second loss of the season, and as a result, will face their first true test tonight.

"Our energy level has been good," UMass coach Travis Ford said on his team's morale this week at practice. "I think they understand what a disappointment it's been that we lost to BC. We're not happy about it, but I didn't see them come [to practice] with their head down. I saw them eager to get back on the court and want to play, and get that out of their system. We've had two good practices, and I hope it carries over."

UMass junior forward Etienne Brower may have extra incentive to get back on the winning track on Wednesday night. Brower transferred from Boston University after his sophomore season in 2004-05, where he averaged 5.3 points per game, and 3.5 rebounds in 51 games with the Terriers. He sat out last year because of NCAA transfer rules, and saw his first action in a UMass uniform on Saturday night (four minutes) against BC, after missing the first seven games of this season with a right ankle injury.

Ford doesn't want to rush him back from the injury and is unsure of how much playing time Brower will get on Wednesday night. Both Ford and Brower acknowledge the storyline, but know that the game is about much more than that.

"He hasn't said anything about it," Ford said. "I'm sure he's [thinking about it]. But still, I think he understands that our focus is just on trying to be successful and play well."

"I thought I'd want it a lot worse against BU, but now that it's actually here, it's not as big of a deal that I thought it would be," Brower said. "I obviously want to play well every game, but this game isn't more important than any other game."

The Minutemen are 39-29 all-time against the Terriers. They have won eight straight games against BU, including last year's 64-45 win at the Mullins Center.

The redshirted Brower didn't play in the game, but was on the bench to see his old team get beat from courtside. This year, he is interested in more than just winning.

"I'm sort of eager to see if Dennis Wolff shakes my hand," Brower said on his former coach at BU. "It's really the one thing I'm looking forward to seeing. All basketball playing aside, that's the one thing I'm eager to see what happens with that."

Brower walked the line to shake hands with his former Terriers squad after the game, but Boston University coach Dennis Wolff purposely refused to shake his hand.

Wolff is now in his 13th season at Boston University, and regardless of the outcome, the two will pass each other once again in the postgame handshake ceremony.

"It was sort of petty the way he did it last year, so I don't know if he's going to do it again," Brower said. "When the game ends, I don't know what I'm going to do in that line to shake hands either."

"I don't think I have anything to prove anymore. BU was a good school, but the A-10 is a better conference. Coach Ford knows I'm good enough to play, so I don't think I have anything else to prove."

UMass faces a Terriers team that just dominated an Atlantic 10 opponent on Saturday. The Terriers defeated St. Bonaventure 74-46 on the Bonnies' home court.

The Terriers are 3-2 on the road this season, but are just 0-2 at home. They're an extremely young team, with only two upperclassmen – seniors Omari Peterkin and Brian Macon.

BU is led by freshman guard Corey Lowe and sophomore guard Tyler Morris. Lowe leads the team in scoring with 14.3 points per game. Morris is the Terriers' best shooter, averaging 14.1 points per game, and shooting 49 percent from the field and 62 percent from behind the arc.

Ford is familiar with Morris. He signed the guard from Indiana during his last year coaching at Eastern Kentucky University, but Morris chose not to go when he found out Ford was moving onto UMass.

"He used us a lot as counselors," Ford said on Morris. "He asked us, 'Should I go to BU?' And I told him, 'Absolutely.' But now I wish I hadn't have told him that."

"[Boston University] is a great three-point shooting team," he added. "They have a young and hungry basketball team. They're young players are excited about their playing time, and they're making the most of it. This is a very good BU basketball team that can really shoot it. They're the best shooting team we've played against, by far."

UMass will use its experience to try and avoid back-to-back losses to in-state rivals tonight, all handshakes aside.

Senior guard James Life had eight points in Saturday's loss to Boston College. He is third on UMass in scoring with 12.8 points per game.

Junior forward Etienne Brower makes his return to BU tonight. He played his first game with UMass on Saturday, seeing four minutes of action.

UM to face Hawks in hostile environment

By J.M. Friedman
Collegian Staff

After two convincing victories at home against Northeastern and Wagner, the Massachusetts women's basketball team (7-1) makes the short journey down Interstate 91 to meet the regional powerhouse Hartford Hawks (6-3) tonight.

The Hawks have been flying high lately; following up a 60-43 rout of No. 22/23 ranked Brigham Young University at Chase Arena with a 58-46 road victory against St. John's. The Hawks are in the midst of an eight day stretch in which they play four games.

While technically an upset victory for the Hawks, their game against a nationally ranked opponent is something they have come to expect in Hartford. Winning back-to-back America East conference titles tends to raise expectations.

Last season the Hawks posted a remarkable 27-4 record, including a perfect 14-0 mark at home. Capping its successful campaign was Hartford's first ever NCAA tournament win, a 64-58 victory over the Temple Owls in the first round.

Hartford has posted a 29-2 record on its home floor over the past two seasons, and recently had a 20-game win streak at Chase Arena snapped by the same Seton Hall team that the Minutewomen defeated in mid-November.

Home court advantage is certainly a factor for the Hawks, as they draw an average of 1,142 fans. The Minutewomen will face a tough test in a hostile environment, as they struggled on the road last season, losing 12 of 14 games away from the Mullins Center.

Entering her eighth year at the helm of the Hawks, 2006 America East Coach of the Year Jennifer Rizzotti has her team positioned to win the America East conference for the third consecutive season. Rizzotti, a former player at national powerhouse UConn and veteran of the WNBA, has registered three conference champions and three NCAA tournament berths in the last five years in Hartford.

The Hawks return two of their top three scorers from last season, including unanimous America East Rookie of the Year winner Erica Beverly (10.2 points per game) along with First Team All-Conference member Danielle Hood (13.9 points per game).

Beverly garnered serious national attention last season, pulling down 11.3 boards per game during the America East Championship. On the season, she finished with 271 rebounds, breaking a school record in her first collegiate season. At an average of 8.7 rebounds per game, Beverly ranked fifth in the nation among NCAA Division I freshmen. Her 38 blocks were second on the team, as was her 55 percent mark from the floor.

Not returning this season for Hartford is 2006 America East Conference Player of the Year Erika Messam. The 5-foot-8 guard was selected to the All-America East Conference First Team and America East All-Defensive Team last season, and is currently a WNBA prospect.

The Hawks strength of last season was their stingy defense, allowing an average of 54.8 points per game, good for first in the America East conference and ninth in the nation. Their plus-10.7 scoring margin was tops in the conference, also taking first place honors in field goal percentage (43.4) and field goal percentage defense (37.4).

Last season, the Minutewomen fell to the Hawks 68-52 at the Mullins Center. Beverly posted a double-double (17 points, 14 rebounds) as Hartford outscored UMass 27-7 in the final eight minutes of the contest. This time around, the Minutewomen will need to deal with the Hawks faithful as well as their talented roster.

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

Boston center Marc Savard had three assists in the Bruins' 6-5 win over the Montreal Canadiens on Monday night. The last Bruin to tally 25 assists in so few games was Adam Oates, who had 25 in the first 22 games of the 1993-94 season.

UMass sets sights on Montana | Page 8

Victoria's angels bare secret | Page 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 44 LO: 22 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 2006

War of Words

Fan behavior debated, defended through media coverage

The manners of UMass football fans during the recent playoff win against UNH have come under heavy fire this week, with numerous UNH fans publicly blasting students for their poor behavior.

A column written Tuesday by Joe Sullivan, a sports columnist for the New Hampshire-based Union Leader, has generated plenty of debate over the actions of college sports fans.

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

While the University of Massachusetts football team's playoff game against New Hampshire on Saturday concluded in a 24-17 victory for the Minutemen, it is what happened in the stands at McGuirk Stadium that sparked a quarrel among columnists, fans and alumni.

McGuirk Stadium held its first sellout crowd since Sept. 8, 1973 on Saturday. Among the 17,000 attendees was sports columnist Joe Sullivan, who wrote a column in Tuesday's edition of New Hampshire-based Union Leader shunning UMass fans.

In the column titled, "Joe Sullivan: No Class at UMass," Sullivan noted that a large number of UMass fans were "cretins and boors," and that the game was "not a pleasant experience." Sullivan also mentioned a particular fan that he exchanged words with. Sullivan said the fan eventually called him an "(expletive) cripple."

Sullivan's column was backed by a frenzy of other displeased fans who attended Saturday's game.

Peter Colby of Rye, N.H. was sitting on the visitor's side of the stadium, and said the fans were rowdy, but not out of control.

"I've seen that at UNH. I have seen it at other places, but sparingly," said Colby. "It was just more of it Saturday than I had ever seen before, but it was not dominant."

Colby, who said he is a diehard Wildcat fan, enjoyed Saturday's contest, which ended with UMass batting away a Ricky Santos' pass on fourth-and-1. However, he said he was discouraged by some aspects of the fan involvement.

"There were parading guys with their shirts off going by and was just a little bit obnoxious," Colby said. "There were some standing down along the fence just giving it to the UNH players."

One incident near the field involved the brother of New Hampshire senior receiver David Ball, whose 58 career touchdowns broke Jerry Rice's college record. According to UMass Police, Mathew Kenneth Ball, of 8 Triddle Brook Ln. in Orange, Vt., was arrested on Saturday on charges of disorderly conduct.

Colby, who said he knows David Ball's parents, but not his brothers, witnessed the arrest.

"I saw him pulled over the fence by the cops, I had no idea why they did that," said Colby. "They got him down on the ground, cuffed him, and escorted him out."

The media coverage of Saturday's fan behavior was included in an article in yesterday's Union Leader, outlining reaction from people who attended the game. The article, titled "UMass fans get e-mail tongue-lashing" cited Sullivan's column and included a link to an editorial published in yesterday's edition of The Daily Collegian.

The column "No support for a generalization," by Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger, refuted Sullivan's statement that "UMass has no class." Belanger, who attended Saturday's contest, said, "To say UMass fans have no class is a ridiculous generality." He also acknowledged that a few students' behavior was uncalled for, but that "UMass fans have plenty of class. UMass fans have pride."

On Tuesday, calls regarding fan behavior and letters to the editor flooded the Collegian newsroom, most of which were from unhappy attendees of Saturday's game.

One letter to the editor published in Monday's edition of The Daily Collegian outlined one UMass alumnus and how he viewed the fan's behavior. The letter, submitted by Chris H. Baker, referred to the behavior of some UMass fans as "drunken" and "obnoxious." Baker stated that he brought kids to the game, and had to "move our seats three times just hoping to find a place where UMass students were not falling on top of each other drunk, or antagonizing UNH fans with profanity."

Eric Athas is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at eathas@student.umass.edu

Columbia Dean speaks at UMass

By Chris Quaglia
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Journalism department hosted a free public lecture Tuesday titled "Journalism 2.0 – How Technology is Changing the Media, Journalists and Consumers."

The lecture, held in Memorial Hall, was accompanied by both a delectable array of refreshments and a raffle that would be drawn after the conclusion of the speech.

Sree Sreenivasan, the guest speaker of choice, is the dean of students at the Columbia University. He is also the co-founder of the South Asian Journalists Association, whose focus is to help journalists use technology faster and more efficiently. He has been featured in The New York Times, Popular Science, Time Digital, and Business Week, helping lay readers better understand technology and its uses.

Obviously well-versed in public speaking, Sreenivasan was very clear and objective while giving his speech. His charisma and sense of humor was also quite evident as he progressed through his most important messages, which focused primarily on Internet research and the ethical issues of using the World Wide Web. Another subject that Sreenivasan highlighted throughout his speech was the decline of traditional jour-

Dean of students at Columbia University, Sree Sreenivasam.

See SREE on page 2

UM Police Chief speaks of abuse on campus

By Julie Halpin
Collegian Correspondent

Almost a third of college students may become victims of domestic or relationship violence, according to the University of Massachusetts police chief, and such violence often increases as the holidays begin and end-of-semester stresses reach their peak.

Some 32 percent of college students will become victims of such violence, University of Massachusetts Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor said, and such incidents frequently increase as final exams and project deadlines approach, and coincide with the stresses of the holiday season.

Domestic or relationship violence, which covers any violent or controlling behavior by a person toward a spouse or partner, has become a serious problem on college campuses.

Although campuses themselves are "generally pretty safe places," O'Connor said, their often serene settings sometimes mask personal strains and even criminal acts – including aggravated assault, non-forcible sex offenses, and forcible sex offenses.

For 2005, the University reported nine forcible sex offenses; for 2004, 7; down from 36 in 2003. The figures for UMass Amherst are made available by University Police at: www.umass.edu/umpd/statistics/2005%20stats.pdf

However, battered or sexually-assaulted women, and men, often fail to report their abusers. Some 81 percent of on-campus and 84 percent of off-campus sexual assaults are never reported to police, according to a Children Now/Kaiser Permanente poll.

That's likely no less true at UMass, O'Connor said. If, for example, the national never-reported figures hold true for UMass, those numbers would inflate drastically.

O'Connor said that even 2003's reported figures for UMass sounded low to her.

"Does anyone really think we only had 36 rapes on this campus?" she asked.

The majority of domestic assaults and batteries are not reported to officials because society often places blame on women for the violence that is perpetuated against them, O'Connor said. Many also fear reporting their abuser because nearly 2 in 3 female victims of violence know their attacker, according to the U.S. Department of Justice Bureau of Justice Statistics, "Violence Against Women: A National Crime Victimization Survey Report." The Justice Department compiles such reports under legislation known as the Jeanne Clery Act, named for a 20-year-old Lehigh University student who died in a 1986 campus attack.

It's hard to say how many students at UMass are actually victims of domestic or relationship violence, Chief O'Connor said, because police often aren't present for such incidents. Although education about domestic violence is provided on campus, she said, "There are some Rosa de Castillo sits at home with her daughters. Rosa escaped from domestic violence after withstanding years of abuse.

See ABUSE on page 2

Catholics debate use of morning-after pill

By Teresa A. Franco
Collegian Correspondent

The morning-after pill, or "Plan B," available over the counter at pharmacies since Nov. 15, is not only antithetical to church doctrine, according to some devout University of Massachusetts Christian and Catholic women, but it's too easy to get.

The morning-after pill is inconsistent with Catholic doctrine, which forbids any form of artificial contraceptive, meaning any birth control that disrupts the natural way human bodies work. Some Catholics say using it doesn't respect life.

According to Megan Mead, a Fellowship of Catholic University Students minister at the Newman Center, "Our bodies have a natural cycle. When you use [artificial] birth control, you're obstructing the natural order of how humans are made.

"When using birth control, such as the pill, a man and woman are not truly giving themselves to one another, they're only using one another for pleasure," she added.

Mead, a recent graduate of Christendom, a small Catholic college in Virginia, said that she was shocked at how easily students can access contraceptives on campus and that she's outraged that emergency contraception is even more easily obtainable since last month.

"As a Catholic, it's very upsetting for it [Plan B] to become more available. It's not respecting life," Mead said.

While Mead does not believe in 'Morning-after pill'

The FDA ruled that women 18 and older can buy Plan B without a prescription; those 17 and younger still will need a doctor's note
What is Plan B?
Pill contains an elevated dose of a progesterone-like hormone (levonorgestrel), the same ingredient found in many birth control pills, will not affect an existing pregnancy
How it works in the process
Normal
With Plan B
1 Sperm enter uterus; egg is released from ovary
Egg release from ovary could be prevented
2 Egg travels through fallopian tube; can meet sperm
Could prevent fertilization of egg
3 Fertilized egg enters uterus, may attach to uterine lining
Could prevent fertilized egg from attaching to uterus
Fallopian tube
Ovary
Uterus
Uterine lining
Sperm
© 2006 MCT
Source: NIH Emergency Contraception; Duramed Pharmaceuticals Inc.
Graphic: Chicago Tribune

See PILL on page 2

Smith rally to demand labor agreement

By Jamie Mason
Collegian Staff

Today at 3 p.m., the "Smith Students for Social Justice and Institutional Change" (SSJIC) will hold a rally to demand that the Smith administration sign a Project Labor Agreement for the construction of the new Ford Science and Engineering Building.

The rally will begin on the steps of the Smith College campus center steps and students, faculty and union members will march to College Hall. At College Hall, statements will be read from city counsel members, and students and faculty will speak.

The SSJIC wants to ensure that a Project Labor Agreement (PLA), a pre-hire collective bargaining agreement, is signed to ensure that all workers will receive fair wages and benefits, said Emma Roderick, a senior at Smith who has been a member of the SSJIC for four years.

According to Roderick, "a PLA makes sure that workers are paid well and given benefits. It coordinates all of the trades involved and makes sure that all

See RALLY on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 66

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamieson Porter
Advertising Production Melly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Sean Duram
Editorial Editor Kristen LaLiase
News Editor Matt Bellinvau
Sports Editor Rob Greenfield
Circulation Manager Jeff Perez
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Puddester
Assistant Business Phil Smollar
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Anna Dolnacima
Assistant News Nicole Boongasiakul
Assistant Sports Danny Picard
Assistant Sports Jon Pelland
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Index Log, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Daily Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been independent since January 1996. For subscriptions and information, call 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Chris Martin

Columbia Dean of students visits UMass

SREE from page 1

nalism and media and the roles that journalists, along with the general population, can take in becoming active members in the constantly evolving media.

Sreenivasan commenced his speech with some groundbreaking trends and statistics that have surfaced in 2006. He said that the Washington Post won an Emmy.

"This means two things," he stated, "that there is now a demand for videos on newspaper Web sites such as that of The Washington Post and that the Emmy's are now forced to adjust to the different modes of communication that technology is now presenting."

Sreenivasan also mentioned the fact that numbers of newspaper subscriptions have gone down 3 percent in the last six months while the online reading of newspapers has gone up 8 percent. This 8 percent is even higher than the percentage of general growth of the Web itself.

According to Sreenivasan, video game usage has gone up 25 percent this year. This increase is prompting the media to get more involved with video games in order to reach a broader range of consumers and introduce product placement.

The dean touched upon increasingly popular social networks like MySpace and Facebook. Though he did not go into great depth on the subject, one of the most crucial things he mentioned was the fact that one must be very cautious about what he or she puts online. He stressed the importance of representing oneself in the most positive light possible, because universities, grad schools and employers often check such sites.

Sreenivasan also described the recent increase of blogs. Sreenivasan talked about how this rapidly budding type of media has now grown to include 57 million blogs. This is making the media, journalists and consumers change the way they view the media.

The dean went on to say that blogs are making the media much more interactive, which is in turn producing much more informed and proactive individuals.

"Followers of the media can now play an active role in the media, and are no longer accepting everything they hear or read as gospel," he said.

Black hole gulps star

By Will Dunham
Anna. [ate] Press

A giant black hole displaying horrifying table manners has been caught in the act of guzzling a star in a galaxy 4 billion light-years away, scientists using an orbiting NASA telescope said on Tuesday.

For the past two years, scientists have monitored the dramatic events as the star, residing in a galaxy in the Hootes constellation, was ripped apart by the black hole.

Scientists used NASA's Galaxy Evolution Explorer, an orbiting telescope sensitive to two bands of ultraviolet wave lengths, to detect an ultraviolet flare coming from the center of a remote elliptical galaxy.

"This ultraviolet flare was from a star literally being ripped apart and swallowed by the black hole," Suvi Gezari of the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena and lead author of the paper describing the findings in Astrophysical Journal Letters, said in an interview.

"This is the first time that we've actually been able to monitor the flare of radiation from such an event in detail. Only once every 10,000 years will a star pass close enough to a (galaxy's) central black hole to be ripped apart and swallowed in this manner," Gezari said.

The scientists hope the findings will give them a better understanding of black holes, objects whose gravity is so powerful even light cannot escape.

It is believed that super-massive black holes are located at the core of every galaxy. For example, Gezari said, the Milky Way galaxy in which our solar system resides has a dormant super-massive black hole at its center.

Many debate birth control pill artificial types of birth control, she is an advocate of natural forms of contraception such as the rhythm method. Women who choose the rhythm method have to monitor their menstrual cycles by recording physical signs of ovulation such as cervical mucus, recording basal body temperature every morning to calculate when ovulation occurs. A couple must abstain from sex on the days the woman is fertile, if they are to avoid pregnancy.

PILL from page 1

"By using the rhythm method, you're still respecting the natural order of our bodies," Mead said. "It still allows couples to be open to life, and they are giving the total gift of themselves to one another."

Plan B, the morning-after pill, reduces the chance of pregnancy by 89 percent if it's taken within three days after having unprotected sex. Plan B consists of the same hormone found in regular birth control pills, only in higher levels and prevents ovulation or fertilization of an egg. Women 18 and above can now purchase Plan B without the approval of a doctor. Minors, too, can use the drug, but must have a prescription.

Although Plan B pills contain higher levels of hormones, the composition is different from the abortion pill, RU-486, which is used to terminate pregnancy up to 50 days after fertilization. RU-486 comes in two pills, which discontinue the production of the hormone needed to maintain a pregnancy.

According to Gloria Feldt, former president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America who recently spoke at UMass, Plan B "is a contraceptive, not an abortifacient" (an abortion-causing substance).

The debate over use of Plan B, she maintained, comes from "another element, and those are the people who also oppose contraception, although they don't want to tell you that straightforwardly because they know they will be in the small minority."

"So they attempt to label emergency contraception as an abortifacient inaccurately. They really don't see any difference between contraception and abortion, so they find EC [emergency contraception] as just sort of a convenient rhetorical device, basically."

Feldt said she respects those who on religious grounds oppose using birth control, but she said she expects such people to respect the beliefs of others, like her, who believe that birth control should be readily available, as well.

Sophomore Jenn Swick, a member of the Christian group Navigators, said she is conflicted on the issue of easy access to emergency contraception.

"It [the morning-after pill] just gives a license to fool around," she said. "Sex isn't a casual act, it's meant for something more."

Navigators, a national organization on campuses across the United States, fill up every chair in a meeting room in the Campus Center every Tuesday night. Meetings consist of biblical skits and spiritual speeches intertwined with individually-recited prayers, and end in a song to which students sway and sing along in hushed voices with closed eyes.

Although Swick said she opposes the morning-after pill, she is not entirely against barrier methods (such as condoms) for couples who choose to have sex.

On the other hand, Swick said, "Once it's been done [fertilization], it's wrong to end it. You need to draw the line somewhere."

On a campus such as UMass where contraceptives are freely available, it's sometimes a challenge for religious students such as Nicole Desrochers to stand by their beliefs.

An active member at Newman Center (a Catholic organization on campus) and president of Students for Life, Desrochers said she struggles with being a residence hall assistant opposed to hall policy on birth control.

"I'm an RA, and one of the job requirements is to have free condoms available," she explained. "It was difficult for me to take a stance and choose not to administer them myself."

Desrochers is also discontented with the greater availability of the morning-after pill, and said there is no reason to use artificial birth control.

"There is a lot of good about sex, pleasure, united love between two people and the possibility of children," Desrochers said. "If you take one of those away, it degrades the dignity of sex. Our bodies work fine the way they are naturally. Using contraceptives is trying to fix something that isn't broken."

Desrochers, like Mead, said she believes in the rhythm method and natural family planning as a means of birth control. While she strongly opposes abortion and contraception, she said she is not hateful toward those who do believe in it.

Although she believes people who are pro-life and pro-choice are often as different on these issues as Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X were on civil rights, she said, "we both want the same thing, which is better lives for women.

"We're just looking at the situation differently and going about it in very different ways," Desrochers said.

Majority of abuse goes unclaimed

ABUSE from page 1

things we can't prevent."

More crime is committed at UMass than is reported in the annual Jeanne Clery Disclosure of Campus Security Policy and Crime Statistics Act, Chief O'Connor said. The federal program requires colleges and universities across the United States to disclose information about crime on and around their campuses.

On the other hand, UMass is "far above most organizations" when it comes to dealing with security, she said, adding, "We do the best we can."

A computer-assisted reporting study conducted by a UMass journalism student five years ago showed UMass Amherst doing a better job of reporting such incidents, when compared to regional institutions of comparable size.

Nevertheless, the numbers of incidents appear to be high. Some 900 calls were made last year alone to the Rape Crisis Hotline, which takes calls for all types of abuse in Hampshire County, according to Ilana Gerjuoy, the campus educator for the Everywoman's Center.

Of those calls, "A larger portion ... are relationship violence related, in addition to calls about physical or emotional abuse," she said. "A lot of sexual assault that happens on campus is part of a relationship."

Domestic violence begins at a young age. Forty percent of teenage girls 14-17 reported knowing someone their age who had been hit or beaten by a boyfriend, according to a Children Now/Kaiser Permanente poll. The trend of abuse starts young and continues, partly because women who leave their batterers are at a 75 percent greater risk of severe injury or death than those who stay, according to the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence.

Gerjuoy said the trend of domestic violence is common when she talks in class to UMass students.

"When I ask the students to stand up if you or someone you know has been in an abusive relationship, almost everyone in the room stands up, across the board," she said. "It is pretty common."

"The issues at UMass are a microcosm of larger societal issues," she said. "I think there is a huge amount of denial" when it comes to domestic violence on campus and elsewhere, she added. "The issue is not talked about enough."

O'Connor stressed the importance of women at UMass taking measures to protect themselves, including educating themselves about the problem and becoming aware of how common it is. O'Connor pointed out the importance of the Everywoman's Center in offering support and education about the problem.

"Almost everyone is affected by relationship violence and sexual assault, either personally or through a friend or family member, so this is an issue that touches all of our lives and it is up to all of us to do something about it," said Gerjuoy.

Smith rally to be held today

RALLY from page 1

of the workers have safety training."

"We have been going around to dining halls and talking to students. Everyone seems pretty convinced that the PLA is a good idea. We have already gathered hundreds of signatures from students, staff and faculty members. Students don't see why Smith College wouldn't want one," said Roderick.

The SSJIC is expecting approximately 40 or 50 students, faculty, community members and local union members, said Roderick.

A PLA would include stipulations such as requiring a certain percentage of local residents, people of color and female workers to be a part of the construction project.

"This new building is opening up space in the engineering world for women, and with a Project Labor Agreement, Smith could help open up space for women in construction as well," said Lynnea Domienik, a Smith College sophomore and SSJIC member.

Following the rally the SSJIC will present a letter to Smith College which will ask them to provide a response to their request for a PLA by Monday. The SSJIC has had meetings with Smith College, about the PLA, "they have not said no but they have not said yes either," said Roderick.

"Smith is concerned with the cost and competition. It is worth it for the school to pay more. We want to show them that the community and school care about the issue," said Roderick.

According to the Smith College Web site, the Ford Science and Engineering Building will be located at Green Street and Belmont Avenue. Smith College will break ground in the spring semester on the $73 million dollar project.

"Both a structure and a symbol, Ford Hall will be a visible statement of Smith's public identity as the women's college with the strongest programs in science and engineering," said Carol T. Christ, president of Smith College, in a recent press release.

According to the Web site, Smith is the first women's college to offer engineering. About 30 percent of Smith students are majoring in sciences.

Jamie Mason is a Collegian staff writer. She can be contacted at jlmason@student.umass.edu

MONEY FOR COLLEGE
NOW
Because Aunt Joan needed more Botox®.
She got a facelift, you got the tuition bill.
Not to worry. a Campus Door student loan can cover up to 100% of your education costs with online approval in less than a minute
All without the painful side effects.
campusdoor.com
CAMPUSDOOR
Like this parody? Download your own printable PDF version at campusdoor.com/printers
All loans are subject to credit approval. Programs, rates, terms and conditions are subject to change without notice. Other restrictions apply. Trade/Servicemarks are the property of Campus Door Inc. and/or its affiliates. Lender is Lehman Brothers Bank FSB. ©2006 Campus Door Inc. All Rights Reserved. Equal Opportunity Lender

Hampshire Mall
Santa Claus
Fri - Sat 12pm-7pm; Sun 12pm-5pm
Located center stage Nov. 24th-Dec. 24th.
Photo packages are available upon request.
Gift Cards
Available during all Mall Hours
Mall-wide and American Express gift cards are available in the Holiday Customer Service Center as well as Bath & Body Works until 24th
Extended shopping hours begin November 24th.
Visit www.hampshiremall.com for more holiday info.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Editorial Opinion

Thursday, December 7, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it"
– Voltaire

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

The good, the bad, and the funny

S.P. Sullivan

The digital age has provided UMass students, along with college students the nation over, with a wealth of media. Students can access any number of news sites and blogs at the click of a button – be it a remote control or mouse. Why, then, are more and more college students – with such an abundance of news outlets to choose from – opting to get their daily serving of civic awareness from Comedy Central?

What's really troubling about her findings is what they reveal about the state of the actual media.

A study done by political scientists from East Carolina University showed that 48 percent of college students watch The Daily Show with Jon Stewart regularly, and 23 percent of those don't get their news from anyplace else, according to the Washington Post.

This, of course, provoked a lot of pomp from the "real" media about young-voter apathy and how Generation Why-Bother is the most cynical in decades. Washington Post columnist Richard Morin even went so far as to suggest, "Jon Stewart and his hit Comedy Central cable show may be poisoning democracy."

Really, Dick?

A more recent study by Indiana University concluded that the Daily Show was in fact "just as substantive as network coverage." The study, which was lead by Julia R. Fox, assistant professor of telecommunications at IU, put the Daily Show side by side with network news channels such as CNN and Fox News Network and compared the substantiveness of their respective coverage of the 2004 election.

A study shows that The Daily Show is "just as substantive as network coverage."

The thing that should be bothering members of the "real" media like Richard Morin is not what Fox's study reveals about the Daily Show – or the college students who watch it, for that matter. What's really troubling about her findings is what they reveal about the state of the actual media. You know, the networks that Stewart and Steven Colbert are always showing those funny little clips from?

The fact that our nation's political arena and the networks that cover it are both in such a sordid state that shows like The Daily Show and The Colbert Report have enough material to put out two separate episodes each weekday is disturbing in of itself. The real scary part, however, is that members of the "real" media have actually criticized Jon Stewart for being disingenuous.

In 2004, Stewart agreed to appear on Crossfire, a show he had repeatedly and openly criticized for "partisan hackery." Tucker Carlson, one of the show's talking heads tried to accuse Stewart of practicing that same sort of hackery when John Kerry came on his show. The difference? Stewart explained:

"You're on CNN. The show that leads into me is puppets making prank phone calls."

Stewart himself has claimed that he's a comedian – not a journalist. And the cynicism that critics claim his show proliferates is real, of course, but the Daily Show isn't the cause of it, it's the effect.

"You have a responsibility to the public discourse, and you fail miserably," Stewart told Carlson and his co-anchor Paul Begala. Members of the media from left to right, from CNN to Fox have been blaming the Daily Show and Colbert Report for an increase in cynicism about the American political system, specifically among college students.

Did anyone ever stop to think that perhaps this sudden swell in cynicism is being caused not by Stewart's jokes, but by the system he's joking about? Maybe – just maybe – college students are cynical about the democratic process because they are being grossly misrepresented, and because the current administration is failing miserably.

What's more, isn't it within the realm of possibility that we can no longer recognize the lines between "news" and "entertainment" that the cable "new-entertainment" stations have blurred unrecognizably?

Stewart seems to think so, but he insists that the Daily Show isn't the answer to the problem – and perhaps that's just what college students find so refreshing about the Comedy Central fake-news programs: their earnestness. While media demagogues like Bill O'Reilly and Al Franken climb their soapboxes under the impression that they are God's gift to the news, Stewart and Colbert have no illusions about their place in the political spectrum, if anything, the two don't give themselves enough credit.

Likewise, while keeping the public informed, Stewart and his correspondents are primarily out to get a laugh. Compare that to the hidden agendas of Fox News and CNN and the difference is clear. The Daily Show doesn't have to distort reality – politicians and cable news make reality ridiculous enough to keep Stewart's repertoire brimming with material.

So perhaps it is a truly disturbing thing that 48 percent of college students get their news from the Daily Show. But the absurdity of the American political system has made us cynical, so perhaps that's what draws us to the Comedy Central program. Stewart's popularity is the result of a cynical populace, not the cause.

Likewise, if the Daily Show is just as substantive as CNN, as the IU study indicates, perhaps it's CNN – and not Jon Stewart – that's going about things all wrong. As long as there is no difference in quality between the news I get from Jon Stewart and the news I get from Tucker Carlson, I'm tuning into Stewart. Because at least he can make me laugh – without the bowtie.

SP Sullivan is a Collegian columnist

Too close for comfort

Anthony David Rueli

It's not that Southwest doesn't love the marching band, they just don't love waking up.

This past Saturday afternoon, fans cheered endlessly as the UMass Minutemen football team conquered the University of New Hampshire's team, the Wildcats, during the Quarterfinal match held here at UMass's McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Winning 24-17, the Minutemen will be advancing into the NCAA Semifinals.

This means that their next game, this Friday, will be held all the way out in Montana. While I certainly will eagerly await the outcome of the game, will I be upset that I won't get to watch it up close and personal? My blasphemous answer is a firm and resounding no.

It's not because I don't have school spirit. It's not because I don't like football. It's not even because the weather is getting exponentially colder. No, my reasoning can be explained with a simple, two-word phrase: marching band.

Since September, roughly every other Saturday morning has been the same for myself and other like-minded students living in the Southwest region of campus. At anywhere from 10 to 11:00 a.m., our peaceful rest is disrupted by jarring, unpleasant sounds vibrating through our walls and into our formerly sleeping ears and heads.

If you were to take a peek out the window at such a time (if you are lucky enough to be graced with such a convenient view, that is), you would see quite a fantastic sight. Depending on how quickly you get out of bed, you may see them marching around, under and all about various buildings of Southwest.

If you somehow manage to get back to sleep and aren't able to look out your window until a while later, you will likely see what appears to be the entire UMass marching band congregated around the Southwest Pyramids, playing their godforsaken hearts out for what seems like an eternity.

It's not that I don't appreciate the marching band – I do, and very much so. I think they are extremely talented, and when I'm at a game, they are a pleasure to listen to. I remember the first football game I went to back in September of 2004, my freshman year. When they played their medley of Elton John music, I was absolutely thrilled. I still felt that way at this year's games with their Chicago tunes.

The thing is – as much as some people don't want to hear it – a good amount of college students, even at the University of Massachusetts, enjoy consuming alcoholic beverages on Friday evenings. Sometimes, well into Saturday mornings. On occasions when the aforementioned students drink just a little bit too much, they do not feel up to par the next morning.

Depending on how quickly you get out of bed, you may see them marching around, under and all about various buildings of Southwest.

when they are awoken at 10:30 a.m. after going to bed at 5 a.m., especially when the football game doesn't start until 1:30 p.m. Not to mention the fact that they decide to play in the region of campus that is the most stereotyped for heavy drinking and late awakening.

In fact, so many people are angered by this biweekly outrage that it has garnered its own Facebook group (not that it really takes a lot). The group includes pictures, updates of recent waking-up incidents, and a message board that's filled to the brim. This goes to show that these are not the ramblings of one man, but a group of appalled students uniting as one against an unexpected enemy.

My final question is this: In all seriousness, what is the point of this Southwest parade? What did we ever do to you? What's wrong with playing on the field, where everyone is expecting the music and will enjoy it? Why play so much earlier than the game? Okay, so that's a few questions, but basically, the question I pose is, why? Why do you do this?

Once again, in order to protect myself, I'd just like to say that I wholly appreciate the talents of the marching band. I know that they work very hard to perfect their music, and it definitely shows. I just wish they would realize that they are playing "Saturday in the Park," not the Reveille. We are on a college campus, not at boot camp.

Anthony David Rueli is a Collegian columnist

NEWS: VERY RICH ARE LEAVING THE MERELY RICH BEHIND
COULD YOU SPARE TWO OR THREE THOUSAND DOLLARS, BUDDY?
MUST BE TOUGH BEING ONLY MERELY RICH, TOO!
STAYSKAL
TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

WE LOVE CONSTRUCTIVE CRITICISM.

(550 WORD LIMIT)

Send letters to: editorial@dailycollegian.com, or go to: dailycollegian.com.

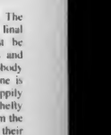
Lessons for the lethargic



Adam McGillen

It is crunch time on campus. The semester is drawing to a close, final papers are due, projects must be finished and presented to class and exams must be studied for. Nobody is getting enough sleep, everyone is grumpy and professors are happily heaving their not so little gifts of hefty assignments in an attempt to cram the last little bit of knowledge into their students' minds.

Fresh off of Thanksgiving break, everyone is ready to spend their nights bent over books, their eyes flying over the all too important words in a caffeinated frenzy. Crunch time: there's no better time to procrastinate, because we all know that Thanksgiving break is never spent preparing ourselves for the last onslaught of work. While telling ourselves that we'll get to it later, much of that short lived break is spent nurturing your brain with television or simply playing tackle football with old friends. Don't forget praying for snow storms to wipe out the last two weeks of class –deeds much more worthy than even thinking about what lies ahead, less preparing for it.

Once we're all back on campus, cozy in our overheated dorm rooms, the distractions begin to loom ominously in every corner and every shadow. Magazines, profiles, away messages, even newspapers – we're all looking for something useless to mull over instead of the textbooks we were supposed to have been reading for the last four months. You could go to the library, but that is futile, as well, because you will undoubtedly spend all your time there thinking about how much you hate all this work rather than actually doing the work. The Procrastination Station earned that name for a reason.

Sure, the last two or three weeks leading up to Christmas and finally going home are probably some of the most stressful weeks of the year. You could argue that procrastinating is a terrible idea, but why would you? I know, you know and we all know that nothing beats spending a long afternoon and night doing absolutely nothing when you have an assignment due or an exam worth 50 percent of your grade on the next day.

There's no use in holding yourself accountable for putting off that final project that you've known about for two months, so go ahead and beg for an extension.

Whether it's Grey's Anatomy or Adult Swim that grabs your attention, or just the PlayStation that warms your heart, we all have ways to procrastinate when our work matters the most.

And there's nothing wrong with that. In fact, a little procrastination here and a lot of procrastination there is pretty healthy. There's no better solution for the aches and pains of closing semester stresses. Consider it a diet, something like cutting your intake of work and knowledge. Doing your work early (being a geek, nerd, knob, if you will) may seem like the smart thing to do, but it will only leave you bloated, unhappy and totally missing out on all the fun your friends are having not doing what they're supposed to be doing.

That's the beauty of procrastination: it's the easiest thing to do and the most fun you will ever have on a diet, because this diet isn't about torturing yourself into a thinner you by starving yourself, and there is absolutely no physical activity required. Instead, this is a diet for your brain, where you stop overfeeding it knowledge and give it a break, a chance to enjoy itself in the face of academic self-destruction. The gratification is instant, something you'll never get from doing your work early.

If you have learned anything from your professors, it should be that procrastination is perfectly ok. They did it – why do you think you're getting all this additional work dumped on your weary shoulders in the final days of the semester? There's no use in holding yourself accountable for putting off that final project that you've known about for two months, so go ahead and beg for an extension. The great thing about extensions is that they give you more time to get to level 60 in World of Warcraft.

We're all guilty of procrastination, so let's just accept it. I admit it. I procrastinate like it's my job, and I could never be happier with my line of work.

So, in these final, crucial weeks, don't do your work, don't even think about how much is riding on your finals. Instead, take a big nap, talk to all your friends on Instant Messenger, stalk all the people you think are hot on Facebook, turn on your PlayStation or Xbox and kill some brain cells, watch re-runs of Aqua Teen Hunger Force, do it all – the possibilities of procrastination are endless. Don't worry, time will go by and you'll survive the storm. But you haven't lived until you haven't studied.

Adam McGillen is a Collegian columnist

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Victoria's angels bare secret

Models during the Victoria's Secret Fashion Show 2006 presented many different types of underwear. During one portion of the show, they showcased the Pink collection. Pink is one of the most popular collections for the company.

KRISTA COSCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The first snow of the season appeared Tuesday morning, but by Tuesday night, it had gotten hot. CBS aired the Victoria's Secret Fashion Show at 10 p.m. Some of the show's models included Gisele Bundchen, Adriana Lima, Karolina Kurcova and Alessandra Ambrosio to name a few. Justin Timberlake provided musical performances several times throughout the show.

The show was a typical Victoria's Secret Fashion Show. In every new scene of the show, at least one model was wearing the famous Victoria's Secret wings. There were huge feather wings, white angel wings and pink wings to go along with the Pink collection to match the ongoing theme changes. After each commercial, or in one case, after a Timberlake performance, the theme of the catwalk would change. The stage started off with dancers, bright red and white lights, and Timberlake performing his hit "Sexy Back," an appropriate song for the occasion.

Next the models walked through a sort of joker house. They wore bold colors, such as purple, blue and green, and walked to fast-paced, upbeat music. Then the runway changed to an airline theme with clouds on the big screen and girls dressed as underwear clad stewardesses.

Next was the Pink collection, the more everyday lingerie. With cotton bras and panties on, the girls walked down a carnival-themed runway to Kelis' hit song "Bossy."

Then the models strutted, with bagpipes playing Scottish tunes, in kilt inspired get-ups. Plaid was featured on almost every girl. The models ended the show with the winter wonderland. They were all dressed in white, walking to a choir singing, "We'll live in harmony." Fake snow fell from the sky and white, blue and diamonds were the essence of the walk. During this winter festivity, Karolina Kurcova wore the famous six million dollar diamond bra.

Timberlake was clearly having a great time, watching all the girls walk down the runway during his opening performance of "Sexy Back." Like a true professional, he never missed a beat. He also performed later in the show without the models walking down the runway, singing and dancing to his two newer hits "My Love" and "Love Stoned."

Timberlake crooned, popped-and-locked, and performed as the eye candy for the girls watching the show. Even the models talked about Timberlake. One even confessed that she wanted to "make out with him" and Adrianna Lima asked if she could walk out holding his hand.

Runway footage was not the only aspect of the show, it also featured interviews and backstage aspects of the show. The camera went backstage with the girls and showed the viewers just how hectic it is for a supermodel. After each girl walked down the runway, she would literally run backstage in 4 inch heels to change. The press was being yelled at to back up and everyone was trying to make the show run as smoothly as possible.

However, there was one malfunction during the show. During the flight airlines walk, Karolina Kurcova's shoe came off, but she continued strutting down the runway like nothing was wrong.

The show, however, was a success. The models were sexier than ever, Timberlake's performances kept the audience's energy roaring and it was entertaining for both sexes, for very different reasons.

New art exhibit opens at Fine Arts Center

Impossible Landscape presents artists from three different countries and their view on how to present landscapes in modern art.

BY MONICA GLEBERMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University Gallery, which is located in the Fine Arts Center at the University of Massachusetts, debuted a new gallery exhibit on Nov. 28 called "Impossible Landscape." This gallery has been described as cutting-edge multimedia by renowned and emerging international artists from countries such the United Kingdom, Israel and the United States.

This gallery includes an exhibition of film, video, painting, photography, sculpture and drawings.

"This exhibition aims to juxtapose and foreground how these artists re-think the genres of landscape through photography, film, sculpture, painting and drawing," said the Fine Arts Center Web site. "While the artists might be seen to be interested in dreamy or fantastical landscapes, their work also suggests that for them, traditional ways of depicting landscapes have become impossible."

The artists showcased include Darren Almond (United Kingdom), Rebecca Baron (United States), Melanie Carvahlo (United Kingdom), Peter Coffin (United States), Tacita Dean (United Kingdom), Nir Evron (Israel), Janice Kerbel (United States) and Ian Kiaer (United Kingdom).

This exhibit brings together all of these artists and their ideas about landscape art and botanical design. They each have different ways of thinking about the conventional landscape and botanical idea. Each artist helps to truly complicate the question of what it means to make a landscape image now.

Each artist breaks the mold of what a conventional landscape design might look like. Their paintings and artistic pictures help viewers to conjure up many ideas of their own. These works help to produce diverse responses.

Viewers of the exhibit can get lost in the imagery presented. All of them were portraying such diverse ideas because they were each made by different artist. However, they were also all connected in the images and it truly flowed throughout the gallery. Each one was striking in its own way. The colors, the images and the scenery were truly astonishing.

People were walking around, standing in front of the pictures, and discussing different ideas of how they thought the artist created these masterpieces. Art has a remarkable way of helping make use of the imagination and making the viewer get lost in some other world. It requires viewers to ask themselves questions and figure out the message each artist is trying to portray.

Several of the artists bend the rules of art and deliberately try to confuse the status of the presented image. While others shun traditional depictions yet still manage to produce hauntingly poetic and even humorous work. Some pictures are completely clear landscape photos, other images are more complex and require a true stare to try and figure them out.

The Impossible Landscape is co-curated by Mark Godfrey (United Kingdom) and Jodie Vicenta Jacobson (New York City). Godfrey is a lecturer at the Slade School of Fine Art at University College in London and has a Video game 101 just in time for Holidays

BY RANDY A. SALAS
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

If you think a Wii is something to take after you've had too much to drink, you probably need this list of video-game gift ideas. Just look below for the brand of system that your favorite gamer has, and you'll find recommendations that are sure to please. Most games cost $30 to $60. Be sure to check the rating before you buy to make sure your choice is appropriate for the recipient.

FOR ALL (OR MOST) SYSTEMS

For sports fans, your best bets are "Madden NFL 07" or "NCAA Football 07" (both football), "NBA 2K7" (basketball), "NHL 2K7" (hockey), "Major League Baseball 2K6," "FIFA Soccer 07," "NASCAR 07" (auto racing) and "Fight Night Round 3" (boxing). Other good games available for most systems include the racer "Need for Speed: Carbon," the superheroic "Marvel: Ultimate Alliance," the popular "LEGO Star Wars II" and the shooter "Call of Duty 3."

XBOX 360

The first-person shooter "Gears of War" is the must-have title for Xbox 360 players this season, although rated Mature, the violent game is fine for most teens. On the other end of the spectrum is the fun-for-all-ages "Viva Pinata." Otherwise, try the fantasy adventure "Elder Scrolls IV: Oblivion," the zombie shooter "Dead Rising," the violent "The Godfather" (also for Xbox) or the adrenaline-pumping racer "Burnout Revenge." Also, consider giving a subscription to the Xbox Live online service for a month to a year ($8 to $50) with a gift card available in many stores.

PLAYSTATION 3

The shooter "Resistance: Fall of Man" is like a cross between "Halo" and "Resident Evil," and your gamer will be dying to play it. The tried-and-true racing game "Ridge Racer 7" or the fantasy adventure "Untold Legends: Dark Kingdom" are fine, too. Really, though, if your gamer has a hard-to-find PS3, he or she could probably use a gift card to buy accessories, such as better video cables and an extra controller, or to pick out a game.

WII

The essential game for Nintendo's new system is the adventurous "The Legend of Zelda: Twilight Princess" – you won't see your gamer for hours, maybe days, with that gift. Also, try the racer "Excite Truck" or the goofy "Super Monkey Ball Banana Blitz" or "Rayman: Raving Rabbids." For the same reasons as the PS3, a gift card would be a good option.

NINTENDO DS

A few decades later, and Mario still rules at Nintendo, with "New Super Mario Bros." being a sure bet for the portable DS. Also try some highly addictive titles, such as the grooves of "Elite Beat Squad," the classic puzzler "Tetris DS," the thinker "Brain Age" and this year's "Nintendogs"-like entry, "Dalmatian & Friends."

PLAYSTATION PORTABLE

"Tekken: Dark Resurrection" has been called the game of the year for the handheld PSP, so it recommends itself for fighting-game fans. Mature gamers will go for "Grand Theft Auto: Vice City Stories," while all will like the wacky musical action of "Gitaroo Man Lives!" and the throwback "FA Replay," with 14 EA games big in the early '90s, such as "Desert Strike" and "Road Rash" a steal at $20.

PLAYSTATION 2

The biggest game system isn't going anywhere thanks to a bevy of great new games. The music-driven "Guitar Hero II" and "Dance Dance Revolution Supernova" will keep the whole family moving to the beat. Older gamers will adore "Final Fantasy XII," "Okami," "SOCOM: U.S. Navy SEALs Combined Assault" and "Bully." There's also a slimmed-down version of the system, in black or silver, for $130.

Hip-hop performance focuses on change

BY MATHEW CALLWATER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The New World Theater will be presenting Project 2050, a hip-hop based theater performance created by local teenagers, both tonight and Friday night at Bowker Auditorium in Stockbridge Hall at the University of Massachusetts. The performance begins at 8 p.m. with an opening performance of "We Got Issues," a show emphasizing women's power and equality, followed by the 1 1/2 hour long main act.

Following the show, the performers will invite the audience to participate in a discussion of the issues presented in the production.

Each year, Project 2050 creates a new show with a different theme based on the U.S. Census Bureau's estimation that by the year 2050 minorities will, for the first time, represent over half of the U.S. population. This year's theme is "DeConstructing Dualities: DeClassifying Minds, Understanding Versatility."

The show incorporates hip-hop, poetry and theater into a production that explores how race-, gender- or class-based differences can unite and divide people. With the dynamic nature of demographics in the United States, the show invites people to think about current issues such as illegal immigration and border patrols – issues that will only gain more importance as time goes on and more families are affected.

All of the performing arts elements of the show are created and performed by kids aged 13-19 from local towns. The participants are selected through nomination by teachers, parents, peers and community organizations.

Every summer since 2000, Project 2050 has hosted a 10-day retreat for local youth to encourage their creativity and get them thinking about issues that directly affect them. The retreat brings together 46 promising teenage artists from surrounding towns and introduces them to renowned hip-hop scholars and performance artists from around the country to help facilitate the creative process.

The retreat focuses on performing arts such as drumming, dancing, beat boxing, stepping and singing along with poetry, playwriting, songwriting, and visual arts. Over the course of the week, the youth attend "Knowledge for Power" workshops with artists from various hip-hop fields such as Baba Israel (beat boxing), Kwikstep and Rocafella (break dancing) and others who all help the kids hone their skills in preparation for a performance at the end of the 10 days, which incorporates poetry, break dancing, graffiti arts, MC-ing and DJ-ing.

Andrea Assaf, a UMass student and New World Theater's artistic director, took on the role of director for the show with the help of Kamil Peters. Peters, a Hampshire College student and graffiti artist, provided the set design and imagery.

"We Got Issues," the guest opening act, approaches the topic of feminine equality through the use of performing arts and poetry. The act will feature three performers from the full show and will be about 15 minutes long.

"It's really just bringing in the tradition of the Vagina Monologues onto stage," said Irene Shaikly, the New World Theater's Community Engagement and Outreach Coordinator.

Rha Goddess, the show's co-creator along with J-love Calderon and a featured artist on Russell Simmons's Def Poetry Jam Tour and HBO series, tried to "encourage young women's leadership by tapping into the transformative power of creative expression through poetry," according to the group's Web site.

Tickets for the show are $15 for the general audience, $8 for seniors and $5 for UMass students with a valid student ID.

Project 2050 is a student hip-hop performance made to increase the awareness of the racial indifference in America's population.

'Unaccompanied Minors' is a big dud

BY CONNIE ODU
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Christmas spawns bad family movies ("Christmas with the Kranks," "Deck the Halls") faster than you can say "What do you mean all the Xboxes are gone?" to the employees at Target. Often, such films needlessly reproduce ("The Santa Clause," now in its harrowing third installment), which is enough to bring out any cynic's inner Scrooge.

Imagine, then, the delights of "Unaccompanied Minors," a film that's funny and entertaining for kids and adults and does not involve moronic neighbors warring over whose holiday display is bigger or the painfully dull ritual of lights fizzling or exploding.

Instead, a blizzard strands passengers many of them children of divorced families traveling between parents in a fictional Midwestern airport on Christmas Eve. Five intrepid youngsters band together to escape the tyranny of cranky Mr. Porter, the head of passenger relations (Lewis Black, who makes a living off being in a bad mood).

Mr. Porter is miffed because his flight to Hawaii has been canceled, he's stuck at work, and he wants everybody under 18 and traveling alone locked away and out of his hair until he can get them off the ground and back into the sky where, he believes, they belong.

Paul Feig (TV's critically beloved "Freaks and Geeks") assembles an engaging group of young teens (notably Tyler James Williams of "Everybody Hates Chris" and Brett Kelly, The Kid to Billy Bob Thornton's notorious Bad Santa) to lead security on a merry chase through the bowels of the airport's unclaimed luggage warehouse and in one of the film's hilarious and more subversive moments, forbidding interrogation rooms.

But Feig also provides the greatest of gifts, a windfall of winks and cameos for adults, including appearances by three cast members of "The Office," two "Arrested Development" alums, three Kids in the Hall, and three current or former "The Daily Show" contributors, including the sorely missed Rob Corddry as an ecologically minded dad who must conquer his nemesis a Humvee in order to rescue his kids from the airport.

Naturally, there is a Christmas Lesson, and the kids, led by Spencer Diversport (Dylann Christopher), are just the ones to remind Mr. Porter of his humanity. But lessons come with holiday territory, and at least Feig manages to bring a lump to throats recently laughing. That's more than the Kranks ever accomplished.

Concept album trend returns to rock

BY BEN WENER
THE ORANGE COUNTY REGISTER

Thing is, most albums worth hearing are conceptual to some degree.

That's really the whole point of putting songs together as albums to give the illusion of cohesion, enhance a batch of tunes with artifice and sequencing. By that measure, even greatest-hits discs have concept.

But then there are those bold stabs at metaphor or operatic story lines or at the very least a change of persona that arrive oozing meticulous detail, thematic unity and usually some level of pretension.

These are no mere singles-spawning sets. "Tommy," "The Wall," "Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders From Mars," "What's Going On," most recently "American Idiot" these are true concept albums. Grandiose bursts of imagination filled with sketchy narratives or compelling antiheroes or puzzles to decipher, they are works designed to be heard in their entirety.

Once they held sway over FM radio like titans, totems of a generation whose mention alone still gives off the stench of bong hits and musty record sleeves. Then the notion fell from popularity for many years, overtaken by image-brokering videos that, in many cases, were simply variations of the same play-acting concept that albums put into motion.

"It's not like the concept album ever totally disappeared at any point," says Geoff Mayfield, director of charts for record-biz bible Billboard. "From time to time, someone throws that ball up in the air again."

But suddenly the idea has returned in a big way, earning both critical acclaim and impressive sales. After a long dry spell, there are as many concept albums hovering in the pop culture ether as beach balls at an outdoor festival.

Credit Green Day for launching the revival.

The band's 2004 opus, "American Idiot," wasn't the first conceptual effort this decade; the 2001 debut from animated outfit Gorillaz, Jay-Z's past few albums and even Beck's heartbroken "Sea Change" from 2003 qualify as concept albums in some sense.

But "Idiot," with its lengthy suites of songs and hard-to-follow (perhaps nonexistent) narrative, was certainly the first in years to follow the blueprint established in the late '60s via seminal works from the Who and the Kinks.

More crucially, the album's multiplatinum success and Grammy wins have reopened the door for others to follow suit notably the Killers and My Chemical Romance.

Neither the former's "Sam's Town" (which hyperstylizes the '80s look and sound of Springsteen, U2 and Bowie) or the latter's "The Black Parade" (also in thrall to Bowie, and more so Queen) reaches for the relative complexity of Green Day's masterstroke. And neither really attempts to tell a story.

Yet both works share a sense of continuity of songs segueing one to the next, carrying forth mounting emotions. And both shroud their creators in radically altered personas: My Chem, like the Beatles posing as "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" before it, has gone so far as to refer to itself as the Black Parade on its Web site.

A very "Ziggy Stardust" thing to do.

"Or maybe a very Garth Brooks thing to do," says "Uncle Joe" Benson, veteran disc jockey at Los Angeles radio station KLOS-FM, referring to the country star's 1999 alter-ego flop, "In the Life of Chris Gaines."

"But it is a chance for these bands to reinvent themselves, come up with a persona where perhaps they didn't have one before. At the very least, they're paying tribute to their heroes and learning a different form of artistic expression. Instead of saying, 'Here's the next hit,' this is a way of saying, 'We've established this conceit, this conceptual drive. Please pay attention to the whole thing.'"

Those three modern-rock attractions are far from the only ones venturing into this lofty territory, however. The current list seems to swell monthly.

New works from acts like the Decemberists ("The Crane Wife") and Nevada singer-songwriter Joanna Newsom ("Ys") utilize centuries-old texts as launching pads into prog-folk flights of fancy not unlike (though sounding nothing like) Yes' "Tales From Topographic Oceans" three decades ago.

Coping with psychological trauma in song cycle (somewhat the basis for Pink Floyd's "The Wall" and the Who's "Quadrophenia") has come back into vogue as well.

This year the Texas group Blue October issued "Foiled," in which singer Justin Furstenfeld overcomes a rough romance through a protracted tale of substance abuse and insanity. And "Everything in Transit," Andrew McMahon's scarred song cycle under the pseudonym Jack's Mannequin, can be heard as strangely prescient about the O.C.-spawned songwriter's bout with leukemia, diagnosed just after he completed the record.

There are fringe characters who have been dabbling in this format for some time, like Sufjan Stevens (whose intention of doing an album devoted to each of the 50 states has so far yielded "Michigan" and "Illinois") and neo-prog-rock outfit Coheed and Cambria, which for three albums has dwelled in a dark fantasy realm few have entered since Peter Gabriel left Genesis.

To top it off, some dinosaurs are back at it: Meat Loaf just put out his third "Bat Out of Hell" installment, and Pete Townshend, the unparalleled maestro of concept albums, concluded "Endless Wire," the first proper Who album in nearly a quarter-century, the same way he ended proto-concept albums like "A Quick One" and "The Who Sell Out" 40 years ago: with a mini-opera, "Wire & Glass."

All of which prompts the question: Why now?

At a time when we're led to believe iTunes and file swapping will eventually bring about the death of the album, why is it that more and more artists seem to be bucking that system by releasing lengthy works that demand prolonged attention?

"Clearly a lot of listeners now, particularly younger ones, are consuming music in bite-size pieces as opposed to a whole meal," Billboard's Mayfield reminds. "We've never had so many a la carte choices before. But the reason that has worked is because people demand variety, and you don't get variety by offering only singles. When they're done right, with creativity and authenticity, full-length albums like these still have an audience."

Besides, acts like Green Day and the Killers and My Chem are having it both ways, issuing sit-with-'em-awhile thinkers that also spawn omnipresent radio smashes, something achieved in the past only by more commercially geared concept albums (like "What's Going On" and "Purple Rain").

Yet Mayfield rejects the notion that the success of "American Idiot" spurred other major labels to concoct their own monster concept albums.

"It isn't a marketing ploy," he insists, "like when every label wanted to have a grunge band in the '90s. These albums wouldn't stand up if it was like that. The motivation to even execute something like this has to be sincere, or it just won't work. It becomes a gimmick, and everyone can see through that."

Drawing inspiration from a conceit might also have been beneficial for young bands like the Killers and My Chemical Romance, groups that spent the better part of this year brewing up audacious follow-ups to mammoth breakthroughs.

"For most bands, that first record is the album of your lifetime," Mayfield says. "Every great song you've ever written turns up there. But when it comes time for your second album, it often becomes a case of 'Well, what do we have to say now?' With the Killers, perhaps 'concept' became the impetus toward creating something progressive that would avoid any sophomore slump."

Benson, the DJ, sees it a little differently: "I think it's simply a case of everyone always looking for something different to do. And it was just kind of time for this idea to roll around again.

"Yeah, maybe some artists saw how well Green Day did and thought, 'Hey, that's an idea.' But you might remember back when rock bands started playing with orchestras – that seemed like such a great idea, but maybe one or two of 'em pulled it off, and the rest stunk. Same thing tends to happen with concept albums."

Yet the fact that any popular band is creating something grander music that isn't meant to be cherry-picked, but savored in full – is "one of the greatest things to happen to music in the past five or six years," Benson adds.

"It's so heartening that artists and fans are bringing back that emphasis. God knows the record companies won't do that. Their attitude is 'one song sells, or it's over.' But here is a whole new breed of bands, emulating their heroes and saying, 'No, we want to challenge that. It doesn't have to be like that. We want to do something more.'"

Concept albums originally started in the late 60's, but lately with releases such as 'American Idiot' the theme has returned.

New network station premiers two shows

BY ROBERT PHILPOT
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Ordinarily, TV networks don't launch new shows in December, when viewers' minds are on holiday shopping. But fledgling MyNetworkTV debuted two dramas Dec. 6, and those shows make up all of MyNetwork's schedule.

You're probably saying "My Wha...?" right now. But don't worry if you haven't heard of MyNetwork. The 3-month-old net dedicates itself to English-language serials that air each weeknight, with hour-long recaps on Saturdays. It's an intriguing concept that should have been thought of at least 15 years ago, in the pre-UPN/WB days, and might have worked even better, say, 20-odd years ago, before HBO started experimenting with original series.

But with dozens of cable channels, five broadcast networks, PBS and others vying for our attention, these days aren't the time to throw on prime-time programs that air 65 episodes apiece over 13 weeks.

Networks are placing too many demands on viewers' time and TiVos. Back in the summer, critics asked execs over and over whether this fall had too many dramas with continuing story lines that appear to require that you don't miss an episode.

Guess what? We were right to ask. Several of the serials that debuted in the fall "Vanished," "Six Degrees," "Kidnapped," "Smith" are no longer around.

At least MyNetwork's first two shows ("Desire" and "Fashion House") came to a conclusion, without fans being sent to Web sites or having to wait for DVD sets to find out how things turned out. Not that MyNetwork has that many fans. According to a TVWeek.com article, MyNetwork has averaged a 0.7 household Nielsen Media Research rating. That means it's being watched in fewer than 800,000 homes nationwide.

Too bad, because if done right, this could be a fun concept, although the English-language serials don't have as much camp and melodrama as their Spanish-language inspirations (unlike ABC's "Ugly Betty," a successful comedy-drama with telenovela roots). In fact, judging from MyNetwork's new offerings that debuted Dec. 6, the broadcasters' serials don't have much flavor at all, even if virtually every actor or actress on the shows is tasty.

It may be unfair to judge a 65-episode series on one episode, but you know what? Life's not fair, and if that one episode doesn't call you back, the others go to waste.

That's pretty much the case with "Watch Over Me," featuring former Miss Universe Dayanara Torres, who was married to singer Marc Anthony before he hooked up with Jennifer Lopez. She plays Julia, a woman somewhat ambivalently engaged to rich Michael (Marc Menard), who hires old friend Jack (Todd Cahoon) to be his family's bodyguard after thugs try to kidnap his daughter.

Naturally, by the time Jack is hired, he and Julia have already had an encounter, and he's a big reason for her ambivalence.

The problem is, "Watch Over Me" takes its whole initial episode to set up this plot point, and manages to be dull even with all the cheesecake, beefcake and steamy fantasy sequences. It takes itself far too seriously to be enjoyable, a mistake you'd think a show with a "Dynasty" vet (Catherine Oxenberg) would have the good sense to avoid.

Better, relatively speaking, is the punctuation-challenged "Wicked Wicked Games," which gets to the point immediately. Tatum O'Neal, who was good as Denis Leary's nutty sister in "Rescue Me," plays the possibly even crazier Blythe Hunter, who begins the series by pledging (via Webcam) to get revenge on the guy who dumped her 25 years ago.

Blythe doesn't just believe that revenge is a dish best served cold she believes it should have mold on it, if not fossils. O'Neal, giving a so-bad-it's-good performance, does everything but twirl a mustache. She rubs her hands together, she changes pitch, she cackles evilly, probably to cover the fact that she's cracking up as she says her oh-so-cheesy lines.

Blythe enlists her son, Aaron (Jack Krizmanich as the bad twin), to seduce the daughter of her ex, Theodore (Clive Robertson), and manages to involve his unwitting brother Josh (David Smith, good twin) in the scheme, which is so elaborate and ridiculous it makes "Prison Break" look like "Teletubbies."

But even "Games" suffers from padding, with scenes that go on too long and are too stuffed with unnecessary dialogue. Still, the show's promos which feature O'Neal demonstrating her ability to give a good soap-opera slap promise a more campy trash-wallow to come.

One thing working to MyNetwork's advantage is that these shows are coming on just as many bigger networks' series are taking a winter break. But unless you're in the mood for guilty pleasures that don't offer enough guilt or pleasure, you're better off shopping. Or catching up on all those serial dramas you've recorded and haven't yet found time to watch.

WHAT ARE YOUR TOP 5 ALBUMS OF 2006?
LET US KNOW, E-MAIL US AT
ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
LOOK FOR RESULTS ON TUESDAY

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

PASSPORTS PROCESSED AT TOWN CLERK'S OFFICE
TOWN HALL
4 BOLTWOOD AVE, AMHERST
MONDAY-FRIDAY
8:00 AM TO 4:00 PM
USUALLY NO LINES!!!
LAST DAY TO TRAVEL BY AIR OUTSIDE OF THE COUNTRY WITHOUT A PASSPORT IS: JANUARY 22, 2007
TIME IS RUNNING OUT!!!
APPLY NOW - AVOID EXPEDITE FEES
FOR MORE INFO CALL 259-3035

comedy connection HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
THIS SATURDAY!
From the 1st season of NBC's "Last Comic Standing" and VH1's "Celebrity Fit Club"
RALPHIE MAY

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

AMHERST HAIRSTYLISTS
Caren's Place
New in Town?
Come in and get the attention you want!
Men • Women
Walk-Ins Welcome
• Students always $22 shampoo & cut •
• Specialization in MULTI-COLOR HIGHLIGHTS •
• Free haircolor consultation • Facial & body waxing •
• Threading now available! •
EVERY MONDAY & TUESDAY
FACIAL WAXING
1/2 PRICE!
10-4
Tel: 253-1200
Mon-Fri 10-6 Sat 10-4
40 Main St. Amherst
WWW.CARENSPLACE.COM

Everything on the line on Friday night

FOOTBALL from page 8

low 20,000 range this season, with its highest turnout coming on Nov. 18. That day the Grizzlies took on Montana State and won, 13-7.

"We're just going to have to prepare our guys the best we can for it," UMass coach Don Brown said of the hostile environment his team will enter. "Obviously hand signals, this, that, silent cadences, but it will certainly be tough to assimilate during the practice. But on the flipside of that coin, on a positive side, we had a great crowd last week at our place, it was extremely loud."

Offense led Montana throughout the regular season, but defense was the key on Saturday, and according to Brown, it's been that way throughout the postseason.

"They're playing very good defense lately, especially over the last three weeks," he said in a conference call on Monday. "I thought their front-four was extremely physical – tough to deal with on the edges."

That front-four was pivotal in stopping SIU's Arkee Whitlock. He is one of three finalists for the Walter Payton Award, given to the best player in Division I-AA. But against Montana, Whitlock was a non-factor.

Whitlock finished the season with 1,828 yards and 25 touchdowns. However, the Grizzlies held him to just 84 yards on 21 carries, a 3.8 average. That number is two full yards below his season average of 5.8 yards per carry.

"They're playing good, conceptual defense," Brown said. "They're very stingy on defense, just a very balanced football team with no weaknesses, so we're going to have to be at our best to have a chance on Friday."

This week's trip from Amherst to Missoula constitutes the farthest a team has traveled this postseason. Most flights out of Hartford, Conn., or Boston take a minimum of 10 hours to get to Montana. To cut down the travel time, and get a head start in preparing for the game, the Minutemen flew out last night at 8 p.m., arriving in Missoula sometime early this morning.

The long trip constitutes a shortened preparation week for Brown and his team, and the Friday night game doesn't help much. Despite the change in his team's routine, Brown said he's going to try and make this week as normal as possible.

"That's a concern," Brown said of the shortened week. "But you have no control over it – you just do the best you can. We're going to try to have as normal a Tuesday and Wednesday as possible. Thursday will be a little bit more involved than we'd like it to be at this time of the year.

"Since we're playing at night, we'll go through a short walk-through Friday morning. We'll try to get the guys out of the hotel for a short period of time and just try to get a feel for the facility and then go back for our pre-game preparation."

Should the Minutemen continue their success in big games, there's an even bigger one around the corner taking place next week in Chattanooga, Tenn.

Minutemen face 'tall' task

MONTANA from page 8

terback to admit it was the most pressure he's seen all season.

UMass used a specific blitz scheme to break down the Wildcat blocking and get to Santos. Brown says variety is always the key when facing quarterbacks on the level of Santos and Swogger.

"In other words, you can't give them a constant diet of one thing whether it be a three-man rush, four-man rush or come after him all the time," he said. "[Swogger] is accomplished, he has a great feel. We're aggressive in nature anyway, so that's part of our philosophy."

Swogger has three main targets at the wide receiver position: Ryan Bagley, Eric Allen and Craig Chambers. All three are juniors, and all three are dangerous downfield threats.

All three lead the Grizzlies in at least one receiving category. Bagley is at the top in catches (53), Allen leads the team in receiving yardage (765 yards) and Chambers found the end zone most often this season (8 scores).

"[Montana has] three very, very good receivers," Brown said. "I'm really impressed with Eric Allen, Ryan Bagley and Craig Chambers."

Another thing the Montana trio has in common is each player's size. All of Swogger's targets constitute some of the biggest receivers the Minutemen have faced this season. Bagley and Chambers check in at 6-foot-4, while Allen is the small-fry of the bunch at 6-foot-3. And none of them tip the scales under 200 pounds.

This makes for an interesting matchup with the UMass secondary. So far this season no team has gone downfield on the Minutemen. Much of the time their opponents attack them with quick, short routes. That may change tomorrow night.

But Brown isn't concerned. He says he has confidence in his defensive backfield. Cornerbacks Tracy Belton and Sean Smalls with safeties James Ihedigbo and Brandon Smith are no slouches, says Brown.

"To be honest we have a couple of guys here that are pretty big, so we practice against big guys everyday," Brown said, referring to his receivers. 6-foot-4 Brandon London and 6-foot-5 Rasheed Rancher. "And our corners are not small. We have four or five corners that we play in packages, and we're 5-foot-11 to 6-foot-1. I'm pretty confident in my guys and the way they've played against big receivers."

Tough night all-around leads to defeat

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

Not only did Hartford University (7-3) serve the Massachusetts women's basketball team (7-2) its second loss of the season, it also provided UMass with its toughest competition they've encountered thus far.

The Minutewomen left Connecticut after playing their roughest game of the year, dropping a devastating 68-45 game to the Hawks.

UMass coach Marnie Dacko admits the loss was a tough pill to swallow, but says that the Maroon and White personnel was ready for the defending America East Conference champions.

"I felt our team was always prepared for the game," Dacko said. "I feel our coaching staff is always prepared. If we have a scouting report we're ready to go. [The players] were beat mentally today on the floor. We weren't moving the ball, we weren't moving our bodies. We were missing shots. We got ourselves into foul-trouble in the first half. Everything that could go wrong went wrong and a team like Hartford is going to capitalize on it."

Though it was painful to confess, junior guard Pam Rosanio – who scored a season-low four points in the heartbreaker – had to agree with her coach.

"We played bad," she added. "There are no other words for it. We just played bad. And they took it and went with it. They did what they were supposed to do – when a team is down, score."

The team's co-captain, Kate Mills, also echoed the disappointment. The junior forward mentioned, however, that she thinks the loss should be accredited more to the Minutewomen than a win should to the Hawks.

"It was definitely a UMass thing today. We sucked. That's the bottom line," Mills said. "We came out flat. We played very timidly. No one was aggressive. We could have taken this team; this was a challenge for us. We've been playing crappy teams up until this point and we had a big challenge in front of us and we didn't step up."

Senior forward Tamara Tatham was UMass' leading scorer with a total of 13. She was 4-for-10 from the floor and 5-for-6 from the free throw line and added four assists. Normally a rebounding machine, the 6-foot-1 Tatham was reduced to snatching only six boards in the contest.

Mills was the squad's second highest scorer – and the only other Minutewoman with double-digits in the points category.

The team's leading shot-blocker for the season tallied 10 points by the time the game concluded. She was 4-for-11 from the hardwood and a perfect 2-of-2 from the charity stripe.

"They just outworked us," Mills said. "They were hitting shots. Once they starting hitting a couple it was just kind of like a snowball effect – they were just all going in.

"They were all over the boards," she continued. "I don't think you could say any of us outworked who we were playing. Player-for-player, they all outworked us. That's something we need to work on."

But no matter how poorly the Minutewomen may have thought they played, no one could take credit away from the Hawks.

Hartford went 25-for-49 from the field throughout the game (a percentage of 50.1%), drained 6-of-14 from behind the arc and blocked seven UMass shots.

Such a dominating performance by Hartford – and such a meager response by the Minutewomen – left Dacko with few words to say.

"[Hartford] played very well today," Dacko said.

Two big components in the game last night were Hartford's Danielle Hood and Maryl ynne Schaefer.

Hood, a junior forward, was 7-for-10 from the floor and 2-for-2 from the line, racking up 16 points. She also pulled down four rebounds.

"She was great. She works hard. She got above her average (in points) today," Dacko commented. "She's always been a very good player."

Schaefer, a sophomore guard, went 4-for-5 on the day – every bucket she made was a three-pointer – totaling 12 points.

"We made her look like an All-American tonight," a disheartened Dacko said.

Turnovers haunt UM in latest loss

W. BASKETBALL from page 8

"Our confidence was really low this game, and it showed," Mills said. "We weren't making shots and that makes it hard to be aggressive on offense. It was all UMass tonight. It had nothing to do with Hartford."

Turnovers continue to haunt the Maroon and White, as all five in the starting lineup turned the ball over at least twice.

"The turnovers have always been a problem," Dacko said. "But I don't think that hurt us as much as our lack of effort defensively did."

Hartford was without one of its key contributors in sophomore Erica Beverly, but UMass was unable to capitalize due to the superb play of Hood, Schaefer and Etienne. Beverly was a unanimous selection for the America East Rookie of the Year last season and the Hawks were without her 7.4 points and 5.9 rebounds per game average.

"Today we faced our toughest competition of the season," Dacko said. "I don't think they're necessarily the best team we've faced, but they were tonight. We simply didn't battle them as well as we have against our other opponents.

"Right now it's a gut check for our team to see how we respond against Buffalo," Dacko added.

The Minutewomen will look to move past this setback in a road contest against Buffalo on Sunday.

Wildcats and Catamounts lead conference

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Although they rely on completely different strengths to win games, No. 2 New Hampshire (11-2-1, 9-1-1 Hockey East) and No. 14 Vermont (9-5-1, 6-2-1 HEA) are in first and second place, respectively, in the conference.

The Wildcats lead the nation in goals per game with 4.57. At the other end of the spectrum, Vermont is first in the conference in team defense, allowing an average of 1.67 goals per game.

As for special teams, the Catamounts have the best penalty kill, not allowing their opponents to score on 92.5 percent of power plays. Vermont has scored 18 of 106 times on the man advantage and UNH has scored 13 of 69 times.

On Sunday afternoon, the two teams squared off in Durham, with the strong offense of UNH overpowering the usually stingy defense of the Catamounts, by the score of 4-1.

UNH forward Kevin Kapstad opened the scoring early in the first period. Vermont countered by netting a goal with a two-man advantage in the same stanza. First line center Mike Radja scored the eventual game-winning goal near the end of the second. His second goal of the game sealed the victory for New Hampshire at the end of the third.

The Wildcats are riding a seven-game win streak and are unbeaten in their last 10 games.

BU, BC TAKE CHILL OUT OF RINK

Hockey is best played on ice. Unfortunately for the fans and players of No. 11 Boston University (5-3-5, 3-3-4 HEA) and No. 6 Boston College (8-4-1, 5-2-1 HEA), Kelley Rink staff at BC could not keep the ice frozen enough to allow safe play on Friday night. The two teams played 10:21 of scoreless hockey until the referee called the game. Apparently, a combination of the 60 degree outside temperature and the heat from the sellout crowd was enough to prevent the ice from staying fresh, thus endangering the players. The game has been rescheduled for Jan. 24.

The next night, the action shifted a few miles down the road to Aggams Arena. The two teams played a very close game and ultimately a bad bounce decided the outcome, 1-0, in favor of BC.

On a first period power play, junior Kevin Schaeffer passed to senior Peter MacArthur from behind the net. The pass deflected off MacArthur's skate, which in turn deflected off goalie John Curry's skate and into the net. The Eagle who originally cleared the puck, sophomore Nathan Gerbe, was credited for the short-handed goal.

Both goalies were essentially perfect in the game. Curry made 22 saves, while his BC counterpart, Cory Schneider, stopped 34 shots. Hockey East named Schneider its Defensive Player of the Week for his solid play.

HUSKY FRESHMAN IN NET

In the battle for second to last place in the conference, Northeastern (4-8-2, 2-7-2 HEA) took two games from Merrimack (11-12-1, 1-8-0 HEA) over the weekend. NU successfully defended its home ice on Friday, winning 4-1. The two teams were called for a combined 33 penalties.

In Saturday's rematch, neither team could get on the board in the first period, but NU tallied twice in the second to take the lead for good at 2-0. The goals were scored by freshmen forwards Chad Costello and Chris Donovan.

The real story of both games was the play of freshman goaltender Brad Thiessen. He saved a combined total of 52 shots while allowing only one goal (0.981 save percentage) and earned Hockey East Player of the Week honors. His shutout on Saturday was the first of his career ... After playing in his 100th career game on Dec. 2, Merrimack senior forward Mike Alexiou did not play on Tuesday against No. 16 Massachusetts (7-4-2, 4-3-1 HEA) ... Senior goalie Jim Healey has started eight games for Merrimack this season, but only has a 1-6-1 record to show for it. He defeated Providence (4-10-1, 3-6-1 HEA), 3-2, back in October. Freshman Patrick Watson owns the only other Warrior victory ... UMass Lowell (3-7-3, 2-5-2 HEA) outshot its opponents in nine of its last 11 games, but is only 3-6-2 over that stretch ... Sophomore goalie Ben Bishop of Maine (9-3-1, 4-3-1 HEA) recorded his first shutout of the season against Providence of Dec. 1.

PHO NOODLE SOUP
Gourmet Vietnamese Noodle Dishes
Located at 41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst
413-253-0007 behind Antonio's Pizza
NOW OPEN!
MENU
• Noodle dishes (toppings include steak, seafood, chicken, meatballs)
• Egg rolls
• Spring rolls
• Summer rolls
• Fried rice (varieties include vegetable, chicken, beef, shrimp)
MON - THU 11-9 FRI - SAT 11-10 SUN 12-9

Winter-Session Housing
Taking a class this winter?
Need a place to stay?
Great rates available.
Howard Johnson Econo Lodge University Lodge
413-586-0114 413-582-7077 413-256-8111
www.hampshirehospitality.com

Want to change your undergraduate major to nursing?
We announce the opening of Transfer Application period for current UMASS Amherst undergraduate non nursing majors to apply to change their undergraduate major to the Nursing major. Due date for transfer application is December 13, 2006.
We are pleased to invite the transfer applications of current undergraduate non nursing majors who wish to apply to the Nursing major in the school of nursing. Transfer applications for the School of Nursing will now be reviewed. All information on eligibility for transfer is contained at the website www.umass.edu/nursing (see transfer notice banner on the home page!)
Don't Delay!

PREMIER MASSACHUSETTS NIGHT CLUB
Earn $$$$ for school or fun
ARE YOU INTERESTED IN DANCING?
Earn average $400 a night!
Waitresses Shot Girls Wanted
No Experience Necessary
Flexible hours
Position open immediately
Call for more details!
Anthony's Strip Club
(413)246-0299

FRANK BLONDO-GRAY-MCKENNA FINISHED SUDOKU

	5	3			6
1		9	3		7			6
2	6			9
			5			3
		2			4
	9				1
				8			4	5
4			9		5	8		1
			4			9	7

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The best way to cheer yourself is to cheer somebody else up."
—Mark Twain

19 By Rae Frank
C FOR COOKIE
COURTEOUSLY AND CURRENTLY I SHALL DENYGY THE CONTRACT I CARRY, CONTRARY TO THE CONCEPTION OF COUNTLESS OTHERS. A WEEK COOKIE MONSTER CONSUMES CANNOT OFFER THE CURIOUS CHARACTERS I CAN LOOK. CONVERSELY, I COMPLETE A CONCEPT. THE CONVICTION IS COUNTERCLOCKWISE CONTAIN AND CONCEAL THE CHOICES' CONNECTIONS. THE ONLY CONCLUSION I CONCEIVE TO THE CRAVING TO CRAM THE CANDY CLEARLY THIS CONVERSATION IS CONSIDERABLY COMPLETE AND SO YOU MAY CALL ME "C"
WHO... WHO ARE YOU?
...I'M GOING TO CUT OFF MY HAIR FOR THIS?!

W.T. Schmeling By Woody Allen
Do you like jokes, Mr Teffer?
Yes.
Why did the chicken cross the road?
To get to the other side?
Close.
To get away from you and your contageous diseases! LOL!!!
PhD (Piled Higher and Deeper) By Jorge Cham
SIGH...

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Keep your lucky sacajuea in your breast pocket. You are going to get shot.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You can only tolerate so much before the Hulk takes over.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't let the fear of a spill keep you down. You can always refill as time comes around.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Stay away from old egg-nog. It's relentless.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Don't let finals get you down. Let the holiday spirit in and dance around or whatever.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You will make up a lot of crap and arrange it into a ten page paper.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You will become the most famous medical specimen in history.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Your ancestors raped and pillaged for fun. You have to make up for their misdoings.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
The spectrum's a to z, babe. Don't ever forget it.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You will fall in love and never again see the world as you did before.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
A volcano will form and erupt underneath your parents house. They'll be fine.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
If you experience a strange taste in your mouth, it probably means immanent death.

Moan and Dove
one awful beer for $4 at another bar one delicious beer that will rock you twice as hard for $4 at the Moan and Dove they still teach math at college?
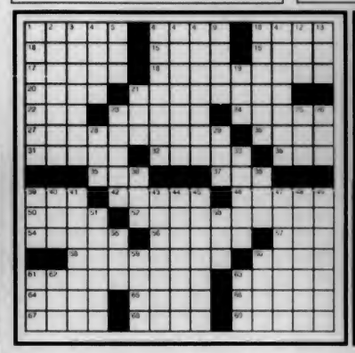
themoanandlove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat: 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002



NATHAN KLARNEY FINISHED SUDOKU

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly. Be an Army Officer full time/part time after college www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 bedroom apt. available for sublet for spring 07 semester. $392.50 plus utilities. Call 561-346-6054

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 1 beds available starting now or Jan.1 www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

EMPLOYMENT

WINTER BREAK JOBS available at the Boston University Bookstore in Kenmore Square! Stop by our JOB FAIR all day Thurs. Dec. 14 in Room 178 on the Lower level of the UMass Campus Center or email bnhmnres@bu.edu

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

HOUSE FOR RENT

Lake Wyola 4 Bedroom $800 plus utilities 413-584-7345 Cute 2 to 3 bedroom house, neat, on bus stop in Northampton Available mid December. No pets $1300.00 Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

ROOM FOR RENT

1 bedroom available for spring semester. $400 a month including utilities. 3 male roommates, across from bus stop call 781-492-5588 for more details.

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

TRAVEL

Alternative spring break Now taking applications Trips to New Orleans, Birmingham and Mississippi Delta. Space is limited, email: umassasb@gmail.com

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions, Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849 Great group discounts

www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Friday night lights

Minutemen and Grizzlies set for semifinals battle in Montana

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The games just keep getting bigger for the Massachusetts football team (12-1). After defeating New Hampshire last week in arguably the most important win in McGuirk Stadium history, UMass travels to Montana to square off with the Grizzlies tomorrow night.

The NCAA Division I Football Championship semifinal game takes place in Missoula, Mont., with game time set for 5:30 p.m. Mountain time, and 7:30 p.m. Eastern standard time.

Montana (12-1) enters the game as the second-ranked team in Division I-AA – one spot ahead of No. 3 UMass. As the highest seed in the bracket, the Grizzlies were awarded home-field advantage throughout the playoffs.

Last weekend at Washington-Grizzly Stadium, the home team took down Southern Illinois, 20-3 in the FCS quarterfinals. Kicker Dan Carpenter and wide receiver Craig Chambers starred for the Grizzlies on offense. Carpenter nailed field goals from 43 and 38 yards, while Chambers caught two touchdown passes.

Both teams enter the game with double-digit winning streaks to their credit. UMass boasts a school-record 11-game winning streak, but it is one-upped by Montana's 12-game hot streak. That Grizzlies streak includes winning their last eight games at home.

Washington-Grizzly Stadium is one of the toughest places to play in the nation. Montana consistently recorded attendance figures in the

See FOOTBALL on page 6

Pressure on Swogger is the key to victory on Friday night

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After keeping the high-powered New Hampshire offense in check last weekend, the Massachusetts football team takes on another opponent with a lot of firepower tomorrow night.

Like the Wildcats, Montana boasts one of the best passing attacks in Division I-AA. The Grizzlies average 231.8 yards through the air this season while averaging 13.6 yards per catch.

"They have a nice pass game," UMass coach Don Brown said. "They'll run what we call the bunch sets, and they can throw the ball in rhythm. They're very solid in their play-action piece and they can throw the ball into seams."

Much of that begins with senior quarterback Josh Swogger. This season he's thrown for 2,492 yards and 17 touchdowns. Cole Bergquist has seen action in six games this season, but Swogger is Montana's featured guy.

"I don't know if there's a throw that Josh [Swogger] can't make," Brown said. "We're certainly going to have our hands full. And we are who we are. We'll just play our stuff, and hope its good enough."

The one weakness in the Montana passing game is its tendency to give up the sack. In the NCAA Division I Championship quarterfinals against Southern Illinois last week, the Salukis brought Swogger down five times. Throughout the entire season he's been sacked 48 times for a loss of 280 yards. By comparison, UMass quarterback Liam Coen went down just 14 times this season.

That bodes well for the UMass defense. It took down Walter Payton finalist Ricky Santos five times last week, prompting the junior UNH quar-

See MONTANA on page 6

Senior running back Steve Baylark and the No. 3 UMass Minutemen head to Montana to take on the No. 2 Montana Grizzlies in the NCAA Division I Semifinals tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m.. The Maroon and White's biggest game of the year will be broadcast live on ESPN2.

'Griz' fans to be loud on Friday

Eric Athas

The Massachusetts football team has undoubtedly proven itself away from McGuirk Stadium this season. While the Minutemen won every home contest, including two playoff games against Lafayette and New Hampshire, they also managed to post a 4-1 record away from Amherst.

The Minutemen took down Villanova in Pennsylvania, picked apart Towson at Johnny Unitas Stadium, managed a rainy game against Northeastern at Parsons Field, and found a way to win at Cowell Stadium in New Hampshire. The team's one loss was a 21-20 edge by Division I-A Navy in Annapolis, Md.

And while UMass has made its case on the road in 2006, no arena will test the Minutemen as much as Washington-Grizzly Stadium in Missoula, Mont.

The No. 2 Grizzlies and the No. 3 Minutemen will square off tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in the Division I Championship semifinals.

This season, Montana has won every contest at Washington-Grizzly Stadium, outscoring its opponents 216-77. Going into tomorrow night's game against UMass, the Grizzlies hold an all-time record of 133-18 at Washington-Grizzly Stadium.

Executive Director of I-AA football Matt Dougherty wrote in his column on The Sports Network, "[UMass is] also making their first-ever trip to Washington-Grizzly Stadium, and that environment is unlike any other in I-AA/FCS."

By the way, Dougherty, who originally picked UMass to make it to Chattanooga, has suddenly changed his mind. Even though he initially predicted a matchup between UMass and Montana, Dougherty is now giving "the Grizzlies a victory at home and a sixth trip to the national championship game."

Regardless, Washington-Grizzly Stadium awaits the Minutemen. And other than the fact that Montana is far, far away from Western Massachusetts, the stadium holds over 23,000 fans, and surrounds the field completely. Its size compares to national championship host Finley Stadium at Tennessee in Chattanooga, which holds 20,668. Washington-Grizzly Stadium is a nightmare for anyone suffering from claustrophobia.

UMass coach Don Brown, however, does not appear bothered by the environment in Montana.

"To be honest, our guys feed off that high energy type stuff," Brown said. "I know our guys will be excited to play in a great environment."

Grizzly fans, or Griz fans as they are usually referred to as, are already scheduled to be raring to go tomorrow night. According to the Montana Sports Information Department, ticket sales were officially sold out at 11 a.m. yesterday morning.

One of those fans, Doug Davis, a Montana alumnus from the class of 1992, provides enough material to fill the UMass bulletin board. Like any Griz fan, he is gunning for a crowd takeover of the Minutemen.

"I just don't know if anybody can beat our crowd," Davis said. "They are loud. And there's no running track between the stands and the field, so the crowd is right on top of the field. If you don't have four or five penalties from the crowd alone, you're doing amazing."

Interestingly enough, the last high-profile stage that UMass played on was at Navy in front of a crowd of 30,117. The Minuteman offense only recorded one false start penalty on offense during that game.

So why do so many Griz fans enjoy a good I-AA football game? "It's the only thing we got in town. This is what we got," said Davis. And with no true pro team to root for, it's true, Montana sports are the big event in Missoula. The town parallels some high-profile high schools around the country. Davis said the town shuts down for games.

There's no hiding Doug Davis' intense love for his Griz. And while he predicts the crowd will be too much to handle for the Minutemen, he also has respect for the 12-1 team that edged New Hampshire 24-17 last Saturday.

"It sounds to me like UMass has got a terrific record going into the game," Davis said. "I think it's going to be a really good game. We have a huge fan base here."

And when Liam Coen, Brandon London, James Ihedigbo and the rest of the Minutemen take the field in Missoula, Mont., tomorrow night, a sold out crowd at Washington-Grizzly Stadium will be watching. Davis will be there too. And he loves his Griz.

Eric Athas is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at eathas@student.umass.edu.

UM squeezes by BU after costly timeout

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BOSTON – If Boston University coach Dennis Wolff had just waited a few more seconds.

Down 56-54 with less than 10 seconds left in the game, Terriers freshman guard Tyler Morris dribbled frantically to try and find an open man. The shot clock was winding down, so Wolff decided to call a timeout to set up a final play and to avoid a turnover.

UMass	56
BU	54

Morris fired a 3-pointer as the referee blew the whistle and buried it, which would have given the Terriers a one-point lead. But Wolff had already called a timeout and the play was blown dead.

BU didn't score on the final play, and the Massachusetts men's basketball team escaped with a 56-54 victory at Agganis Arena in Boston last night.

"In this business, hindsight is 20-20," Wolff said. "Obviously, I should not have called that timeout. Tyler made a hell of a shot. The only person that should be blamed, if blame is to go around, is me."

"Thank goodness for the timeout," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "That's for sure."

UMass senior co-captain Rashaun Freeman led all scorers with 20 points and added 12 rebounds. BU freshman guard Corey Lowe led the Terriers with 16 points.

UMass travels to Central Connecticut on Saturday night for an 8 p.m. matchup at Mohegan Sun Arena, then it's on to Kentucky and Louisville before returning to the Mullins Center on Dec. 28 to face Yale.

"I didn't think it was going to be that close of a game," said senior co-captain Stephane Lasme, who finished with 12 points and five rebounds. "It was a good experience for the new guys. We're kind of a new team."

"I knew we were going to have a dog fight," said UMass senior Brandon Thomas, who reached double digits for the third time this season with 10 points. "At halftime with a three-point game we really had to step it up and wake ourselves up a little bit. It was a lot of senior leadership down the stretch."

The Minutemen entered last night's matchup with the Terriers in the wake of an 84-73 loss to the Boston College Eagles at the Mullins Center on Saturday.

In the first half, UMass – the more talented of the two teams – allowed the Terriers to stay in the game down the stretch after taking a 10-point lead with just under 14 minutes left in the game and holding that lead until the 4:40 mark.

After that, things began to unravel.

The Terriers continued to chip away at the UMass leads, and fought back to make it 56-53 – a 7-0 run – after Lowe put in an offensive rebound off of a BU miss. The Minutemen turned it over on the ensuing possession and the Terriers had the ball down three with 1:14 left in the game.

Morris' 3-pointer was the culmination of a frustrating shooting night for the Terriers, who finished with just two 3-pointers on 10 attempts.

The Minutemen came out sloppy in the first half, and midway through the frame it was anybody's game. BU kept switching defenses and the Minutemen couldn't figure out its 2-3 zone, consistently turning it over trying to get the ball inside to Lasme or Freeman.

Senior James Life hit Thomas with a lead pass on a breakaway to make it 19-18 at the 4:18 mark. The Minutemen led 21-18 with 3:44 left in the first half after a couple of BU turnovers led to easy baskets on the fast break.

UMass began to pull away around the 3:00 mark of the first. Sophomore guard Chris Lowe led the UMass fast break and hit Thomas for a 3-pointer on the wing at the 2:38 mark for a 24-18 UMass lead, then hit Lasme for a fast break layup on the ensuing possession for a 26-18 lead after a BU turnover.

Hawks bring Minutewomen back to reality

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

HARTFORD, Conn. – Without the basketball, it's rather difficult to put points up on the board.

Carelessness with the basketball, coupled with tenacious defense by Hartford led to a 68-45 drubbing by the Hartford Hawks (7-3) over the Massachusetts women's basketball team (7-2) last night.

UMass	45
Hartford	68

The Minutewomen committed 10 first half turnovers – 15 in all – which put them in a 28-19 hole entering the second half. Hartford's lead was cut to five early, but a 10-0 run by the Hawks ran the score up to 42-27, putting the game away and quelling any hope of a UMass comeback.

Hartford came out firing in the second half, hitting 16-of-26 shots, including 3-of-4 from behind the arc. UMass picked it up offensively as well, shooting 42 percent from the floor as opposed to just 29 percent in the first half. However, the Hawks' lead proved to be too much for the Minutewomen to overcome.

"I'm not happy with our team's play," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "All the credit goes to Hartford. We didn't stop them defensively and we didn't hit our open shots. We just played without a lot of heart tonight."

"We just got outworked," junior co-captain Kate Mills said. "We tried to get something going at the end but nobody from our team really stepped up."

The lone bright spot for the Minutewomen was the play of senior Tamara Tatham, who notched 10 first half points, but she only scored three in the final 20 minutes and turned the ball over four times. Mills came into the contest averaging over 16 points per game but finished with just 10 on 4-for-11 shooting. Junior Pam Rosanio scored a season-low four points.

"I feel like I need more production from people on the floor," Dacko said when asked about the lack of scoring off the bench. "When I'm looking at Kate Mills and Pam Rosanio giving us a lackluster effort, that's our main issue. Not to discredit their effort, but they didn't put up numbers tonight."

The Hawks had three players in double figures, including a game-high 16 points from junior Danielle Hood. The trio of Hood, and sophomores Lisa Etienne and MaryLynne Schaefer combined for 39 points on 16-for-23 shooting, including a perfect 5-for-5 from three-point territory.

"We made MaryLynne look like an All-American tonight," Dacko said. "Hood was also great tonight. She's a great player who works hard and she got above her average in the game."

"We were just timid out there, that was the main thing," Mills said. "We didn't take it to them and they took it to us."

The Hartford zone defense gave UMass problems for much of the game, limiting the chances under the basket for the Minutewomen.

"We were beat mentally today on the floor," Dacko said. "We weren't moving the ball. We missed our shots and got into first half foul trouble. Everything that could go wrong did, and they capitalized on it."

See W. BASKETBALL on page 6

UMASS FACES CCSU TOMORROW | PAGE 10

ROCKIN' TUNES FOR THE HOLIDAYS | PAGE 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 31 LO: 15 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8, 2006

SGA creates 'Student Bridges' program

BY SARAH SYED
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Student Government Association (SGA) of the University of Massachusetts passed the motion to create the "Student Bridges" program as an SGA agency on Wednesday evening at the Senate meeting.

The mission of Student Bridges is to "build reciprocal relationships between University of Massachusetts Amherst students and local communities in order to enrich the Amherst campus and to increase access to higher education for underrepresented students."

Last week, student coordinators of the pilot project presented a proposal to the Senate and discussed the history of the project as well as its expectations.

In fall 2005, The Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) identified a "lack of avenues for UMass students to engage in local community outreach," thus developing a proposal for a student-to-student outreach project using the vacant $185,000 of Student Fee money freed from the transfer of the Office of ALANA Affairs.

This fall, the Student Bridges pilot project launched and began weekly tutoring and mentoring sessions at three partner sites in Holyoke.

Vanessa Snow, a student coordinator on the project, stressed the opportunities UMass students have to get involved in the community.

"Students feel like there is a lack of involvement in their own community and so this project gives an opportunity for students to reach out," she said. Snow went on to explain that UMass students can get involved by attending events and trips organized by the coordinators.

Student Bridges collaborated with the

See SGA on page 2

Indie film premieres

BY CHRIS CUFFE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Cinemark movie theater in Hadley will produce the red carpet premiere of a new independent film tonight.

The theater will debut "Change the Game," which concerns itself with race, crime, and class and was filmed mostly on location in the Pioneer Valley.

The film was written, produced, directed, and stars Osama Alhabeeb, an Amherst independent filmmaker. He plays Ray Walker, a half black, half white man in his early 20s, whose life begins to spiral into a life of crime.

Alhabeeb said he filmed scenes for the production in Amherst, Northampton, Holyoke and New York City. He and his crew even went so far as closing down a major road in Springfield to film a car chase scene for the feature.

The film-maker was born in Virginia and later, moved to Amherst, where he's lived for 13 years. Before "Change the Game," Alhabeeb directed "Borderline," a teenage drama, which also premiered at Cinemark Theaters in June 2002.

Alhabeeb started his own production house, formerly known as Green Hill Productions, now Dynasty Pictures in 2000, and is producing six more projects. One of them is titled, "A Full Circle," directed by David Kruta, a former UMass communications student who is executive producer for "Change the Game."

The film debuting tonight features actors from the Amherst and Springfield areas, including Makaya McCraven, who is the drummer for Amherst's Cold Duck Complex and a UMass music major.

The soundtrack for the movie features underground artists such as Fatal MC, Prophet and Chin, and Gold-Bi System, a group from Dakar, Senegal, in West Africa. The soundtrack is a blend of genres, including Hip Hop, Soul and R&B. Some actors from the film also perform on tracks for the album, including Aimee Mathers, who sings on the soundtrack and plays the female lead.

Other actors also receive production

See MOVIE on page 2

Blogger speaks on benefits of online media

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Blogger Tom Devine spoke to Journalism 300 students Wednesday, about benefits of online media and encouraged them to blog, as he sees the Internet becoming the leading source of news in the near future.

It's a strange, new world for prospective journalists; but local Amherst resident Tom Devine is embracing it and profiting from it, too.

Devine, who spoke with a group of Journalism 300 students Wednesday about some of the advantages in online media, may very well have created the first blog ever in Western Massachusetts back in 1998. In fact, the term "blog" hadn't even come into use until two years later.

What first started out as "just a diary," for the former UMass student (who is now employed on an on-and-off project basis by the Office of Information Technologies at UMass) tomdevine.net is currently the third most popular political Web site in Western Massachusetts, behind MassLive.com and the Valley Advocate Web site, according to Devine. Even though his site focuses largely on satirizing and critiquing the Springfield and Amherst political scene, Devine told students he doesn't even know exactly what his blog is about.

Maybe that's because at times Devine strays away from politics and writes about an actor who had a brief career in porn. Devine also mentions on his site conservative Professor Dr. Adams' speech at UMass Nov. 15, when a student and member of the Republican club got into a physical altercation when the microphone was ripped from the student's hand after he failed to ask Dr. Adams a question.

On his website, Devine wrote of his experience speaking at UMass.

"I was not disappointed," Devine said. "The student's questions were probing, insightful, and intelligent."

"I find Devine to be quite an inspiration," Journalism 300 professor, and local political reporter for the Daily Hampshire Gazette, Mary Carey said. "He can talk about the revolution we're now experiencing in journalism in a way a not-so-technically savvy person, like myself, can understand it. He's been in on it from the very beginning, after all. Prompted in part by his example, I've got a video camera myself now and some grandiose plans," Carey said.

Devine, who said blogs were once only for tech geeks but can now be created by anybody, encourages students to not wait for an invitation when it comes to getting their ideas on the information highway. He should know too, since he is now being rewarded for writing about whatever interests him to people around the world.

Devine's webpage is a part of Ads by Google, which provides contextually relevant advertisements that appear beside related content on Devine's page. Advertisers only have to pay Google when someone clicks on their advertisement, according to Google.

For example, if Devine happened to write in his blog about a recent fishing trip he took, Google would

See BLOGGER on page 2

Tom Devine's political blog, TomDevine.net, is the third most popular political Web site in Western Massachusetts, behind MassLive.com and the Valley Advocate Web site.

Minutemen battle in NCAA semifinals

Liam Coen and the UMass football team will face the Montana Grizzlies tonight in Missoula. The winner will head to Chattanooga, Tenn. for a shot at an NCAA national championship title.

District judge orders change of U.S. currency to assist the blind

BY JENNA SPATARO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

U.S. District Judge James Robertson has ordered the Treasury Department to create bills that can be distinguished by visually-impaired people.

Many people take for granted the use of the five senses – taste, sight, touch, smell and sound. Imagine being visually impaired and being unable to distinguish between values of dollar bills.

Recently, United States District Judge James Robertson ordered the Treasury Department to create a way for blind people to do just that. He gave no specific instructions, only that they must start working on solutions to enable the blind to differentiate currency values.

Government attorneys argued that forcing the Treasury Department to change the currency would make it easier for people to counterfeit money. Robertson was not convinced.

"Of the more than 180 countries that issue paper currency, only the United States prints bills that are identical in size and color in all their denominations," Robertson wrote. "More than a hundred of other issuers vary their bills in size according to denomination, and every other issuer includes at least some features that help the visually impaired."

Robertson believes that since other countries can offer this, it is reasonable for the U.S. to make these accommodations. He stated that the government was violating the Rehabilitation Act, an act that prohibits discrimination on the basis of disability in government programs.

According to court documents, government attorneys feel that changing the way money is felt would be very expensive. Estimated costs ranged from $75 million in equipment upgrades and $9 million in annual expenses for punching holes in bills, to $178 million in one-time charges and $50 million yearly expenses to able to print bills in different sizes.

"I eagerly look forward to the day when the U.S. currency will be accessible to all people," said Ginger Dudkiewicz, Assistant Director of Disability services at the University of Massachusetts. "The fact that it is not currently accessible is deplorable."

According to Dudkiewicz, there

See MONEY on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 67
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
News Supervisor Sherel Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jazmeen Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Sports Editor Sean Duram
Photo Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Matt Bellavance
Sports Editor Rob Greenfield
Production Manager Jeff Perez
Photo Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Pocklocker
Assistant Business Phil Sandler
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Anna Dollamitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Sports Danny Picard
Assistant Sports Jon Pelland
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the academic year by Massachusetts Daily Collegian Society, Inc., an independently funded, nonprofit corporation headquartered in Amherst, Massachusetts. Founded in 1890 as the Index, it became the Weekly Collegian in 1906 and the Collegian in 1956. It became the Daily Collegian in 1967. The Collegian was published twice weekly from 1968 to 1994. For advertising information, call 545-3500 x10.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is a member of the Associated Collegiate Press. Subscriptions are $150 per academic year.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Hughes

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

PRODUCTION STAFF
Chris Nielsen

UMass students encouraged to blog

BLOGGER from page 1

provide an advertisement from a fishing supply company at the bottom of that blog entry pertaining to the fishing trip.

According to Devine, there is also the potential for cash-strapped students to make money through advertising on their own blog because there is a 100 percent return on every advertising dollar – granted enough people show interest in the blog. There is no guess work involved in Internet advertising because it can be determined exactly how many people are clicking on a certain advertisement on your blog.

"I thought he was incredibly interesting," Journalism 300 student Teresa Reilly said. "He gave me a good outlook into what being a true blogger really means. He definitely gave a really good history of blogging too. I didn't know how the word 'blog' came about," she said.

"I thought Tom Devine was very interesting," said Journalism 300 student Jon Brudner. "He seems very excited about the internet and blogging, which in turn got me excited—enough to contemplate creating my own website. Other than that, I was impressed with his do-it-yourself ethic."

Despite traditional sources of information, such as the print media, network television, and public radio, are noticeably declining in influence because of user-generated content on the Internet, Devine told students that they should not be afraid of this transformation, but instead embrace it and use it to their advantage.

The Internet offers a different route for journalists who often find it difficult to find a job in the traditional job market, Devine said. However, he doesn't ever envision a day when newspapers go extinct, but does see a time where blogs and Internet content replace newspapers and network news as the dominant news outlet. The key word for the future is "choice" when it comes to where people get information, according to Devine.

Devine's talk came a day after the Journalism department at UMass hosted the Dean of students at Columbia University, Sree Sreenivasan, lecture titled "Journalism 2.0 – How Technology is Changing the Media, Journalists, and Consumers." On his Web site, Devine did completely agree with Sreenivasan's gloomy forecast of the journalism job market.

"It was a pretty gloomy assessment before an audience of young journalists, who were essentially being told that the job market in the field they were about to enter was collapsing," Devine said. "In my own comments to the journalism class the next day, I tried to be more upbeat.

"While it is impossible to deny the reality of Sree's negative assessment of the future of traditional media, I told the students that it is only the forms by which the news is delivered that is changing – not the need for news itself," Devine said. "There will always be a market for intelligent people who know how to gather information, access the accuracy of that information, organize it into a way the public can absorb and present it in a well written style. Just because it isn't being done through the traditional means we have been familiar with, doesn't mean there will be less of a demand for those skills," he said.

Students listen as Tom Devine discusses potential money-making through advertising on blogs.

According to imediaconnection.com, visitation to blogs has grown rapidly. In July of 2006, it was reported that 58.7 million visitors visited blogs, a 56 percent increase from the previous year. Blogger.com, which is owned by Google, is the most popular blog network, which had 2.8 million visitors in May 2006.

Cinemark debuts indie film

MOVIE from page 1

credits. Michelle McCannon, who makes her acting debut in the film as "Kelly," is also production manager. UMass student Elisangela Almeida, a legal studies major, works as a post-production manager and debuts in the film as the character Lyzz Rollins.

The film had its world premiere Friday in Springfield at the Billups World Entertainment (B.W.E.) production facility.

Alhabeeb made use of the B.W.E.'s small private theater to show his film to around 80 to 100 supporters.

"It was wonderful," Alhabeeb said. "We had a lot of people come out for us."

The Hadley premiere starts at 11:30 p.m. Tickets are available at the door and from the DVDen and Trade Roots in Amherst.

SGA bridges students to higher education

SGA from page 1

"Diversity in Management Education Services" (DiMES) to host "ALANA Men in Motion" from Holyoke Community College. The interested students thinking of transferring to the UMass School of Management (SOM), were on campus on Dec. 7 to have meals at the dining common and tour the SOM.

Yajaira Cotto, a student coordinator on the project explained that by bringing students to the UMass campus, "they can see what the school has to offer and also see what goes on besides classes."

Students from the STEP middle school after-school program will be touring campus on Dec. 8 and will attend Project 2050 at The New World Theater, which "engages professional artists, youth communities, scholars, and community activists in civic dialogue and artistic creation." The performances create forums for intergenerational, interracial, and cross-cultural dialogues in community and university settings.

The accessibility to higher education is also an important mission stressed by the project coordinators. The project emphasizes the building of reciprocal relationships between UMass students, student organizations, and local communities.

Student Trustee and Student Bridges coordinator Mishy Leiblum praised the connections being formed between the various communities.

"So far, the connections have been going very well, but it takes time to build trust and a reciprocal relationship, which is very important to us," she said.

Leiblum went on to explain the delicacy of building meaningful relationships, and not over-extending the limits.

"Slow-measured growth is very important at this point," Leiblum emphasized.

She said by successfully becoming an agency, Student Bridges will be able to acquire and manage outside funding through grants and donations, be an independent identity, and employ professional staff and graduate assistants.

Judge to help visually-impaired are approximately 20 to 25 blind and visually impaired students at the University.

MONEY from page 1

The ruling about the accessible currency was strongly supported by the organization OurMoney.too, an independent group made up of blind and sighted volunteers. The organization was formed in 2004 to gain accessible paper currency in the United States by educating the public about this issue.

Jonathan Simeone, a graduate of UMass and a member of OurMoney.too, is a Washington D.C.-based attorney who is blind. He feels that if other countries made the changes in their currencies, then the U.S. government can too.

"So many other countries have already done this, and they have figured out efficient ways to deal with retooling ATMs and whatever other issues we will face if we change our currency here in the United States," said Simeone.

"Euros vary in size by denomination, for example, as well as having a raised numeral on each bill. Canada recently added a system of raised symbols to its paper currency," he said. "When the euros were developed and when tactile markings were added to Canadian currency, advocates for blind people played a direct role in those decisions, and we hope that the Treasury Department will now adopt a similar collaborative approach in this country."

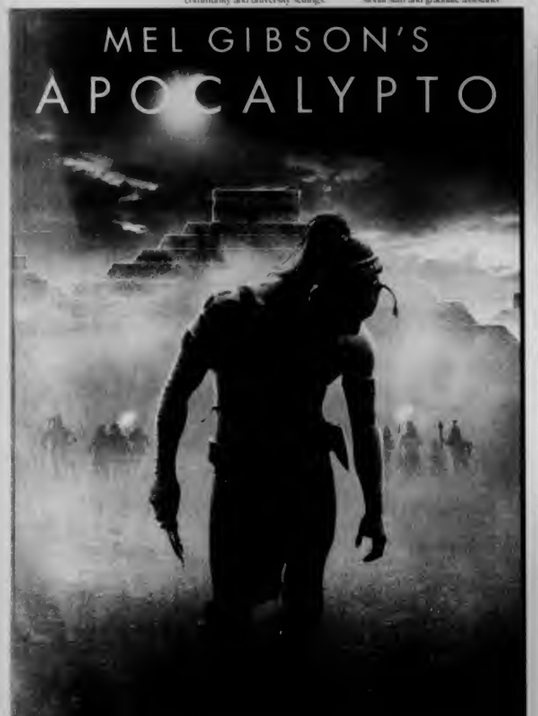
Judge Robertson believes U.S. dollars should be changed, since places like Canada and Europe differentiate values to assist the blind.

Currently there are electronic devices that guide the blind in finding the appropriate bills for payment. These devices are expensive, often slow and unreliable, which leads blind people to ask for help from store clerks.

"It's just frankly unfair that blind people should have to rely on the good faith of people they have never met in knowing whether they've been given correct change," said Jeffery A. Lovitky, attorney for the plaintiffs in the lawsuit.

The Treasury Department has no comment on the ruling, and the government has 10 days to appeal.

MEL GIBSON'S
APOCALYPTO



NO ONE CAN OUTRUN THEIR DESTINY.

TOUCHSTONE PICTURES presents in association with ICON PRODUCTIONS an ICON production a MEL GIBSON film "APOCALYPTO" Costume Designer CARLA HOOL Music by JAMES HORNER Edited by ALDO SIGNORETTI Cinematography by VITTORIO STORARO Production Designer MAYES C. RUBEO Written by JOHN WRIGHT, A.C.I. Produced by TOM SANDERS Co-Produced by DEAN SEMLER, ASC, ACS Executive Producers FARHAD SAFINIA NED DOWD VICKI CHRISTIANSEN Produced by MEL GIBSON BRUCE DAVEY Written by MEL GIBSON & FARHAD SAFINIA Directed by MEL GIBSON

R RESTRICTED UNDER 17 REQUIRES ACCOMPANYING PARENT OR ADULT GUARDIAN SEQUENCES OF GRAPHIC VIOLENCE AND DISTURBING IMAGES

Apocalypto.com

Touchstone Pictures

IN THEATRES FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8

Want to change your undergraduate major to nursing?

We announce the opening of Transfer Application period for current UMASS Amherst undergraduate non nursing majors to apply to change their undergraduate major to the Nursing major.
Due date for transfer application is December 13, 2006.

We are pleased to invite the transfer applications of current undergraduate non nursing majors who wish to apply to the Nursing major in the school of nursing. Transfer applications for the School of Nursing will now be reviewed. All information on eligibility for transfer is contained at the website www.umass.edu/nursing (see transfer notice banner on the home page!)

Don't Delay!

From Your Dorm* To The Airport And Back!
*central campus pick ups during heavy travel times

■ VIP Exclusive Service
■ Door-to-Door Service
■ Charter & Group Service
■ Professional Drivers
■ New, Well Maintained Vans
■ Scheduled Van-Share Service

Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com

Valley Transporter The Easy Way to the Airport!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

The Campus Scene

A weekly look at the University lifestyle

Degree or not degree? Diploma value debated

By Kristen LaCasse
C.U. Staff Writer

Some students at UMass and other colleges across the nation may be wondering how much their college degree will actually be worth in the working world once they graduate. Shows like the "Apprentice" are breaking the mold that those with college degrees will always end up better off than those who have high school diplomas but lack college degrees. This show, for those who have never heard the licensed catchphrase "You're fired," consists of two battling teams of business minded individuals, who each fight for the chance to be hired (and not fired) by Donald Trump.

In the third season, Trump created two teams based on whether they had college degrees or not. Although the season three winner, Kendra Todd, is an undergraduate degree holder, the fact that Trump chose those without college degrees to go up against those who had earned them is a giant step towards breaking down a well-agreed upon stereotype that those with college educations get farther ahead.

This nation has a common conception about college degrees. A study by Harvey & Immerwahr concluded that almost 80 percent of the public believes that a college degree is necessary for success, but a mere 12 percent feel that a college degree is a good value for the money.

Is a college degree actually worth the debt students go into in order to get it? Once graduates add up their yearly earnings, and then compare that figure to what they owe in school debt, it no longer seems so bad to some.

The benefits do seem staggering. A bachelor's degree is worth about $23,000 a year, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. In 2004, college graduates made an average of $51,554, compared with high school graduates who on average made $28,645. Adults with advanced college degrees made an average of $78,093, and high school dropouts earned an average of $19,169.

"Overall [the differential between the value of a high school and college degree is] increasing dramatically, about two to one," said Gerald Friedman, an economics professor at UMass. "Without a high school diploma it's two and a half to one, that's for those who are working. Dropouts have an unemployment rate close to 40 percent, three percent for college graduates." These facts show that earning a college degree may be worth it after all.

Not everyone would agree with that, however. "The value of a college degree at UMass is declining, in sample monetary cost/benefit terms," said Stephanie Luce in an e-mail message. She is the research director for the UMass Amherst Labor Relations Research Center (LRRC), as well as a UMass associate professor of labor studies. "The average hourly wage of someone with a college degree has only gone up 1.3 percent [adjusted for inflation] since 2000, [and wages have actually fallen since their peak in 2001]," she said.

"At the same time, the tuition and fees at UMass has gone up by 84 percent for in-state students and about 32 percent for out of state students, in approximately that same period. That would suggest it costs a lot more to get a job that pays about the same. Also, some data suggests that the employment rates for new college grads are not as strong as they were a few years ago," Luce said.

The cost of attending college may outweigh the benefit of having that degree also because entry-level wages don't necessarily compensate recent graduates enough to pay off their loans.

However, there are still benefits to having that degree under your belt.

"College degree holders come in at the top of the labor market, they'll always get jobs," said Friedman. "If there's unemployment, it will be among people who haven't finished their [or gone to] college. Employers prefer to hire college graduates."

But there are more reasons why employers would hire non-degree holders than one might think. In some industries, experience could be valued much more than a piece of paper.

"Sometimes employers don't hire people with a college degree because they don't think they'll stay in the job, [and will] quit to get a better job," said Friedman.

Those instances are not common according to some.

"Many employers do [hire people without college degrees], but I think the people without degrees will find themselves at a disadvantage at least at some point in their careers," said Laura Morsch, a career adviser for Careerbuilder.com. "Having the college degree will never work against you."

In the future, high school graduates could also affect the value of the college degree. The offspring of the baby boomers, a group of 3.2 million, is the largest group of high school seniors in U.S. history ever expected to graduate according to a June report from the United States Department of Education. When these students graduate from high school a good amount will be flooding college application departments. Thus, less high school graduates will be able to get into the colleges they choose if colleges don't accommodate for the flood expected to hit in less than 20 years.

"Demand for educative labor is increasing as companies struggle to find qualified talent," said Morsch. "This will probably become more exacerbated as baby boomers retire and smaller generations of replacement workers enter the work force ... The baby boomer generation will be retiring in the next decade or two, and there will be fewer people to fill that gap. Therefore having those extra degrees will definitely give you an edge."

More people having that extra education will be important to the nation as well.

"In the long run going to college will become more important as the world market opens up for products and labor," said Friedman. "Americans are competing with workers all over the world. If we want to continue earning what we do, we have to do something special. What Americans are distinctive at ... is work that involves more education and more command over technology."

Even though some may think the United States is ahead, American adults who do not finish high school earn 65 percent of what high school graduates earn, according to the annual study titled "Education at a Glance," which compared industrialized countries' academic performances and economic outcomes. This gap was the largest of any of the surveyed countries.

The value of advanced college degrees "is going up but not by as much as it had been in the 1990's," said Luce, the research director of the UMass LRRC. "We've only seen a small increase since 2000 and 2001."

Degrees valued higher than a four-year degree prove to be even more lucrative. "Those persons [with advanced college degrees] are getting a bigger share of personal income," said Andrew Brimmer, a Wilmer Barrett professor of economics.

Even with an advanced degree, it is not guaranteed that you will be wealthy. "I think that data for the U.S. suggests an increasingly polarized labor market between the very wealthy and those who are struggling to get by," said Luce, "and some with a college degree will be in that upper part, but many will be in the lower part. So, I don't think a college degree is a guarantee that you will make it financially."

"Everybody's wages have been dropping except for the super rich," said Friedman. "You have to look at the difference between graduates and non-graduates. The college premium is what matters, how much more you make compared [to non graduates]. [2001 to 2004 were] bad years economically and wages fell, high school people were hurt worse than college people. Since 2004, wages have been rising, especially for college graduates." Those without degrees on average get left behind in the lower half of the middle class, but those with degrees aren't guaranteed to rise out of middle class either.

"The past 20 years have been very bad for middle class getting divided," said Friedman. "A small group is doing super well and the larger part of middle class is stagnating with static or declining real earnings and real standard of living. Half the earnings in the country go to the top 10 percent."

Setting your goals high for whatever career you choose is vital to success.

"There's rising inequality, which means if you want to do well financially, more than ever you want to be in the top 10 percent of whatever group you're in," Friedman said. "College education helps you get into that tiny elite. The bottom half of the labor force is really getting screwed, getting a college education ensures you won't be in the bottom."

Even though degree holders won't hit the bottom, in general their incomes are not rising significantly.

"From 1995 to 2000 the average wages for people with a college degree went up over eleven percent," said Luce. "But from 2000 to 2005 wages went up only 1.3 percent."

Between 2000 and 2004 the real earnings of college graduates actually fell more than 3 percent, according to the 2006 Economic Report of the President.

This area houses the most people with bachelor's degrees in the nation. In terms of per capita bachelor's degree attainment, Massachusetts is one of the highest, at about 36.5 percent, according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

"We have a lot of colleges, and they attract people from all over the country and all over the world," said Friedman. "Many often stay here; our industries are education intensive. They require a lot of education for many of the jobs here."

"We do have, I think 120 colleges and universities in the state," said Luce, "so I think that there are a lot of options for people here although those are less and less available to low income people, but it does seem that there has been a culture within Massachusetts that values higher education."

There are some degrees which are more valuable in terms of income and job opportunities.

"In general, the rule of thumb for earnings is avoid occupations where there are lots of women," said Friedman. "The more male the occupation, the higher the pay for both men and women. It's not fair. Within medicine the highest paid specialties are the more male specialties like cardiology and surgery, while the specialties that are more open to women – psychiatry, family practice, OB/GYN – those pay worse. There's more competition because they're more open to women, so there's more people competing for those jobs."

Other degrees, such as math and science, will pay you more out of college, said Morsch, a career adviser from Careerbuilder.com.

"Liberal arts degrees are extremely transferable, so you're getting a very well rounded education that you can apply to multiple career paths and you're not pigeon holing yourself."

'Tis the season for GIFT GIVING

MEM LINKS
Unique and Exotic
Jewelry and Accessories
Amherst Cinema Building
28 Amity St Unit 1F
Amherst, MA 01002
877-226-9795
www.m2mlinks.com

COME JOIN US!
Make your holiday gifts at the
Student Union Craft Center
Mon - Thurs 11-5 pm • Fri 11-6 pm • Sat 1-6 pm
We also offer Holiday Gift Workshops on Tues, Wed, and Thurs night.
Located downstairs in the Student Union, across from the Hatch
(413) 545-2096

Newman Cafe & Catering
Breakfast served all day!!
A Great Place to Study, Relax, and Eat!
over 100 menu items
Daily Lunch and Dinner Specials
WE DO CATERING
For all types of events, we can design a menu to suit your needs
M-Th 7AM - 8PM
Fri 7AM - 5PM
Sat & Sun 8AM - 2PM
Located on UMass campus, next to SOM building
472 North Pleasant St. WWW.NEWMANCAFE.COM
413-549-0401 413-263-6798

WINTER SPECIAL
10x20 for $60
A MONTH TILL MAY AMHERST SELF STORAGE
(413) 253-0664
1270 Federal St. (rt. 9)
Belchertown, MA
01007
Office at Stadium Storage
333 Rock Hill Rd Hadley
Security Gate • Surveillance Cameras
Well Lit • Lock Check
7 Day Access • 24 hour Access
Office Hours 9am-3pm
Pallets Included
Moving Supplies Sold
U-Haul Rental Available

Atkins Farms Country Market
Rt. 116 & Bay Road, South Amherst, MA
(413) 253-9520 • (800) 254-1972
Gifts of Good Taste

Let Atkins deliver a Specialty Gift Basket or Gift Box to friends and family locally or anywhere in the U.S.
Food gifts are hand selected and packed to preserve freshness.
Shipping orders must be received by Dec. 10th.
Order online at: www.atkinsfarms.com

Gifts for Mom & Dad
• Hand Tools
• Power Tools
• Gift Certificates
• Benjamin Moore Paint
231 Main St.
Easthampton, MA
413-527-2693
www.fleurylumber.com
Fleury
Lumber Co., Inc.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Editorial Opinion
Friday, December 8, 2006
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire
Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Casual Friday

The best blizzard survival kit

Debra Capellari

So, I'm wondering something. As the colder weather sets in and talk of impending snowstorms increases, there's always at least one time any given winter when people flock to the grocery store in droves to pick up "necessities" for an incoming nor'easter.

Here's what baffles me: bread and milk, the first two staples that people run down the aisles for in these types of situations, are among the kinds of foods that spoil the quickest. Stocking up on these goodies seems a bit ridiculous, when the idea of a major storm means you won't be able to leave your house for days.

What happens when your six loaves of bread go bad, and your five gallons of milk spoil? I'll tell you. You're left eating canned vegetables and wondering why you weren't more prudent when it came down to purchasing time at the check out counter.

It bread and milk are out as decent, viable options, what should we be shamelessly hoarding instead? The answers vary, depending on where you live and what amenities you have available to you. I ife would be great if you lived in a house with a fireplace. All you'd have to do is buy as many bags of marshmallows, small chocolate bars and graham crackers as you could carry. If I could snatch my advice, I'd say use a shopping cart. One can never have too many ingredients for s'mores. Then you'd light yourself a nice fire, and forget that you can't leave your house.

Hey, let's get real. I'm thinking that not many of us college kids have such nice digs. No offense directed towards our lovely on-campus accommodations, but the best most of us can do is a micro-fridge and a makeshift bar.

Not to worry. You can rock your snowed-in status like a pro if you just keep a few things in mind. If there are whispers of an oncoming barrage of white, fluffy precipitation, do yourself a favor. Get to the nearest grocery store as soon as you can. You need a few supplies.

First thing on your list should be frozen juice concentrates, the stuff in the cans that you find in the freezer section. I'd recommend orange juice, but you can be as daring as you want. That way you can make a mean drink with just water and your libation of choice. Grab those paper umbrellas if you're looking for an extra perk in your solo cup. There's no need to go anywhere but your dorm room when you've got an "umbrella drink." Girls, you don't even need to get out of your pajamas. Comfort is key in this type of situation.

Next, please remember that your micro-fridge never pops popcorn correctly. You might as well stock up on some Smartfood and snag some Cheezits while you're in the junk food aisle. Because of the preservatives, junk food has a long shelf life, promising to get you through any storm you have to weather.

Plus, blowing marshmallows up in the microwave is more interesting than it sounds. Trust me. Just try it out.

Another good snowstorm food? Poptarts. Toasters are illegal in dorms, but you do have a heater. Unwrap these frosted little gems and pop them right on your heater for no longer than 4 minutes. They'll be toasted to perfection.

Even though it never pops a bag of popcorn to your liking, your microwave does have some value to it. If you've got a hankering for some s'mores, here's a tip. Buy the supplies, stack a graham cracker, a marshmallow and a little bar of chocolate on a plate and pop it right into your micro-fridge microwave.

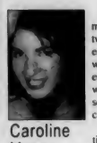
This technique might involve some experimentation, but you've got plenty of time. Plus, blowing marshmallows up in the microwave is more interesting than it sounds. Trust me. Just try it out. (As an aside, I discovered this fun pastime microwaving leftover "Peeps" after Easter Sunday.)

Our old favorites, bread and milk should certainly stay where they belong: on their respective shelves at the grocery store. Why even bother wasting your time with old-school staples when you can try your hand at some new and improved snowstorm survival snacks?

While you're stocking up on all of the goods, here's my advice: have a chuckle at the poor saps who aren't as informed as you. As you load up on your well-preserved boxes and bags of goodies, watch them throw another loaf of 12 grain into their cart and fight over the last gallon of two percent. While you're eating microwave S'mores and Cheezits, make sure you have a toast over your umbrella drink to your new found survival skills.

Debra Capellari is a Collegian columnist

The true meaning



Caroline Moss

Nothing reminds you of your age more than the holiday season. Now, two years into college, I guess my parents consider me financially independent when it comes to buying Christmas presents. Needless to say, gone are the days when my mom would hand my sister something beautifully wrapped with a card claiming it was "from Caroline."

I miss being invited to birthday parties and knowing my parents would provide the gift for the birthday child.

Now it's up to me and my just about empty wallet, to provide presents for everyone on my list. Bah Humbug. I understand now why my mother cringed every time I demanded a new $82 "American Girl Doll" or the "Princess Diana Beanie Baby" that I swore would make me a millionaire by 2004. Gift giving has turned the holiday season into something it shouldn't be: a hassle.

I remember middle school Christmas's, when each year you could measure your popularity by the amount of "Bath and Body Works" merchandise given to you by random friends. You can never have too much sparkly body lotion, apparently, and I can almost guarantee you that 8-year-old "Cucumber Melon After Bath Spray" remains on a shelf in my closet, unopened. I remember receiving presents from people I didn't get anything for, and exclaiming overzealously that I "left theirs at home."

While most of us can skip a meal in town and eat at one of our dining halls, some people aren't so lucky. If you're worried about handing money to the homeless, spend a few bucks on food and give that away instead.

The art of re-gifting was introduced to me, and gone went the reindeer socks, the random scented candles, anything I could possibly find that didn't look too lame. Where's the meaning of Christmas in that? The grunt of giving when you don't want to put a damper on the season like Jessica Simpson's holiday CD.

At 5:30 a.m. on Black Friday, I watched in awe and amusement as mother after mother (and some fathers too), bickered back and forth over iPod speakers, digital cameras and Razor cell phones. I stared as one mother sneakily stole a DVD box set of "24" out of another woman's shopping cart.

I felt as though I was watching "Lifetime Original" meets "Judge Judy." I didn't have pity for anyone shopping that early. fists clenched over three-page long Christmas lists from their children. It serves them right to raise their kids to believe that the holidays mean nothing more than a new pair of UGG boots and an iPod video.

Sure, I wish it was still acceptable to paint macaroni and glue it to a popsicle stick and call it a gift, but there are other things we can do with the little money we have to make this holiday mean more than a bar of soap from "Bath and Body Works." For example:

$1.25 – what it normally would cost you to use a dryer that doesn't even dry clothes can buy at least two cans of food from any given grocery store. Two cans of food usually amount to about four to five servings and could feed those who may not have anything to eat come Christmas day.

$4.99 – what you'd pay for your red solo cup at this weekend's frat party can buy a package of three individual white t-shirts that can clothe three children.

$6.00 – a pack of cigarettes that, let's face it, doesn't benefit your life, equals up to the Subway Special; a bag of chips, a soda and a sandwich. While most of us can skip a meal in town and eat at one of our dining halls, some people aren't so lucky. If you're worried about handing money to the homeless, spend a few bucks on food and give that away instead.

$10.00 – Ten cute toys at the dollar store that you can give to 10 kids who otherwise might not have much to open on Christmas morning.

No money, literally? Your time – volunteer at a soup kitchen or a nursing home. Check out myfriendsplace.org, a Web site dedicated to finding you a way to help others out all year round.

There's also the renowned Food Bank of Western Mass. where your dollar will go far. Visit foodbankwma.org for more information on how you can do your part this holiday season, whether it be hosting a food drive in your dorm or donating a few cans to the cause.

We've heard it all before. Every little bit counts. But if every undergraduate student at UMass put $1 or more towards someone who needed it, think about how many people we could help. That's what the holidays are about, aren't they? I'm almost positive it's not about body spray.

Caroline Moss is a Collegian columnist.

'Week That Must Not Be Named'

Andy Smith

Well, it's that time of year again. The time of year when you walk across campus to get to class as snowflakes repeatedly pelt your uncovered face, causing you to lose feeling in your nose. It's the time of year when Thanksgiving break is over, and the only thing you can think about is going back home for Christmas.

You are trying to plan that special class schedule for next semester that has a healthy balance of allowing you to wake up relatively late, while ending the day rather early. This can only mean one thing is coming soon: finals week.

Am I the only one who cringes when I hear those words? They almost seem synonymous with evil. To borrow from Harry Potter, I think we should call it, "The Week That Must Not Be Named."

The mere thought of it gets me depressed. Imagining 24,000 people laboring over their various textbooks and lecture notes, cramming for two-hour exams, is terrible.

If it were up to me, I would get rid of final exams altogether. I do not see a purpose of culminating many hours of enduring dull lectures and writing countless essays with one two-hour exam. By making a final exam worth a certain percentage of your grade for a class, the professors are in essence taking away the value of what you do during the semester.

Why not just make the average of all the work one does during the semester be equal to what a student's final grade in the class is? The professors can then grant extra-credit opportunities to those who need the grade boost, but those who don't feel they need it don't have to do it. This way, everyone, professors included, can be home a week earlier and have more time to spend with their families and friends over the holidays. Sounds like a perfect proposition to me.

Why not just make the average of all the work one does during the semester be equal to what a student's final grade in the class is?

Don't get me wrong, there are those professors who distribute their final exams or projects before the actual Week That Must Not Be Named. Those are the same professors who agree with my philosophy and care more about being home for the holiday season than staying a week later and giving a cumulative exam.

However, for those select few who do give an exam during The Week That Must Not be Named, know this: your students will despise you for it. Be nice and let us, and yourself, get home for Christmas that much earlier. Nobody likes an Ebenezer Scrooge during the holiday season.

It does not matter how much they enjoyed your lectures or how easy they felt your assignments were. When the end of the semester comes, the last place anyone wants to be is in his or her dorm cramming for your exam that is in a random lecture hall instead of the one it's usually in.

As much as I hate the dreaded F-word, there is actually something about it that I appreciate. I am thankful when a professor uses his or her allotted exam time to allow you to retake one you did poorly on. That is like an early Christmas present to a burnt-out college kid who wants nothing more than to get home and sleep in his or her own bed.

It is the equivalent of extra credit because more than likely you are going to have your old exam in your possession. Then, you can learn from the mistakes you made on the old exam and increase your grade on the new one. Your exam grade goes up, which in turn boosts your final grade in the class. Suddenly, the blemish on that GPA of yours doesn't look so bad. If only more professors offered this opportunity, the world would be a better place.

As the snow keeps falling and the nights get longer, remember that you aren't the only person on campus who has to go through the worst seven days of the semester. When you catatonically stare at a page in your textbook for 20 minutes because your thoughts are somewhere else, take solace in the truth that others are stricken with the same contagious disease.

Hopefully, before you know it, Christmas will be here, which will make finals an afterthought. The many hours of laboring over lecture notes will pave the way to hundreds of hours of relaxation and spending time with friends and family during the holidays.

With over a month before second semester starts, some students will spend their vacation working, trying to make a few dollars before they go back to school. Yes, I know it is not the ideal way to spend your free time, but it sure beats finals week.

Andy Smith is a Collegian columnist

Appreciate convenience

Gregory Kleciak

Once again, the holiday season is coming around, and that can only mean one thing … a fresh lump of argumentative, angry and audacious people who have to step through the shopping malls and stuffed stores in order to procure presents for their families. These angry individuals can only agree on one thing, they all like fighting about which stores have the best bargain.

Where I'm from – Holyoke, MA – people will constantly discuss which stores have sales going on, but around here it is much different, possibly because people are a lot more closed minded in this area.

I've noticed that the people who live around here tend to have a large aversion to Wal-Mart. This is evident in the anti Wal-Mart propaganda I've seen in flyers, heard about by word of mouth and even read about in editorials in The Daily Collegian.

You complain to "the man" that you've got no money, then when he gives you back a reasonable solution like a low-cost, one-stop chop shop you throw it right back in his face.

But why is there this smear campaign against Wal-Mart, one of this area's most important economical and political powers? So, what did I do to investigate this problem? I did what I always do. I listened, then I witnessed, then I listened some more. And this investigative journalism led me to only one conclusion: Most of the arguments against Wal-Mart are completely illogical.

I've heard people claim they hire illegal immigrants to work there. That is true, but the benefits outweigh the negatives in this case. It's all well and good for everyone to complain about how illegal immigrants are taking our jobs, but when it comes down to it people would complain even more if they hired American employees. The Americans would get higher salaries because of our unions. Then Wal-Mart would raise the price on everything from canned goods to HDTVs.

Another argument I've heard a lot of is that Wal-Mart's products come from sweat shops. Not only does the above argument about price increases apply here, but the quality of the goods would decrease exponentially if we hired Americans to do the jobs.

Sometimes average Adam American gets a job that he isn't particularly fond of, like for example shoe-making or building those little kits that repair eyeglasses. When this occurs his laziness and pride interfere, and you end up with a product that is less than effective. Besides, this can only improve our foreign policy. Not only are we giving jobs to people in other countries, we're giving the kids there an alternative to hanging out in the streets. If only kids here could be so ambitious as to start working at an early age.

I've also heard the rumor that Wal-Mart causes local businesses to shut down. Who buys into this garbage? Ever go the Guild in Northampton? I know I love purchasing paper at $8 for 14 sheets.

The stereotype is that college kids have no money. With local businesses charging so much more they'll never get the students in there to actually buy anything. If anything, they're getting the students to rob them blind since the store can't afford security cameras. Places like Wal-Mart help the college kid afford pencils without having to take out a Parent Plus Loan.

And through all the slander and libel that Wal-Mart goes through no one ever mentions its better aspects. Around Halloween I was at Wal-Mart purchasing brake pads and a swim noodle (for my Halloween costume) and they had hired a handicapped woman to sit at the door and greet people.

Stores like Wal-Mart are also a great asset to the elderly. It is one huge store where they can get everything: food, clothing, and hopefully one day soon, wine. People in their twilight years don't want to be running to four different stores just to get their basic staves of life. And think of the gas money that saves everyone.

Wal-Mart is not nearly as bad a place as the culture in this area will lead you to believe. The closest I've gotten to someone advocating Wal-Mart was a disenchanted "Well I guess it's a necessary evil." It seems that this is more of the Liberal-bite-the-hand-that-feeds-you mind frame.

You complain to "the man" that you've got no money, then when he gives you back a reasonable solution like a low-cost, one-stop chop shop you throw it right back in his face.

Well, everyone's entitled to their own opinion thanks to the First Amendment (though I'm sure the Democrats are working on changing that). But while you guys are slumming through tiny, crowded shops looking for a hand-carved notebook, I'll be in aisle 12 of the local Wal-Mart where they sell such technological wonders like four different colored sheets of paper in one binder.

Gregory Kleciak is a Collegian columnist

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?
WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!
THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS FOR NEXT SEMESTER!
GET YOUR ARTWORK PUBLISHED!
Send an e-mail to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!
RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT!
(550 WORD LIMIT)
Send letters to: collegianeditorial@yahoo.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Modern take on holiday music

Rocking holiday tunes

BY ALLIE ROTH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Radio stations and retail stores have been playing holiday music since Thanksgiving (and in some cases, since Halloween). Abandoning their normal play lists for one infested with traditional Christmas tunes is cute for awhile, but we all have our breaking point. One can hear "Jingle Bell Rock" and "All I Want For Christmas" only so many times before running into the hills to be locked in a log cabin where jingle bells do not ring is the only way to escape it.

But one should not denounce holiday music altogether. There is a way to battle the monotony of hearing traditional songs over and over again. There are alternatives. Musicians from all over the spectrum take a stab at writing holiday cheer from their perspective and in some cases infusing their own styles into classics. Even Hanukkah celebrators can have a soundtrack beyond "I Have a Little Dreidle" and Adam Sandler's "The Hanukah Song." It is all about variety this holiday season.

Here are a few examples.

Sufjan Stevens' "Songs for Christmas" (Asthmatic Kitty Records) is as much of a concept album as his earlier release, "Illinoise." The five discs compile four years of holiday cheer into one box set. Stevens puts his off-kilter charm writing original songs and redoing the classics. Each disc is named for holiday-cheer related words ("Hark," "Noel," "Joy," "Ding Dong!," and "Peace"). No where else could one find a song titled "Come on! Let's Boogey to the Elf Dance!" right behind "Silent Night" which precedes "That Was the Worst Christmas Ever."

Hanson's "Snowed In" (Universal Records) may be almost 10 years old but it still remains the best of the boy-band holiday album. This fun loving album exhibits the Hanson brothers at a time when their pre-pubescent harmonies ruled the airwaves. With renditions of well known songs ("White Christmas" and "Rockin' Around the Christmas Tree") and originals ("At Christmas," "Christmas Time," and "Everybody Knows the Claus,") one remembers why these boys were such a sensation back in the day.

The LeeVees' "Hanukah Rocks" (Reprise Records) is an album of songs for those who receive presents over the span of eight days (instead of all at once), enjoy kugel and latkes (instead of ham and eggnog), and play with dreidels (instead of trimming a tree). Written by Adam Gardner (of Guster) and Dave Schneider, they battle tough subjects like what condiment to pair with latkes ("Applesauce vs. Sour cream,") how to pay driedle ("Nun Gimmel Heh Shin"), and what to do on Christmas Day. They even ask the toughest question of all: what is the correct spelling of this beloved holiday ("How Do You Spell Channukkahh?").

The Barenaked Ladies' "Barenaked for the Holidays" (Warner Bros. Records) is the best of both worlds. With special appearances by Michael Buble and Sarah McLachlan, they take a stab at being serious for awhile but revert back to festive jest. They infuse their signature personalities into classic and original Hanukkah and Christmas songs, with a touch of "Auld Lang Syne" to finish it off. Their distinct vocals and dispositions give a new light to old holiday favorites.

Thanks to various options, the holiday season will no longer be an irritating time where the same old rendition of the same old songs rules the airwaves. It is easy to give the "A Charlie Brown Christmas" soundtrack a rest to try one of the alternatives. There is something for everyone, even those who celebrate the underappreciated and underrepresented holiday of Hanukkah (however it may be spelled).

WHAT ARE YOUR TOP 5 ALBUMS OF 2006?
LET US KNOW. E-MAIL US AT ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
LOOK FOR RESULTS ON TUESDAY

Montague Bookmill showcases guitarists

BY MICHAEL HARDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Robby Roiter and Rolf Pechukas will test their boundaries this Saturday night at the cozy Montague Bookmill, roughly 15 minutes north of campus.

Roiter plays an electric guitar in a free-form style of jazz. While he is fully capable of playing a set list, his musical visions often take him on different tangents. It will be a pleasure to see what realms he takes the audience to on Saturday night.

Pechukas features an acoustic set that is often described as folk with a serious funk edge. It has been said that his style is the child of Ani Difranco and James Taylor. He uses the body of his guitar to create percussion, and his thumpy, passionate tunes will most likely leave the audience dazed.

The two musicians, who normally play solo, will accompany each other on stage throughout the night to collaborate. They will split the time on stage when they are not playing together. Since they have two styles that are certainly distinct from each other, it will be intriguing to listen to the music that they create together.

The Montague Bookmill is one of those gems that is hidden in the mountains and forests of western Massachusetts. The Bookmill is super cozy and very scenic, says Pechukas. The building is an old mill, right along the Sawmill River. Now it is a used book store that has been labeled "the best book store you cannot find," according to their Web site, www.montaguebookmill.com. People have been known to wander and get lost for hours in the store. The owners claim they have been lost for 10 years.

Not only is there the Bookmill, but also in the building is the Lady Killigrew cafe. They serve great foods, including various salads, noodles, and grilled sandwiches. The Lady also serves red and white wines, hard cider, and microbrews. One unique beverage the cafe highlights is "Cowboy Coffee," where the coffee grounds steam and separate in the cup while you wait.

Those who are interested in a relaxing evening of great music, food, and drink are all welcome to visit the Montague Bookmill. Dancing and grooving is encouraged by Pechukas' standards, but there are many couches for spreading as well. You may even find yourself grooving pretty hard in your seat – you never know.

The Bookmill is located in Montague, a 10 minute, scenic drive away, up Rt. 63 North to the Rt. 47 junction, which is about eight miles. A couple of turns from there and the Bookmill will appear.

The concert is from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m. on Saturday night. A $10 donation is appreciated for those who go. The night will be worth it for some enchantment may arise.

-Alex Butler contributed to this article.

Globe trotting with Vice DVD proves interesting, educational

BY J.M. FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Take a moment to imagine the worst place in the world. Think about the far away, forgotten locales that are largely ignored by major news networks. Try to smell the waste and feel the tension in a million person slum in Rio, Brazil. Hear the haggling and sporadic gunfire at the world's largest illegal arms market in Durra, Pakistan. Tonight, when you flip past the starving children in need of just 80 cents a day to watch "The Real World," try and remember that the bottom of the barrel is impossible to fathom.

For a slice of scathing, ironic perspective, you can behold all the marvels of nuclear winter and suicide-bomber boy-scout schools from the comfort of a couch, thanks to the "Vice Guide to Travel."

The first installment in Vice Magazine's new DVD series, "The Vice Guide to Travel" is accompanied by a 72-page hard cover book companion. The supplement's introduction sums up the mission behind the travel guide, and the general tone and agenda of Vice Publications.

"The news is all bad. Sitting in our Western comfort, it's easy to forget that most of the world is hell. War, disease, famine, genocide, and poverty dot the globe like big chunks of cancer. Basically, humans are fed."

Going there so you don't have to, Vice has put together a thoroughly entertaining DVD, broken down into eight segments – each with a unique destination and eye-opening experience. Shedding light on the most neglected and underreported destinations, Vice correspondents traverse the globe, reporting from the "worst places on earth." Starting in Chernobyl, Vice correspondents drunkenly hunt mutated bears and pigs with high powered automatic weapons. They visit the slowly crumbling school houses and hotels in the once model city of Soviet innovation. Twenty years after the worst nuclear catastrophe since Hirsohima and Nagaski, Vice exposes the very real dangers of nuclear energy.

Moving on, Vice hits such hotspots as the Congo, searching for dinosaurs and tripping with local pygmies, and Bulgaria where they meet a criminal-turned-real-estate-mogul who had previously met with Osama bin Laden and sold a dirty bomb to French journalists.

Most people have never heard of Vice Magazine – chances are, that won't last for long. Vice occupies the razor-sharp edge of social commentary and rogue journalism. What started as a 16-page Montreal-based Punk-zine in 1994 has morphed into a global media empire, with tentacles in film, music, fashion, and book publishing.

Headquartered in Brooklyn, N.Y., Vice has offices across the globe – from Canada, to Japan, Vice is a fully global lifestyle magazine. Each international edition has region specific content, tailored for and exclusive to its community. The best stories and profiles from each country are shared across national boundaries, making the magazine a unique place for perspective on global youth culture.

Vice is free, and not in the democratic, independent sense of the word. With a circulation of 881,000 copies per issue (11 per year), an estimated one million people will read Vice for no cost by 2007. The glossy publication is chock-full of shocking, eye-opening photography, sometimes bordering on pornographic.

Each month, the magazine cover previews a new set of issues or points of interest. Back covers have titles such as "Conspiracy Theories," "Gangs vs. Cults," and most recently, "The Appalachians." Full issues can be downloaded in PDF format from their website, www.viceland.com. Don't expect to pick up a copy at a local newsstand, Vice has built its reputation by having a readership comprised of youths at the fringes of popular culture – hip, influential individuals who marketers dub "trendsetting metropolitans aged 21-34." Vice can be found at select fashion boutiques, record stores, bars, and cafes. While Vice is not out to save the world, it manages to deliver eye-opening information through hip, memorable writing and reporting.

Vice Magazine walks the precarious line between information and entertainment, serious editorial and ironic exposé of the most pressing issues facing us today. Take a trip with Vice, it might just change the way you look at your world.

The historic Montague Bookmill will feature guitarists Rolf Pechukas and Robby Roiter on Saturday night.

Website of the Week

WWW.HEL-LOOKS.COM

Various fashion Web sites feature what's "in," what's "not," maybe some advice for those not up to par with the latest styles. Not much else. We are bombarded with the idea that fashion is something that happens when models hit the catwalk. However, there is a growing trend of street fashion.

Started as a hobby project of Liisa Jokinen and Sampo Karjalainen, Hel-Looks.com takes a look at what people are wearing half a world away in Finland's capital, Helsinki. From July 2005 onward, the photographers have captured more than 400 different styles from very eccentric Helsinki-ites. Included with each picture is a brief biography, complete with random facts of those featured.

If you find yourself bored and surfing the Internet, check it out – some of the styles are pretty inventive. And who knows, you might just see some styles on the streets of Amherst soon.

-By Alex Butler, Collegian Staff

Have an idea? Want to feature a Web site next semester? Just send us the link. With an e-mail to arts@dailycollegian.com, give us your name and a small write-up about the Web site, and we'll try to include it next semester.

Penn State tossed around reserve quarterback Mike Schneider and the rest of Youngstown State earlier this season. This weekend the Penguins face off with Appalachian State in the semifinals of the Division I Football Championship.

Running back Kevin Richardson set all-time records at Appalachian State for career touchdowns (44) and rushing scores in a season (24). The Mountaineers continue their title defense tomorrow against YSU.

ASU, YSU clash in battle of FCS powers

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When the Appalachian State Mountaineers (12-1) began their defense of last season's NCAA National Championship, many in Boone, N.C., believed that a return trip to Chattanooga, Tenn., was likely, if not guaranteed.

Surely enough ASU will play Saturday for a chance at a second-straight national title when they host the Youngstown State Penguins (11-2) at Kidd Brewer Stadium – kick-off is slated for 4 p.m. The Mountaineers have won 26-straight games at home.

ASU's road back, however, took them in a direction a little different than it thought it would. After the second game of the season, ASU coach Jerry Moore wasn't pleased with the direction of his team. Junior quarterback Trey Elder was anything but impressive and when Division II Mars Hill traveled to Boone, Moore decided to try something different.

Enter Armanti Edwards and a spread offense up to that point ASU ran a zone-option attack. Since instituting the spread attack, the Mountaineers haven't lost and scored more than 41 points in eight of 11 games.

ASU's spread offense utilizes the speed of Edwards and junior running back Kevin Richardson. Typically, Moore will send in a few plays to Edwards who then decides on the fly which to run depending on the opposing team's defensive alignment.

The Mountaineers enter Saturday's game ranked third nationally in total offense (409 yards per game) and scoring offense (34.69 points per game).

Richardson gets a majority of the touches on offense. Earlier this season, he broke the ASU school record for career rushing touchdowns (44) and rushing touchdowns (24) in a single season while running for more than 1,300 yards and averaging over five yards per carry.

Youngstown State coach Tom Heacock knows the challenges posed by the ASU offense, Richardson in particular.

"We've seen a lot of talented backs but there is no question that he fits in that mold. He's a talented guy, a tough guy," Heacock said in his weekly teleconference on Wednesday. "He runs it up in there, as a coach that what you look for and what concerns you."

Regardless of the talent and speed of his offense, Moore knows that when you get to this point, there isn't much separating each team.

"The four schools that are left, all of us have a national championship in our trophy case, [Youngstown State] has four of them," Moore said during his weekly teleconference on Tuesday. "We have a great deal of respect for Youngstown and we're looking forward to playing them."

The Youngstown State offensive attack has some weapons of its own. The Penguin offense ranks ninth nationally at 227.69 yards per game placing it just behind the Mountaineers attack – ASU averages 229.31 yards per contest.

The Penguins combine their zone-option game with a spread offense similar to that of ASU.

"They're an I-formation team plus they do the same things we do," Moore said referring to the versatility of the YSU offense. "They do [the spread offense] and they do [the zone option] and they do both of them very well."

YSU quarterback Tom Zetts features prominently in the both the rushing and passing attacks for the Penguins. Although the Penguins look to run first and foremost, their passing attack can pick it up if ASU shuts down their ground game.

In their opening-round matchup with James Madison, the Penguins threw for 314 yards and a score. JMU held Youngstown State's Marcus Mason to just 78 yards on 26 attempts – he averages 156.9 yards per game. But Zetts carried the Penguins on his right arm and YSU prevailed 35-31.

The same JMU team that held the Penguins under 100 yards on the ground allowed more 168 to YSU.

Both of these teams feature high-powered offenses, however, ASU holds the advantage on the other side of the ball.

Youngstown State ranks 70th nationally in total defense. The Penguins allow 348.8 yards per game including more than 155 on the ground.

"The offense that they run puts you in a bind in some areas with the zone and the read and all the different formations and schemes that they use," Heacock said. "And they've got tremendous athletes doing it and we've got to find a way to play fast."

The Mountaineers, on the other hand, rank ninth in the country, yielding 265.38 yards per game.

A very fast unit, the speed of the ASU defense is matched only by its depth. Coach Moore employs a 4-3 scheme focused on pressuring the quarterback.

Up front, Marques Murrell leads the Mountaineers defensive line. The end has 10.5 sacks in his senior season to lead ASU. In the secondary, senior safety Jeremy Wiggins leads the team with five interceptions to go along with three and a half sacks.

The Penguins defense did manage to force turnovers which could potentially propel them to victory. The Mountaineers had a turnover margin of -.08 on the season. As is the case with most high-speed offenses, fumbles on pitches happen a few times a game, parlaying these miscues into points may be YSU's best chance to upset the defending national champion.

Defeating ASU will be no simple task for the Gateway Conference Champion Penguins, but is certainly not an impossible feat. YSU needs to force the Mountaineers into mistakes while avoiding any mishaps of its own.

Those who follow Division I-AA football know that ASU is great team, come Saturday afternoon, YSU hopes to prove that they, too, are a great team.

Montana fans prepare for Minutemen, semifinal matchup

BY DARRIN PAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As soon as last week's nail-biter victory over New Hampshire was sealed with a Liam Coen kneel-down, the Massachusetts football team (12-1) – and its loyal Maroon and White fan-base – became thirsty for today's semifinal game against Montana. What some people may be forgetting, however, is that the Grizzlies (12-1) have a pretty diehard following of their own. And they are all anxious to welcome the Minutemen to their turf for the much anticipated win-or-you're-out matchup.

The Grizzlies' campus is electrified right now as tens of thousands of proud Montana students are psyched up after a week of preparation and hype for today's slobberknocker.

Ellen Wood, a 19-year old history major at Montana – and a recent transfer from UMass – says she can't get enough of the excitement that is pulsating through the university.

"Campus is crazy for the Griz," she said. "There is a huge fellowship – almost an obsession – to the games and the players, and I think it is because of the school Griz Pride is everywhere.

"I'm really excited about the game," Wood added. "It'll only be my third, but everyone is so enthusiastic, it's hard not to get pumped up. I think it will be a great game. Both teams show great skill, and I am proud to say that I have attended both universities."

This testament to student dedication was echoed by her fiance, Ben Goodman – a recent transfer from Boston University.

The 20-year-old business major said that it is hard to pin down what the mood that's buzzing amongst his peers is like.

"[Everyone is] psyched, anxious, excited, crazed, pumped, ecstatic, obsessed and any other term you can find to describe someone who is indescribably ready for a game," Goodman said. "I have watched every game in person, or on TV, for the last 10 years.

"I love every game I have ever been to and I think a night game under the lights will make it even more enjoyable," he went on to say. "I think it is going to be a fun and interesting game."

The Grizzlies only loss came in the form of a 41-7 thrashing at the hands of Iowa in the first game of the season.

Since then, Montana has been riding a 12-game winning streak and hope to keep it going today against the Minutemen.

"It's big. But, this isn't new territory for the Griz," Goodman commented. "We have been here before and we have won. We have never had all home playoff games, like we did this year, and not gone to the final game. Griz Nation views it as important and necessary to win."

"I am really looking forward to it," Wood mentioned. "They will be playing in the dark, with stadium lights, which will add to the mood. We also come with blankets, cocoa, and pizza, which makes it like a party in the stands."

"I am expecting a great game," Goodman added. "I think these two teams are at the top of their game at the end of the season. I think that it will be a great show Friday evening."

Montana has been to five of the last 10 National Championship games – winning one of them in a 13-6 victory over Furman in 2001 – and look to make it to a sixth with win over the Minutemen.

THE BEST SPRING BREAK EVER!
Mexico
Creative Writing & Yoga
Sun salutations just after dawn, writing by the sea, exploring jungle hills where the river meets crescents of sand.
March 17 - 24
www.writingretreats.org
Patricia Lee Lewis
(413) 527-5819
patricia@writingretreats.org

Plan For The Holidays
Right To Your Home or Airport
877-695-4665
Examples:
4 to BOS~$60/each
4 to NYC~$90/each
3 to BDL~$35/each
Limo Service 24/7/365 :: Anywhere~Anytime

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
Menu...
Sushi:
California Maki $3.95
Salmon Skin $4.25
Alaska $4.95
Salmon Maki $3.95
Chef Specialties:
Mandarin Chicken $12.95
Vegetarian Chicken $10.95
Amazing Chicken $11.50
Panda's Gourmet Shrimp $13.95
Ask about our special sushi rolls, vegetarian options, "light and healthy" entrees, and gluten free entrees.
We Bring Chinatown To You!
Monday-Thursday: 11:30am-11:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am-11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm-10:00pm
103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002 Delivery: (413) 549-0077 www.pandaeastamherst.com

3-Bedroom Apartments
Available Now!
Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
CALL FOR DETAILS:
253-7377
MILLVALLEYESTATES@WINNCO.COM

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Rd. (At Echo Hill)
Amherst • 256-6446
Off Rte. 9, two miles east of Amherst College
OPEN 6AM-10AM MON-FRI
8AM-9PM SAT & SUN
WHAT DO YOU GET?
*Swimming *Tennis
*Basketball *Fitness
HAMPFIT.COM for Rates & Info
Join Now
Winter Special
$188/ 15 Weeks
Student Rate
EFT available

Minutemen struggle against zone defense

ON BASKETBALL from page 10

of his worst games of the year.

BU continually double-teamed Freeman on the block and, with his shoot-first aggressive mentality, he ran into trouble when he had two guys on him and had to look for the open man.

Freeman finished the game with six turnovers, a huge number for a big guy who doesn't handle the ball that much. On the offensive boards, Freeman was tenacious as usual. If he didn't grab the ball and put it back in for two points, he tipped it and kept it alive for Lasme, Dante Milligan or Luke Bonner.

BU coach Dennis Wolff doesn't usually double-team the post according to Lord, so Freeman was probably unprepared for the swarm of defenders around him after he got the ball on offense.

Freeman has always had trouble getting out of double teams. Against BU, the double team usually came from the weakside wing. When you double-team an opposing player, you are forcing someone on your own team to play two offensive players. The offensive guys can make it easier for the defender if they don't utilize the open space and get free.

Freeman looked confused when the double teams came, and wasn't able until about midway through the second half — to find an open man for a basket.

UMass turned the ball over many times trying to get the ball inside to Lasme and Freeman against BU's 2-3 zone. The Terriers came out in zone defense because the Minutemen aren't the best of shooters.

BU packed it in and dared Mayben and sophomore guard Chris Lowe to shoot over the top of the defense. The UMass guards tried to force it in to the big guys, and even when they were able to get the ball to Freeman or Lasme, there were two or three defenders waiting for them.

Lowe was one of the silver linings down the stretch for the Minutemen. He ended the game with six assists and two turnovers in 19 minutes of action. With the ball control issues plaguing UMass, Lord should be ecstatic with that assist-to-turnover ratio.

Playing against a zone will be the Minutemen's biggest challenge this year simply because of their lack of shooting ability. A zone is designed to make a team shoot the ball from long distance and shutdown dribble penetration, but UMass' advantage is with its twin towers, Lasme and Freeman.

Zones will create problems for UMass all year long, and a zone defense is the primary reason why the Eagles made such easy work of the Minutemen last Saturday.

After starting off the season in a slump, Brandon Thomas has picked up his play as of late. He turned in a solid performance against Boston University in Wednesday's 56-54 win, posting 10 points. It was the third time this season he recorded double figures in scoring.

Last season not on Mass Attack's mind game was on Feb. 3 of last season. It was the Minutemen's first win in 12 previous meetings, included in that is 11 losses and one tie — a 3-3 decision on Nov. 12, 2004. Before last February, the Minutemen's previous win over the Eagles came on Jan. 3, 2002 — also a 3-2 game.

HOCKEY from page 10

Sophomore Jon Quick was big for the Minutemen in net last February. He made 47 saves in that game, including 20 in the opening period alone. BC badly out shot UMass in the game 49-29. Reluctantly, Quick counts the game as the highlight of his young career.

"Yeah, I guess so," he said. "Going into the game I really wanted to play well. I was really focused on the game because my previous game I didn't play too well. I really wanted to give a good outing to the team. They played well, I played well — the crowd was unbelievable. A lot of things went right for us that evening."

Much of the offensive firepower from that game is no longer with either club. Goal scorers for the Minutemen were Stephen Werner, Cory Quirk and Jamie Solon. While Quirk remains with the team (eight goals, six assists this season), both Werner and Solon were lost to graduation at the end of last season.

For the Eagles, goals came from Brian Boyle (still with the team) and Chris Collins, who left school early to join the pro ranks. Defenseman Peter Harrold is another big loss they suffered after last season.

After a scoreless first in that game last season, Werner and Quirk jumped UMass out to a 2-0 lead after two periods. Werner's goal opened the scoring at 4:08 and was assisted by Marvin Degon — also lost to graduation. Quirk then took a pass from Alex Berry and doubled the Minutemen's lead four minutes later.

Boyle closed the gap midway through the third, but Solon's goal iced the game before Collins added BC's final tally. Despite each team's key losses, senior captain Matt Anderson says each team still has its own style of play.

"I think our style of play will be much the same," Anderson said. "We're going to continue to get after them."

But the Minutemen are carrying the mindset of what's done is done. Last year was last year and they have to focus on the present.

"So it hasn't been brought up at all," Quick said. "We beat them that time, but they also beat us two other times [last year]. That was all last year. [we] haven't really talked about it."

Just like it was nine months ago, goaltending will once again be the key this weekend. As just about every night in Hockey East, these games feature two of the top goalies in the nation. Opposing Quick is BC's Cory Schneider, arguably the best in the conference.

"I don't really think of it like that because there's nothing I can do to control what the other guy does, how he plays," Quick said of matching up with Schneider. "I just work on my own game and I know what I have to do."

NOTE: Tonight the Student-Athlete Advisory Committee is sponsoring a Toys for Tots toy drive at the Mullins Center. SAAC will be accepting toys suitable for ages 3-15 during the game. All donations support the children at the Shriners Hospital in Springfield.

Momentum critical for break and beyond

Jeremy Rice

Finals are approaching, and that means there's no more time to get around to that work you've been putting off. You have to do well now if you're going to finish the first half of the school year on a positive note.

The same can be said for the Massachusetts hockey team. After an amazing start that turned a number of heads in the hockey world, the Mass Attack has sputtered of late.

After getting embarrassed by Merrimack, 3-0, Tuesday night, the Minutemen find themselves miles away from the first-place, 14th-ranked team they were just three weeks ago.

The team started out strong, going 6-1-1 in its first eight games, only losing to top-ranked Maine in a 4-1 contest that was closer than the final score would dictate. An upset of No. 16 New Hampshire highlighted the early-season success of the Mass Attack, but the team has hit a slump that it needs to dig itself out of this weekend.

However, the most impressive wins since that point were an 8-1 drubbing of Connecticut and a 6-2, third-period explosion against Niagara — both at home.

The Minutemen were riding a four-game winning streak when they were shutout at home for the first time in a year by Vermont — a game that would have made a huge statement in Hockey East, had they pulled out a win. Since that 6-1-1 start, the team is 1-3-1 and is beginning to make the New Hampshire victory look like an early-season fluke.

Now the Maroon and White has a chance to throw themselves right back into the mix in this weekend's home-and-home series with No. 6 Boston College. It is unlikely the Minutemen will get away with four points against the powerful Eagles, but if they can grab two or even three points this weekend, it would be an immense boost for the team heading into the mid-season break.

"It's real important, being the last two games before Christmas break," said sophomore goaltender Jon Quick. "It's kind of like the end of the first half of the season. You want to end on a good note."

If it seems like it's a little early in the season to be worrying about statements and the conference standings, you may not realize the competition UMass is up against. New Hampshire, BC, Boston University, Maine, and Vermont are all alongside UMass in the national Top 20 poll. That's a total of five teams the Minutemen will need to overcome to stay competitive in their conference.

"We started out strong, but we've been kind of up and down lately with the Union loss and the Merrimack loss," Quick said. "So I think this weekend gives us a chance to just right our ship going into the second half of the season."

The Minutemen are currently tied with Maine for fifth in the Hockey East standings. They had a chance to enter the weekend tied with BC at third with a win Tuesday, but now will be trying to play catch-up during the two games.

"It's early yet, but every point matters," Cahoon said. "The points we get early in the year will count a lot at the end of the year. As we go along, we've got to keep accumulating those points."

UMass missed a great chance to accumulate two points Tuesday that would have kept it on pace with the New Hampshire's, BU's, and BC's of the hockey world, and that makes this weekend series that much more significant.

This year's Minutemen have already shown flashes of greatness — beating good teams on the road (UNH) and making quick work of teams they should beat (U-Conn), but the consistency still isn't there. And it needs to be for the Minutemen's season to be longer than last year's.

"I think we've shown that we've got a better skill level than we've had in the past," Cahoon said. "Special teams have been in and out but they've been more good than bad. Overall I think we're an improved team, but we need to continue to improve throughout the year."

Quick may turn out to be the focal point of the team's success down the stretch, as he has kept the team in close games (3-1 tie with BU on Nov. 28). But he is going to need help for this team to keep winning. The team defense has often left him hanging (against Vermont), the offense struggles when playing from behind.

It may not be possible to correct all the flaws over two games — no team has really found its identity this early in the season — but the Minutemen need points this weekend or they will be playing catch-up right through winter, when the meat of the conference schedule arrives.

The Minutemen have all the tools to compete with the perennial powerhouses in Hockey East. Now it's time to prove that UMass will be a name you will be hearing come March.

Jeremy Rice is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at Sports@DailyCollegian.com.

Key players must step up for Minutewomen power-shooting percentage than Turner but has still registered 100 points.

W BASKETBALL from page 10

Primarily a three-point shooter, Bennett has also racked up 15 steals, 51 assists and 38 boards.

Despite these two components, Dacko remains confident that her Minutewomen can take on anyone the Bulls throw in their direction and she expects each of them to bounce back from their rocky games on Wednesday.

Though she was the second-highest scorer UMass had against Hartford, junior forward Kate Mills tallied only 10 points in the contest — a season-low.

Normally a shot-blocking extraordinaire, she also failed to stuff a single shot in her 30 minutes of play.

She kicked aggression at Hartford and she was thinking too much instead of just playing the game," Dacko commented. "A lot of times there weren't double teams on her, but I think sometimes, in her mind she saw double teams. She's got to find a way to take it to them."

Freshman guard Kim Benton started off the season on a tear from behind the arc, but has lagged as of late.

Against the Hawks she went 1-for-4 from the perimeter and 2-for-6 overall, finishing the night with five points.

"Other teams are coming out and are taking some things away. They've put some pressure on Kim on the perimeter," Dacko said. "And our lack of ball movement creates poor shots."

Dacko mentioned that, like always, Benton is still the go-to player at the three-point line.

Someone who seems to have been making gradual progress with each passing game is Stephanie Gerardot — she is currently fifth on the Minutewomen in scoring with 49 points.

In the game against Hartford, however, she managed to produce only four points.

"She's supposed to come in and shoot," Dacko said. "She knows that and she's still passing up the ball. She's still catching it when she's not ready to shoot and that's something she has to work out, but she's still got the green-light."

Junior Pam Rosario also had a disappointing performance against the Hawks. The 5-foot-10 guard/forward, who usually looks like a Hollywood stunt-double as she dives wildly all over the court, was simmered down and reduced to four points, a season-low.

Dacko acknowledges that each of her players will have to get back to their former selves if they have hope of beating the Bulls.

"I think we match up fine [against Buffalo]," Dacko said. "I hope we'll be aggressive, get the ball inside and try to do the things that got have gotten us seven wins."

Goten OF JAPAN STEAKHOUSE
FAMOUS FOR CAPTIVATING CUISINE PREPARED AT YOUR TABLE!
Early Bird Specials
Tues.-Thurs. 5-6 PM
Saturday 12-3 PM
Sunday 4-5 PM
Hours of Operation
Monday Closed
Tues.-Fri. 3-9 PM
Saturday 12-10 PM
Sunday 4-9 PM
104 Old Amherst Rd. Sunderland off Rt. 116
413-665-3628
www.gotenofjapan.com

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 5
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for Fri 12/08/06 thru Thurs 12/15/06
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Apocalypto (R) 11:30 4:00 7:00 10:10*
Happy Feet (PG) 11:15 1:30 4:25 7:00 9:35
Blood Diamond (R) 11:20 4:05 7:15 10:25*
Stranger Than Fiction (PG-13) 11:05 1:45 4:25 7:25
The Holiday (PG-13) 11:40 4:10 7:20 10:20*
The Fountain (PG-13) 10:05
Unaccompanied Minors (PG) 11:00 1:40 4:20 7:35 9:50*
The Nativity Story (PG) 11:25 2:00 4:30 7:30*
Borat(R) 11:30 2:20 4:50 7:40 9:55
The Santa Clause 3: The Escape Clause (G) 11:45 2:15 4:45 7:45
Casino Royale (PG-13) 12:00 4:00 7:10 10:20
Turistas (R) 9:50*
Deck The Halls (PG) 11:50 2:10 4:40 7:20 9:45
Van Wilder Deux: Rise of Taj (R) 10:10*
Dreamgirls (PG-13) 11:10 4:15 7:05 10:00
*no passes or superpasses
+NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413-593-5222
195 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
THIS SATURDAY!
From the 1st season of NBC's "Last Comic Standing" and VH1's "Celebrity Fit Club"
RALPHIE MAY

PASSPORTS PROCESSED AT TOWN CLERK'S OFFICE
TOWN HALL
4 BOLTWOOD AVE, AMHERST
MONDAY-FRIDAY
8:00 AM TO 4:00 PM
USUALLY NO LINES!!!
LAST DAY TO TRAVEL BY AIR OUTSIDE OF THE COUNTRY WITHOUT A PASSPORT IS: JANUARY 22, 2007
TIME IS RUNNING OUT!!!
APPLY NOW - AVOID EXPEDITE FEES
FOR MORE INFO CALL 259-3035

Winter-Session Housing
Taking a class this winter?
Need a place to stay?
Great rates available.
Howard Johnson 413-586-0114
Econo Lodge 413-582-7077
University Lodge 413-256-8111
www.hampshirehospitality.com

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF IN THE COMICS (PAGE 10)
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			8
9				4		7	6
	6	2	5			9		3
2	4
		7	1		2	6
							4	7
7		9			5	8	6
3	1		8					5
				7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Trolley sound
8 Surprised sounds
9 British racetrack
14 Beau number two
15 Help page acronym
16 Strong point
17 Sharp
18 Prevent from succeeding
20 Friendly
22 Four-legged friend
23 All tied up
24 Funny
26 Bow skill
28 Flabbergast
30 Lack of success
32 Adjective-forming suffix
33 Hind part
34 Grassy land
36 Culpability
40 Capture
42 Sun-dried brick
43 Theater drops
45 Wirehood
47 Take the gold
48 Hear visually?
50 Brad or William
51 Sea cow
54 Pose for again
56 Informed about
57 Actress Longoria
58 Hurried
62 Purple shades
63 Shoulder scarf
66 Rub out
67 Paid
68 Provide quarters for
69 Spirited horse
70 Smoked salmon
71 Part of R&M

DOWN
1 Rocky outcrop
2 Parasites or people
3 Benevolent like dad's brother
4 United States or Canada, e.g.
5 Flash of light
6 Switch position
7 Angie's stings
8 Tattle
9 Stairward
10 Poor loser
11 Want badly
12 Sea mammal
13 Itsy-bitsy
19 Guitar rhythm
21 Existence
25 "Thar" star
27 Squeaking sound
28 Bob's bros
29 Dusting powder
31 Angry
33 Send payment
35 Manage through sacrifice
36 Last bio?
37 Departed
39 Northern Italian cuisine
41 Wild hog
44 Velocity
46 German/Polish border river
49 Tart-all
50 Detroit caper
51 Lounging slippers
52 Off to one side
53 Cosmic spectacles
55 Rake fish dish
58 Jason's ship
60 In addition to
61 Bucks and stags
63 Hunter's neighbor
64 Red or White team

JARED LUCEY
FINISHED SUDOKU

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Happiness is like a kiss. You must share it to enjoy it."
—Bernard Meltzer

W.T. SCHMELING BY LEONARDO DICAPRIO AND CLAIRE DANES

Have you seen that movie Alien vs. Predator?
I don't see how that's relevant to my bloodwork, but yes.
Let's start training that symbiote in your chest to kick the Predators @$5 / ring. PRONTO!!!!

EASY MARK BY EVAN ROWLAND

i'm happy most of the time. usually, i just do whatever i feel like doing at the moment but how do i know what i feel like doing? i get confused when i think about it i want to stand on this rock but if i don't and we're really think about it, what do we eat?
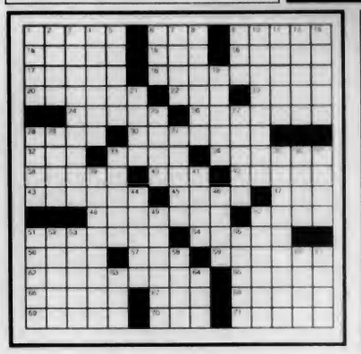
hmm
i want to
to bite it?
confused again

PHD (PILED HIGHER AND DEEPER) BY JORGE CHAM



BEST BAR AROUND
Seven Oks
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
12/8/06
FRIDAY
Foggy Depot
12/9/06
SATURDAY
Damon Reeves
♪ Student Band Wanted ♪
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
413-665-3628
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
NEXT TO CITIZENS ARTS

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You will finish your college career residing from a friend's storage unit.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Celebrities don't know as much about you as you do about them.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You're not fit for this climate. Quit pretending to survive.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
There's always a bigger fish.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
It's only when you've lost everything, that you're free to do anything.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You'll never be 2nd most popular ever again. But you can always bring it up.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Someone envies you greatly.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Lay off the condiments, you eat like a slob.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Their power comes from those crystals. Get those crystals and get their power.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You will be student of the month for the 3rd grade class of Wildwood Elementary.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Those picnic baskets are not going to steal themselves.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Watch out for banana peels.

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

UMass football sucks! You will lose! Go Griz! Call 406-761-5700 Friday morning.

All money going to school and none for the weekend? Let us pay you to be a student and learn leadership with Army ROTC www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 1 beds available starting now or Jan.1 www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Winter break jobs available at the Boston University Bookstore in Kenmore Square! Stop by our job fair all day Thurs. Dec. 14 in Room 178 on the Lower level of the UMass Campus Center or email bnhmnres@bu.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

HOUSE FOR RENT

Cute 2 to 3 bedroom house, neat, on bus stop in Northampton Available mid December. No pets $1300.00 Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 bedroom available for spring semester. $400 a month including utilities. 3 male roommates, across from bus stop call 781-492-5588 for more details.

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

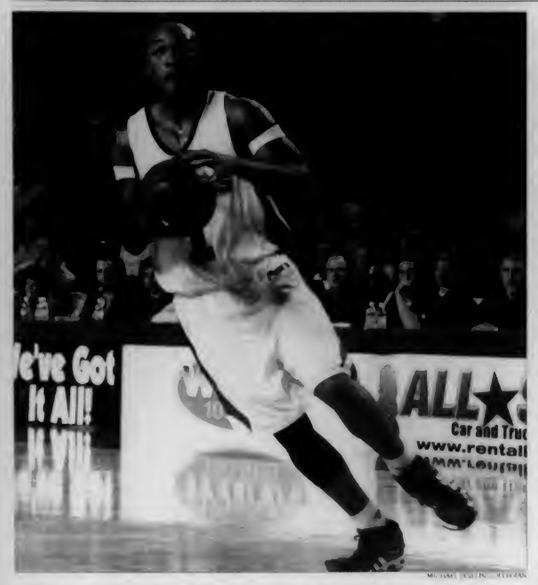
TRAVEL

Alternative spring break Now taking applications Trips to New Orleans, Birmingham and Mississippi Delta. Space is limited, email: umass-sasb@gmail.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



Senior big man Rashaun Freeman led the Minutemen in their 56-54 win over Boston University on Wednesday with a team-high 20 points. He has now surpassed double digits in scoring each game this season.

At home on the road

Success away from Mullins Center key in coming weeks

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's basketball team has already proven to be a much better team away from the Mullins Center this year, and with its next three games of the longest road trip of the season (four) against the Blue Devils, Cardinals and Wildcats, there is still plenty of work that needs to be done.

UMass (7-2) won't be playing Duke, but it takes on Central Connecticut State (3-5) tomorrow night at 8 p.m. at Mohegan Sun Arena before heading to Louisville and Kentucky.

Anyone who gambles would be wise to put their money on the Minutemen practicing free throws and working to prevent turnovers before Saturday night. Those are the two factors that almost cost UMass the game on Wednesday over Boston University.

"The two keys are turnovers and free throws," UMass coach Travis Ford said after Wednesday night's win. "And we can control those two areas. If we cut down turnovers and raise our free throw percentages, we're a totally different team. We're going to go from being just average right now to being very, very good."

The Maroon and White outlasted a Terriers 8-0 run to end the game and squeaked by with a 56-54 win at Agganis Arena. UMass turned the ball over 22 times and missed 11 free throws on the night.

"We're doing everything in our power to work on these free throws," Ford said. "We're trying everything. But our guys are going to make them. I don't want to spend too much time talking to them about it, other than just working on them over and over again."

Ford even had his players running laps after every missed free throw during Tuesday afternoon's practice at the Mullins Center. Whether or not the coaching tactic worked remains to be seen, and Central Connecticut State is next on the schedule.

The Blue Devils are coming off a 63-60 win over Delaware on Wednesday night. They are led by senior guard Javier Mojica. He is the team's scoring leader, averaging 20 points per game and shooting 51 percent from both the field and the three-point line. He also averages a team-best eight rebounds per contest.

The Blue Devils have yet to win back-to-back games this season, and in order to keep that trend going, UMass needs a better showing from junior Gary Forbes on Saturday night.

Forbes finished Wednesday's game with only two points, and it marked the first game of the year that he had single digits in scoring. He was 0-for-4 from the field, and scored his only two baskets from the free throw line.

The Minutemen got the victory, but even Ford admits that he never thought UMass could win a game like that against BU with his star transfer scoring only two points.

"We're putting such an emphasis on putting the ball inside that I think it's taking away from Gary a little bit," Ford said. "We've got to get him the ball. We need to run some plays to get him involved, and we're going to work on some things in practice the next couple of days to get him going a little bit because he's too good.

"And it's not necessarily [Gary's] fault," Ford added. "We're putting such an emphasis on getting it to Rashaun and Stephane that for the other guys, it's kind of taking away from them a little bit. But we had to establish that because that is the strength of our team. Rashaun and Stephane are going to carry us, but we've got to get that better supporting role from everybody else."

Predictable Minutemen do as expected

Rob Greenfield
On Basketball

The Massachusetts men's basketball team is 7-2 and it has won all of the games it should have won and its two losses came against better teams (Pittsburgh and Boston College).

Although the Minutemen could and should have won their meeting with the Eagles on Saturday before a sold-out crowd at the Mullins Center, UMass hasn't strayed from predictability this season.

And to give credit where credit is due, winning games that should be won is something that Steve Lappas was never able to do while on the UMass sidelines.

That being said, Wednesday's 56-54 nail-biter (that BU could have won if a timeout hadn't negated a Tyler Morris three-pointer that would've given BU the lead with less than five seconds left) should not have been that close.

Senior co-captain Stephane Lasme admitted that he didn't think the game would come down to the wire. The inexperience at the point guard position had a direct impact on the Minutemen's inability to put the game away.

Freshman guard Tiki Mayben turned the ball over several times down the stretch and finished with five turnovers in 26 minutes of play. Mayben had only three assists in the game and had trouble staying with the BU guard duo of Morris (nine points) and Brian Macon (13 points).

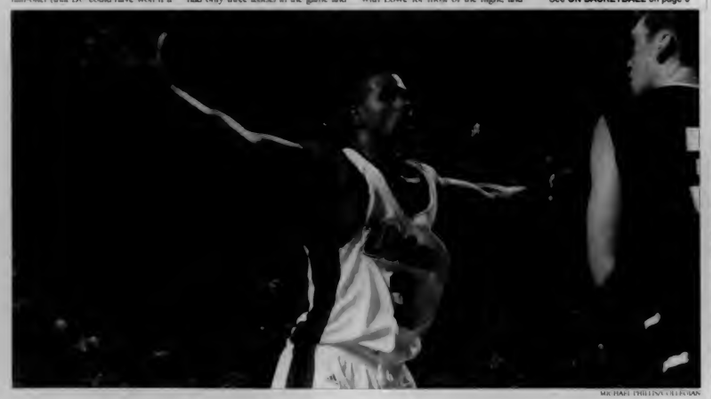
UMass' primary defensive goal was to stop the ferrier shooters on the three-point line. The Minutemen played close to the guards on the perimeter and were successful in contesting every shot (BU went 2-for-10 from beyond the arc), but because they were so concerned about the perimeter game, Macon, Morris and BU freshman guard Corey Lowe took the ball to the basket with consistent success.

Junior Gary Forbes matched up with Lowe for most of the night, and while Lowe didn't shoot well from the perimeter (1-for-4 from three-point range), he scored with ease off of the dribble.

The Minutemen, while not the best of teams defensively, did a better job on the defensive side of the ball. Seniors James Life and Brandon Thomas both fouled jump shooters (Morris made a 2-pointer with the foul and Lowe made a 3-pointer with the foul), which is a big time no-no in defensive basketball.

Senior co-captain Rashaun Freeman turned in a monster 20-point 12-rebound performance but, as UMass coach Travis Ford would tell you, it was one

See ON BASKETBALL on page 8



Junior swingman Gary Forbes has struggled the last few games for the Minutemen. He scored 11 points against Boston College last Saturday, much of which came towards the end of the game, and just two points against the Terriers on Wednesday.

First half ends with series against Eagles

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The culmination of the college hockey season's first half begins tonight.

A home-and-home series between Boston College and the Massachusetts hockey team begins tonight at the Mullins Center, and then shifts to the Conte Forum tomorrow night. Both games will start at 7 p.m. and send each team into the semester break.

After winning six of its first eight contests (6-1-1), UMass enters the game winners of just one of its last five games – a 6-2 victory over non-conference foe Niagara on Dec. 1. Currently the Minutemen sit at 7-4-2 overall, while placing sixth in the conference at 4-3-1. The Mass Attack's last conference points came in a 2-2 tie with Boston University on Nov. 28.

BC (8-4-1, 5-2-1 HEA) isn't exactly soaring into the weekend either. The Eagles have posted wins in just two of their previous five games, going 2-2-1. All three games they didn't win were major upsets for the opposition. Providence College and Harvard won by a combined score of 9-3, while BC and Northeastern skated to a 3-3 tie.

Despite the vulnerability BC has shown this first half, UMass coach Don Cahoon points out they're still the Eagles, the No. 6 team in the nation.

"I think they're a good team, as most BC teams are," he said. "They have some holes in their lineup, but just like all of us have holes in our lineup. I'm not worried about BC, I think they're going to be good, we just have to find a way to be better."

And the last time Cahoon's team and the Eagles met on the ice, UMass was better, walking away with a 3-2 win over the then-No. 3 Eagles. That

See HOCKEY on page 8

Zech Klann has yet to record a point in seven career games against Boston College. He has two chances to change that this weekend.

Junior Pam Rosanio struggled in the Minutewomen's loss to Hartford on Wednesday. She recorded a season-low four points.

Dacko: UMass needs more aggressive play

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's basketball team (7-2) hopes to rebound from Wednesday's disheartening 68-45 loss – courtesy of the Hartford Hawks – for its game versus Buffalo (4-5) on Sunday.

"We watched game film for about 45 minutes [before Thursday's practice] and I think we kind of learned from that," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "When we made a shot we sprinted back on defense, when we missed a shot we didn't. We were thinking too much, instead of reacting."

Dacko stressed that if her players want to pull off a victory against Buffalo, they have to play with more aggression and alertness than they showed in Hartford.

"[I told them] that I thought we were tentative," Dacko said. "Hartford came out and was the aggressor. We came out and missed some shots. That dictated our defense, rather than our offense being dictated by our defense."

She added that the Minutewomen must raise their intensity in order to defeat UB, who has two very talented point-scorers in juniors Heather Turner and Stephanie Bennett.

Turner, a forward, is the Bulls' leading scorer, with a total of 116. The 6-foot post player has drained 48-of-84 shots thus far – for a percentage of 57.1 – and has pulled down 75 total rebounds.

Bennett, a 5-foot-8 guard, is second on the team – and the only other player with triple digits in the points category. At 31.1 percent from the field, she has a

See W. BASKETBALL on page 8

UMASS UPSETS MONTANA ON THE ROAD | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 47 LO: 26 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, DECEMBER 11, 2006

Gridiron titans head for Tennessee

The No. 3 Massachusetts football team defeated the No. 2 Montana Grizzlies, 19-17, on the road Friday in the Division I NCAA Football Championship Subdivision semifinals. The Minutemen now head to Chattanooga, Tenn., for the championship game against Appalachian State. This will be the third national championship game in the football team's history. Pg 10

Group works to improve state's water quality

BY CAITLIN QUINN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

How safe can Massachusetts' residents feel about the water they drink? The state of Massachusetts is ranked second to last in the country for water quality, according to Water Watch.

The Massachusetts Community Water Watch at the University of Massachusetts, with the cooperation of MassPIRG, is working to eliminate the state's water pollution. They are conducting river cleanups along the Connecticut River, which according to the Connecticut River Watershed Council's Web site, was know as the nation's "best landscaped sewer" during the mid-twentieth century.

Water Watch held two river cleanups within the past month and recovered trash, recyclables, and larger objects, such as a dvor and a grill.

The last river cleanup conducted by Water Watch was run by MassPIRG intern Sonny Gamble, and next semester's will be run by Anthony Bondi.

"It is a great opportunity to be part of preserving and improving the quality of our waterways for the future, educating the public, young and old, and meeting people sharing similar concerns," said Gamble in a press release.

All Massachusetts water ways have a mercury advisory. Although the mercury level is not directly harmful to humans, there are some areas in the state where "there is an advisory against eating the fish," according to Bondi. Mercury accumulates in the fish's bodies.

There are three main sources of the state's low water quality.

According to Water Watch, the first source is contaminated discharge from factories. Many of the sources of discharge have been eliminated since the Clean Water Act of 1972, but some still remain. The EPA also recognizes this, stating that it is the biggest probable source of Massachusetts's pollution.

Runoff from storm drains is also a major contributor to the state's pollution. The water that flows into storm drains and gets carried into local waterways contains untreated oils, fertilizers, and pesticides. Not only does this contaminate the water supply, but it also harms wildlife habitat.

The last contributor is the loss of buffer zones — any area of land from the shore to housing, according to Bondi. These areas act as a filter for harmful substances that would otherwise reach the waterways. The loss of buffer zones is mainly attributed to the increasing population and development in the state.

An especially valuable form of buffer zones is wetlands, almost one-third of which have been destroyed since colonial times, according to the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection.

Bondi's goals for next semester's Water Watch campaign extend beyond river cleanups at the Connecticut River.

"This semester was so paced. Next semester I want to expand education," said Bondi. "I really don't feel people know a lot about it unless they are environmental science majors."

The Massachusetts Community Water Watch conducts river cleanups along the Connecticut River to eliminate the state's water pollution.

UHS anonymous HIV testing on hold

BY MEGHAN MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Free anonymous HIV testing offered at the University of Massachusetts will be suspended until April 1, according to officials at University Health Services.

Anonymous HIV testing enables students to avoid any possibility of test results showing up on their medical or insurance records. But the anonymous testing will be unavailable on campus while a UHS staff member goes on maternity leave for the beginning of next semester.

Amanda Collings Vann, a UHS community health and patient educator who runs the anonymous tests, goes on maternity leave this month and will return April 1, 2007.

While the anonymous testing is unavailable on campus, it will be available elsewhere in the state, according to UHS Director Bernette Melby. Students still will be able to get a free, confidential test for the virus through health care providers at UHS.

In contrast to anonymous tests, confidential tests may be linked with students' names, and the results consequently become part of the students' permanent medical or insurance records, according to the UHS Web site.

Moreover, federal law now requires the reporting of anyone who health care providers find tests HIV-positive to state public health authorities.

But anonymous testing associates a numerical code with the test instead of a name, ensuring that results can't be tied to a specific person.

Health Services' anonymous testing service has been available on campus for at least a dozen years, and Collings Vann has been running it for six. Because she is the only staff member trained to administer the tests anonymously, UHS has no one else with the credentials to take her place.

"The training that I have is specialized, and so it's not the kind of thing where somebody can just step in and do it without having gone through the training process," said Collings Vann.

To be able to administer the test, medical personnel must go through a class on the fundamentals of HIV and AIDS and complete a five-day training in HIV testing and counseling. The training covers procedures for testing and maintaining anonymity, and interviewing and counseling patients about partner notification and HIV treatment.

"There isn't anyone [on staff] who is trained to do that, which is kind of the reason they decided to put it on hiatus," said Collings Vann.

In the meantime, although the anonymous testing will be unavailable, students can still get tested by clinicians at Health Services. The confidential testing will still be free to students because UHS will pick up any costs not covered by their insurance, Collings Vann said.

Until Collings Vann's maternity leave begins later this month, UHS will continue to offer the anonymous testing, which students can access by calling the Anonymous HIV testing phone line at 577-5126.

"The anonymous testing site for HIV testing is open for people to make appointments [during] 10 hours per week," Collings Vann said, "and the site can accommodate 12 appointments each week – six intakes and six results.

"We're fairly booked – we do have some people who just don't show up for their appointments, but we're usually booked for those six appointments," she said. "We average probably four a week of intakes with the no-shows."

UHS recently posted a new Web site with a section about HIV testing. According to the site, some people prefer the anonymous testing to confidential testing because it "eliminates the possibility of discrimination based on HIV test information contained in a medical record," and that the people tested maintain control over the knowledge of their test results.

Sexually-transmitted infections recently have been on the decline across the country, partly because people seeking to be tested have been assured that the privacy of their test results and medical records will be respected, according to Gloria Feldt, a former president of Planned Parenthood Federation of America who spoke recently at UMass.

"The way that sexually-transmitted infections have been reduced has been through very available public health measures and testing and facilities available and confidentiality that people knew could be guaranteed," Feldt said.

UMass junior Robyn Spain said that a lack of anonymous testing availability on campus might cause some students to avoid being tested altogether for fear of being identified by test

See HIV on page 2

Hampshire students lead Five College Interchange program

About 2,000 courses are taken on other campuses annually by Hampshire College students participating in the Five College consortium, according to Senior Assistant Director of Admission, Kate Lang.

BY NINA HORIOKA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Students at the University of Massachusetts who've noticed a Hampshire College student or two in classes recently aren't alone: 96 percent of Hampshire students take classes at other campuses of the Five College consortium at some point during their college career.

While Hampshire students lead the list, UMass students, in contrast, seem more reluctant to venture off-campus for classes.

Only about 9 percent of UMass students take a class at Hampshire, Amherst, Smith or Mount Holyoke Colleges, the other campuses of the consortium, according to figures from Five Colleges, Inc.

The Five College consortium was designed to give more opportunities to students, giving them access to a greater range of classes, social events, lectures, and resources such as library books. The consortium is hailed as one of the advantages of attending UMass, yet more students could be taking advantage.

Gary Lei, a transfer to UMass, has never taken a Five College class because he says he is still settling in and getting used to the system. He is a Chinese and architecture major and may consider taking an off campus class in the future.

Conor McMillen, a history major, said he has thought about taking a class, but never has.

"I've been interested," said McMillen, "but I didn't know how to go about it." He said he has never bothered to find out how to register and see the other schedules.

Hampshire students don't seem to mind the hassle of traveling to other campuses and participating in the exchange for challenging classes, good professors or managing schedule conflicts.

Jessica Lamendella, a Hampshire student, said she loves the education class she is taking, called Child and Adolescent Growth and Development, at Smith with Professor Janice Gatty. A Film and Media Studies concentration (majors are called "concentrations" at Hampshire), Lamendella goes to Smith for the education class and for a Pilates class, partly as a way to get off campus and do something different from her normal studies.

UMass students who do make the effort to go off campus are usually not disappointed.

Matthew Anderson, a finance and international relations major, took an introductory Spanish class at Smith last year.

"I had a great experience with the transfer and loved the learning

See HAMPSHIRE on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
issue 68

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eagleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Sean Duram
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Matt Bellveau
Sports Editor Rob Greenfield
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Puddester
Assistant Business Phil Smollet
Asst. Arts. & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts. & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Buonjukaukul
Assistant Sports Danny Picard
Assistant Sports Jon Pelland
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and The Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadcasted since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413)545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Kristen LaCasse

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Nicholas Belanger

Amherst Police log

Escort and Tacoma collide

Tuesday, December 5

6:31 a.m.
A woman driving a 1995 Toyota Camry crashed into a telephone pole on North Pleasant Street. The driver refused medical treatment and insisted she was not injured, but noted that the air bags in the vehicle were destroyed during the collision.

9:19 a.m.
A 1994 Ford Escort and a 2002 Toyota Tacoma collided on Main Street due to the slippery snow on the streets. Neither driver was injured.

1:37 p.m.
A laptop was reported missing from a house on Hobart Lane. The laptop had been lost since Saturday night, when the house was left unlocked and residents of the house were seen "in and out" of the area.

5:27 p.m.
A wallet was stolen off of a waiting seat in the CVS Pharmacy on University Drive. The party had left the store without the wallet, realized it was missing, and returned to find it stolen.

10:13 p.m.
Robert Barnicle, 43, of Conway MA, was arrested for Operating Under the Influence. Barnicle was stopped for marked lane violations on North Pleasant Street and refused field sobriety tests. He was arrested because of the officer's observations, and has been charged with OUI.

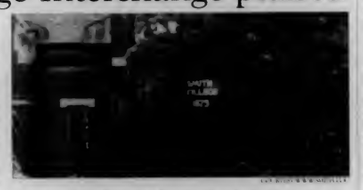
Wednesday December 6

1:16 a.m.
Steven Cetenich, 22, of Seekonk, MA was stopped for a marked lane violation on Main Street and has been charged with OUI.

Holly Seabury Collegian Staff

Five College Interchange praised

HAMPSHIRE from page 2



The Five College Interchange allows students to take classes not offered at their school, such as pilates or Intermediate Macroeconomics offered at Smith College.

environment," he said. "I would definitely do it again."

Marc Shaughnessy, a junior majoring in resource economics, on the other hand, goes to Smith College three days a week for his Intermediate Macroeconomics class. While he said he enjoys the class, he had to take it at Smith because it was not available at UMass this term.

"A lot of kids were rejected from Macroeconomics at UMass because all three sections filled up quickly," Shaughnessy said. But his experience with the exchange has been so good that he might try a class at Amherst next term, he said.

Some 2,000 courses are taken annually by Hampshire students at one of the other four colleges. When a Hampshire student graduates, he or she will have taken an average of seven or eight classes on another campus, according to Senior Assistant Director of Admission Kate Lang. In contrast, a UMass senior will have taken an average of two classes during his or her four years.

Hampshire students seem keen on Five College classes for a number of reasons. One is that Hampshire may not offer them. Hampshire offers only Spanish and Chinese, so students must look elsewhere for all other foreign languages. Students also enroll in classes elsewhere because of time conflicts or the reputation of a good professor.

According to Lang, Hampshire also may be more lenient about accepting Five College class credits than the other schools. Hampshire was founded in 1970 with the idea that it would draw upon the resources of the other four colleges.

With a student body of 1,400 students, Hampshire is regarded as an alternative college — with no credits, no majors, no exams and no grades. Instead, Hampshire focuses on project-based learning and written evaluations.

The academic program is divided into three divisions, in which the student selects and works with a faculty advising committee. All students complete an independent project before graduation. When a Hampshire student takes a Five College class, he or she is awarded a grade which does appear on the transcript, but separate from the written evaluations received for Hampshire classes.

UMass students can see the other school's schedules by visiting the SPIRE Web site and clicking on "Five College Course Catalog." The registration process has just been simplified from paper to online starting this year.

However, students at all five colleges still need to make sure the course is approved at their home university before enrolling at the host university. Students may also search all the course catalogs from the Five Colleges Web site at http://www.fivecolleges.edu/sites/courses.

State to collect names of HIV-positive patients results.

HIV from page 1

"The good thing about anonymous testing is that insurance companies can't get a hold of the results, meaning that there is no chance for negative repercussions," she said, citing insurance premium increases as one possible consequence.

"There is a stigma about HIV/AIDS that exists even in our more educated society – that those with the disease have done something wrong," she added. "No one wants to be labeled like that."

However, a change in public health regulation in Massachusetts tied to changes in federal law will require that those who providers test positively for HIV be tracked by name, beginning Jan. 1, 2007.

The policy change comes after the federal government threatened to take away state funding for patients with HIV and AIDS in states that fail to report HIV cases by name, said Collings Vann.

On the other hand, the state will collect the names of HIV-positive patients only from health care providers who are mandated by the state to report test results – not from anonymous testing sites, which are not required to report names to the state, she explained.

"Although we collect [testing] data, we do not report people who are positive to DPH [the Department of Public Health], so our process will not change," once the anonymous testing resumes in April, she said.

Names of HIV-positive people collected from providers will be stored in a secure computer in the Department of Public Health, according to Collings Vann.

In 2001-2004, an estimated 17,644 people in the United States aged 15-24 were diagnosed with HIV, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Some estimates indicate that one-fourth of HIV cases in the United States are people under the age of 22, most of whom are unaware they are infected and do not receive treatment, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Globally, the AIDS pandemic killed some 3 million people in 2005, more than 2 million of them in Africa alone, according to figures from the United Nations.

While anonymous testing on campus is unavailable, students can access information about other anonymous testing sites by calling the Massachusetts AIDS Action Committee Hotline at (800) 235-2331, said Melby. Alternatively, students may call (413) 577-5101 to make an appointment to get tested through a provider at UHS.

The UHS Web site has a section about HIV testing at www.umass.edu/uhs/services/hivtesting.

Gloria Feldt of Planned Parenthood said that sexually transmitted infections have declined in the U.S. because of the confidentiality guarantee of test results.

Word of the Year: 'Truthiness'

Steven Colbert puts on a Harvard bow tie while addressing a gathering at Harvard University on Dec. 1, 2006. Colbert, who coined the word of the year, defines it as "truth that comes from the gut, not books."

By Adam Goldlick
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — After 12 months of naked partisanship on Capitol Hill, on cable TV and in the blogosphere, the word of the year for 2006 is ... "truthiness."

The word — if one can call it that — best summed up 2006, according to an online survey by dictionary publisher Merriam-Webster.

"Truthiness" was credited to Comedy Central satirist Stephen Colbert, who defined it as "truth that comes from the gut, not books."

"We're at a point where what constitutes truth is a question on a lot of people's minds, and truth has become up for grabs," said Merriam-Webster president John Morse. "'Truthiness' is a playful way for us to think about a very important issue."

Other Top 10 finishers included "war," "insurgent," "sectarian" and "corruption." But "truthiness" won 5-to-1, Morse said.

Colbert, who once derided the folks at Springfield-based Merriam-Webster as the "word police" and a bunch of "wordinistas," was pleased.

"Though I'm no fan of reference books and their fact-based agendas, I am a fan of anyone who chooses to honor me," he said in an e-mail to The Associated Press.

"And what an honor," he said. "Truthiness now joins the lexicographical pantheon with words like 'squash,' 'merry,' 'crumpet,' 'the,' 'xylophone,' 'circuitous,' 'others' and others."

Colbert first uttered "truthiness" during an October 2005 broadcast of "The Colbert Report," his parody of combative, conservative talk shows.

Condoms too big for Indian men

A study shows condoms don't meet size specifications for men in India.

NEW DELHI — Condoms designed to meet international size specifications are too big for many Indian men as their penises fall short of what manufacturers had anticipated, an Indian study has found.

The Indian Council of Medical Research, a leading state-run center, said its initial findings from a two-year study showed 60 percent of men in the financial capital Mumbai had penises about 2.4 cm (one inch) shorter than those condoms catered for.

For a further 30 percent, the difference was at least 5 cm (two inches). A poor fit meant the prophylactics often didn't do the job they were bought for, and led to some tearing or slipping off during use.

"One of the reasons for a failure of up to 20 percent (of condoms) is the association of the size of the condom to the erect penis," the council's Dr. Chander Puri told Reuters, adding another reason was couples often put them on in a hurry.

Puri said many men in India, which has the world's highest HIV positive caseload, were too shy to ask for condoms.

"We need more vending machines for condoms of different sizes so people can pick a condom with confidence that is suited to their needs," he said.

The Times of India reported the ICMR survey had studied 1,400 men between 18-50 years of age in cities like Mumbai and New Delhi as well as in rural areas in a report. It entitled its story "Indian men don't measure up."

Associated Press

WACKY WEDNESDAY
DECEMBER 13
BUY 1 ITEM, GET THE SECOND 50%OFF!*
*UMASS imprinted items only. One day only, 12/13/06. In-store purchases only. Buy one item, get the second of equal or lesser value at 50% off. Not valid with any other discount and some restrictions apply. Excludes diploma frames and Gift Cards.. See store for details.
UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

'Tis the season for GIFT GIVING

Twisted jade and coral
Handmade earrings starting @ $10
Exotic necklaces
Colorful scarves and handbags
We do custom work!
MEM LINKS
Unique and Exotic Jewelry and Accessories
Amherst Cinema Building
28 Amity St Unit 1F
Amherst, MA 01002
877-226-9733
www.mzmlinks.com

COME JOIN US!
Make your holiday gifts at the
Student Union Craft Center
Mon - Thurs 11-5 pm • Fri 11-6 pm • Sat 1-6 pm
We also offer Holiday Gift Workshops on Tues, Wed, and Thurs night.
Located downstairs in the Student Union, across from the Hatch
(413) 545-2096

RIVAGE
all natural dead sea minerals
Special of the Month:
Buy a 13.4 oz of foam bath and receive a 5 oz bath salt of your choice!
Superior processing, SYSTEM of harvesting the riches of the Dead Sea
Dead Sea Minerals have cosmetic and therapeutic benefits
GIFT SETS AVAILABLE FOR ALL BUDGETS!
For more information or products contact Loretta Wynn or Melanie Healy at 413-478-8575

Newman Cafe & Catering
Breakfast served all day!!
A Great Place to Study, Relax, and Eat!
over 100 menu items
Daily Lunch and Dinner Specials
WE DO CATERING
For all types of events, we can design a menu to suit your needs
M-Th 7AM - 8PM
Fri 7AM - 5PM
Sat & Sun 8AM - 3PM
Located on UMass campus, next to SOM building
472 North Pleasant St. www.newmancafe.com
413-549-0401 413-263-6798

WINTER SPECIAL
10x20 for $60 A MONTH TILL MAY
AMHERST SELF STORAGE
(413) 253-0664
1270 Federal St. (rt. 9)
Belchertown, MA 01007
Office at Stadium Storage
333 Rock Hill Rd Hadley
Security Gate • Surveillance Cameras
Well Lit • Lock Check
7 Day Access • 24 hour Access
Office Hours 9AM-3PM
Pallets Included
Moving Supplies Sold
U-Haul Rental Available

Atkins Farms Country Market
Gifts of Good Taste
Rt. 116 & Bay Road, South Amherst, MA
(413) 253-9018 • (800) 256-1971
Let Atkins deliver a Specialty Gift Basket or Gift Box to friends and family locally or anywhere in the U.S.
Food gifts are hand selected and packed to preserve freshness.
Shipping orders must be received by Dec. 10th.
Order online at: www.atkinsfarms.com

Gifts for Mom & Dad
• Hand Tools
• Power Tools
• Gift Certificates
• Benjamin Moore Paint
231 Main St. Easthampton, MA
413-527-2693
www.fleurylumber.com
Fleury Lumber Co., Inc.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, DECEMBER 11, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." – Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Misconstrued Idealism

Ben Duffy

Mahatma Ghandi once said, "I like your Christ. I do not like your Christians. Your Christians are so unlike your Christ." It's a common argument I've heard before from the Left when they are disgusted with religious conservatives. They maintain that Christianity is not inherently bad, and that Jesus Christ is in fact admirable, but that certain religious movements have given Christianity a bad name.

Yet in fact, I disagree with this argument, because my idea as to the true meaning of Jesus' message differs from these people. Nonetheless, I can understand that sometimes an ideological group can reflect poorly upon its won ideology. I would argue that the so-called "diversity" movement is guilty of exactly that. While they say that they favor only multiculturalism, they seem to project anti-Americanism, anti-Christianity and animosity toward white males. While they claim to believe in inclusion and non-discrimination, they seem to favor censorship and affirmative action, a code word for discrimination.

My skin crawls at the mention of the word diversity, precisely because it has been so misused through the years. When I hear that a new diversity program is going to be introduced, I start to feel the foul breath of the Thought Police breathing down my neck. I brace myself for censorship and discrimination. I anticipate hate speech restrictions and blatant racial discrimination under the guise of affirmative action.

That does not mean that I desire a homogeneous environment. While some may say that UMass lacks diversity, I would say that our University offers a multitude of opportunities to interact with people from other backgrounds. When I had a job at the Pita Pit, my two supervisors were from Zaire and India. I had co-workers from Bulgaria, China, and Russia. This semester, I have instructors from Turkey, Hungary, China, Britain, and Germany.

Americans could use a good dose of cultural exposure. Even though we are a massive country of almost 300 million, we still represent only 4.55 percent of the world population. It wouldn't kill us to show a little curiosity about the other 95.45 percent of the world. Basic cultural literacy is a sign of good citizenship.

UMass wants me to graduate with a rudimentary appreciation of other cultures, which is why they require me to take "diversity (Gr)" and "diversity (I)" courses. I was a little bit perturbed to find out that none of the German culture courses that I took last year in Germany will satisfy my diversity (Gr) requirement because Germany is a Western culture. Fine. I understand that.

It's not diversity that I despise, but the so-called diversity movement. It's the people who make the Orwellian assertion that affirmative action is not discrimination.

To knock off that requirement, I am taking a Chinese history course next semester. Even though I am not thrilled that I have to take another course in order to graduate, studying Chinese history will probably make me a better person. I am almost embarrassed about my own ignorance of China. It's not like China is some obscure island in the Pacific that no one has ever heard of; it's the world's most populous nation. It's also one of the oldest civilizations on earth, as well as an emerging military and economic superpower. I'm looking forward to learning more about China.

It's not diversity that I despise, but the so-called diversity movement. It's the people who make the Orwellian assertion that affirmative action is not discrimination, but in fact the complete antithesis of discrimination. I hate the system of "victim points" that grants special treatment based on how many marginalized groups a person falls into.

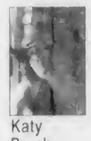
If you're a minority, you get one victim point. If a you're a minority female, you get two victim points. And if you're a transgendered Inuit Wiccan priestess single mother with a disability, then you get five victim points. Victim points function well as a trump card in any argument vaguely related to your marginalized group. Victim points are also handy to have when applying for a job or scholarship, when trying to get into grad school and whenever you want a promotion.

As a Christian white guy, I don't have any victim points, but I do have the pleasure of being blamed for every evil that has ever been committed at any time in history. I also get to hear endless lectures about white privilege and how the power structure favors me. I sometimes think people imagine some kind of white male network as if I could have the president on the phone at any moment because we're both white guys.

I hate the stifling environment of inclusion that is so hypersensitive about race and ethnicity that an honest dialogue is impossible. For some reason, inclusion never seems to include me. I hate the way the diversity movement tolerates vicious attacks on Christianity while bending over backwards never to offend Muslims. I hate the fact that my race and gender require me to practice self-censorship lest other people construe my comments as bigoted. I hate race-based scholarships and segregated dorms.

Diversity is good, and helped in harmonize the world of the world. The real problem is that the diversity movement has veered off its path and spawned into some kind of grotesque monster, one that is trying to push people

Reflecting on the recommendations



Katy Bruck

President Bush's remarks on the Iraq Study Group have, much like his reaction to the midterm elections, given me some hope for American politics. It is clear now that there is a growing consensus that how we conduct ourselves domestically has an effect on foreign affairs. Unfortunately, the prospect of domestic harmony has taken a potentially devastating hit by one defiantly obstinate fact: there are no good strategic options left in Iraq.

In a nutshell, the Iraq Study Group has come forward and told the president that the strategy he has devotedly stuck by these last five years isn't working. Though Bush seems to be taking the group's study seriously, he is still diplomatically waiting to hear what the National Security Council, Pentagon and State Department have to say.

The Iraq Study Group's purpose was to evaluate the situation in Iraq from an objective point of view. One of the most useful things to come out of the ISG's report, in my opinion, is their restatement of what exactly victory means in the context of Iraq. According to the group, military strategy in Iraq must be adjusted because it isn't providing Iraqi citizens with the security or ability to stabilize their own government to maintain a democratic system of government. This is what Bush means by victory. Having this clarified by both Democrats and Republicans is probably going to be the most helpful aspect of the ISG's report.

Having been clarified, it remains to be seen what can be done to change our plan of action into something that can be achieved with as little risk as possible to U.S. and allied forces (including the Iraqi army).

Bush's reluctance to agree to this recommendation partly lies in the fact that it involves opening up talks with Iran and Syria.

The first recommendation that President Bush has decided to consider is the suggestion that American forces be reduced close to the point of complete withdrawal by the first quarter of 2008. This clearly isn't compatible with Mr. Bush's "stay the course" public relations strategy. Rightly, he doesn't want to openly plan to withdrawal American troops in such a volatile and chaotic situation. Opening Iraq up to that kind of vulnerability would not only be unfair, it could possibly result in an even larger threat to American security.

Bush's reluctance to agree to this recommendation partly lies in the fact that it involves opening up talks with Iran and Syria. The United States simply doesn't have the influence to achieve long term stability in the Middle East. According to the ISG, the only way that this could reasonably be achieved would be through the cooperation of other Middle Eastern states.

From a realist point of view, this seems reasonable. Our authority in Iraq has been weakening considerably in the past few years. Even those whose loyalties still lie with the United States are becoming more familiar with the fact that we have very little influence on the violence that continues to increase for Iraqi civilians. A strong argument can be made that our presence has done more to destabilize than to aid in decreasing the violence. If the Iraqi people, newly franchised, decide that we are doing more harm than good, they could very easily decide to depose us. And if that should happen, the first forces that would move in to replace us would be the forces that have tried to extend their influences in Iraq for decades: namely Iran and Syria.

So, Bush is at an impasse in terms of what policy options are left on the table. He could ally himself with the Islamic states of Iran and Syria, reducing the stress on American forces. If he chose to do this, the War on Terror would become exponentially more complicated. Seeing as Iran was labeled by the United States as part of the Axis of Evil, allying ourselves with them would reveal an inconvenient hypocrisy in the stated and actual scope of American military power.

The logic behind wanting to reduce our commitment in Iraq is simple. The fewer resources we expend in Iraq, the more we can focus on addressing other threats to international security. This logic seems even more solid when one considers that many of these security threats have gone unchecked because of our enormous commitment in Iraq. North Korea, another Axis of Evil country, recently boldly announced their development and testing of nuclear weapons. Any fear of retaliation by the United States was apparently quieted by the knowledge of our lack of success in Iraq. The whole world is aware of our compromised situation, and it is not without consequence.

President Bush, along with the rest of our representative government, are left now with a difficult choice: ally ourselves with theocratic governments we have vowed to oppose, or remain in an increasingly precarious military commitment. Whoever the president ultimately decides to listen to, it is now more than ever apparent that we are no longer in a position where we can choose a strategy that will result in the best outcome, but only an acceptable one.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist.

THE IRAQ EXIT

Futures shouldn't be set in stone

Teresa Franco

Too much pressure is put on college students today to immediately plan their lives, and decisions made under this pressure are scarcely good ones.

Vice Chancellor speaks out

Editor's Note: Though this piece was written in September, only tenses have been modified to fit the present.

'Tis the season for rankings in higher education, as publishers declare through special recipes who's up and who's down, and which students throw the best parties. Most of us share a fascination with lists, so news stories on this subject will be forever with us. But what should people make of them, particularly when they assess the value of the state's largest public university, the University of Massachusetts Amherst.

The most discerning consumers of the rankings, of course, are the students and parents preparing to select a college. In admissions work, we know families follow the rankings, but it is our consistent experience that rankings play a limited role in choosing a school. Families study what colleges offer, consult friends, visit campuses, evaluate social climate, and take into account the ingredients of each rating's recipe (some, they find, are little more than poorly concocted casseroles). In the end, they make an informed choice about one of life's most important investments.

So, what have families been deciding about UMass Amherst? When classes began Sep. 6, we welcomed a first-year class of 4,101 students that underscored a three-year trend. UMass Amherst is enjoying growing popularity as a first-choice institution among outstanding students. That's a story that often goes unnoticed, lost amid the tumult of daily news reports and the latest rankings.

This year, UMass Amherst received more than 22,000 applications, the most in 18 years. SAT scores and high school GPAs continue to rise, and on average students ranked in the 24th percentile of their high school class, the highest since 1989. At the University's honors college, enrollment of first-year students will be at a seven-year high. We have also enjoyed success in enhancing campus diversity. This class increase, by 3 percent, to a 20 percent representation of African, Latino, Asian/Pacific Islander and Native American (ALANA) students – the highest percentage in nine years.

This was also the first year of our Early Action program, allowing students who consider UMass Amherst to be among their top choices to apply early and receive a decision by mid-December. More than 3,000 students applied through this program, and 650 enrolled this fall.

That's a heavy dose of numbers, but it represents the real progress being made at the state's flagship university, where we have also recorded steady improvements in our student retention and graduation rates.

What's behind the figures? Families, we believe, see a campus on the rise, a place led by Chancellor John Lombardi that is bolstered by growing philanthropic support and renewed state investment to rebuild our facilities, hire more faculty and teach students in new ways. They notice the New Dirt signs – harbingers of new student housing, a new science building, a new visual arts building and a refurbished library and nursing facility.

They notice when Microsoft, as the Globe reported last year, designated UMass Amherst as the nation's first Microsoft IT Showcase School in the nation. It matters when Microsoft's Steve Ballmer meets with President Jack Wilson on campus and observes, "Over the past seven years, we have worked closely with your faculty and students, and we have been consistently impressed by their accomplishments."

To make a fair assessment of our state's colleges and universities, we would all benefit by listening to business leaders such as Ballmer and the families who select schools and hold them accountable. The real issue for Massachusetts and its future is not where its schools place during the annual rankings season, but how well they perform and educate our students. Flawed formulas and outdated images will fail us.

Michael Gargano Jr. is vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life at the University of Massachusetts Amherst.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, DECEMBER 11, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Project 2050 Deconstructs Dualites

By Matthew Caldwallader
Collegian Staff

There must have been a pretty good number of proud parents in Bowker Auditorium on Thursday night. The show "Deconstructing Dualities: Declassifying Minds, Understanding Versatility" put on by the New WORLD Theater's Project 2050, brought down the house like only a professional production could – except it wasn't professional. In fact, it wasn't even on the collegiate level.

The show was entirely written and performed by an ensemble of talented group of Western Massachusetts high school students. Combining all the elements of hip-hop culture and theater, the group put on an intellectually stimulating, visually vibrant and most of all, entertaining theatrical performance.

It was hard to differentiate between the amazing act, a truncated professional show called "We Got Issues!" and the actual performance itself. That is to say, "We Got Issues!" was accomplished by any means. It was a thought provoking and dance performance one would expect from a professional performance group. But "Deconstructing Dualities," which consisted of about 30 students, attracted a sophisticated level of production quality throughout the night, which struck me as remarkable. This was in part by the contributions of Daniel Peters, a local artist who was hired for the set design. His set design incorporated graffiti, hip-hop and collage to set the perfect tone for the show.

Project 2050 was started five years ago with the stated purpose of addressing the issues relevant to a changing society and demographics. By the year 2050 the U.S. Census Bureau predicts people of color will for the first time become the majority in the United States. With that in mind, the UMass New WORLD Theater started Project 2050 to engage local youth and address the problems that will come with the imminent change. The teenagers were selected from around the region through nomination by peers, teachers, community leaders to attend a 10 day retreat in the middle of the summer in order to create their performance.

By the end of the act, the cast had the audience chanting loudly, "I am not my hair, I am not this skin, I am the soul that lives within."

During the retreat, which took place at Amherst College, the selected teenagers wrote and refined their performance pieces with the help of some professional artists. Nationally respected artists such as Baba Israel, Rocadella and Kwikstep gave their time to help the kids hone their message and produce a powerful show. The diverse performance was heavy on poetry and dance while incorporating other talents like step (similar to the Broadway musical, "Stomp") and beat boxing. The beat boxing, featuring, among other things, an A Capella version of the "Super Mario" theme to rival one done by Group X, was especially impressive thanks to Baba Israel's contribution.

The main theme of the show was getting rid of stereotypes and labels by showing the inhumanity involved in the social and political tools that

On Thursday night, Project 2050 showcased "Deconstructing Dualities: Declassifying Minds, Understanding Versatility," a show [illegible] of Western Mass. high school students.

[illegible] act, "Deconstructing Dualities" showcased the talents of Western Mass. high school students. The show was put on by Project 2050, a program of the UMass New WORLD Theater. The show was directed by Ed Ahern, a professional theater director from Amherst. Ahern, who has been working with the group since its inception, said the show was a collaborative effort between the students and the professionals. "The students wrote the show, and we helped them put it together," he said. "We're not writers, we're theater people."

The show was broken into two family members who made it talking about them, alone in a new place. The show succeeded in inciting feeling for them. Later performers held large racial slurs on poster board over their faces only to rip them apart both physically, and poetically, by exposing the people that exist underneath. By the end of the act, the cast had the audience chanting loudly, "I am not my hair, I am not this skin, I am the soul that lives within."

After the show, during a brief discussion with the audience, the cast was lauded by various audience members for their professional appearance. Some even went as far as to recommend the show do a tour. Though this is unlikely to happen, there is little doubt in my mind that if it did embark on a tour, it would succeed.

Pagan activist speaks at Smith

By Teresa Perry
Collegian Staff

[illegible] musicians and curious [illegible] packed the pews of the [illegible] Chapel at Smith College [illegible] to watch author, activist and witch Starhawk, speak [illegible] problems the world faces [illegible] specifically focused on such [illegible] as the war in Iraq, global warming, [illegible] Hurricane Katrina disaster. [illegible] whole country has been under an evil spell," said Starhawk, speaking on the war in Iraq. "Recently it seems like the spell has been broken."

Starhawk strongly supports ending out of Iraq because of the lives that are being lost, both Iraqi citizens and American soldiers. "Real people die," said Starhawk, "we can't write off whole groups of people that are counting for much." Starhawk also addressed everyone to "honor the dead by [illegible] of Seattle, members of the WTO could not get through to their meeting. Reports of broken windows, looting and heavy police brutality were reported during the event. "It was so important that there was a war in the streets," said Starhawk.

After Katrina struck New Orleans Starhawk joined the Common Ground Collective which helped in every department, from trash pick-up to healthcare. "People died because they were poor," said Starhawk. "they told people to get out but didn't provide any transportation."

As Starhawk took to the streets, cleaning garbage, she saw people helping others out of the goodness of their hearts. "This is a vision of a world I want to live in," she said.

"If you want to change consciousness you have to know what want you want to change it into," said Starhawk. Since she is a practicing witch, she talked on how to change the world through magic. Magic is "the art of changing consciousness at will," she said.

Starhawk gave an example of focusing on the positive by saying that if your casting a love spell, trying to find the person of your dreams, you can't focus on what you didn't like about your ex, but instead, you need to focus on what you want the new person to have. If you do focus on the bad, she warns that "they may talk completely different, may look completely different, they may even be a different gender, but they will still obtain those negative qualities."

Starhawk asks us all to think about what is "most sacred to us." "Do you make time for it?" she asks, "if it's love, do you actually take time for relationships?" She emphasized the need to encourage the positive. "We need to celebrate what we have done," she said. "I think we are all here at this moment because we have a role to play."

"I think this is a really great time to be alive," said Starhawk. "It's like a climax to the movie."

On Thursday night Pagan activist Starhawk spoke on issues of war, society, and relationships at Smith College's Helen Hills Chapel.

Shakespeare goes Mafioso

By Michael Hardiman
Collegian Staff

[illegible] University of [illegible] Theatre Guild [illegible] an interesting version of [illegible] this past weekend. [illegible] crowd filled the Student [illegible] Ballroom, proving large [illegible] for the Guild.

[illegible] director, Ed Ahern, did [illegible] not just portray the same [illegible] version of "Macbeth," so he [illegible] tinkered endlessly over how to [illegible] put his signature on the play [illegible] came up with the idea of [illegible] the play take place in '40s [illegible] and using the mafia as [illegible]. Much research went [illegible] into this idea – it was during [illegible] that the mafia really [illegible] into being, each other, in [illegible] fearing its brotherhood, [illegible] which resembles the [illegible] of "Macbeth."

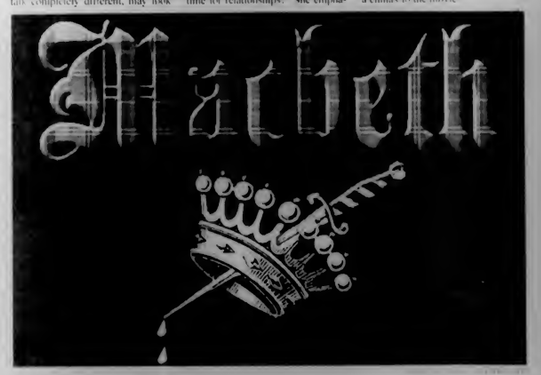
[illegible] the fact that there was [illegible] research done on the subject, the actual play itself felt as [illegible] it could've cut in terms of its [illegible] pace. The costumes, and [illegible] settings where absolutely [illegible] of the era, but something felt [illegible] if it was missing. The script stuck [illegible] to Shakespeare's original words [illegible] so that aided in some of its discomfort. There was no straying [illegible] from the plot of the play, either. Macbeth still meets his treacherous fate in the end.

The actors put on strong performances all around. While Shakespeare can be fast and hard [illegible] to follow sometimes the actors projected their voices perfectly and all was understood.

Natalya Betzig, who played Lady Macbeth, was exceptional. She played a perfect evil counterpart to Macbeth [illegible] was played by Patrick Wade. You could see the web spun by Betzig's character, as she convinced Macbeth to kill Duncan.

Walsh, on the other hand, [illegible] his ups and downs. Prior to murdering Duncan, Macbeth seemed clumsy and lost at times, [illegible] fling around the stage. However after he does the murder, [illegible] a completely different, [illegible] insane version of Macbeth [illegible] fully appears. During the banquet in act three, scene four, Walsh [illegible] on the performance, some sort of accent should have been interwined into the dialogue.

Overall, the play was a blast. Anyone who went was entertained throughout the entirety of the night, whether it was the 1940s martini music, the witches or the comedic breaks.



Over the weekend the UMass Theater Guild presented "Macbeth" at the Student Union Ballroom. Director Ed Ahern gave the story a unique twist by setting the play in 1940s Chicago, and giving it a Mafia theme.

A fairly fun 'Holiday'

By Kate Bauer
Collegian Staff

Nancy Meyers appears to be going on a trend here. The director/producer/writer seems to have a knack for bringing strong women to the screen. And not just beautiful women – women with flaws. Real women.

In her past three films, "What Women Want," "Something's Gotta Give" and now "The Holiday," Meyers has also excelled at bringing adult relationship films to the big screen, delighting us with down-to-earth and entertaining characters.

Her movies aren't big-scale adventures into the mysteries of dating, but Meyers excels at bringing character-driven and realistic stories to the screen, and strong performances out of her actors (there's a reason Diane Keaton was nominated for that Oscar for "Something's").

Specially writing the four main characters for Kate Winslet (Iris), Cameron Diaz (Amanda), Jude Law (Graham) and Jack Black (Miles), Meyer's newest project is a film about love's many sides. As Iris first dictates to the audience in the opening of the film, love can be anything. It can be blind, can fade, be lost and found, and be unrequited.

Iris lives in England as a writer for a London paper, and is having trouble letting go of the love of her life who doesn't love her back (a handsome Rufus Sewell).

Amanda lives a stressful life in L.A. as a movie trailer editor unable to commit to her now cheating boyfriend.

Two weeks before Christmas the women realize how ridiculous both their lives and relationships have become, and decide to take a break from everything. Needing a change of scenery, both women agree to swap homes for two weeks.

An all-star cast of Cameron Diaz, Jack Black, Kate Winslet and Jude Law give Nancy Meyer's recent film "The Holiday" just enough to squeak by with a B-.

Looking to avoid anything involving men, the two settle into their new digs, only to have their vacations up-ended when they run into two men – two charming and too-good-to-be-true men, Graham and Miles. What follows is a heartwarming, albeit clumsy story that, though it may have chick flick written all over it, is an amusing narrative filled with charming characters.

The Holiday
Directed by Nancy Meyers
Starring Cameron Diaz, and Jack Black
Grade B-

Both Iris and Amanda seem to be suffering from relationship issues any common woman might run into – cheating boyfriends, crushes, workaholic lifestyles where there's no time for men. The men themselves even seem to have their own relationship woes, which help to give an interesting insight to the fact that boys have relationship problems too. Law's character is particularly interesting as a guy who isn't who he appears to be, and because of this, turns out to be more of a gentleman.

Though my attention didn't waver, the film drags in some scenes, and the conversations are somewhat sporadic, as if the actors were told to improvise their lines (or they forgot to hire a screenwriter).

If there is any direct fault to this film, it's in Diaz's performance. A humor so well executed in "There's Something About Mary," here Diaz seems to actually be overdoing it.

As a workaholic career woman, her stressed out, perfect hair and inability-to-cry character is exaggerated and a little over-embellished. She seems to only truly shine in scenes with Law, and their performances compliment each other nicely.

Probably the best surprise, and the biggest gamble of the film, was casting Jack Black. Normally expecting some wild and crazy 12-year-old running around like he's on Prozac, Black's character is sweet and funny. He plays a gentleman in every sense of the word, and someone you can actually see Winslet's character fall for.

Despite some implausible premises (mainly Iris and Amanda's picture-perfect homes and Graham's December tan) and weird quirks (who would swap houses with a stranger just like that?), the film guarantees some good jokes and a good message about women finding their strengths and qualities.

So, to the ladies of UMass missing that man in your life? Just got out of a bad relationship? Tired of dealing with the "semester from hell" and in need of a break? "The Holiday" is a good excuse to grab some popcorn and head to the theatre for some quality time with Law's good looks, Winslet's charm, Diaz's smile and Black's jokes. Yes, the film can fit into any chick flick cliche, but the relationships are heartwarming and definitely a good pick-me-up to help put you back in the holiday spirit.

Bartlett hosts Book Swap

The English Student Advisory Board will be hosting a book swap in the lobby of Bartlett Hall today and tomorrow from 8:30 a.m. until 3:00 p.m. Bring your old, used books down to the lobby and exchange them for new books to read over winter break – or come to taste some homemade cookies, banana bread or gingerbread men baked by the Student Advisory Board!

Correction

In Thursday's issue of The Daily Collegian, the byline of writer Matthew Cadwallader's preview for "Deconstructing Dualities" was incorrectly credited. We apologize for this mistake, and would like to clarify that the spelling of the writer's name is Matthew Cadwallader.

Just a click of the remote

The latest in movies, TV, and celebrity news

By Monica Gleiberman
Collegian Staff

Holidays are a time where people come together and just enjoy family time. Students get to enjoy a break from school and friends get together to party. However, one thing everyone will do while home for break is go to the movies. Many movies come out around the holidays. Here is a summary of what's available over the holiday break, courtesy of Zap2it.com.

"Deck the Halls"

An optometrist finds his "King of Christmas" title threatened when a slick car salesman moves next door and begins a contest of yuletide one-upmanship. Stars: Matthew Broderick, Danny DeVito, Kristin Davis and Kristin Chenoweth.

"The Nativity Story"

Mary and Joseph take an arduous, life-changing journey to Bethlehem.
Stars: Keisha Castle-Hughes, Shohreh Aghdashloo, Ciaran Hinds and Oscar Isaac.

"The Pursuit of Happyness" in theatres Friday, Dec. 15

Don't worry about the intentionally misspelled title, as Will Smith is attracting feverish Oscar buzz for this heartwarming true story of a man who battles homelessness to raise his son and complete a prestigious brokerage internship. Stars: Will Smith, Jaden Smith, Thandie Newton.

"Black Christmas" in theatres Monday, Dec. 25

This film is a remake of a '70s movie about a killer who spends his Christmas vacation crank calling and then picking off sorority sisters. Stars: Lacey Chabert, Oliver Hudson, Michelle Trachtenberg and Mary Elizabeth Winstead.

"Fast Track" in theatres Friday, Dec. 29

After his pregnant wife decides to quit her job to be a stay-at-home mother, a slacker has to go work for his father-in-law, with hilarious consequences. Stars: Zach Braff, Amanda Peet, Charles Grodin, Jason Bateman, Mia Farrow, Donal Logue, Amy Poehler, Amy Adams.

And now for your television listings, courtesy of TVguide.com:

Sunday Dec. 17
- "Next Top Model: British Invasion" on The CW at 8 p.m.
- "Survivor: Cook Islands" on CBS at 8 p.m.
- "Simpsons" on FOX at 8 p.m.
- "Never Been Kissed" on AMC at 8 p.m.
- "Worlds Tallest Man" on TLC at 8 p.m.

Monday Dec. 18
- "Brokeback Mountain" on HBO at 8 p.m.
- "Wife Swap" on ABC at 8 p.m. (repeat)
- "Supernanny" on ABC at 9 p.m. (repeat)
- "Deal or No Deal" on NBC at 8 p.m.
- "What About Brian" on ABC at 10 p.m.

Tuesday Dec. 19
- "Gilmore Girls" on The CW at 8 p.m. (repeat)
- "Victoria's Secret Fashion Show" on The CW at 9 p.m. (repeat)
- "NCIS" on CBS at 8 p.m. (repeat)
- "House" on FOX at 8 p.m. (repeat)
- "Identity" on NBC at 8 p.m.

Wednesday Dec. 20
- "Bones" on FOX at 8 p.m. (repeat)
- "Show Me The Money" on ABC at 8 p.m.
- "King of Queens" on CBS at 8 p.m.
- "Day Break" on ABC at 9 p.m.
- "Dateline NBC" on NBC at 9 p.m.

Thursday Dec. 21
- "Smallville" on The CW at 8 p.m. (repeat)
- "Supernatural" on The CW at 9 p.m. (repeat)
- "The O.C." on FOX at 9 p.m.
- "Ugly Betty" on ABC at 8 p.m. (repeat)
- "Grey's Anatomy" on ABC at 9 p.m. (repeat)
- "Identity" on NBC at 8 p.m.

Friday Dec. 22
- "A Home for the Holidays" on CBS at 8 p.m.
- "Justice" on FOX at 8 p.m.
- "America's Funniest Home Videos" on ABC at 8 p.m. (repeat)
- "20/20" on ABC at 9 p.m. (repeat)
- "Close to Home" on CBS at 9 p.m. (repeat)
- "Las Vegas" on NBC at 9 p.m. (repeat)

Here's your celebrity news, courtesy of "Oh Know They Didn't" blog and Google Entertainment News.

It is rumored that Angelina Jolie and Brad Pitt are to be married. Speaking of Brad Pitt, Jennifer Aniston and Vince Vaughn have finally called it quits. The two were constantly facing the tabloid rumors of a break-up, then a marriage – guess the break-up won. Actor Wesley Snipes pleaded not guilty on Friday to charges that he illegally claimed millions of dollars in tax refunds and was allowed to quickly return to an African movie set, U.S. prosecutors said. Actor and former Oscar winner Nicolas Cage plans to take time off from acting to concentrate on his interests, which include developing independent film-making. Britney Spears will launch a new perfume called, Midnight Fantasy, in January. Christina Aguilera is doing some shopping for Britney's two baby boys. That's right; the once-rivals are now friends.

LAST DAY OF CLASSES!!!

WITH:

The Alchemystics

The Problem Addicts

Student Union Ballroom
Wednesday, Dec. 13th
8:00 PM

UMass students: $8
Five College: $10
General Public: $12

LAST DAY OF CLASSES!!!

Baylark leads UM to final

Senior running back Steve Baylark scored two touchdowns in Friday's 19-17 win over the Montana Grizzlies. That performance moved his career total to 48. It was his 14th career game with two or more touchdowns.

FOOTBALL from page 10

the ball loose. It squirted through the end zone for a safety and the Minutemen pulled to within one at 17-16.

The Minutemen took the lead on the next drive. After Montana kicked off from its own 20-yard line, UMass gained good field position and began its drive from its own 49. Baylark rushed ahead for 11 yards on the first two plays for a first down.

Given the second down, Eli Bardark for 15 yards on the last play of the third quarter, moving the Minutemen to the Montana 35. Coen threw three straight incomplete passes the struggled on the day, throwing two interceptions in the game after he had just six on the season) and kicker Chris Koepplin came on to kick a 43-yarder with his team down by one.

Koepplin, in his best Adam Vinatieri impersonation, booted a low liner in the freezing air that barely scooted over the bottom uprights. UMass had the lead, 19-17, and it hung on down the stretch to advance to the third national championship in the history of the program. Baylark silenced the Grizzlies' raucous crowd on the Minutemen's first drive with a 35-yard touchdown run down the middle of the field untouched.

"He has told me that he was going to get us to the national championship game, that he wanted to get me back there," Brown said. "He really put us on his back tonight with a wonderful performance."

Baylark scored his second touchdown of the game at the 8:33 mark of the second quarter to cap an eight-play, 87-yard drive that lasted 3:14. Baylark also caught a 26-yard pass down the left sideline on the first play of the drive to move UMass from its own 13-yard line to the 39-yard line.

It was Baylark's longest reception of the season. Baylark's two-touchdown game was the 14th of his career, and moved his career TD total to 48.

"It was a story-book ending," said offensive lineman Matt Austin. "Everyone played their best tonight and left everything on the field. It was awesome what Steve Baylark was able to do tonight. We all take pride in what we can do for him and his stats are our stats."

UMass records first safety in Friday win

NOTEBOOK from page 10

22 of last year against Maine.

His receptions were good for second-most on the team behind J.J. Moore's six), while he led the Minutemen in receiving yards. His combined yardage made gave him the most yards from scrimmage in the game.

Safety first

Domenique Milton's strip-sack of Josh Swogger on Friday resulted in the Minutemen's first safety this season. Swogger avoided a hit from linebacker Brad Anderson, but Milton came from his blindside and poked the ball out. It rolled out of the back of the end zone and brought the score to 17-16 Montana.

The Minutemen's last safety came in their third game of the 2005 season. They recorded an NCAA-record three safeties on three straight Albany drives in that game; a 40-0 victory. John Hatchell was credited with one, while the team was credited with the other two.

'Quality in all three phases'

UMass coach Don Brown says his team always strives to be great in all three aspects of football – offense, defense and special teams. It is already well known the Minutemen have one of the best offenses and defenses in the nation, but it's UMass' special teams that get overlooked.

Once again, the kicking-duo of punter Christian Koegel and placekicker Chris Koepplin came through for the Minutemen. Koepplin hit a 43-yard field goal to give UMass the advantage it needed. Koegel pinned Montana deep in its own zone with four punts landing inside the 20-yard line.

The capital of UMass

Baylark wasn't the only UMass runner to have a good performance against the Grizzlies. Syracuse transfer Tim Washington posted his highest rushing total of the season in Missoula.

His 120 yards surpassed his previous high of 55 on the Minutemen's first game against Colgate. But the number falls short of the career-high of 53 against Notre Dame Dec. 6, 2003 while still with the Orange. His 22-yard run in the second quarter was also a season-high.

They're back

UMass is 1-1 in its previous two trips to the national title game.

The Minutemen's first trip came in 1978 against Florida A&M. They lost that game to the Rattlers, 35-28.

Mark Whipple then coached the Minutemen to a 55-43 win over Georgia Southern in the 1998 championship. Current head coach Don Brown was the defensive coordinator for Whipple during that time.

Liam Coen threw 25 touchdown passes with just six interceptions during the regular season but threw two picks on Friday vs. Montana.

UMass notches eighth win on the road

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

Lowe. Defeat the off guard Lasme and Freeman roamed the interior and it made for a different and successful look for the Minutemen this season.

The Blue Devils played zone against UMass Saturday night as the last two teams they played Boston University and Boston College have done. The purpose of zone is to put the other team settle for jump shots.

The Minutemen haven't been the best of shooters this season and have struggled with zone defenses this year – but not on Saturday.

When sophomore point guard Chris Lowe and freshman guard Tiki Mayben played at the top of the key, they used dribble penetration to break down the defense. CCSU's help defense usually came from one of their big guys down low, which freed up Lasme and Freeman on the inside.

Mayben found both of them early and had four assists just four minutes into the game and finished with eight.

Ford didn't start Forbes but put him at point guard down the stretch. That allowed Thomas to stay on at small forward as another offensive weapon for the Minutemen.

"Since I took [Forbes] out of the starting lineup in the last two days, he was actually the point guard on the other team in practice," Ford said. "I found the way he played up there.

"They weren't playing Hill or Chris Lowe from the corner," he added. "When the ball would go to the wing, they would double or almost triple the post. So I wanted to get another offensive threat in there and see what happens."

UMass missed on a convincing second-half performance with Forbes at the point, and Ford now has some playing time decisions to make. Lowe and Mayben off see their minutes cut down in the future if Forbes continues to excel at point guard.

Freshman guard Tiki Mayben had eight assists in Saturday's 79-66 win over Central Connecticut State at Mohegan Sun Arena. Mayben is leading the Atlantic 10 conference in assists per game with just over five.

PHO NOODLE SOUP
Gourmet Vietnamese Noodle Dishes
Located at 41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst
413-253-0007 behind Antonio's Pizza
Now Open!

Menu
- Noodle dishes (toppings include steak, seafood, chicken, meatballs)
- Egg rolls
- Spring rolls
- Summer rolls
- Fried rice (varieties include vegetable, chicken, beef, shrimp)

Mon - Thu 11-9 Fri - Sat 11-10 Sun 12-9

Remember to Reserve Your Ride Early for the HOLIDAYS by Phone or WEBSITE!
Get Out of Town Fast & Cheap:
CALL THE EASY WAY TO THE AIRPORT!
Valley Transporter
THE EASY WAY TO THE AIRPORT!
- Available 24/7
- Charters & Groups
- Professional Drivers
- Safe, Clean, Late Model Ford Vans
- VISA, MasterCard
- ALL Major Northeast Airports — Bradley, JFK, Providence
- LOW RATES
- On-Time & Reliable
- Most Trusted Shuttle

CALL TO RESERVE A SEAT: 413-253-1350
OR RESERVE YOUR RIDE ON THE WEB AT: www.valleytransporter.com

PREMIER MASSACHUSETTS NIGHT CLUB
Earn $$$$ for school or fun
Are you interested in dancing?
Earn average $400 a night!
Waitresses/Shot Girls Wanted
No Experience Necessary
Flexible hours
Positions open immediately...

Call for more details!
Anthony's Strip Club
(413)246-0299

Minutemen split weekend

HOCKEY from page 10

of position after challenging Gerbe at the left post and Bradford's goal put UMass away for good.

"One of [our] objectives is to at least win or tie the first two minutes and the last two minutes of each period," said UMass coach Don Cahoon. "Critical momentum swings occur in those time frames, and we clearly didn't meet that objective."

UMass appeared downtrodden as it skated the remainder of the third period and put up little of a fight to get back in the game.

Gerbe's first-period goal was the only score for the next 17 minutes of play until Boyle doubled the Eagles' lead. At 2:24, he tipped a Carl Sneep shot through Quick's five-hole for his first of two goals on the night.

UMass scored a huge power play goal a minute later, swinging the momentum back in its favor. On a near mirror image of his goal from the previous night, Davis tipped in a pass from Chris Capraro at the right post. Cory Quirk fed Capraro from the right circle down to the left post. Capraro then passed across to Davis who had an open net behind a diving Cory Schneider.

The two seemed to find a chink in BC's penalty-kill armor, scoring twice on the same play over the weekend.

"The kids are trained to take what the [opponent] gives them," Cahoon said. "It's a read and a pass that these kids found in the BC penalty kill, and they made a couple of huge plays."

The two teams exchanged goals in the second period, playing back-and-forth hockey for most of the frame. BC badly outshot UMass, 19-04 net. He seemed like he was composed and in charge."

All three goals in the game were scored in a heated second period. The teams fought to a stalemate through nearly the first 30 minutes of the game until Davis scored his fifth goal of the season on the power play.

Almost nine minutes into the second stanza, Capraro passed from the right faceoff circle to Quirk by the left post. BC goaltender Schneider came over to challenge Quirk, but by then the puck was on Davis' stick at the right post. Davis fought off a defender and pushed it across the goal line for the 1-0 lead.

The power play goal was the first for the Minutemen in the last four games. Cahoon was happy to see the team return to its earlier success with the man advantage.

"I thought we moved the puck real well [on the power play]," said Cahoon. "We had some good looks and a couple of chances. The power play goal was beautiful."

BC tied the game while both squads had a man in the box. At 10:55, Dan Bertram intercepted near the left faceoff circle and beat Quick one-on-one.

The Minutemen responded quickly, however, and scored the eventual game-winner on a Burto breakaway, his second goal of the season and first since the season-opener against Sacred Heart.

Matt Anderson started the play in his own zone, passing up the right boards into the neutral zone to Alex Berry. Berry quickly fed Burto, who had slipped behind the defender.

The junior quickly broke away towards Schneider, deked twice and beat Schneider on the blocker side. Neither team could add to their total in a hard-fought third period, and UMass held on to upset the Eagles.

"Matty [Anderson] was very opportunistic," Cahoon said. "[His goal] was kind of poetic justice because he'd been playing well for a long time, and now he gets a chance to bury a huge goal."

The Minutemen now sit in fifth place, tied with No. 3 Maine, where they will stay until conference play resumes in January.

UMass goaltender Jon Quick made 39 saves in the Minutemen's 2-1 victory over the Boston College Eagles on Friday night at the Mullins Center, and 44 saves in Saturday's loss at Boston College.

Second period success saves weekend

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Take the second period out of both nights this weekend, and the result is a lot worse for the Massachusetts hockey team.

UMass split a weekend home-and-home series against Boston College with much success in the second period each night. The middle stanza has been an Achilles heel for the Minutemen this season. In the first period, time and again they came out firing, but hit a lull in the second.

This even happened in the Minutemen's most lopsided victory of the year, an 8-1 drubbing of Connecticut on Nov. 18. That game UMass scored four goals in the first and third period each, while posting none in the second.

Before the weekend, the Minutemen recorded 10 goals in the second period while posting 13 and 15 in the first and second. Now those numbers are closer – UMass' tallies now read like this: 14 in the first, 13 in the second and 15 in the third.

UMass scored both its goals in the second period Friday night in a 2-1 win and kept the Eagles at bay during the middle period of Saturday's 5-2 loss – the score was 3-2 through two periods of play.

In fact, UMass coach Don Cahoon said, except for much of the second period, the Eagles "out-classed" the Minutemen on Saturday.

"I think what happened was, it's a 3-1 game, they have that spread and we hit another power-play goal," Cahoon said of the positives he took out of Saturday night's second. "That gave us a lot of life, and from that point on we really played pretty well and had opportunities and skated."

Junior P.J. Fenton converted the made-advantage chance Cahoon mentioned. The goal came midway through the second half to finish second in two.

Senior forward Chris Davis and junior Matt Burto each tallied goals in the middle period to give the Minutemen the advantage they needed. Davis was the first of the two power play goals on the night, as he tipped in a shot from the point at 8:08 of the second period.

Burto's goal came on a breakaway eight minutes later.

Quick was the lone reason the game remained as close as it did.

"We put so many shots on the young goaltender, Quick," said BC coach Jerry York. "He impressed us with his play on both nights."

Quick played last February in UMass' 3-2 win over BC. He's developed a string of successful outings against one of the Minutemen's biggest rivals.

"I like playing against BC. They're a real good team," said Quick. "They're probably known as one of the top teams in the division, and I just enjoy playing against them."

The shot differential was only slightly closer Friday night BC won the shots battle, 40-23.

"We're thankful and fortunate that we got the win," said Cahoon on Friday night. "The difference obviously, was Quickie was very solid in the

PASSPORTS PROCESSED AT TOWN CLERK'S OFFICE
TOWN HALL
4 BOLTWOOD AVE, AMHERST

MONDAY-FRIDAY
8:00 AM TO 4:00 PM
USUALLY NO LINES!!!

LAST DAY TO TRAVEL BY AIR OUTSIDE OF THE COUNTRY WITHOUT A PASSPORT IS: JANUARY 22, 2007

TIME IS RUNNING OUT!!!
APPLY NOW - AVOID EXPEDITE FEES

FOR MORE INFO CALL 259-3035

Second period play prevented Saturday's 5-2 loss to the Boston College Eagles from getting completely out of reach early on.

UM survives scare in overtime victory

BY J.M. FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Coming off a thorough beating at the hands of the Hartford Hawks last Wednesday, the Massachusetts women's basketball team again took to the road in search of its eighth victory of the year. They needed an extra session and a little luck, but the Minutewomen (8-2) made good on their nine-hour bus ride to Buffalo (4-6), leaving with a 72-67 overtime victory Sunday afternoon at Alumni Arena.

UMass	72
Buffalo	67

After outscoring the Bulls 35-26 in the first half, UMass failed to put the game away, allowing an 11-point lead to evaporate midway through the second period.

Junior forward Kate Mills scored with 26 seconds remaining in regulation to give UMass a 61-60 lead. On the ensuing possession, a foul by sophomore point guard Sakera Young afforded Buffalo a chance to re-capture the lead with seconds remaining, but junior guard Stephanie Bennett missed the first of her two free throws, sinking the second attempt to ensure overtime.

The Minutewomen seized their last opportunity, dominating the overtime period and securing their fifth non-conference road win in seven chances. It was the Minutewomen's first overtime game since Feb. 19, 2004 at St. Bonaventure.

UMass coach Marnie Dacko was pleased with the way her team came out of the gate on the road and with how they finished in overtime.

"I thought we came out from the pack and established ourselves early," Dacko said. "We did a really good job defensively, we made some nice stops, got the lead, and I was pleased with that. The second half we missed some box outs, we missed some layups and some free throws. We kind of took ourselves out of the game. We allowed Buffalo to come [back]."

Dacko felt fortunate that the Minutewomen were able to survive the late surge from the home team.

"I think we got a second chance," she said. "And it was nice to come out of here with a win. The kids took advantage of that second opportunity."

Tying a season high, the Minutewomen had four of five starters in double figures – Mills, senior center Tamara Tatham, junior guard Alisha Tatham and freshman point guard Kim Benton.

The start for Benton was her first of the season, and she responded, draining four 3-pointers in the opening half en route to a 15-point performance.

"Kim came out and made four 3-pointers right away," Dacko said. "They came out [in the second half] and had to change their defense."

Benton has been a spark plug for the Minutewomen all season, showing no hesitation in pulling up and taking shots from downtown. On the season, she is 16-for-48 from behind the arc. Her 48 attempts are double the next highest figure on the team.

The addition of a deep threat for the Minutewomen translates to more opportunities and space for the strong post play of Mills and T. Tatham. Benton's strong performance tonight should increase her minutes moving forward.

"I think Kim gives us the punch we need offensively," Dacko said. "We need them both [Benton and Young], but Kim responded very well and took some pressure off the rest of our offense. You need somebody that can extend the zone or extend the man ... [translating] to less pressure on our post players."

After getting outplayed in their last game, the Minutewomen were able to respond on the road, squashing any doubts of a snowball effect.

"After a Hartford game that we didn't play particularly well in, I'm happy with the outcome," Dacko said. "We're still a work in progress, we're still getting better, but we have an overtime game under our belt now."

Appalachian State reaches title game

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Defending National Champion Appalachian State (13-1) defeated the Youngstown State Penguins (11-3) Saturday night in Boone, N.C., 49-24, to advance to the NCAA Football Championship Subdivision final next Friday in Chattanooga, Tenn., where they'll meet Massachusetts.

ASU	49
YSU	24

The Mountaineers rode 100-yard performances from their star backfield duo of junior running back Kevin Richardson and freshman quarterback Armanti Edwards to victory.

Richardson tallied 145 yards on 18 carries and scored two touchdowns while Edwards ran for 110 yards on 16 carries and a career-high three touchdowns – Edwards was 10-of-12 passing as well for 164 yards and a score.

YSU senior running back Marcus Mason totaled more than 120 yards on 22 carries in his final collegiate game. Mason was just the second back to record more than 100 yards on the ground against the stout Mountaineer defense this season – the other was North Carolina State's Andre Brown in ASU's only loss of the season.

The game started off relatively slowly, which is very uncharacteristic of these two teams – both ASU and YSU average more than 30 points per game.

The Mountaineers moved the ball well on their first drive. However, a Richardson fumble gave YSU the ball at the Mountaineers 49-yard line. The ASU defense held however forcing a punt.

Both teams would trade punts on their next possessions.

The Mountaineers kicked off the scoring when Edwards found junior wide receiver Hans Batichon for an 18-yard score and a 7-0 lead.

After forcing a punt on the ensuing YSU possession and taking over at their own 22, the Mountaineers found the end zone for a second time.

A seven-play 78-yard drive ended when Edwards called his own number on an option to the left. He faked the pitch to Richardson and scampered into the end zone upping the Mountaineer advantage to 14.

Youngstown State refused to go quietly however cutting the lead back to seven on its next possession. Mason carried six times on the nine-play 80-yard drive for YSU – including a one yard touchdown run.

On the drive's fifth play, a third-and-three, Penguin junior quarterback Tom Zetts connected with junior tight end Louis Irizarry for 32 yards moving the Penguins to the Mountaineers 25-yard line.

The Mountaineers responded with two scores of their own – both touchdown runs courtesy of Richardson.

Richardson's first of the two came after a five-play 62-yard drive. The Penguin defense drove Richardson back for a six-yard loss on the first play of the drive. For a team like ASU that relies heavily on the run, 2nd-and-16 can effectively end a drive. But, the play was negated when referees flagged YSU nose tackle Jim Phelan for a face-masking penalty. The 15-yard penalty moved ASU to the Penguins' 47-yard line.

The Penguins punted after four plays on the next drive and ASU took over at its 24.

The Mountaineers opened the drive with a 34-yard pass. Richardson took over, carrying twice for 37 yards – including an 18-yard touchdown run. ASU held its largest lead of the game to that point at 28-7.

Zetts didn't have the best game of his career on Saturday but on the final YSU drive of the first half he did enough. He completed 4-of-6 passes for 56 yards in the series, the last of which was an 18-yard strike to Mason to make it a two-score game heading into half-time.

With the first possession following the break, YSU had an opportunity to make it a one-score game but a sack on 3rd-and-8 forced a punt. The punt is a key play in all-important field position battle that typically dominates playoff games at any level of football.

In this case, YSU lost that battle.

A low snap forced Penguin punter Joe Bishop to scoop the ball off the Kidd Brewer Stadium turf and get the kick off in a hurry. Bishop managed to get the ball in the air but mustered only an eight-yard punt from his own seven-yard line. ASU returned the ball five yards to the YSU ten.

Edwards took a run in on the first play of the drive, reestablishing the Mountaineers 21-point lead.

The teams exchanged possession on the next few series before the Penguins scored three points off of a Brian Palmer 31-yard field goal.

Up 18 points with 3:25 remaining in the third quarter, ASU coach Jerry Moore stuck with his prolific rushing attack but did make one change. He removed Richardson, the team's feature back, from the offense. Freshman Devon Moore entered the game and ran for 86 yards in the final quarter-and-a-half.

Moore capped off the first drive of the fourth quarter with a 25-yard touchdown run.

The teams would trade touchdowns to end the game. Edwards ran one in from eight yards out to extend the YSU lead to 49-17 before YSU senior quarterback Mike Schneider, who replaced Zetts, hooked up with senior wide receiver T.J. Peterson for the game's final score.

SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF IN COMICS
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

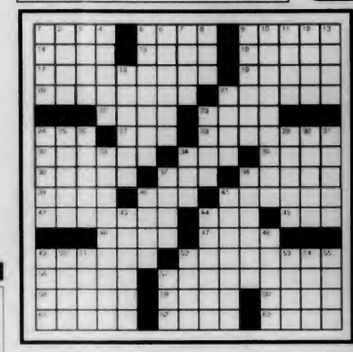
		3			4	8	2
			3				1	6
	6				1
9	8					2		3
			4		6
2		7					6	5
			8				3
6	5			7
	7	4	6			5

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Junk e-mail
5 Part of U.A.E.
9 Itemizes
14 Equestrian game
15 French mother
16 In a dominant position
17 Business partner
19 Museum men
20 Oxford fastener
21 Third-party contact
22 Red ink
23 At any time
24 Crisp off
27 "Kidnapped" author
28 Winnipeg device
32 Glacial epoch
34 Be indisposed
35 Cotton bundle
36 Bed or Lewis
37 Place
38 Shrewd fox
39 ___ vera
40 Derek and Bobby
41 Jailed in marriage
42 Appetizers
44 Org. with maps
45 Decade div.
46 Walking stick
47 Baltic capital
49 Fight and others
52 More vigorous
56 Isea Arthur sitcom
57 Wretched
58 "King Solomon's ___"
59 Will of "The Waltons"
60 Temperate
61 Feeling of apprehension
62 Disarrange
63 Pindar's output

DOWN
1 Health resorts
2 Fancy schmancy
3 As well
4 Bolstered like Bossy
5 Good-natured
6 Bounces back
7 Comic Johnson
8 Busy insect
9 Free up
10 Engraved
11 Datsun or Vega
12 African nation
13 Pour out
18 Priesthood
21 Bad to the bone
23 Send forth
24 Flowering shrub
25 Florida city
26 Evita or Juan
29 Sweet treat
30 Relish'on
31 Card-game displays
33 Some three-digit numbers
34 Neighbor of Ger
37 $4 for a shot
38 Test pilot Chuck
40 Blue and Stiller
41 Deliriments
43 Least colorful
44 Facies the day
46 Crockett's Waterloo
49 Actress Somms
50 Drizzle
51 Ladder part
52 In ___ of
53 Footnote ditto
54 Mister Macpherson
55 Cincinnati nine
57 Grand Casino letters



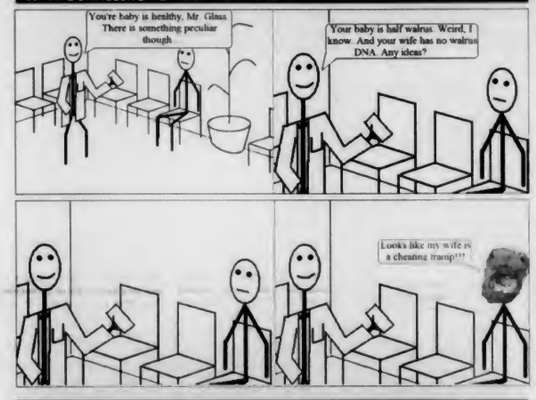
JAKE RODGERS FINISHED SUDOKU! TWICE!

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The Supreme Court has ruled that they cannot have a nativity scene in Washington, D.C. This wasn't for any religious reasons. They couldn't find three wise men and a virgin."

—Mark Twain

W.T. SCHMELING BY AGENT FOX MULDER



You're baby is healthy, Mr. Glass. There is something peculiar though
Your baby is half walrus. Weird, I know. And your wife has no walrus DNA. Any ideas?
Looks like my wife is a cheating tramp!!!

19 BY RAY FRANK

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You're not really getting any work done at the library.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You can't screw up forever.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Spread some holiday cheer. It will raise spirits, including your own.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Watch what you say. Some people still believe.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You have a repressed memory of vomiting while sitting on Santa's lap at the mall.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Do they know it's Christmas time at all?

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Dress warmly... you'll be living out on the streets soon enough.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You can't live forever without screwing up.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
At least you're not an inmate in a Russian prison.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Life is wonderful. Though, it can be hard to notice sometimes.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Your evil twin has broken out of the clinic and is playing pinball with your innards.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Finals. What's the big deal, anyways?

DELANO'S
TONIGHT: TEAM TRIVIA!
WEDNESDAY NIGHT: DJ/ KARAOKE WITH PAULIE V
(TICKET NIGHT)
PINOCCHIO'S FOOD SPECIALS DURING TRIVIA, MUNCHIES, PIZZA, AND MORE...
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun - Wed: 3pm - 2am
Thurs - Sat: 3pm - 3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Try out Army ROTC's Minuteman Battalion and join the wave of the new greatest generation. No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 or www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 1 beds available starting now or Jan.1 www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AUTOMOBILES FOR SALE

94 Nissan Pickup Good Condition 130k $1800 call 413-695-9292

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Winter break jobs available at the Boston University Bookstore in Kenmore Square! Stop by our job fair all day Thurs. Dec. 14 in Room 178 on the Lower level of the UMass Campus Center or email bnhmnres@bu.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

HOUSE FOR RENT

Cute 2 to 3 bedroom house, neat, on bus stop in Northampton Available mid December. No pets $1300.00 Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

ROOM FOR RENT

1 bedroom available for spring semester. $400 a month including utilities. 3 male roommates, across from bus stop call 781-492-5588 for more details.

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

TRAVEL

Alternative spring break Now taking applications Trips to New Orleans, Birmingham and Mississippi Delta. Space is limited, email: umassasb@gmail.com

TRAVEL

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions. Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849 Great group discounts!

Celebrate a safe and happy holiday season from The Daily Collegian.

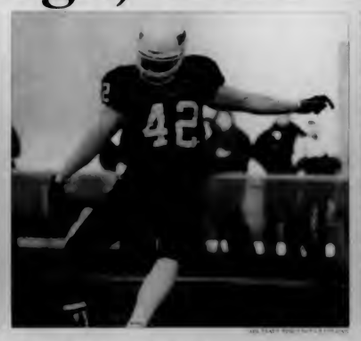
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, DECEMBER 11, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Chattanooga, here they come

Sophomore quarterback Liam Coen threw two interceptions in the semifinal matchup against Montana on Friday night.



Kicker Chris Kneppelin gave the Minutemen a big lift against Montana when he booted the game-winning 43-yard field goal.

Courtney Robinson intercepted Montana quarterback Josh Swogger at the 12:40 mark of the fourth quarter in Friday's semifinal.

Win propels UM to third title matchup

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass	19
Montana	17

The Massachusetts football team is going to the national championship in Chattanooga, Tennessee.

The Minutemen played through the freezing cold and biting wind to defeat the Montana Grizzlies, 19-17, to advance to the national championship game against Appalachian State on Friday.

UMass bulldozer Steve Baylark ran for 169 yards on 29 carries with two touchdowns in the win, overcoming a nagging knee injury to lead the Minutemen to a slim two-point victory.

"It was an unbelievable environment here," UMass coach Don Brown said. "It was a great testament to our players for what they were able to accomplish tonight. We have focused on a one-game approach all season, and now we can say we're going to Chattanooga."

The Minutemen, down 17-14 at halftime, didn't allow a Grizzlies score in the second half, making it three straight postseason games that UMass hasn't allowed a point in the second half.

UMass pulled within one when punter Christian Koegel – who had three punts inside the Montana 10-yard line – kicked it down to the 2-yard line. The Grizzlies started at their 8 after an illegal block penalty on the return pushed the Grizzlies half way to the goal line.

Montana started its drive with 2:17 left in the third and Thomas Brooks-Fletcher (16 carries, 74 yards on the day) ran up the middle for two yards on first down. Grizzlies quarterback Josh Swogger threw an incomplete pass on second down before Domenique Milton sacked Swogger on third down and popped

See FOOTBALL on page 7

Senior running back Steve Baylark rushed for 169 yards on 29 carries for two touchdowns in Saturday's semifinal matchup with the Montana Grizzlies. Baylark also caught a career-long, 25-yard pass in the win.

Baylark doesn't disappoint in semifinal game

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Riding on the back of senior running back Steve Baylark, the Massachusetts football team is moving on to its third national championship game. Once again, Baylark turned in a stellar performance, this time in the Minutemen's 19-17 win over Montana.

Not much more can be said of UMass' workhorse. He turned in another career day on Friday. Baylark sliced through the Grizzly defense for 169 yards. His 29 carries were the second-most he recorded this season. Baylark carried the ball 33 times for 152 yards on Oct. 21 against Rhode Island.

He truly is the Minutemen's featured back this season. Just twice, out of 14 games, did Baylark carry the ball less than 20 times – those against Stony Brook on Sept. 23 and Maine on Nov. 11.

In a contest where the UMass passing game needed a little help – sophomore quarterback Liam Coen threw two interceptions against the Grizzlies – Baylark was there once again to carry the load.

UMass was first on the board thanks to a 35-yard Baylark run in the first quarter. He ran right over center and burst up the middle of the field on UMass' opening drive. It was his longest carry of the evening.

A Baylark five-yard touchdown scamper capped an eight-play, 87-yard drive for the Minutemen in the second quarter.

But Baylark's legs weren't the only appendages on display in Missoula on Friday. On top of his 159 yards on the ground, Baylark added five catches for 76 yards, which is a career high. He broke his previous high of 64. That came on Oct.

See NOTEBOOK on page 7

Minutemen grab eighth victory

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In a second-half explosion against Central Connecticut State at Mohegan Sun Arena, the Massachusetts men's basketball team stormed to its eighth victory of the season with a 79-66 win on Saturday night.

Senior co-captains Rashaun Freeman and Stephane Lasme notched double-doubles in the win. Freeman led UMass with 23 points and 10 rebounds, and

UMass	79
CCSU	66

Lasme followed with 19 points and 14 rebounds.

UMass stays on the road for its next three games, including match-ups with Louisville on Wednesday at 8 p.m. and Kentucky on Dec. 22.

The Minutemen went into halftime tied at 30-all with the Blue Devils but came out firing in the second half, perhaps attributable to UMass coach Travis Ford's mid-game realization.

"At halftime, they probably weren't feeling too good with themselves after I got done," he said. "I've been too nice to these guys. Play time is over. I may have been coddling these guys a little bit, trying to play 10 or 12 guys . . . not anymore. Not anymore. You don't produce, you don't play. You don't do the right things I'm going to let you know it."

Senior Brandon Thomas scored eight points in UMass' 79-66 win over Central Connecticut State on Saturday night.

The Minutemen did enough to win in the second half, outscoring the Blue Devils by 13 and running away with the game down the stretch.

Junior Gary Forbes scored 11 points and has been in double digits in scoring for every game this season. Forbes also played at the point guard position for a good chunk of his 34 minutes, and tallied eight assists in his new role.

"[Forbes] needs to be a guy that gets 12 to 15 points, eight to 10 rebounds, seven or eight assists, one or two turnovers, one or two blocks, one to two steals," Ford said. "That's the type of player he is. He's not one dimensional."

Ford tried Forbes at the point and senior Brandon Thomas at the small forward position with senior

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

UMass splits weekend with BC

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts hockey team split a weekend series with Boston College, taking the first game at home 2-1 before falling hard in Chestnut Hill, 5-2.

No. 16 UMass (8-5-2, 5-4-1 Hockey East) recovered from its mid-week letdown to Merrimack by taking care of business at home Friday night, defeating No. 6 BC behind goals by Chris Davis and Matt Burto and a 39-save effort from goaltender Jon Quick.

Sophomore Cory Quirk had an assist and two shots in the Minutemen's victory over Boston College in the first game of the weekend series.

The Minutemen then followed BC back to Chestnut Hill for the second game of the home-and-home series. Despite stellar play by Quick (44 saves) the Minutemen fell behind early in the third. The Eagles scored two goals in the first 90 seconds of the frame to pull away for good and even the series. The Mass Attack is off until

UMass	2
BC	1
UMass	2
BC	5

Dec. 29 when it plays in the Dodge Holiday Classic in Minneapolis.

The Minutemen played from behind for all but the first 48 seconds of Saturday's game in front 5,447 fans at Conte Forum. The Eagles jumped ahead in the first minute of play thanks to Nathan Gerbe goal, but the game was over for good early in the third.

BC scored 50 seconds in to make it a 4-2 game and then came right back up the ice to add another, much to the chagrin of a frustrated Quick.

The Eagles' Joe Rooney fed Anthony Aiello at the faceoff circle to Quick's left. BC captain Brian Boyle tipped Aiello's shot past Quick's blocker for the two-goal lead.

Thirty-six seconds later, BC lit the lamp again. Gerbe added to his point total for the night, streaking up the right side and centering the puck for Brock Bradford. Quick was out

See HOCKEY on page 8

NO BREAK FOR MINUTEWOMEN | PAGE 10

THE BRAZILIAN GIRLS COME TO UMASS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 47 LO: 31 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 2006

UMass threatened with lawsuit

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Building Authority has been threatened with a lawsuit by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW) Local Number 7 for failing to release certified payroll records for the subcontractors Wayne J. Griffin Electric and CLP Resources for work on the North Area Residences.

A letter from UMass Project Secretary Rebecca Chmura listing all of the received certified weekly payrolls from Griffin Electric and all of Griffin Electric's subcontractors dated Sept. 29 was missing two weeks from Griffin Electric and gave no mention of CLP Resources, a national temporary help agency.

According to the Web site of the Office of the Massachusetts Attorney General, under state law, all contractors and subcontractors are required to file weekly certified payroll records with the awarding authority on a public works project, signed by the contractor or agent under pains of perjury.

Paul Gour, Business Agent for IBEW Local 7 calls the failure of Griffin Electric and CLP to have submitted payroll records on time "illegal."

"The bottom line is somebody has to be responsible for filing certified payrolls," Gour said. "They are supposed to be done in a week, and to this date we are missing two from Griffin and CLP has not sent any in yet."

Requests by IBEW Local 7 for the certified payroll records for the two missing weeks in August for Griffin Electric and any records from CLP have been refused by the UMass Building Authority. Aaron Krakow, attorney for IBEW Local 7, accused the University of violating Massachusetts General Laws on public records in a letter to the agent of the UMass Building Authority dated Nov. 28.

Krakow also charged the University with "unlawful" interference with a request made by IBEW Local 7 for certified payroll records from the company in charge of the North Area Residences project, Dimeo Construction.

"My client was told by a Dimeo Construction representative that he had been directed by the Building Authority to not provide my client with any of the requested payroll records," Krakow wrote in the letter.

Failure of the University to immediately provide the information, according to Krakow's letter, would result in the filing of a legal suit against UMass and the UMass Building Authority. Roy Neidbala, the Resident Engineer for UMass on the project and the man who, according to Robert Wilson, Assistant Business Agent for IBEW Local 7, was responsible for ensuring that certified payrolls were submitted properly, did not respond to questions from The Daily Collegian.

The two branches of CLP East Hartford, Conn. and Natick, Mass. – that were subcontracted by Griffin Electric during the construction, according to Gour, have denied any involvement in the North Area Residences project.

Three members of IBEW Local 7, Marc Riel, Wade Garrison and Dan Labatu, have signed depositions as to the nature of their work for CLP and Griffin Electric on the project. In his deposition, Riel recalls seeing over 18 signatures on the CLP time sheet during his time on the job. Each week, according to Garrison and Riel's depositions, their CLP supplied time cards were signed by the Griffin Electric foreman on the project Scott Miller.

Miller confirmed that Griffin Electric had used temporary help services to com-

See UNION on page 2

Students encounter discrimination based on religious garb

Tensions raised post-Sept. 11 in the U.S. have resulted in politicians abroad targeting Muslim religious garb as an immodest political irritant.

BY KRISTA COSCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

War in Iraq and the Middle East as well as terrorism in the United States and abroad have made religious-observant Muslims targets for discrimination, obscuring the fact that the point of traditional religious fashion usually is modesty, according to University of Massachusetts religious and student leaders.

Despite the swirl of political tension and war that ironically conceal the point, religious-observant Muslims and other local religious leaders and students say they dress modestly as an expression of faith and connection to a God of peace.

"The point of modesty is to focus on substance rather than image and to not be ostentatious or pretentious," said Meryam Kazmi, vice president of the UMass Muslim Students Association.

"I think modesty is recognized by all religions as being a virtuous quality," she said, a staple not only for the religions, but for the attire that accompanies them.

Just as Muslim women often dress to conceal their bodies, so traditional Catholic nuns wore – some still wear – black robes, rosaries and crucifixes and an elaborate headdress. Even secular Catholics cover up, and not just because of an emphasis on modesty.

"It's about finding a balance and expressing the dignity of your personhood in the way you dress," said Nicole Desrochers, a UMass student and member of the Newman Center. the UMass Catholic student center. She sees dressing modestly as a way one chooses to live life, not necessarily connected to religion.

"You don't have to be religious to want to express the dignity and value of your personhood," Desrochers said. "I think a lot of women at UMass dress modestly, religious and not. I think it's not as much of a matter of faith as a matter of respect and awe of the great value of the human person."

Nevertheless, modesty does seem to be associated with some religious views.

According to the Catechism of the Catholic Church, a book of Catholic teachings, "purity requires modesty ... modesty protects the intimate center of the person. It means refusing to unveil what should remain hidden." Moreover, the Catechism states, "the forms taken by modesty vary from one culture to another. Everywhere, however, modesty exists as an intuition of the spiritual dignity proper to man."

At UMass, according to Newman Center campus minister Chris Clark, "3,000 students report they are Catholic to the University, and as many as half of the student population is nominally Catholic," meaning they are Catholic at least in name. Many of those students express their religious views through the way they dress, she said.

To indicate religious belief, a Catholic sometimes will wear a cross around the neck, a wristband, or even a tattoo to express faith, according to Brendan Conway, a UMass student and member of the Newman Center.

Some Jewish students here, too, dress modestly as a sign of religious observance. According to Aviva Shomich, a

See FASHION on page 2

ROTC recruiting causes controversy

BY MICHAEL HERMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The U.S. military death toll in Iraq is nearing 3,000, a new Democrat-dominated Congress will be sworn in next month, the Iraq Study Group last week declared that it is time to change course in the Middle and Near East – and a University of Massachusetts anti-war activist wants to restart the draft and throw military recruiters off campus.

"I think it's inherently immoral for [the ROTC] to be recruiting on campus, given that they're basically recruiting people for the occupations overseas," declared Jeffrey Napolitano, Graduate Student Senate president and member of the UMass Anti-War Coalition.

But Major John Driscoll insists that the Reserve Officers Training Corps is an integral part of the culture, history and campus life of UMass.

"We're a part of this campus," Driscoll said. "We're on various committees in the school because we are a department of UMass. We've been here since 1869."

Driscoll said he believes that activists are opposed to "our country's policy in Iraq," not to the cadets and service members who are on campus.

In contrast, Napolitano said a big part of the current anti-war effort is "opposing the ROTC being on campus."

"Universities should not support military aggression on their campus," Napolitano said. "I think it's fundamentally in opposition to the role and purpose of a university."

If the differences between Napolitano and Driscoll are clear on recruiting on campus, their differences over reinstating the draft may be even sharper.

"I believe in an all-volunteer Army because the quality of people coming in, coupled with the desire to serve, makes us the most effective fighting force this country has ever seen," said Driscoll, who teaches military science at UMass.

University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate president and member of the UMass Anti-War Coalition, Jeffrey Napolitano is calling for a reinstatement of the draft and an end to campus recruiting.

But that, Napolitano said, is the wrong perspective from which to be viewing the issue.

"If there is going to be a military, then there needs to be a draft," he said. "It's a democratic way of ensuring that the military is representative of the people," and a potential brake to adventurous politicians seeking to stoke conflict without citizen review.

The vehemence of such disagreements sometimes seems to leave student veterans feeling marginalized. One of them is Jon Schnauber, a veteran of the first Iraq war and of Operation Enduring Freedom in Afghanistan and president of VASMA, the Veterans and Service Members Association.

"I don't think [the anti-war activists] necessarily protest soldiers. A lot of them have 'Support the troops' as a slogan," said Schnauber. "The part of that I don't understand sometimes is that, regardless of what side you're on ... they'll have 'Support the troops. Support the war' or 'Support the troops. Bring them home.'

"As a veteran, I would just like to know that I have support. I don't want people to attach their own agendas to the fact that I'm a veteran or I'm a soldier."

"The political views of veterans are in such a wide range," added Jaime Zagarni, secretary of VASMA.

"They cross the entire political spectrum, so to

See MILITARY on page 2

Holocaust deniers gather for conference

BY NASSER KARIMI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran hosted Holocaust deniers from around the world Monday at a conference examining whether the Nazi genocide took place, a meeting Israel's prime minister condemned as a "sick phenomenon."

The 67 participants from 30 countries included former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke and Holocaust skeptics who have been prosecuted in Europe for questioning whether 6 million Jews were killed by the Nazis or whether gas chambers were ever used.

"The number of victims at the Auschwitz concentration camp could be about 2,007," Australian Frederick Toben told the conference, according to a Farsi translation of his remarks. "The railroad to the camp did not have enough capacity to transfer large numbers of Jews," said Toben, who was jailed in 1999 in Germany for casting doubt on the Holocaust.

The two-day conference was initiated by President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad in an apparent attempt to burnish his status as a tough opponent of Israel. The hard-line president has described the Holocaust as a "myth" and called for Israel to be wiped off the map.

Earlier this year, his government backed an exhibition of anti-Israel cartoons in a show of defiance after Danish cartoons caricaturing Islam's Prophet Muhammad were published in Europe, raising an outcry among Muslims.

Organizers and participants touted the conference as a scholarly gathering aimed at discussing the Holocaust away from Western taboos and the restrictions imposed on scholars in Europe. In Germany, Austria and France, it is illegal to deny aspects of the Holocaust.

Duke, a former Louisiana state representative, praised Ahmadinejad for his "courage" in holding a conference "to offer free speech for the world's most repressed idea: Holocaust revisionism."

"In Europe, you can freely question, ridicule and deny Jesus Christ. The same is true for the Prophet Muhammad, and nothing will happen to you," Duke said. "But offer a single question of the smallest part of the Holocaust and you face prison."

Also among participants were two rabbis and four other members of the group Jews United Against Zionism, who were dressed in the traditional long black coats and black hats of ultra-

See NAZI on page 2

Discovery, space station dock for week's stay

The U.S. Space Shuttle Discovery and the International Space Station docked with seven astronauts aboard.

BY MIKE SCHNEIDER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — After a two-day journey, space shuttle Discovery reached the international space station Monday for a weeklong stay to continue construction on the orbiting lab and rotate out a crew member.

Discovery commander Mark Polansky closed in on the station at a tenth of a foot per second before latches automatically linked the spacecraft as they flew 220 miles above southeast Asia shortly before a sunrise.

"Capture confirmed," Polansky told Mission Control and the space station.

About an hour before docking, Discovery did a slow back flip so the space station crew could photograph its belly for any signs of liftoff damage.

Polansky executed the maneuver as the shuttle flew about 600 feet beneath the station. The images will be transmitted to Mission Control for analysis.

Six of Discovery's seven astronauts planned to spend a week at the space station. The seventh astronaut, Sunita "Suni" Williams, will live there for six months, replacing German astronaut Thomas Reiter of the European Space Agency.

"You've got a resident and six houseguests that are ready to come aboard," Polansky radioed the space station.

The space station's commander, U.S. astronaut Michael Lopez-Alegria responded: "You guys won't even have to wipe your feet when you come in."

The space agency has been especially alert to damage to the shuttle's heat shield since the Columbia tragedy in 2003. A piece of foam broke off Columbia's external fuel tank during liftoff and gashed a wing, allowing hot gases to penetrate the spacecraft during its return to Earth. All seven astronauts died.

NASA on Sunday said the shuttle's heat shield appeared to be in good shape, but it will be a few days before engineers can rule out any damage from Saturday's liftoff, the first nighttime shuttle launch in four years.

As the space station came into view of Discovery, Williams told Mission Control: "It's beautiful."

Mission Control responded: "I don't know what kind of creature comforts you're going to have, but you're going to have a room with a view."

In the hours before the docking, set for Monday evening, Discovery made a series of jet firings to put it on course with the space station.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 69

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wilnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jasmeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Sean Duram
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Velade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smuller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dollimitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakunkul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEARS. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALOE, LIFE, BE AND THE COLLEGE SIGNAL. IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN. IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING, RATES, AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Duram, Matt Belliveau

Turkish politician receives death threats after speaking out

FASHION from page 1

Jewish student and member of Hillel at UMass. Orthodox Jewish women wear "long skirts, long sleeved shirts, and no V-neck tops" for modesty.

Jewish men and boys often wear a kippa or yarmulke, the Hebrew words for a small skull cap ranging in size from four to nine inches in diameter, to show that "the Divine Presence is always over your head," according to the Jewish Talmud, the embodiment of Jewish customs and traditions.

Some Jews wear the kippa only while praying or when they are involved with religious practice. Other, more traditional Jewish men wear the skull cap the entire day, and may not walk far without a head covering, especially outside.

While the use of the skull cap is more obvious than modest dress and can frequently be seen around campus, it, too, expresses modesty.

Despite the focus on modesty, tensions raised post-Sept. 11 in the United States and after other terrorist actions have resulted in politicians abroad targeting Muslim religious garb as an immodest political irritant, even in schools.

French legislators banned the wearing of Muslim headscarves and other religious symbols in public schools, though not universities, two years ago. In England, Muslim school teacher Aishah Azmi was suspended from her job in September after refusing to remove a veil that covered her face while she taught at Headfield Church of England junior school in Dewsbury, not far from Leeds.

In Germany, Turkish-born Green Party politician Ekin Deligoz urged Muslim women to take off the "hijab," the Muslim headscarf which she called "a symbol of women's oppression." But Deligoz received death threats and is now under police protection, according to a recent news report.

Such tensions abroad raise the question whether similar actions could be in the offing even here, even though the First Amendment declares, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," including freedom to express religious beliefs through dress.

Such repressive measures would be not only unfair but pointless, according to Kazmi, of the UMass Muslim Student Association. Traditional Muslim dress, like the modest dress of other religions, is "not enforcing [any religious views] on anyone else," she said.

Because of the First Amendment guarantee of freedom of religion, any such ban in not only would be ineffective, but "it would come as a real shock," said Kazmi. "America is all about individualism and freedom of religion, so a ban on hijab [the Muslim scarf] would clearly be going against basic American values."

According to Kazmi, many French Muslims accept the ban because they are "very disenfranchised and many are in a desperate situation where they prefer to live in France without [the] hijab than to be deported with it. France has also instituted a particularly draconian view of French identity that French Muslims can never really conform to, so they see this ban as an outside power forcing them to take the hijab off."

Man impersonates cop to go bowling

A Savannah man went to jail this weekend for impersonating a sheriff's deputy so he could go bowling.

Jeffrey Eugene Ferguson, 46, pulled up to a gate at Hunter Army Airfield on Saturday and showed a guard a driver's license that was cracked in half, police said.

When the guard requested a second form of ID, Ferguson pulled out a Chatham County sheriff's lieutenant badge.

The guard called Savannah-Chatham Metropolitan Police, who responded and discovered Ferguson's license had been suspended for failure to pay child support, according to police Sgt. Mike Wilson.

Associated Press

UMass may face legal trouble

UNION from page 1

plete the North Area Residences project and that CLP was one of those companies hired. Miller could not recall the specific branches of CLP that had been hired by Griffin Electric.

"Something is wrong for all these payrolls to be missing," said Wilson. "There is no acknowledgement of CLP being on the job. The payrolls that we do have, the manpower and the hours worked are nowhere near what was going on in that month of August."

According to Wilson, it was CLP branch manager Bill Litke who sent the IBEW electricians to work on the North Area Residences project at UMass. Litke did not recall having sent any electricians to work on the project, but remembers being in contact with "someone" at UMass.

"I didn't do much," Litke said. "I think I just gave somebody a phone number or something."

There is ample evidence, according to Wilson, that CLP was used as a temporary help agency on the project, despite denials from the branches allegedly involved.

"Something's being covered up," Wilson said. "I do not know why [the certified payroll records] are not being submitted. We have the referrals from CLP where some of these guys went and we have the pay stubs."

CLP is not the only subcontractor used by Griffin Electric on the project that has come into controversy. IBEW Local 7 has also requested any information concerning LPTI Technologies, a company that did unspecified work during the month of August for Griffin Electric. According to Gour, neither Dimeo nor the UMass Building Authority were initially aware that LPTI Technologies, TradeSource and CLP had done any work on the North Area Residences.

"TradeSource, LPTI and CLP, they were on the job without anyone knowing," Gour said. "Post-9/11, for people to be able to walk on a public job and start doing work without anyone's awareness of it is beyond me," Wilson said. "It's a public safety issue."

Griffin Electric is currently under investigation for work done at the Holyoke Community College by the Fair Labor and Business Practices Division of the Office of the Attorney General for similar violations, including the failure to furnish accurate payroll records and for potential violations of wage and hour laws, including the misclassification of workers.

IBEW Local 7 has in the past raised questions concerning the quality of work performed by Griffin Electric and their subcontracted temporary help agencies on the North Area Residences. In October, allegations of Griffin Electric using damaged equipment, improperly color-coded wiring and the overnight storage of indoor rated equipment surfaced in a Massachusetts Daily Collegian article. The University has so far stood by the work completed by Griffin Electric on the North Area Residences.

Campus community debates ROTC military recruiting attach your agenda to 'Support the troops,' you are actually alienating a section of those troops."

MILITARY from page 1

Driscoll said he respects the views of the anti-war activists.

"Although we don't agree at times with the message, as long as it's based on fact ... [we can] debate those different views in the arena of ideas ... At the end you may still not agree with each other, but that doesn't mean there is any malice," he said.

Sai Madivala, an Afro-American studies graduate student and member of the Anti-War Coalition, has a similar view.

"On a college campus I always felt that you treat students as friends, people you go to class with, people you live with, rather than antagonists," said Madivala.

But Napolitano said the dispute is not about support for veterans or differences over that support.

"The point of all this isn't for personalities to clash," he said. "It's about the institutional structures of the universities ... The issue is, what is the ROTC as the institution doing on the university campus?"

Driscoll said that issue was settled long ago by the civilian leadership of the United States.

"We in the Army are the executers of the policy of the civilian government," he said. "We don't choose that policy. A lot of people may not personally, 100 percent agree with everything, but we are 100 percent committed to executing it to the best of our abilities."

But according to Napolitano, "our military has existed in this country almost always as a means of invading other countries ... An aggressive military that invades other countries violates international law.

"That, in fact violates U.S. law," he said. "Not only is there no need for that type of military – that type of military is illegal."

"I'm all for having a military for defensive purposes," Napolitano continued. "If someone tries to invade the United States, I'll be the first one to sign up. But that's a fantasy.

"What the military is [for] in this country is not to protect this country from invasion, in fact it's the opposite. The intention of the military in this country is to invade other countries."

Despite these major differences, Driscoll said he believes there is common ground.

"We both agree on [one] thing ... Those in the military don't want to go to war because we have to fight," he said. "Anyone who says they want to fight and be in a war is not being truthful.

"Although we train for that," Driscoll said. "We pray every day that we don't have to."

Iran holds conference to discuss doubts about WWII genocide

NAZI from page 1

Iranian top cleric Ali Akbar Mohtashamipour, center, with Rabbi Moishe Arye Friedman, left, and Rabbi Ahron Cohen, right, yesterday.

Orthodox Jews. The group rejects the creation of Israel on the grounds that it violates Jewish law.

Rabbi Ahron Kohen urged participants not to deny the Holocaust. "If we say that this crime did not happen, it is a humiliation and insult to the victims," he said, according to a translation of his remarks.

But he added that Zionists have used the Holocaust to "give legitimacy to their illegitimate project," the creation of Israel.

Another participant, Robert Faurisson, has been convicted five times in France for denying crimes against humanity – most recently last month, when he was fined for denying in an interview with Iranian TV that the Nazis meant to exterminate Jews.

Faurisson, a retired university professor, has regularly caused outrage in France, claiming that no gas chambers were used in Nazi concentration camps.

The gathering brought quick condemnation from Israel and Germany. Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert called on the world to protest, terming the conference "a sick phenomenon."

German Parliament President Norbert Lammert protested the conference in a letter to Ahmadinejad, calling it anti-Semitic propaganda "under the pretext of scientific freedom."

Israel's official Holocaust memorial, Yad Vashem, said the Tehran conference was "an effort to mainstream Holocaust denial" and "paint (an) extremist agenda with a scholarly brush."

Iranian Foreign Minister Manoochehr Mottaki dismissed the criticism as "predictable," telling delegates there was "no logical reason for opposing this conference."

"If the official version of the Holocaust is thrown into doubt, then the identity and nature of Israel will be thrown into doubt," said Mottaki, whose ministry put together the conference. "And if, during this review, it is proved that the Holocaust was a historical reality, then what is the reason for the Muslim people of the region and the Palestinians having to pay the cost of the Nazis' crimes?"

A statement from Ahmadinejad was expected to be read to delegates Tuesday.

The conference fit in with Ahmadinejad's policy of seeking to cast Iran as an alternative power to the West – in politics, science and academics. His anti-Israeli and anti-U.S. stances have brought out crowds of supporters during visits to Asia and Africa in recent years, and he has used those themes to rally support at home.

Ahmadinejad has said the Nazi genocide during World War II was a "myth" and "exaggerated." He has also repeatedly said Palestinians had to pay the price for European guilt over the Holocaust.

The Tehran gathering coincided with an independently convened academic conference on the Holocaust in Berlin, where historians affirmed the accuracy of the Nazi genocide data and questioned the motives of those behind the Tehran forum.

Wolfgang Benz, head of the Center for Research on Anti-Semitism at Berlin's Technical University, said people who deny the Holocaust "know perfectly well what happened."

"They want to use what happened – through denying it – to effect something else, to articulate the crude old anti-Semitism against Israel," he said. "It's about politics ... not about scholarship."

Tufts editor apologizes for satire aimed at affirmative action policy

BY DAVID WEBER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEDFORD — An editor at a Tufts University conservative journal has apologized for publishing a satirical Christmas carol that ridiculed black students and campus affirmative action policies.

The controversial carol, entitled, "O Come All Ye Black Folk," was published in the most recent edition of the Primary Source, which bills itself as "the journal of conservative thought at Tufts University."

The parody of "O Come All Ye Faithful" calls black people "boisterous" and proclaims, "Born into the ghetto, O Jesus! We need you now to fill our racial quotas."

The lyrics also say, "No matter what your grades are, F's, D's or G's, give them all privileged status."

Douglas Kingman, the journal's news editor, said the satire was intended to call attention to affirmative action policies that he and other magazine staffers feel are unfair.

"The Primary Source regrets that the purpose of the carol was not clearly communicated. The carol was intended as a satirical criticism of affirmative action and was, in fact, intended as an anti-racist statement," Kingman said in e-mailed press release.

In a subsequent interview with The Associated Press, Kingman acknowledged that some students may have been offended or hurt by the lyrics.

"We're sorry," he said. "Our purpose was not to be hurtful or offend individuals."

Dinah Jean, a sophomore from Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., said she was disturbed by the satire even though she is familiar with the journal's penchant for controversy.

"I was bothered by it. I found it offensive. I understand what the Primary Source does, but I think they crossed the line," said Jean, who is black.

Christina Thomas, 18, a black freshman from Fort Worth, Texas, said, "The reason it's being made into a big deal right now is because you don't have many minorities here, and racial tension is a big deal. I think there's a problem with the general consensus that it's OK to make fun of things like affirmative action."

LAST DAY OF CLASSES!!!

WITH:

The Alchemystics

Student Union Ballroom
Wednesday, Dec.13th
8:00 PM

UMass students: $8
Five College: $10
General Public: $12

LAST DAY OF CLASSES!!!

'Tis the season for GIFT GIVING

COME JOIN US!
Make your holiday gifts at the
Student Union Craft Center
Mon - Thurs 11-5 pm • Fri 11-6 pm • Sat 1-6 pm
We also offer Holiday Gift Workshops on Tues, Wed, and Thurs night.
Located downstairs in the Student Union, across from the Hatch
(413) 545-2096

RIVAGE
Special of the Month:
Buy a 13.4 oz of foam bath and receive [illegible] bath salt of your choice!
GIFT SETS AVAILABLE FOR ALL BUDGETS!
For more information on products contact Loretta Wynn or Melanie Bleau at 413-478-5575

Newman Cafe & Catering
Breakfast served all day!!
A GREAT PLACE TO STUDY, RELAX, AND EAT!
•OVER 100 MENU ITEMS•
DAILY LUNCH AND DINNER SPECIALS
WE DO CATERING
For all types of events, we can design a menu to suit your needs
M-Th 7AM - 8PM
Fri 7AM - 5PM
Sat & Sun 8AM - 2PM
Located on UMass campus, next to SOM building
472 NORTH PLEASANT ST. WWW.NEWMANCAFE.COM
413-549-0401 413-263-6798

WINTER SPECIAL
10x20 FOR $60
A MONTH TILL MAY AMHERST SELF STORAGE
(413) 253-0664
1270 Federal St. (rt 9)
Belchertown, MA 01007
OFFICE AT STADIUM STORAGE
333 ROCK HILL RD HADLEY
SECURITY GATE • SURVEILLANCE CAMERAS
WELL LIT • LOCK CHECK
7 DAY ACCESS • 24 HOUR ACCESS
OFFICE HOURS 9AM-3PM
PALLETS INCLUDED
MOVING SUPPLIES SOLD
U-HAUL RENTAL AVAILABLE

ATKINS FARMS Country Market
Rt. 116 & Bay Road, South Amherst, MA
(413) 253-9518 • (800) 234-1972
Gifts of Good Taste

Let Atkins deliver a Specialty Gift Basket or Gift Box to friends and family locally or anywhere in the U.S.
Food gifts are hand selected and packed to preserve freshness.
Shipping orders must be received by Dec. 10th.
Order online at: www.atkinsfarms.com

Gifts for Mom & Dad
• Hand Tools
• Power Tools
• Gift Certificates
• Benjamin Moore Paint
231 MAIN ST. EASTHAMPTON, MA
413-527-2693
WWW.FLEURYLUMBER.COM
Fleury Lumber Co., Inc.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

COLLEGIANEDITORIAL@YAHOO.COM

American Dream fading fast

Joshua H. Wilder

As college students, we all can appreciate a bargain when we see one. Maybe finding a $5 bill on the ground or winning some new high-tech device during a raffle. There really isn't anything better than getting something for cheap, or better yet, for free.

Unfortunately for all of us, however, most things in this country are both grossly overpriced and continuously becoming more expensive. There is no better example of the government putting average American's wallets in a vice grip than when it comes to affordable housing.

A recent survey by The League of Cities finds that affordable housing in this country is on a steady decline, with no relief in sight. It went further to say that "about one-third of the nation's cities have less affordable housing now than they did a year ago."

Of all the things people need, housing should really be at the bottom of the list. After all, who wants a house when you can just sleep on a park bench? The government knows that people need affordable housing now as much as ever, when gas prices and prescription drug costs continue to put a financial squeeze on mostly everyone. Yet the report claims that "four out of five housing directors in more than 1,000 cities here in the United States said the value of homes and rental costs have increased significantly."

The most puzzling aspect of these findings is that it flies right in the face of the whole concept of the American Dream. People from across the world flock to America because they have the idea that this is a country where people can build themselves up from the bottom and achieve monetary success by working within the system. Being able to live somewhere close to a city for a fair price is essential if people are expected to build a life for themselves here in the United States. Affordable housing is one of the key ingredients of the American Dream, and yet it is fading fast.

The 21st century is proving to be a completely new age for Americans, and it seems as if affordable housing is simply not part of the equation. The American Dream used to be that if you worked hard enough you could live a modestly successful life, with the key word being modest.

Nowadays, however, modesty seems to have no meaning. Extravagance has become the norm, and the media loves to promote excess. Television shows such as "MTV Cribs" and "Litestyles of the Rich and Famous" depict American overindulgence at a nauseating rate. Massive mansions, custom fitted swimming pools and a multi-car garage full of Lamborghinis are shown and promoted, urging viewers to strive to achieve such ends.

Of all the things people need, housing should really be at the bottom of the list. After all, who wants a house when you can just sleep on a park bench?

When it comes right down to it, these shows are only in existence to make the viewers feel bad about themselves, ashamed that they can't have a butler and a beautiful home by the beach. The media has a great way of putting ideas into people's heads, with subliminal advertising in both commercials and shows.

The strange part about our obsession with wealth is that it really doesn't depict reality in this country. Celebrities, athletes and rock stars can make everyone jealous with their massive paychecks, but what about the rest of the pack?

According the U.S. Census Bureau, in 2005 there were 37 million people living in poverty in this country. For those of you who hate math, that means 12.6 percent of the population is in extremely bad shape. These are the people who are ignored the most – there is no television show called "MTV's Soup Kitchen," or "Lifestyles of the Down and Out." No, the media ignores these people because we are too busy buying a new iPod or RAZR cell phone to care about the plight of the less fortunate.

Instead we can take solace in watching celebrities enjoy their unbelievable level of wealth, while average Americans cannot even find affordable housing to utilize while working marginal jobs, just scraping by. The poverty situation in this country is by no means resolved; if anything it is getting worse.

The cost of living seems to be rising constantly these days, as now Americans need things that never existed 50 years ago. We are constantly bombarded with advertisements for cell phones, digital cameras and high-speed Internet – all things that are considered necessities. The sad thing is that most people can't even afford things that are actually important, such as food, housing and medication.

Perhaps I had it all wrong in the first place. The idealism that this country was built upon originally has been replaced by commercialism and unattainable goals of being richer than everyone else. Living in the United States under financial stress seems to be getting tougher and tougher, and nobody really seems to care.

While you are enjoying the better things in life this holiday season, stop and take a minute to think about the less fortunate. You might be the only one who does.

Joshua H. Wilder is a Collegian columnist

Advertisements are not to blame

Domenic Poli

Last Monday, I was sitting in a booth at the Worcester Dining Commons, like I do almost every morning before my first class, and began reading that day's issue of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. After reading through the front-page stories, I turned the page where I was embraced by two headlines: one about Saddam Hussein's seeking an appeal on his death sentence and an uplifting one about strides in HIV research.

My eyes then ventured down and spotted a headline that almost made me choke on my later bit: "Advertising blamed for kids' ills." I quickly began reading the article to learn more about the topic that had so evidently grabbed my attention. The story reports that the American Academy of Pediatrics has produced a new policy statement that says advertisements via television, billboards and magazines are partially to blame for the vices of American children. It suggests that problems such as adolescent obesity, eating disorders and underage drinking are caused, in part, by the ads that young people are exposed to.

The world-renowned doctors' group pointed to commercials promoting sugared breakfast cereals and full-page ads featuring petite and diminutive models as some of the factors contributing to the issues carried by the nation's youth.

The group's new statement also proposes that doctors across the country should lobby Congress to take direct action. The group suggests banning junk-food advertisements during programs focused on attracting young viewers, limiting commercial advertising to no more than six minutes per hour and confining alcohol ads to showing only the product – not fun cartoon characters or sexy women.

The statement insists that these ads fuel the temptation of naïve youngsters and that the federal government needs to do something to curb this disastrous influence.

My response to all of this? Oh, please.

I know that kids are impressionable and that corporate companies spend countless dollars trying to target them with their advertisements, but to suggest that these pictures and images are actually responsible for the bad decisions and eating habits of young people is ludicrous.

This is just one more example of people trying to pin problems on something psychological and, quite frankly, it's thinking way too much into things.

Advertising cannot be directly blamed for the poor choices people make. Commercials and magazine ads do not tie an adolescent down and force him/her to devour "Quarter-Pounder" cheeseburgers or a liter of "Vault" or to have unprotected sex at the age of 14 – the kid does it all on his/her own. Pinning the culpability on advertising companies is just another example of how certain people try to pull responsibility away from kids and pass it along to somebody else.

The advertisements on TV are just that: advertisements. They are trying to promote a certain product in order to increase sales – that's the whole idea. But here's the best part: you don't have to buy it.

When I was growing up, my friends and I were subjected to the same sort of commercials, billboards and full-page magazine ads as kids are nowadays, but we didn't run out to buy a dozen "Frostys" and a pack of cigarettes because of them. Companies can spew whatever type of advertisement they want on people. It still comes down to a personal choice.

If a few dead-beat parents can't monitor what their children view, that doesn't mean that advertising companies should be to blame.

The folks who try to use advertisers as scapegoats for the problems that America's youth has adapted are the same ones who try to blame high obesity rates in children on the voracious eating habits of the Cookie Monster.

That delightful blue creature has been an American icon for generations and was one of my favorite members of the "Sesame Street" gang growing up. Yet, there are still those mindless, probing "big brothers" out there who claim that his enormous love of cookies and ravenous style of eating tells young kids that it is OK to shovel handfuls of baked goods down their throats.

That is ridiculous, bordering on laughable.

I'm going to say this just once: leave the Cookie Monster alone. He didn't do anything to you. He is a harmless television character, and anyone who thinks he is responsible for 17 percent of American kids being obese, as the article stated, needs to get a life.

I didn't eat cookies and get out of shape because of the Cookie Monster. I did it because I truly love cookies – they're yummy and delicious.

And I've got a question: Where the heck are the parents of these children who watch these ads?

They're supposed to be supervising what their kids are subjected to. If a few dead-beat parents can't monitor what their children view, that doesn't mean that advertising companies should be to blame.

Little by little, the amount of responsibilities that parents display is eroding, and the social/mental/emotional problems of their screwed-up kids are tacked onto others.

I'll admit that obesity, eating disorders, teen drinking and pre-marital sex can probably be influenced somewhat by ads. But when you get down to it, the choice to eat that bacon cheeseburger, or down that six-pack of "Budweiser," all come down to choice. Kids just need to wise up and think for themselves, and if they can't, their parents need to step up and try being parents.

Domenic Poli is a Collegian columnist

Forget about it

Debbie Friedman

What if you had the power to change the way you remembered things? What if it was possible to get rid of all the bad or uncomfortable feelings that accompany some of your memories just by swallowing a pill? Would you do it? Think carefully, because you may have the chance very soon.

On a recent episode of "60 Minutes," Lesley Stall highlighted a drug called Propranolol. Propranolol is already used to treat migraines, hypertension and certain heart conditions, but has recently demonstrated the ability to dull the effects of painful and traumatic memories.

Researchers believe Propranolol is successful in dulling feelings associated with memories because of the way it interacts with adrenaline – a hormone that surges through us during intensely emotional events. The presence of adrenaline makes memories stronger over time, which is why we remember important, embarrassing or traumatic experiences in great detail and for long periods of time, while ordinary moments are hardly ever thought about.

Propranolol basically blocks adrenaline from running its normal course during emotional events. This ensures we do not remember the event and the feelings associated with it to the magnitude we should. Therefore, taking Propranolol allows what would be a very memorable event to be processed in our minds in the same way a completely uneventful moment would be.

"60 Minutes" featured a psychiatrist, Dr. Roger Pitman from Harvard Medical School, who decided to administer Propranolol to patients suffering from post traumatic stress disorder, in which patients are haunted by unpleasant memories of an extremely negative experience. Patients in his study took Propranolol four times a day for 10 days and found great relief from their symptoms in the end, while those taking a placebo felt no difference.

Results from this study have made it clear that this drug could be a potential cure for people suffering from post traumatic stress syndrome. But, what remains uncertain is how it might affect the average person. The memory numbing potential of Propranolol could open up the door for lots of patient abuse. Anyone could essentially use the drug to sedate themselves from unpleasant, but other wise normal, memories. This is why the new findings are being met with mixed reactions.

While it would be unethical to deny someone the right to sedate pain stemming from physical wounds, it would be equally unethical to alter one's memory in order to appease them from painful emotions.

Stall asked Dr. Pitman, who conducted this study, what he thought about the negative effects society might encounter if people were allowed to alter the emotional impact of their memories. He responded by saying that treating people for emotional wounds is no different than treating patients with physical ones. He then explained that doctors would never deny a person who came into the emergency room with broken bones morphine, simply because it would alter the full impact of the experience. So, why should a mental illness be treated any different?

The answer to that is simple. They should be treated differently because they are two completely separate scenarios. In each case, the use of medication produces drastically different effects on the patient. When a doctor treats a physical injury with drugs, they are numbing the pain and not the memory of the incident. For instance, if someone fell off his or her bike, broke his or her arm and was given pain medication, it would not affect how he or she remembered the event. However, in the case of Propranolol, the actual memory is being numbed, which in turn numbs the pain associated with it.

While it would be unethical to deny someone the right to sedate pain stemming from physical wounds, it would be equally unethical to alter one's memory in order to soothe their painful emotions. Plus, drawing the line between which memories are traumatic enough for medication and which are not would be incredibly difficult. Most likely, it would get to the point where anyone could get their hands on it so long as they found a psychiatrist and pleaded their case well enough.

If this were to happen, then someone could take Propranolol to numb the pain associated with his or her partner's infidelity. Someone else could take it to erase the discomforting feeling of losing his or her job. Or someone could take it to stop feeling the grief associated with losing a loved one. Yet, in doing so, those people would be numbing themselves from life, which has consequences that run deeper than any bad feeling you could ever have from a negative experience.

Whether good, bad or just plain ugly, we need our memories because they make us who we are. They teach us lessons and give us wisdom, which stay with us for a lifetime. They help us remember people and places that no longer exist in reality. At the end of the day, they are the only things we can really call our own. If we were to numb ourselves from them, or erase them altogether, it would make us less human.

Debbie Friedman is a Collegian columnist.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

AGAINST CHILD LABOR

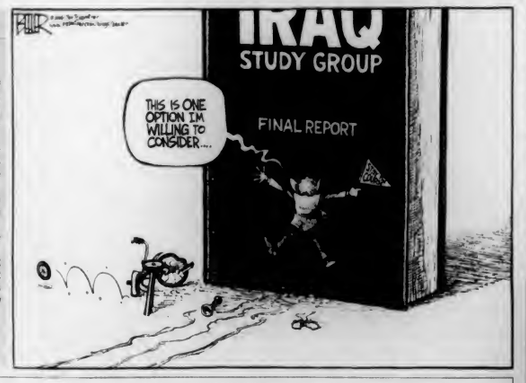
I write to express concern and offense over the content of Gregory Klecak's editorial "Appreciate Convenience." Klecak purports that unionized labor at Wal-Mart is good for keeping prices down. He fails to see the poverty that working a part-time, unbenefited, minimum wage job causes.

He then insults American workers, calling them lazy, prideful and producers of an inferior product. He then goes so far as to praise child labor in sweatshops, saying, "If only kids here could be so ambitious to start working at an early age."

UNICEF and the International Council of Labor condemn child labor as an exploitative practice, harmful to a child's health and their emotional, physical, spiritual and moral development. For Klecak to value low prices over a child's well-being, he must be very twisted indeed.

To comment on Klecak's claims that Wal-Mart doesn't cause local businesses to shut down, one needs to only look at the broken downtown community full of boarded up storefronts in his native Holyoke to see the true cost of "Always Low Prices."

Jess Peterkin
UMass student



SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: Collegian editorial@yahoo.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS FOR NEXT SEMESTER!

GET YOUR ARTWORK PUBLISHED!

Send an e-mail to: collegianeditorial@yahoo.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

The Inner Bank's debut EP is one of the year's standout releases with unique tunes

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It is rare for a young group to release a completely innovative, almost beautiful debut, but, ladies and gentlemen, it has happened. With their self-titled debut EP, The Inner Banks sound more like they belong on a new age Western soundtrack than their self-described "music for headphones and roadtrips." And, although they do not typify any specific genre, they do make beautiful music.

The only way to describe The Inner Banks would be neo-classical crossed with ethereal vocals topped with just a dash of rock. Sounding more like an Americanized version of the band Air (a France-based electronic group) than anything else, The Inner Banks have quite possibly made a name for themselves in the indie underground.

THE INNER BANKS
'THE INNER BANKS'
DAG! RECORDS
3/5

While by no means Grammy-winning material, The Inner Banks might be the groundbreaking start to a neo-classical revival. By blending the perfect amount of puppy beats with classical instruments, hollow vocals and electronica, The Inner Banks have created [illegible] will hopefully continue to be their defining characteristic.

Characterized by the spare vocals of Carolyn Shultz and the compositional genius of David Gould, The Inner Banks also contains slide guitar, piano, violin, horns and just about any other instrument found in a music [illegible]. With such ambitious sound, The Inner Banks do not sound like any particular group. Using bits of Philip Glass's neo-classicism, Air's electronic sound, and just a little guitar found in pop music, The Inner Banks are innovatively flaunting their music making abilities in every key change, note and breath on the EP.

One of the best parts of The Inner Banks is the layering of instruments. Especially seen on "Rising," this provides real substance to what might draw critics away: a lack of vocals. Not all of the songs on "The Inner Banks" contain vocals, the many sing voices of the instruments carry one full weight of the song. Even when vocals are present though, the instruments are still more forceful and driving, making the perfect blend of thought and reckless music.

Possibly most surprising about The Inner Banks is the [illegible] and thought-out nature of the songs – more than any band debut should have. Obviously most of the musicians have had more experience in other groups. It has only been [illegible] since the idea of The Inner Banks came to be. The sounds that they make are sophisticated, unforced, and real. It is almost like they copied some of the best moments in music history, but changed them to make it theirs.

Listeners should feel fortunate, because The Inner Banks released a longer EP then most bands do (just over 30 minutes). With only seven tracks, it is a great glimpse to get a feel for how the group will progress in the future. This amazing compilation of songs might just be a fluke, many hours of hard work, or pure talent; it is hard to tell which.

So, thank you DAG! Records, thank you Carolyn Shultz, thank you David Gould, thank you The Inner Banks. The music industry needed this release, needed the change from meaningless lyrics and power chords. If one word could sum up what "The Inner Banks" has succeeded in doing, it would be "wow."

Available only on cdbaby.com ($12) or on iTunes ($6.93), "The Inner Banks" is must for any music listener looking for a change. With the amazing "Anthem," (as well as every other track on the EP), "The Inner Banks" is worth every penny of whatever price listeners pay.

Critics' top five albums of 2006

BY TIM MCCALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The nominees for the 49 annual Grammy Awards have been announced. Mary J. Blige was nominated for eight different awards, including "Record of the Year" and "Song of the Year." The Red Hot Chili Peppers and their double-disc album "Stadium Arcadium" were nominated for six awards.

While acts like the Chili Peppers deserve the nominations, most of the acts nominated, such as The Pussycat Dolls, Pink, Carrie Underwood and Ghatis Barkley, did not deserve their nominations. Many of the best musicians and albums go on unnoticed as the Grammys attempt to win over a younger audience and turn their award show into a milder clone of the MTV Video Music Awards.

But forget about the Grammys. Rock 'n' roll did well in the year that was 2006. Neil Young, Bob Dylan, Beck, Tom and the Heckstones, and Tom Petty all released new [illegible]. Newcomers also [illegible] at times, causing it to be a difficult decision to name the best albums of 2006. But pretentious as it is, I [illegible] my list. My top five albums of 2006 are in the following order:

Oweu's "At Home With Owen" is my favorite album of the year. Owen, aka MC Kinsella, is truly [illegible] best musicians and songwriters out there today. "At Home With Owen" covers a lot of ground as an album with at most [illegible] musicians creating the [illegible]

See TOP FIVE on page 6

One can argue that as the Grammys attempt to win over younger viewers, the award show will deny some deserving musicians awards.

Brazilian Girls coming to UMass

BY SYDNEY TOWNE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

New York city band The Brazilian Girls is scheduled to perform at the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts on Wednesday, Dec. 13 at 8 p.m.

A group comprised of no Brazilians and only one girl, they are currently promoting their new album "Talk to La Bomb." Their sophomore effort, a mix of electronica, experimental and pop music, as the band puts it, has received rave reviews from a huge array of critics, including the New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, Blender magazine, Spin magazine and even National Public Radio.

"The Brazilian Girls mix everything from Reggae rhythms to thumping dance beats into incessantly catchy songs worthy of repeated late-night play," said The New Yorker upon the album's September release.

For $8, University of Massachusetts Amherst students can ring in finals week with these electric performers and their opening acts, local hip-hop groups "The Alchemystics" and "The Problem Addicts." The Brazilian Girls might just be able to make the Student Union Ballroom feel like a steamy club in New York City with their sexy songs and lead singer Sabrina Sciubba, who Spin magazine [illegible] is possibly "the 21st century's first superstar-style [illegible]."

The band is rounded out by keyboardist Didi Gutman, drummer Aaron Johnston and bassist Jesse Murphy, who daringly wore only his underwear on their Dec. 11 performance on the Late Show with David Letterman.

With songs that include lyrics written in up to six languages, the music takes a multicultural approach to songwriting that is surprisingly fresh, not confusing. For anyone whose sick of predictable pop music, this creative band will provide welcome relief.

See BRAZILIAN GIRLS on page 6

Rock band The Brazilian Girls are set to perform at the Student Union Ballroom this Wednesday. Despite the fact the name of the band is The Brazilian Girls, the band has one girl member and she is not Brazilian.

Kelly Joe Phelps played to over 150 people at the Iron Horse last Sunday with nothing but a guitar and microphone. Phelps won over the large audience.

Phelps gives audience a classic performance

BY MICHAEL TRABERT
[illegible]

Portland-based folk-blues guitarist Kelly Joe Phelps played the Iron Horse last Sunday with nothing but a guitar, microphone and his voice.

He rambled for a bit in between songs about his last time playing the Iron Horse back in 1995, his points somewhat scattered, but always somehow making sense.

The songs throughout the show kept the same style and feel, changing the most when he would occasionally pull out his banjo.

During more intense songs, he would lean forward in his rickety chair, close his eyes and sing right into the microphone, his long hair carefully sweeping along his acoustic guitar. Phelps' presence was somewhat mysterious, adding a level of engagement to the music that only a seasoned performer can do.

Phelps played for about 150 people that night, many of whom were middle-aged and could have been folkies themselves. The tables were out and food was served in the intimate venue.

"Big Shaky," "Crow's Nest," "The Anvil" and "Macdougal" were played from his new studio album, titled "Tunesmith Retrofit," which Phelps' Web site describes as "stripped back in relation to the last two studio efforts, balancing combinations of solo, duo, trio and quartet and bridging the gap between my early solo recordings and later band outings."

One of the highlights of the night was when Phelps performed "Macdougal," which is a quaint solo piece. Phelps told the audience the song is a musical thank you to folk musician Dave Van Ronk, who inspired Phelps at a young age. The track dances and bounces like an old forgotten ragtime tune.

In the song "Handful of Arrows," Phelps picked up the banjo and showed surprising technique. This song is another musical thank you to Chris Whitley, a folk musician who died last year. Phelps said before he played the song that he "had to say goodbye too early."

He also played the song "Cardboard Box of Batteries" from his 2003 album "Slingshot Professional." With lyrics like "make a dent in the shovel/ run the mud through the sieve/ paste your hopes on a wind mill blade and plant it up on the hill," Phelps' talent for lyrical imagery really shows through. The guitar part carried the lyrics and Phelps' animation during the song showed that the lyrics meant a lot.

Phelps has been recording since 1994 and now has eight albums to his name. In the beginning of his career he was influenced mainly by traditional blues, a quality that still is hinted in his music today.

Whether playing a solo piece, singing or picking at the banjo, Phelps kept the same style. It is obvious that this persona has been developed and crafted over his long career.

"Most of my songs are love songs; there are just so many ways to look in that mirror," said Phelps in between songs.

The opener for Phelps was Natalia Zukerman, whose style could be described as like a female Keller Williams. Her songs were mostly folk ballads and the biggest change of pace came when she would switch between playing her acoustic normally to lap style with a slide. Her guitar playing was great, but the focus was more on her singing rather then playing solos and more chops could have been desired.

Anyone who has a penchant for folk music would have loved the show Sunday night, while people unfamiliar with this genre would have enjoyed listening to a new style of music.

Go beyond recycling to help environment

BY AMANDA DONOHUE
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

If you have ever been to the Biology Computer Resource Center on campus, chances are you've seen the stacks of unclaimed print jobs that pile up hourly. It's not unusual for six or seven packages worth of wasted paper to sit there at any given time. Those of you who care about the environment might be outraged, place the paper in the recycling bin, and walk away feeling like you've done your part to save the world. And why shouldn't you feel that way? Your whole life, you've been led to believe that recycling is the solution. (And whatever Captain Planet said must be true, right?)

What people never seem to tell you is that recycling is a remedy, not a solution. And in some ways it's not even a very effective remedy. A recycling plant looks a lot like any other industrial plant you might associate with pollution. Think about it. It takes energy to power the machines that break recyclable materials down so that they can be reused. That energy was probably generated by burning coal, releasing mercury and other toxic substances into the environment. And that doesn't even include all the chemicals that have to be added to the material to make it suitable to reuse.

Instead of relying so heavily on recycling as a solution why don't we consider using less in the first place? Clearly, the people who leave their paper unclaimed at the BCRC didn't need to print to begin with. Just because we are lucky enough to have the materials at our disposal does not mean we should dispose of them for no reason. You wouldn't dump a few gallons of gas down the drain just because you knew your tank was already full, would you?

For people who complain incessantly about the prices at the pump, we waste fuel in more ways than we know. Think about your morning trip to the dining hall. You probably grab a paper cup and a plastic lid for your coffee. This is understandable if you absolutely have to take your coffee to go, but if you plan to finish your coffee in the dining hall there is no reason not to use a mug. And what about that little plastic stirrer? All you do is swirl your coffee around for a few seconds with it and then throw it away. Why not just use a spoon? It took fuel to produce that cup and that stirrer. It may have been a small amount of fuel, but if the thousands of University of Massachusetts students who do this every day switched to reusable mugs and spoons, the savings would really add up.

Besides their coffee implements, students waste entire plates of food with alarming frequency. Next time you bring up your tray at one of our lovely dining establishments count how many muffins, mozzarella sticks and slices of pizza are thrown away without a bite taken out of them. Hopefully, visions of starving people or thoughts of your rising meal plan costs will pass through your head. But the energy it took to grow, process, and ship the food might never cross your mind. Who ever considers that the fuel wasted by throwing a couple of muffins away could get you from here to Boston? The bottom line is that you don't need to take food you're not going to eat.

And while you're at it, consider reducing the amount of water you waste. Nothing is more pointless than leaving the faucet on the entire time you brush your teeth, except of course brushing your teeth in the shower. Water is a precious commodity. Only a tiny fraction of all Earth's water is fresh. Of that, an even smaller fraction is drinkable. People all over the world are desperate for access to clean water, yet we run our showers with drinkable water. Makes you think twice about that extra 20 minutes in the shower, doesn't it? Well, at least it should. Put yourself in the shoes of someone who doesn't have water to drink. Wouldn't you resent the person who stands under a showerhead for half an hour wasting the water you could be drinking to stay alive?

If you take anything away from this article, consider just how common waste has become in your daily life. Nevertheless, it's incredibly simple to reduce your waste output. Even steps as small as refraining from taking that extra muffin can be very significant in the long run.

Rock 'n' roll returns in 2006

TOP FIVE from page 5

Kinsella's song covers topics such as growing up, dealing with an alcoholic father passing away and getting married. But even if you aren't growing up or having a similar life to Kinsella, his lyrics are still enjoyable. They are not overly sad, like the songs of Bright Eyes, or whiny, like the songs of Dashboard Confessional. Kinsella's guitar work is also a force to be reckoned, creating some beautiful orchestration to go along with his great lyrics.

Mike Kinsella performs as Owen, a singer songwriter.

"Boys and Girls in America" by the Hold Steady is my second favorite album of the year. "Boys and Girls in America" brings back the rock 'n' roll of yesteryear to a new generation of fans by a band that was not even around when the best rock 'n' roll was made. Some listeners may be turned off by vocalist Craig Finn's singing style, but if they would give him a shot, the stories in his songs will win them over. Finn tells stories better than Bruce Springsteen and rocks harder while telling them. "Boys and Girls in America" is the Hold Steady's third album in three years and their best yet.

My third album of the year is "Modern Times" by Bob Dylan. A year-end list can never be complete without at least one Dylan reference. But what makes this year even better is the fact that "Modern Times" is all new original material and not just a live disc or greatest hits album. While his live show begins to suffer due to his age, his studio work still shines greatly past most of the musicians out there today. Dylan was robbed when he was not nominated for Album of the Year or Record of the Year.

Bob Dylan's 'Modern Times' is a must have for music fans.

Plus 44's "When Your Heart Stops Beating" is one of the best guilty pleasure albums of the year. Mark Hoppus and Travis Barker, formerly of Blink 182, created the band after Blink 182 split up in November of last year. While they're not the best musicians to ever play rock 'n' roll, their album is full of potential hit singles to light up the mainstream music charts, just like Blink 182 used to do half a decade ago.

Ray LaMontagne's "Till the Sun Turns Black" deserved a Grammy Award or two, but like Owen, The Hold Steady and Plus 44, he too was left off the list. LaMontange's album is a quiet rock album sure to surprise anyone during the very first listen. His vocals at times are unique, but during the louder songs, he sounds similar to Van Morrison.

'Boys and Girls in America' is the third album by the Hold Steady.

Mark Hoppus and Travis Barker formed Plus 44 late last year.

Until the Grammy Awards decide to grow up and nominate musicians and bands that deserve their nominations, true rock 'n' roll will go underground and stay unnoticed by most music fans out there. This is by no means a bad thing – most of the great rock 'n' roll made in the '60s and '70s was originally underground and alternative to the mainstream.

2006 will be remembered as the year that music fans refound rock'n'roll. As each year goes by the releases by musicians such as Neil Young and Bob Dylan will be decreasing as they get older and older so let's appreciate these musicians and albums while we still can.

Ray LaMontagne is one of the best singer songwriters in music today.

Brazilian Girls to warm things up

The Brazilian Girls' latest album 'Talk to the Bomb' was recorded at Jimi Hendrix's Electric Lady Land Studios. The album has been hailed by many critics and fans as one of the year's best.

BRAZILIAN GIRLS from page 5

The album was largely composed as it was recorded, the band said.

"I'd much rather knock out an album like that, quickly, than over-think everything too much," said Johnston.

That confidence in their music shows is warranted. A reviewer for the Miami Herald said the Brazilian girls are "the best dance-music act in America."

The new songs, which were recorded in Jimi Hendrix's Electric Lady Studios, have a harder edge than those on their debut album. Being a touring club band has had an impact on their music.

"The music started to become more fierce. The approach was more aggressive," said Sciubba. Gutman agreed, but summed up what could be the band's new mission statement more simply. "We wanted to rock the crowd," he said.

Not only is the music edgier here than the first album, but it reflects the more complex world it was made in. "Never Met a German" is a song about the acceptance and even love of destruction as long as the singer possesses the power to control it.

These dynamic performers will be playing live on Wednesday. On a chilly night at the end of long semester, the Brazilian Girls should be a big city treat any fan of intelligent dance music would appreciate. The sexy music and unique styling of the band can be previewed on their Web site, www.braziliangirls.info

Arts meeting tonight!
Learn how to write for Arts and Living and meet the editors at the meeting in the Campus Center.

February Career Fairs

Stockbridge Career Fair
February 13, 2007
10am-2pm

Campus-Wide Career Fair
February 14, 2007
10am-3pm

Life Sciences Career Fair
February 14, 2007
10am-3pm

ALANA Career Fair
February 14, 2007
5pm-7:30pm

Summer, Co-op & Internship Opportunities Career Fair
February 15, 2007
10am-3pm

Workshops

A Resumé Writing
B Job Search
C Interview Skills
D Internship + Co-op Introduction

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
Student Affairs and Campus Life

GRADE A

Walk-in Advising
Goodell 511 Mon-Fri 9-4

GOOD LUCK ON FINALS!

Attention!
Still not to late to find a Spring Internship!

Career Services

Goodell 511 www.umass.edu/careers 413-545-2224

Carlin is not all about profanity

By Michael Hamersly
McClatchy Newspapers

As consistently profane, right-on-the-edge provocative, and sometimes offensive as he has been over his four-decades-plus career, it still wouldn't be paradoxical to call George Carlin a class act.

Why? Like Richard Pryor, Chris Rock and Robin Williams, underneath the barrage of four-letter words runs a current of humanity. Even as he skewers our collective behavior, he's on our side.

When Carlin speaks, you can actually feel him caring.

Well, sort of ...

"I got a dual problem here," the comedian says on the phone from Santa Monica, Calif. "First of all, I like people. One by one, I think they're great – for about a minute. You look in their eyes and you can see the universe. We're all the same thing – we're all stardust, and it's all the same atoms floating around."

Aw, that's nice. But, remember, this is Carlin.

He continues: "I like people one at a time. I don't like the [expletive] grouping. It's when they group that bothers me the clotting. People-clotting is what causes the trouble. As soon as it's about eight or 12 guys, they start having a fight song or a [expletive] slogan, or they give themselves a name and buy baseball hats, or they get jackets with their name on it and they wear little arm bands, and pretty soon they got a list of people they don't like, and pretty soon they're marching over in the park and it's a [expletive] danger. Groups are a danger.

"They sacrifice their individual beauty for the sake of the group. And the loss of the individual is tragic."

Here's a quick look at Carlin's opinions on some of today's hot-button topics:

On whether he considers himself a champion of free speech: "No, not really. I'm involved in that issue because of the nature and the content of it and what happened with the Supreme Court with my album (his foul-mouthed "Seven Words" routine was broadcast on a radio station in the early '70s, which led to the FCC formally establishing indecency regulations in American broadcasting)... But I just do my thing. I don't have any torch to bear or ax to grind – except I don't think I believe in very much.

"All I wanna do is sing my song. All I wanna do is be heard. I'm not trying to make people think – I just want them to know that I'm thinking. This is a show-off's job – this job is called 'Look At Me – Look At Me, Ain't I Cute, Ain't I Clever, Ain't I Smart.

"I dropped out of school in ninth grade – so you have a kind of hidden agenda in your life to show people how smart you are – you sort of owe it back to yourself to kind of account for that, what I'll call a perceived deficit, what the world thinks is an education on paper, by measuring grades and many years of schooling and all that. But there are an awful lot of dummies who get through high college degrees."

On who he'd like to see as our next president: "It seems to hardly matter, but ... I would like to see a smart, compassionate person. But a lot of things went wrong here – the political system is really broken. First of all, money plays way too big a part, and nothing is voted on the merits anymore. And nobody will ever fix any of that [stuff]."

So why not run and fix it yourself?: "I would rather take the office with a lightning-swift coup-d'etat with my posse and assume power as a benign dictator. The running is the wrong part: You have to raise money and you have to make believe you actually like these [expletive]s, and promise [stuff]. And you gotta shake people's hands and listen to all this bull ... It's bad enough some [expletive] is gonna stop you for 10 minutes and tell you about his new lawn mower, with the horn on it you know?"

On ex-Seinfeld star Michael Richards' recent racist rant against an African-American heckler: "He had a table full of people ordering drinks – first of all, I don't like [expletive] clubs; I don't like places where there's tables. Tables are a social arrangement, and theaters are not. Theaters are just a mass of people who become kind of one organism. Tables imply social hierarchies and pressures and divisions.

"But there he is in a club anyway he's gotta be, for now and they're ordering. And that's really insulting, and I understand the rage threshold, especially back when I had a little more anger near the top of me that seems to have abated.

"I know Michael a little bit, and I like him. But apparently, those words didn't come from nowhere in him. And the first one wasn't the familiar [n-word] epithet: The very first part was, 'Fifty years ago we would have hung you upside down with a fork in your a--,' which is a very different kind of an anti-black reference. It comes from a thought process that has to have thought of that before.

"So that was the disturbing part to me, and I haven't read anybody point that out yet. But I sympathize with him because he dug a deep hole for himself.

"I don't think the word should be banned ... I agree with [comedian and civil rights activist] Dick Gregory: 'If you start with that word, where do you [expletive] stop?'"

Comedian George Carlin has the reputation of being one of the most foul comics in the industry, but according to him he is a people person.

Smith works with son in latest movie

By Robert W. Butler
McClatchy Newspapers

Few onscreen father/son relationships have felt more authentic than that depicted by Will Smith and his real-life son in "The Pursuit of Happyness."

A feel-good movie that spends much time making us feel bad, this inspired-by-a-true-story yarn ends on a towering note of uplift. But its real strength can be found in its two leading men, who offer a portrait of paternal love right up there with "Kramer vs. Kramer."

In late '70s San Francisco, Chris Gardner (Will Smith) is struggling to keep his head above water. His ill-advised trip into venture capitalism hasn't paid off, he's invested his life savings in a franchise selling portable bone density scanners, only to find most doctors don't need them. His wife Linda (Thandie Newton) is working two jobs and quickly sinking into depression.

At least the couple's young son, Christopher (Jaden Christopher Syre Smith), is largely unaware of the family's perilous financial situation. But not for long.

Desperate to pull himself out of his downward spiral, Chris decides to go after an internship with a major stock brokerage firm. If he gets in he'll be competing with 20 other ambitious men for one permanent position. And he's expected to participate in the six-month program without pay.

But his marriage is falling apart. Linda relocates to New York, where friends have found her a job. And before long the Gardner men find themselves evicted and sleeping in homeless shelters. Chris works a full day at the brokerage firm, then spends several hours with Christopher trying to sell his bone density scanners, and devotes his nights to studying for the next day's work.

On top of that he has to be a good father, though sometimes his patience wears thin.

Steve Conrad's screenplay (closely patterned, we're told, after the real Chris Gardner's story) throws one dispiriting crisis after another at Chris and Christopher. The low point comes when the two spend a night locked in a subway restroom, Chris sobbing with shame and humiliation.

Tell you what – if he doesn't get that stockbroker job, the audience will commit mass suicide.

Italian director Gabriele Muccino, making his American debut, takes full advantage of both San Francisco's visual splendors and pockets of blight, and he keeps just enough distance that "Pursuit" doesn't turn into a flat-out wallow in bathos.

The movie isn't perfect. Linda is made the de facto villainess for abandoning her men. We never hear Chris telling his son that his mother still loves him; she's just conveniently absent.

As a pulling-yourself-up-by-the-bootstraps saga the film is a bit deceptive. Though he's played by Smith as an affable Every Man, it's pretty obvious that Chris Gardner is an exceptional individual. He lands the internship largely because he's able to quickly solve a Rubik's cube puzzle, and he has an astonishing ability to think on his feet, present a confident-yet-friendly face and schmooze with potential clients.

Also, I could have done without Chris' narration. When you're watching it, you don't have to be told about it.

But at the film's heart is the father-son relationship, and here one cannot complain.

Looking thinner, older and wearier than you've ever seen him, Smith does a terrific job portraying a man who has seen his dreams beaten down but won't give up. It's a low-keyed performance except for those moments when Chris has to impress someone, and then he pulls out the charming Will Smith we all know.

As for young Jaden Smith well, the highest compliment I can give is that you never catch him acting. Granted, this 5-year-old has an inherited edge (his mother, of course, is actress Jada Pinkett Smith), but he gives a performance so natural and unmannered, so suffused with unforced innocence and childlike wonder that only a Scrooge could find fault.

So go, enjoy, have a nice cry and come out feeling better about the world.

Nolte returns to the big screen

By Elizabeth Weitzman
New York Daily News

It's no insult to Nick Nolte to note that there are many moments in James Ponsoldt's "Off the Black" where we wonder if the craggy vet is actually acting.

As he guzzles beers and limps through life, Nolte's weary loner Ray Cook is as bitingly authentic as, well, Nolte's infamous mug shot. But make no mistake. This is the work of an expert – the sort of master craftsman who doesn't need to draw attention to his efforts.

The same could be said for the movie itself, which feels intimate, familiar and easy to overlook. That's part of its beauty. This modest tale of an overweight, over-the-hill baseball umpire who bonds with a resentful student is so deceptively understated, it could be the no-big-deal story of a neighbor you never really got to know.

After Nolte's Cook makes a controversial call at a high school game, a few of the players angrily vandalize his home. He catches Dave (Trevor Morgan), and makes him clean the place up. Tentatively, these two get to know each other, and start to form the family each desperately needs.

Cook hasn't seen his son in decades, and Dave's father (Timothy Hutton) has been an emotionally vacant zombie ever since his unfulfilled wife, Dave's mother, skipped town.

As good as Nolte is, the relatively unknown Morgan matches him scene for scene. And he's not the only impressive newcomer. Remarkably, this confident indie is the first feature from writer-director Ponsoldt, who shuns any slickness to embrace the rough edges of his low-budget, bare-bones story.

It would seem the director learned a few lessons from his unshakably iconoclastic star.

'Off the Black' is the first movie for director and writer James Ponsoldt. 'Off the Black' staring Nick Nolte as Ray Cook is a story about a baseball umpire who bonds with a resentful student.

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Rd. (At Echo Hill)
Amherst • 256-6446
Off Rte. 9, two miles east of Amherst College
OPEN 6AM-10AM MON-FRI
8AM-9PM SAT & SUN

WHAT DO YOU GET?
*Swimming *Tennis
*Basketball *Fitness
HAMPFIT.COM
for Rates & Info

Join Now
Winter Special
$188/ 15 Weeks
Student Rate
EFT available

Join Us for This Year's

Late Night Exam Treats!

Featuring:
Pancakes (Plain, Blueberry, Chocolate Chip),
Scrambled Eggs, Sausage Links, Potato Puffs,
Cereal Bar, Yogurt, Seasonal Fresh Fruit Bar,
Granola - From the UMass Bake Shop
Cheese Cake with Assorted Fruit Toppings
Bluewall Chocolate Chip Cookies
Banana Bread and Assorted Beverages

All DCs

Thursday
Dec 14, 2006
9 pm–Midnight

DINING SERVICES
www.umass.edu/diningservices

Duquesne drops six straight

A-10 HOOP from page 10

seasons before he retired in 1975. George Washington lost in the opening game of the 13-year-old tournament to the USC Trojans, 74-65. With the loss, the Colonials now have as many losses as they did all of last season. George Washington's first defeat of the season came at the hands of the Providence Friars, 86-67.

The Trojans held the Colonials to 36 percent shooting from the field. In fact, the Trojans had the second-best field-goal percentage defense in the country heading into Saturday's tilt with the Colonials, limiting their opponents to 32 percent shooting from the field.

Hitting the wall

All signs point to the Duquesne Dukes coming back down to earth after starting this season at 2-0 after a tumultuous off-season of epic personnel change and tragedy. The Dukes have lost their last six contests, in large part due to a tougher schedule and their two most recent losses came to two Big I.ast opponents, West Virginia and city-rival Pittsburgh.

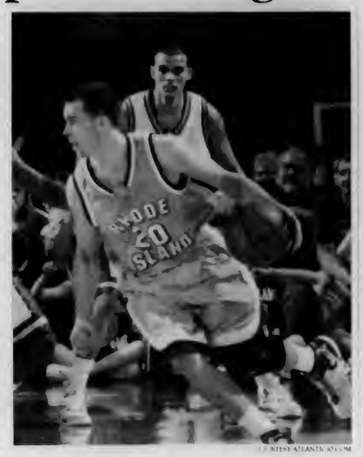
Wednesday's 73-56 loss to the No. 2 Panthers marked the 25th time in their last 28 games the Dukes have fallen to Pittsburgh. The Dukes have lost their last eight of nine to its city-rival, the last win coming back in 2000. The last time Duquesne defeated a No. 2 team was back in 1961 when they defeated the A-10's own St. Bonaventure Bonnies.

The Dukes lopsided 85-54 loss to West Virginia was their fourth consecutive defeat to the Mountaineers, but the two teams have split their last eight contests.

Served on a silver platter

The Fordham Rams were on the verge of pulling off a major upset last Wednesday against the No. 23 Maryland Terrapins. The Terrapins did all they could to help the Rams in their quest to be the first team in the A-10 to defeat a nationally-ranked opponent this season, but Maryland survived a lethargic start to come away with a comfortable 79-59 win, snapping Fordham's three-game winning streak.

Despite missing seven of their first 10 shots, the Rams had a 13-9 advantage with 11:55 remaining in the first half before Maryland eventually wore them down. The Terrapins committed 25 turnovers in the ugly win, but were able to overcome all of the turnovers shooting close to 56 percent from the field and limiting Fordham to just 33 percent shooting from the field.



Rhode Island's Jimmy Baron is one of two players nationally who is shooting 50 percent from the field. He has also hit all 26 of his free throws.

UNH increases lead before the break

Hockey East from page 10

college hockey.

Regardless of their play against ranked teams, the Black Bears proved they can dominate lesser opponents last Saturday at Northeastern. Maine tallied seven scores, including three in the first period, while allowing only one goal.

Senior forward Josh Soares earned his first hat trick of the season and assisted on another goal. Two of those goals game while Maine was short-handed. Forwards Billy Ryan and Mike Hamilton registered three-point nights, scoring once and adding two assists each. Maine goaltender Ben Bishop also played well in net, stopping 20 shots.

Soares earned Hockey East Player of the Week honors for his four-point evening last Saturday.

Grip on first far from loosening

UNH is in firm control of the league standings going into the winter break. The Wildcats have an eight-point lead over second-place Vermont. Even though the team has played the most games in the conference, it has only failed to earn at least one point in only a single conference game this season. That contest was a 3-2 loss at home against Massachusetts on Oct. 26. UNH followed that game with an overtime loss to ECAC member Yale (6-5-1), also at home.

But their play since that point has been nothing less than stellar. The Wildcats are riding a nine-game win streak, through a stretch of 12 games without a loss. They are also undefeated in every game away from the Whittemore Center.

The team has an opportunity to extend its lead when conference play resumes on Jan. 5. However, the challenge will be formidable, as it plays two games at Vermont.

Hockey East First Half Awards

Best Player: Trevor Smith, sophomore forward, UNH

With conference stalwarts Brian Boyle of Boston College and Michel Leveille of Maine returning for their senior seasons, one would have guessed that a well known player would play the best hockey in the conference.

Although Smith's 10 goals and 10 assists as a freshman make him far from obscure, he has stepped up this year and turned the Wildcats second line into the best in the league. Smith and linemates Jerry Pollastrone and Matt Fornataro have scored 21 goals and notched 33 assists. The sophomore's 24 points (11 goals and 13 assists) are also the best in the league.

The statistic that puts Smith above everyone else in the conference is the fact that none of his points were earned on special teams. It's one thing to be a prolific scorer on the power play, but it's another to do it during five-on-five hockey.

Best Goalie: Jon Quick, sophomore, Massachusetts

A difficult decision, but Quick gets the nod over junior Joe Fallon of Vermont. Fallon leads the conference in goals-against average (1.61) and is tied for first with Quick in save percentage (0.929). But the statistic that favors Quick is that he has stopped over 125 more shots than Fallon.

While Fallon is a solid goaltender, he has the benefit of playing behind the best defense in Hockey East. The Catamounts allow an average of only 1.67 goals per game, first in the conference. Quick, on the other hand, is the heart and soul of the Minutemen, is asked to stop considerably more shots per game and has answered the call the majority of the time.

Best Coach: Dick Umile, UNH

Any coach of a team that leads the conference in scoring after losing its best goal scorer to the NHL deserves to be recognized. Daniel Winnik forfeited his final year of eligibility after scoring 15 goals and 26 assists with returning line mates Jacob Micflikier and Brett Hemingway.

Umile found an able replacement for Winnik in Mike Radja as center on the first line. He leads the team in goals with 13. The offensive success of his second line speaks for itself. With solid goalkeeping from Kevin Regan, the Wildcats look to be a complete team at this point in the season.

It will be interesting to see if UNH can maintain its current pace in the second half, as the team has two games against each of the other five top teams in Hockey East — Patrick Watson's shutout against UMass on Tuesday was the first of the Merrimack (2-12-1, 2-8-0 HEA) goaltender's career. UMass Lowell ended a six-game losing streak when they tied St. Lawrence (8-7-1) on Sunday afternoon. Northeastern named former Boston University standout and Bruins veteran Shawn McEachern to be an assistant coach of Greg Cronin on Friday. He coached his first game behind the bench against Maine on Saturday.

Maryland makes easy work of A-10 teams during the 2000-2001 season.

A-10 W. Hoops from page 10

Challenging the champions

Defending national champion Maryland defeated the Temple Owls, 77-66, on Dec. 10 at the Liacouras Center in Philadelphia, improving their record to 12-0 in the process.

The Terps have now defeated two A-10 opponents to this point in the season. They also upended George Washington on Nov. 19, 73-48, in the final game of the BTI Classic.

Temple performed well against the Terrapins, but in the end could not hold them off. Maryland's team is absurdly talented — all five Terrapin starter's names can be found on the Naismith Award Watch List released Monday.

Last year's Final Four Most Outstanding Player Award winner Laura Harper had a team-high 17 points in the win. All five Maryland starters were in double figures — the group all also played more than 30 minutes each.

In the last six years, an A-10 team has faced a No.1 team and come up short every time. The closest result was the four-point spread that Tennessee defeated Temple by in 2004.

Explorers live up to name

The La Salle Explorers began the season winning seven-straight games — after losing for the first time of the season to Delaware, 66-52, on Dec. 5.

The Explorers 8-1 start is the best for a La Salle squad since 1996-1997 when the Explorers opened with the same record.

Of La Salle's wins, six of them have come on the road. La Salle hadn't won six road games in a row since the 1991 season.

La Salle is exceeding the expectations of those who predicted them to finish ninth in the conference behind GW and Temple amongst others.

The Explorers' hot start is a product of the stellar post play of Ricketts. The Preseason First-Team All-Conference selection is averaging 21.4 points per game through the first eight contests of the season. She also grabs 10 rebounds per game and is shooting 64.3 percent from the field.

Ricketts' outstanding start has been complemented by the play of junior forward Carlesse Hightower. She averages exactly 14 points per match along with seven rebounds. Defensively, Hightower records just under two steals per game.

The Explorers out of conference opponents are not exactly top programs, so when conference play starts it will be interesting to see whether or not they can continue to excel.

Colonials among the ranked

The A-10's lone representative in the Associated Press and Coaches' Top 25 polls is still the GW Colonials (7-2). In the AP poll, GW holds the No. 21 spot while occupying the No. 19 slot in the coaches' poll — the No. 19 ranking is the highest for the Colonials since the preseason polls of the 2002-2003 season.

The Colonials two losses came at the hands of top ten teams — the first to Maryland and the second at the hands of Tennessee.

Why this staffer hates the Boston Red Sox

Eli Rosenswaike

How can I get your attention? Maybe if I say that I "expletive" hate the Boston Red Sox that would work. And by saying so I would also be telling the truth. I hate the Red Sox and I hate you for liking them.

My friends always seem confused as to why I'm not a Boston Red Sox fan. I was born in Boston and grew up in the area. But unlike you, I don't choose to like a team merely because that's where my parents decided to conceive me.

I can't bring myself to root for the most racist sports organization of all time, but hey, that's just me. Jackie Robinson broke the color-line in Major League Baseball in 1947 when he suited up for the Brooklyn Dodgers, but the Red Sox chose not to integrate until 12 years later in 1959 — becoming the last team in the game to do so. That fact can be inherently attributed to the most racist sports owner in history — Tom Yawkey — who owned the team from 1933-1977.

Boston held a tryout in 1945 amidst pressure from the media with three African-American players — including Robinson. Although not substantiated, some accounts say that someone in the crowd yelled out, "get those (n) off the field" during the tryout. Those reports say it was either Yawkey, manager Joe Cronin or star player Eddie Collins.

Regardless of that story's validity, there's no debating that the Red Sox under Yawkey were the epitome of a racist organization. Many know that African-American fans were made to feel more than unwelcome at Fenway Park, a sentiment that still holds true now to some degree.

Many fans don't realize that the Red Sox had a golden opportunity to sign Willie Mays in 1949. It can be argued that Mays was the best all-around player ever to play the game, and Boston passed up on signing him. Think about an outfield featuring both Ted Williams and Mays. Maybe they wouldn't have had to wait 86 years in between World Series titles. Mays wasn't signed because the scout assigned to him "didn't want to wait in the rain to watch any black player," according to Howard Bryant's book, "Shut Out."

Let's move on to more current topics, such as the stupidity of many Sox fans. Seriously, those "Yankees Suck" chants are getting a tad old. When I'm at a U2 concert in Boston, I should not be hearing that nonsense. Or how about when Boston is losing 8-1 to the White Sox in the eighth inning and they get the chant started. For crying out loud, Boston is not even playing the Yankees. Shut up.

I'm so sick of seeing "Jeter Swallows" and "Take your 26 World Series Rings and Shove them up Your (expletive)" T-shirts. Yeah, the Yankees suck — only 26 World Series rings. They've won 39 AL pennants and nine-straight AL East division titles. And I'm sure you wouldn't trade those 26 rings for Boston's six. And if Derek Jeter was on your team, you would love him because he's one of the best players in the game — and a class act to boot.

Every time fans complain about how much the Yankees spend on salary, they need to look at the facts and stop crying. Last time I checked, Boston spends more on payroll than 28 other teams. Boston's payroll was over $120 million and they only managed to win eight more games than the Florida Marlins, who spent under $15 million.

The Red Sox are becoming dangerously close to approaching Yankees territory with that payroll. They can go out and buy any player they want, just like New York. I rest my case with the $51.1 million Boston spent just for the right to negotiate with the Japanese ace Daisuke Matsuzaka.

Reports say that the talks are breaking down between the two parties and it has become abundantly clear that Boston had no intentions whatsoever of signing him. They only bid that astronomical amount to keep him away from New York. Boston's payroll — even without Matsuzaka — is rapidly approaching New York's after signing J.D. Drew and Julio Lugo to massive contracts. The payroll will probably be north of $150 million.

I could go on and on about poor personnel decisions, but I'll spare you from that. We all know how Babe Ruth was traded for cash so the owner could fund a Broadway play.

Maybe the current front office isn't racist, but they are all idiots. Take for example the "brain-child" that is Theo Epstein. How smart can this guy really be when he left the organization in a gorilla suit? He left his position in part because he felt underappreciated and months later he returned for the same contract he turned down previously. What was the point of all that, Theo? You are looking pretty stupid, even with that Yale degree.

The Boston Red Sox announcing on NESN is so annoying. Play-by-play announcer Don Orsillo's voice pierces my brain every time I listen to him. Boston could be down 10 runs in the ninth inning and Orsillo gets overly excited when the Red Sox hit a single.

Fenway Park is a classic venue, but it's time to leave that dump. The place is old and dirty, and no Major League park should have obstructed seats. Build a new Fenway — make it the same if you want, but it's time.

Due to my limited space, I have to stop soon. There are many other things I'd like to mention, but that will have to be left to another time.

I know fans of all teams are bias and overzealous, but Red Sox fans take it to a whole other level. Many are ignorant and continue to make fools out of themselves with their chants and T-shirts.

In case you're wondering, I am not a Yankees fan — but rather a Chicago White Sox fan. What I'm wondering, though, is how you can support a team full of self-proclaimed idiots and an organization synonymous with racism?

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at Sports@DailyCollegian.com.

Oden scores 16 in second career game

NCAA M. Hoops from page 10

from the field. Marquette was able to climb back from a 10-point deficit.

The Golden Eagles sophomore guard Jerel McNeal stole the ball and scored, cutting the lead to four with just under two minutes left. On the next possession, Tucker answered back with drive to the baseline for a lay-up with 1:21 left in the game. Wisconsin committed 22 turnovers but made up for it by shooting 50 percent from the field.

Duke defending home court against non-conference foes

The Duke Blue Devils (9-1) extended their home winning streak against non-conference opponents to 48 games. The Blue Devils defeated last years Cinderella team George Mason (4-4), 69-53.

Blue Devils junior guard DeMarcus Nelson scored a game-high 24 points. The young Blue Devils have struggled to score this season averaging only 68 points a game, compared to No. 3 North Carolina, who is averaging 90 points a contest.

Against George Mason they struggled to score points. They did, however, execute well on offense, committing a season-low 11 turnovers and a season-high 21 assists. Last week against Holy Cross, Duke committed 20 turnovers. Coach Mike Krzyzewski will take 11 turnovers any night with this young group.

Duke sophomore forward Josh McRoberts had a career-high eight assists to go along with seven points and eight rebounds. Krzyzewski would like his power forward to be more of an assertive scoring threat to help with the teams scoring struggles.

Brewer cleared to play

The Florida Gators did not look like the defending champions last week. Missing-in-action junior forward Corey Brewer was diagnosed with mononucleosis two weeks ago. On Monday, Brewer's mono-test came back negative and he was cleared to practice and will be available to play against Florida A&M.

With Brewer back this early, he should be 100 percent when they play Ohio State Dec. 23. That game will be anticipated as one of the biggest games of the season in college basketball.

Indiana State upsets No. 14 Butler

The "Legend" Larry Bird turned 50 last Thursday and his former school surprised him with a late birthday gift by upsetting Butler, 72-64, on Saturday. Sycamores junior guard Gabe Moore played like Larry Legend for one night, scoring a game-high and career-high 24 points.

Butler (10-1) struggled in the first half falling behind by 12. The Bulldogs scored 23 points on 33 percent shooting in the first half. The Sycamores (5-3) took advantage of their scoring opportunities by shooting 21-28 from the free-throw line. Butler cut the lead to seven three times, but no one had an answer for Moore, who shot a Larry-like 3-for-4 from three-point range.

Oden Watch

Greg Oden, the freshman sensation Ohio State center, played in his second collegiate game. Oden led the Buckeyes (8-1) over an undersized Cleveland State team, 78-57. The Vikings' (5-6) tallest starter was 6-foot-7 Patrick Tatham (brother of UMass women's basketball forwards Tamara and Alisha Tatham). Oden played with foul trouble the entire game but still managed to go 8-for-8 from the field, with 16 points, four rebounds and three blocked shots in 22 minutes of play. Oden and the Buckeyes travel to Cincinnati to play the 6-2 Bearcats.

A grade dispute?

Teacher, roomate or job concerns?

Billing problems?

...or any other University related problems?

(confidentially, of course)

Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community

823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Plan For The Holidays
Right To Your Home or Airport
877-695-4665
Examples:
4 to BOS~$60/each
4 to NYC~$90/each
3 to BDL~$35/each
Limo Service 24/7/365 :: Anywhere~Anytime

The First Person to Successfully Complete Both of Today's SUDOKU & CROSSWORD Will Reign at of Spring '07 as the COMICS Page CHAMPION (Photo or Evidence & Yourself) to Deadline for All Submissions COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

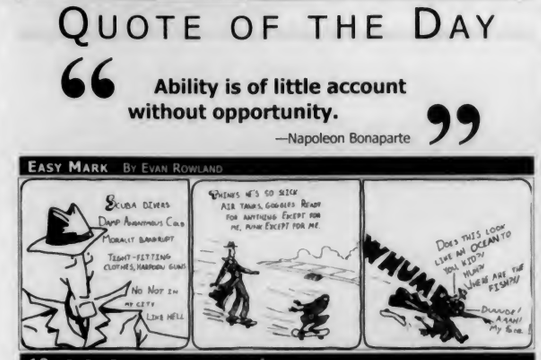
8			7
3			6		5
	9			4
	5	8		9		2	3
	2	3				8	6
	6	1		3		9	5
				5			1
			2		1			6
					4			9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Choose by ballot
6 Racetrack boundary
10 Parts of mins.
14 I want in!
15 "Born Free" lioness
16 National airline of Israel
17 Stocks and bonds
19 Test one's courage
20 W. entrance
21 One that got away
23 Shop window
27 Beginning
28 Always
29 Hoover or Asaan
31 Adolescents
32 Nairobi native
35 More tender
37 Conclusion
38 Pathetic
40 Young Scot
43 Page number
44 Gymnastics
46 Union branch
49 Young newt
51 Arab sultanate
52 Is of use
54 Having tired tootsies
57 Expression of rebuke
59 Roasting rod
60 Get bigger
61 Armed services branch
66 Author Ferber
67 Toy with a tail
68 Blunder
69 Optimistic
70 Iditarod vehicle
71 Prepared

DOWN
1 Printer's measures
2 Peggy or Brenda
3 & more
4 Nation
5 Penitentiary
6 Passed gossip
7 Mr. Baba
8 Words of understanding
9 Lariat
10 More composed
11 Slip by
12 Lunch and swerve
13 Falls as ice
18 Ice skater Midori
22 Overly precious
23 Small lapdog
24 Baking compartment
25 Tear apart
26 Decelerate
30 Bowne call
33 " 13"
34 Soccer zero
36 Cart track
39 Equal score
40 Ritzy wheels
41 To a distance
42 Unit of force
43 Most of a golf hole
45 Stance
46 On a greater scale
47 Carry to excess
48 Chaos chasers
50 Flying
53 Soft footwear
55 Choose (to)
56 Woods of the links
58 Thwart
62 Had a meal
63 Coach Parseghian
64 Gangster's heater
65 Matter-of-fact



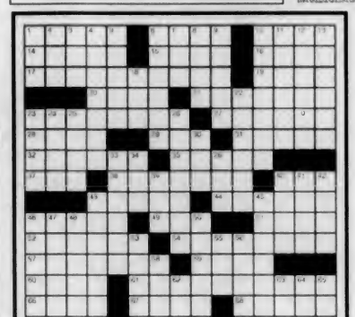
Scuba divers
Dandruff
Toilet-flitting clothes, Hardon suns
No Not in my city
Like hell
Whines he's so slick
Air tanks, goggles ready for anything except for me, nine except for me
Does this look like an ocean to you, kid?
Where are the fish?
Dammit! Again! My bad.

Easy Mark By Evan Rowland

19 By Ray Frank

Quote of the Day

"Ability is of little account without opportunity."
—Napoleon Bonaparte



THE HARP
FALL SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT · Trivia Night
WED · Open Mic Night (all are welcome)
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006 Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMR & All Credit Cards accepted
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-0900 - www.theharp.net

Best Bar Around
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
SATURDAY 12/16/06
ROCK 201
Student Band Wanted
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
413) 665-8788
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
Next To Cliffside Apts.

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your mouth is big. I could probably fit like twenty marbles in there.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Things will be nice and easy soon enough.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Pizza is your prey. You'll feast if you're fit.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Drink Rockstar™ and join the "in" crowd at the library. This horoscope was brought to you by Coca-Cola®.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You'll find yourself dreaming of dorms and D.C. food in a month from now.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You'll get better at college if you keep at it. Quitters won't ever know.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Uncover five gold stars and win big!

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
For every drunken Bohemian Rhapsody sing-along, a college student bombs a final.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Upon the conclusion of yet another semester you will find yourself no better at crosswords.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You can't let all this work get you down. Prove all the nay-sayers wrong.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will go to a rave for New Years and make-out with a bunch of weird people.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You should be proud of yourself. Keep it down though.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Our Nurses deserve Respect as Army Officers and call the shots! Guaranteed 2 to 3 ½ year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Apartment for Rent

Brandywine Apts. 1 beds available starting now or Jan.1 www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Auto for Sale

94 Nissan Pickup Good Condition 130k $1800 call 413-695-9292

Employment

Summer on Cape Cod... Professional family requires two women to share responsibilities for transporting teen to summer activities and light housekeeping in return for rent-free use of cottage on property. Vehicle/gas provided for activity transportation only. Clean house once per week. Walk to downtown Hyannis and local beaches/ entertainment.Email: littleonr@aol.com

Employment

Winter break jobs available at the Boston University Bookstore in Kenmore Square! Stop by our job fair all day Thurs. Dec. 14 in Room 178 on the Lower level of the UMass Campus Center or email bnhmnres@bu.edu

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Entertainment

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

House for Rent

Cute 2 to 3 bedroom house, neat, on bus stop in Northampton Available mid December. No pets $1300.00 Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

Room for Rent

1 bedroom available for spring semester. $400 a month including utilities. 3 male roommates, across from bus stop call 781-492-5588 for more details.

Services

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Services

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Travel

Alternative spring break Now taking applications Trips to New Orleans, Birmingham and Mississippi Delta. Space is limited, email: umassasb@gmail.com

www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No break for Minutewomen

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

Most members of the student body only have final exams to worry about after this Wednesday. The Massachusetts women's basketball team (8-2), on the other hand, is among the group of UMass athletes that will not be so lucky. The Minutewomen must carry on their rigorous, months-long schedule through finals week and continue it throughout winter break.

UMass Basketball

First on the list of teams the Maroon and White will face until school resumes in the spring are Eastern Michigan (4-3) on Wednesday and Delaware (8-1) on Sunday.

If UMass wants to further its successful season, a few factors will have to click into place.

Back on track

Freshman Kim Benton was beginning to lag in her performances after starting off the year as a 3-point machine. Heading into last Sunday's game against Buffalo (4-5), the 5-foot-5 point guard fell to a mere 29.7 percent going 11-for-37 from behind the arc. During the 72-67 OT win against the Bulls, however, Benton went 4-of-7 from the three-point line, boosting her to 33.3 percent for the season.

UMass coach Marnie Ducko gave the diminutive freshman the nod, and Benton did not disappoint.

On top of her contributions from behind the arc on Sunday, she added two rebounds, an assist and a two-point basket, adding to her total of 15.

Rosario tries to rebound

In the Minutewomen's devastating 69-45 loss to Hartford on Wednesday, guard/forward Pam Rosario scored a season-low four points. The disappointment was evident on the face of the 5-foot-10 junior and she seemed determined to turn things around in a hurry.

But the game versus Buffalo produced more or less of the same.

Rosario went 2-for-8 from the floor (including 0-for-4 from the perimeter) and 4-for-8 from the free-throw line.

The 20-year-old psychology major is usually one of the more reliable shots on the court, but her last two performances have fallen far short of her standards.

The Minutewomen will need their defensive juggernaut to step up soon if they wish to avoid hitting a midseason wall and free-falling through the remainder of the season.

Where there's a 'Mills' there's a way

Junior forward Kate Mills is not only one of the team's essential components, but its leading point-scorer as well – averaging 15.9 per game. But the towering 6-foot-1 powerhouse's skills are just limited to draining buckets. She has also racked up 20 assists and 69 total boards on the year. One of her biggest claims-to-fame, however, is her ability to block shots.

The Elkton, Md., native has an uncanny knack for denying opponents' shot attempts and squashing all hope of them finding any nylon. She has accumulated 17 blocked shots so far – 14 more than the squad's runner-up, junior center Whitney McDonald (three). This titan of the hardwood plays defense with ferocious intensity and loves to stuff her opponents' shots with a violent thud.

Mills shows the gravity with which she takes each and every game in the pupils of her eyes and the presence she carries with her. She is certainly ready to do anything within her power to avoid another painful postgame interview like the one after Hartford.

Team Tatham

The sorority duo of Tamara and Alisha Tatham have played as a pair for UMass since the 2004-05 season and have shown tremendous skill and admirable dedication all throughout. This season alone, the natives of Brampton, Ontario, have combined for 170 total points – Tamara, the elder, registering 104 and Alisha with 66.

Tamara is the teams' lone senior, while Alisha is a co-captain with Mills.

In addition to tallying points, the two have displayed some serious skills on boards – pulling down 132 rebounds between them (Tamara leads the team with 98).

Ducko has said that the Tatham combo has the ability to run the team and it's up to them if they want to carry the load through the rest of the rough schedule.

Junior Kate Mills has been a force for the Minutewomen in paint this season. She leads the team in points per game (15.9) and blocked shots (17).

Baron leads URI's offensive outburst

By Kevin Dooley
Collegian Staff

The Rhode Island Rams have been a force to be reckoned with on the offensive side of the ball this season. So it shouldn't be any surprise that the Rams had no problem finding their mark at the three-point line last Tuesday in a 72-68 win over Brown. In fact, Rhode Island shot nearly as well from beyond the arc as it did at the free-throw line. The Rams shot 12-for-18 (66.6 percent) from the three-point line and shot close to 70 percent from the charity stripe.

A-10 M. Hoops

Sophomore guard Jimmy Baron led the Rams' three-point splurge, making 8-of-9 3-pointers. For the season, Baron is shooting 55 percent from beyond the arc. But the three-point line isn't the only place on the floor Baron is finding a rhythm. After Rhode Island's 85-84 win over Utah on Saturday, Baron is now one of only two players in the country shooting better than 50 percent from the field (42-for-83, .506), and is perfect from the three-throw line (26-for-26).

Baron's remarkable shooting this season got some notice from the Atlantic 10, as Baron was named Co-A-10 Player of the Week along with Ahamd Nivins of Saint Joseph's. In his last three games, Baron has averaged 24.5 points and shot 13-for-17 from the three-point line.

Meanwhile, Nivins is averaging 17 points and seven rebounds a game this season. The sophomore forward had a season-high 28 points in a win 75-63 win over Division II Bellarmine and had 26 points in a 74-64 loss to Rick Pitino and his Louisville Cardinals. Nivins' back-to-back impressive outings at the NABC Classic at Freedom Hall in Louisville came after a scoreless performance in the Hawks 92-65 loss to Drexel.

Musketeers falter

The buzz around the A-10 all this week was the Xavier Musketeers climbing their way into the national rankings last Monday when they were ranked 24th in the Associated Press poll. The Creighton Blue Jays apparently didn't get the memo. Creighton snapped Xavier's five-game winning streak Saturday, defeating the Musketeers, 73-67, and in the process removing the Musketeers from the national rankings. Xavier's only other defeat this season came to No. 9 Alabama. Creighton limited the Musketeers to 40.4 percent shooting from the field. For the season, Xavier is shooting just under 48 percent from the field.

The Wooden Classic

The George Washington Colonials may have been the perfect candidates to participate in the John Wooden Classic out in California this weekend. After all, the Colonials exemplified excellence last season, going 26-2 en route to its best regular season in school history.

The Colonials didn't have the same success Saturday in the tournament named after the architect of the UCLA Bruins' unprecedented 10 NCAA championships in 12

See A-10 M. HOOP on page 8

Ricketts continues Atlantic 10 trends

By Joe Melone
Collegian Staff

Trends have dominated the Atlantic 10's weekly awards to this point in the 2006-07 season.

A-10 W. Hoops

La Salle's Crista Ricketts received the conference's Player of the Week distinction in the season's first three weeks. And now, another trend is the story.

Temple's Kamesha Hairston won her second-straight A-10 Player of the Week award, this time sharing the honor with Fordham's Lisa Carrol, for her 23.5 points, 16 rebounds per game in the Owls two games last week.

Against the top-ranked Maryland Terrapins, the forward poured in 28 points and grabbed six rebounds in Temple's 77-66 defeat at the hands of the defending national champions.

Four days prior to that, Hairston scored 19 points in the Owls' 78-52 victory over Stony Brook. She struggled at times in the contest but turned it on down the stretch to put the game away for Temple.

She also averaged two-and-a-half assists and two steals in the two games last week.

This is the first time around for Carrol.

She tallied a career-high 39 points in the Rams' 72-63 victory over Yale on Dec. 7. Her 39-point showing was not only the highest amount of her career, but was also the second most scored by a Ram in program history.

In the Rams' second game of the week, Carrol scored a game-high 22 points in a losing effort.

She shot 5-of-9 from three-point range and 24-of-27 from the free-throw line.

Xavier forward Amber Harris won her fourth consecutive A-10 Rookie of the Week Award. She has won all four of these awards since Saint Louis guard Katie Paganelli captured it in the season's opening week.

Harris scored 11 points while recording a career-high in rebounds (13) and blocks (seven) in a 49-45 win over Coppin State.

In the Musketeers' overtime loss to Penn State, she scored 10 points and had nine rebounds. Through 10 games, Harris is already just one block shy of the Xavier single-season school record – Taru Tuukkanen holds the current record of 39 set

See A-10 W. HOOPS on page 8

League play on hold for December break

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

As the first part of the college hockey season comes to an end, players and coaches will look to take advantage of the layoff and rest up for the second half. Most Hockey East teams have three weeks off, while others (UMass Lowell, Vermont and Maine) have only 14 days to get ready. No. 7 Boston College (9-5-1, 6-3-1 Hockey East) is in the unique situation of having almost a month between games.

Hockey East

Most of the schools resume their season with a holiday tournament in the last weekend of December. Each tournament consists of four teams, with each playing two games. Both No. 3 Maine (10-3-1, 5-3-1 HEA) and No. 2 New Hampshire (13-2-1, 10-1-1 HEA) travel to Estero, Fla., to play in the Florida College Classic.

Three Hockey East teams will be playing in tournaments hosted by WCHA schools. Providence (4-11-1, 3-7-1 HEA) plays at Wisconsin (7-9-2), UMass Lowell (3-8-4, 2-6-2 HEA) skates in a tournament hosted by No. 12 Denver (10-6-2), and No. 16 Massachusetts (8-5-2, 5-4-1 HEA) plays at No. 1 Minnesota (15-1-3).

No. 13 Vermont (9-5-1, 6-2-1 HEA) is in the unique situation of not having to leave the confines of its campus. The Catamounts host the Sheraton/TD Banknorth Tournament featuring No. 6 St. Cloud State, Union and Rensselaer.

The following weekend, conference play returns in full force. Almost every team in the conference plays each other at least one more time. However, UNH has already faced Northeastern (4-9-2, 2-8-2 HEA) and UML three times, sweeping both season series.

Nonconference play is essentially over, except for UNH's matchup with Dartmouth on Jan. 13 and the Beanpot Tournament in February.

Maine Soares past NU

Although they are considered to be the No. 3 team in college hockey by the USCHO.com/CSTV poll, the Maine Black Bears have not yet proven whether they deserve that high of a ranking. Two signs of a good team are that it beats worse teams and plays well against good ones.

The Black Bears clearly have not come to play in important games. Maine's record against the top four teams in Hockey East is 0-3-1. It lost three games in a row to New Hampshire, Boston College and Vermont, and tied No. 9 Boston University (6-3-5, 4-3-4 HEA) on the road. Consequently, Maine is currently tied for fifth place in the conference with Massachusetts.

The team's best victory of the season is a 3-1 win over No. 1 Minnesota in its first game of the year. Although that game is the Golden Gophers' only loss, early season results are typically not indicative of how good a team is in Captain Josh Ciocco and the New Hampshire Wildcats currently sit atop Hockey East. They hold an eight-point lead over Vermont.

See HOCKEY EAST on page 8

Knight passes Rupp, within two of Smith

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

Hate him or love him, but Bob Knight picked up career win No. 877. Texas Tech (8-3) defeated Centenary (4-5), 98-64, to push Knight passed the legendary Kentucky coach Adolph Rupp. Rupp, who coached the Wildcats for 41 years (1930-1972), won four national championships.

NCAA M. Hoops

Knight in his 41st season is only two wins behind former North Carolina coach Dean Smith, who retired in 1997, finished with 879 victories in 36 years at UNC.

Knight got most of his wins with Indiana University (662) where he won three championships, including the last undefeated season in 1976 (32-0). Before Indiana, he also coached six seasons at West Point, where he collected 102 wins.

No. 1 UCLA takes down No. 6 Texas A&M

UCLA is winning games with the defensive intensity that put them in the National Championship game last year. The Bruins (8-0) played their first top 25 team this year, defeating the Aggies (7-2) 65-62. For the Aggies, this is their second loss in five days after dropping a decision to LSU, 64-52.

In this week's coaches poll, the Aggies dropped to No. 13 while UCLA maintains its No. 1 position. UCLA sophomore guard Josh Shipp filled up the stat sheet with 18 points, four rebounds, four steals and two blocks. UCLA scored a third of its points off turnovers. The Bruins defense suffocated the Aggies and forced 20 turnovers for 22 points.

The Aggies hung tough to the final minute. With 17 seconds left and the Aggies down by three, junior forward Joseph Jones (11 points, 13 rebounds) missed a 3-pointer to tie it. The Aggies were forced to foul and UCLA sophomore guard Darren Collison sealed the game with two free throws.

Tucker leads Wisconsin over Marquette

Wisconsin senior forward Alando Tucker scored a season-high 28 point to beat in-state rival Marquette (9-2), 70-66. Despite shooting 39 percent

See NCAA M. HOOPS on page 8

Josh Shipp scored 18 points in helping UCLA remain No. 1. The Bruins beat Texas A&M on Saturday, 65-62, in the Wooden Classic.

Collegian Athlete of the Week

This week's stand-out athlete paced the Minutemen in their NCAA Division I Football Championship semifinal win over Montana. Senior Steve Baylark led UMass with 245 total yards from scrimmage. He rushed for 189 on 24 carries and caught five passes for 76 yards. He also notched two rushing touchdowns.

Sports Fact of the Day

Chicago Bears rookie Devin Hester broke the single-season record for kick returns for touchdowns in a season when he recorded two against the Rams last night. Hester now has six on the season.

UMass HUNGRY FOR A CHAMPIONSHIP | PAGE 14

CKY CKY TO ROCK PEARL STREET IN NOHO | PAGE 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 49 LO: 40 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 13, 2006

Residents rate living conditions in new North apartments

By Jenna Spataro
Collegian Staff

Four red brick buildings stand 5 stories high, windows glistening with frost from the cold New England weather. The inside—cozy and warm with freshly painted walls, clean elevators, sparkling white stairs, and long hallways—lead to even nicer apartments. These are the new North residential apartments located at the edge of University of Massachusetts campus.

North is the first housing constructed at the university since 1972. With the semester nearing its end, the 854 residents in the North complex have entered history as the first students to break in UMass's brand new apartments.

North is mostly made up of upperclassmen who enjoy living on campus, but are looking for a bit more independence. North gives them the freedom to feel like they are living in an apartment, but still be in close proximity to classes.

Students living in North pay $3,375 per semester, compared to $1,852.50 for a shared room in a dorm. North is more expensive, but these apartments come fully furnished with four single bedrooms, two full bathrooms, full kitchen with appliances, internet, cable, central air, are all inclusive, and also offering the co-ed living option, which gives males and females the option to live together.

Students have a kitchen so they can cook their own meals, their own private bedroom, and share a shower with only one other roommate. Students are still provided a laundry room in the basement, have an Apartment Living Advisors, (which is equivalent to an RA), and are still able to walk to class if they choose.

Apartment Living Advisor Colin Glatzel talks on the phone inside a cluster office of the North apartments.

Many students feel that North is a good living area for juniors and seniors who enjoy being in close proximity to campus, and don't mind having to follow some rules.

"The environment is more conducive to adult lifestyle, but at the same time students are in a

See NORTH on page 3

Officials fear housing crunch

By Abby Langsted
Collegian Correspondent

The image of University of Massachusetts overrun by an expanded student body has eased with new construction this year – yet the numbers of students will increase, and campus housing won't, according to campus officials.

This year, UMass has enough housing for everyone who requests it, according to the department of housing services. Unlike last year, students are no longer housed in local hotels or residence hall lobbies as they were in fall 2005 when the largest incoming class in freshman history arrived – some 4,400 students – according to officials in the Office of Student Affairs. This year, officials cut the size of the number of incoming freshmen to about 4,200 and will maintain that size next year.

According to Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs, 4,200 is about the number of freshmen that UMass resources can support. Construction of the new North Residential Apartments has eliminated the need for overflow housing, Gargano said, which means that the campus is now accommodating all incoming freshman, sophomores and transfer students who are required to live on campus. Housing was also available for upperclassmen who requested it this year, although the majority of them, especially transfer students, seem to want to live off campus. As the student body is well aware, this availability is a significant change from the housing situation of last year.

Students have been delighted with the new apartments, Gargano said.

"To be able to build that kind of residential complex in a little more than 12 months is unheard of in the industry – students are thrilled. It's exactly what they've been asking for," said Gargano.

On the other hand, class size won't remain the same for long, Gargano said, as the Chancellor's plan calls for continued gradual growth in the size of the undergraduate student body.

Chancellor John Lombardi's original plan projected a target student body of approximately 35,000 within the next ten years, some 10,000 more than currently. The number was used, Gargano said, when the Chancellor was comparing the enrollment of UMass with that of other large Universities such as Indiana University, the University of Illinois, and the University of California Berkley. The 35,000 figure is considered by some academic administrators to be a target number of students that enables a campus to operate at optimal efficiency.

According to Gargano, however, the Chancellor has acknowledged that these schools have a larger infrastructure to be able to accommodate a campus that size and that UMass' infrastructure is a work in progress, requiring a modification to the initial plan for growth.

The revised plan calls for UMass to add 150 to 200 students each year for the next four or five years, thereby increasing under-

See HOUSING on page 3

According to UMass vice chancellor Mike Gargano, there are no plans for expansion beyond the current goal of an undergraduate student body of 20,200.

Leslie Salomore, Caitlin Cousins, Amanda Makvmiw and Katrina Perron (from left to right), share a laugh inside their kitchen within one of the newly constructed North apartments.

UHS brings Christmas spirit

By Stella Cernak
Collegian Staff

If a visitor were to find themselves in University Health Services' employee lounge, they may notice a bare, seemingly abandoned, tree that stands neatly in the corner. Much to their surprise they may discover that this tree is not a UHS sponsored rendition of a "Charlie Brown Christmas", but instead a symbol of holiday spirit.

Yet, the tree, known as the "Giving Tree", was not always bare. At one point the tree stood in its corner, garnished in 51 paper fish representing 51 holiday wishes. Although at first concerned with whether a small group such as UHS could fulfill such a large amount of wishes, those in charge of the Giving Tree Project were in for a pleasant surprise. The wishes, made by 51 children served by the Children's Aid and Family Services of Hampshire County, were quickly taken on by members of the UHS staff.

The UHS members most actively involved in the project were Deb Warner, Patience Monty, Donna Williston and Kerry Naumowicz of UHS' sterile supply and central store department. Patience Monty, who has friends in the center, first discussed ideas of the tree with Donna Williston. Williston stated, "I thought it would be a nice thing to do for the children in the center. They shouldn't be left behind in the holidays."

The four women all agreed the Giving Tree project would not only be a great experience for the children and families at the center, but for the UHS employees as well.

The Giving Tree worked alongside FISH, an employee-led initiative to enhance the work environment. FISH sponsors a theme day for the workers, which in the past has ranged from bringing in pets to wearing slippers to work, had happened to fall in December this year. The theme nonetheless became UHS' Giving Tree project, bringing greater happiness than any pet or slipper themed day ever could.

Although UHS has pursued other types of donation programs in the past, Deb Warner remarks that this year has been particularly rewarding.

See UHS on page 2

Students create inflatable vest to aide deep pressure therapy

By Alana Melanson
Collegian Staff

Students in the Mechanical Engineering department at the University of Massachusetts are currently developing an inflatable vest intended to be used by psychiatric patients who benefit from deep pressure therapy, including sufferers of autism, high anxiety, and a broad span of other mental illnesses.

Graduate student Brian Mullen, 24, of Dedham, Mass., assisted by junior Marc Santos, 20, of Ludlow, Mass., designed the vest, which gives the wearer a hug at the push of a button. The vest, despite having the appearance of a normal, puffy winter vest, conceals a system of pumps and air bladders situated on the shoulders, the sides, and along the length of the spine that can be inflated or deflated by a controller located in the front left pocket.

Because the vest uses air pressure rather than weights, it is much lighter than other therapeutic vests currently on the market. The wearer is able to control exactly how much pressure he or she prefers to feel, when it is needed most.

"That feeling of 'confinedness' helps people to orientate themselves in space," Mullen said. "When everything seems chaotic, it helps to give them a sense of organization."

While there hasn't been a scientific study as to why deep pressure stimulation works, weighted blankets and vests have been used in and out of hospitals to calm patients with autism and other sensory processing disorders for several years. It doesn't work

See HUG VEST on page 3

UMass Professor Sundar Krishnamurty (left), UMass graduate student Brian Mullen (middle) and UMass junior Mike Santos (right) with the newly developed inflatable vest intended to be used by psychiatric patients.

N.Y. eateries face fines under trans-fat ban

By Frank Vitale
Collegian Staff

When you go to New York City, you can find the Empire State Building, the Statue of Liberty, and Times Square, as well as over 8 million residents. What you can't find, however, is any form of trans fat, or at least that's what the NYC Board of Health is hoping for.

Last Tuesday, the Board of Health voted to make New York City the first city in the nation to ban trans fats in all restaurants. This includes pizzerias like Lombardi's Pizza, the first in the country, bakeries like the famous Magnolia Bakery, and even chain restaurants like McDonalds and Taco Bell.

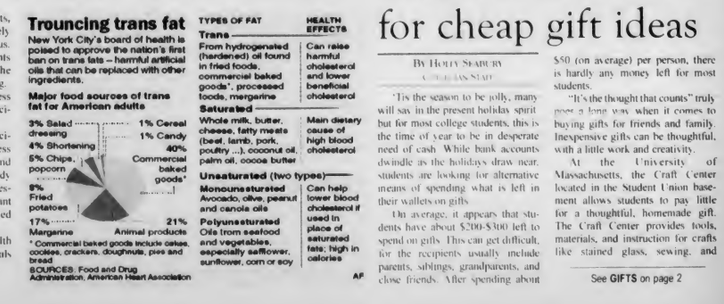
The ban gives restaurants until July 2007 to stop using most frying oils containing artificial trans fats, and until July 2008 to completely remove trans fats from their menus. It does, however, allow restaurants to serve foods that come in the manufacturer's original packaging.

The restaurant industry was less than pleased with the Board's decision.

"We don't think that a municipal health agency has any business banning a product the Food and Drug Administration has already approved," Dan Fleshler, spokesman for the National Restaurant Association, told the Associated Press.

Thomas Friedan, NYC Health Commissioner, told the AP officials

See FAT on page 2



Trouncing trans fat
New York City's board of health is poised to approve the nation's first ban on trans fats – harmful artificial oils that can be replaced with other ingredients.
Major food sources of trans fat for American adults
3% Salad dressing
4% Shortening
5% Chips, popcorn
9% Fried potatoes
17% Margarine
1% Cereal
1% Candy
40% Commercial baked goods*
21% Animal products
* Commercial baked goods include cakes, cookies, crackers, doughnuts, pies and bread
SOURCES: Food and Drug Administration, American Heart Association TYPES OF FAT
HEALTH EFFECTS
Trans
From hydrogenated (hardened) oil found in fried foods, commercial baked goods*, processed foods, margarine
Can raise harmful cholesterol and lower beneficial cholesterol
Saturated
Whole milk, butter, cheese, fatty meats (beef, lamb, pork, poultry...), coconut oil, palm oil, cocoa butter
Main dietary cause of high blood cholesterol
Unsaturated (two types)
Monounsaturated
Avocado, olive, peanut and canola oils
Polyunsaturated
Oils from seafood and vegetables, especially safflower, sunflower, corn or soy
Can help lower blood cholesterol if used in place of saturated fats; high in calories
AP

Students scramble for cheap gift ideas

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

'Tis the season to be jolly, many will say in the present holiday spirit but for most college students, this is the time of year to be in desperate need of cash. While bank accounts dwindle as the holidays draw near, students are looking for alternative means of spending what is left in their wallets on gifts.

On average, it appears that students have about $200-$300 left to spend on gifts. This can get difficult, for the recipients usually include parents, siblings, grandparents, and close friends. After spending about $50 (on average) per person, there is hardly any money left for most students.

"It's the thought that counts" truly goes a long way when it comes to buying gifts for friends and family. Inexpensive gifts can be thoughtful, with a little work and creativity.

At the University of Massachusetts, the Craft Center located in the Student Union basement allows students to pay little for a thoughtful, homemade gift. The Craft Center provides tools, materials, and instruction for crafts like stained glass, sewing, and

See GIFTS on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 70
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherol Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamieson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Sean Duram
Editorial Editor Kristen LeCuse
News Editor Matt Belliveau
Sports Editor Jeff Howe
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Nicole Puddester
Assistant Business Phil Smollier
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Annie Dellanicis
Assistant News Nikki Boonsakuakul
Assistant Sports Dan Picard
Assistant Sports Johnny Pelland
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick
Web Editor Ben Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aloha Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1958. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadcast since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Matryea Hughes

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen, Sean Duram

New York puts ban on trans fat

FAT from page 1

New York City's first-in-the-nation ban on artificial trans fats makes July of 2008 the deadline for completely phasing the artery-clogging substance.

had "seriously weighed complaints from the restaurant industry," especially those that claimed it was unrealistic to expect restaurants to replace all their cooking oils and shortenings in six months and all their ingredients in eighteen.

Mayor Michael Bloomberg, seen as health obsessed by some (in his first term he banned smoking in bars and restaurants and he maintains a weight loss competition with one of his friends in order to stay slim), dismissed claims that NYC has crossed a line in attempting to legislate diets.

"Nobody wants to take away your French fries and hamburgers—I love those things, too," he told the AP. "But if you can make them with something that is less damaging to your health, we should do that."

Formed when liquid oils are solidified into fats by the addition of hydrogen (a process called hydrogenation), trans fats are used heavily in frying and are present in foods like cookies, crackers, or pizza dough in the form of partially hydrogenated vegetable oil. Trans fats are also favored because of their long shelf life, and are therefore present in things like pancake and hot chocolate mix. On the down side, trans fats raise your LDL cholesterol (the bad kind) and lower your HDL cholesterol (the good kind), which may lead to heart disease. It is also believed to have adverse effects on the lining of your arteries, and is linked to diabetes. The average American eats about 4.7 pounds of trans fats a year, according to the FDA.

So is it possible to really eliminate trans fats from a city of over 8 million people? Many are skeptical.

"There's a lot of specifics of implementation that might get complicated," says Nancy Cohen, head of the Nutrition Department at the University of Massachusetts. "One issue is detection: routine health inspections don't test for trans fats. The only way most people know [the levels of trans fats] are from the labels."

"It's better to reduce the number of French fries you eat, not the amount of trans fats that are in them. People should focus on portion size, total fat, and number of calories. And food safety, that's very important."

While most health organizations have applauded the ban, the American Health Association warns that restaurants may have to revert to ingredients high in saturated fat (such as palm oil) if not given enough time to make the switch.

UM Health Services bring holiday spirit

UHS from page 1

"We have done similar things in the past, but they have never been this extensive, with as many children and families involved. The UHS workers were more in the holiday spirit, as people became excited to purchase gifts for the children," said Warner.

She also remarked that this year was special in particular because one of the grad students in the department had recently adopted a girl from the agency.

Donna Williston as well, saw the Giving Tree as beneficial to the workers.

"It brought on a sense of camaraderie within the workplace," she stated, adding, "Some people don't have kids to buy for, so they were excited to buy gifts for the children. Many even bought for more than one child."

"Several people went crazy and bought a lot of gifts," Deb Warner said, also remarking on Kerry Naumowicz's own excitement with the project. "Kerry was supposed to get a little truck, but instead came in with a huge box."

However, the group has reason to be pleased with their enthusiastic gift-giving, as they have altogether gathered enough gifts to fill four truckloads. The trucks, destined for the center's Northampton headquarters, don't just carry presents for the children and their families, they carry the warmth of the holiday spirit as well.

Recent release of PlayStation 3, Wii causing commotion

By Charles Thompson
Collegian Correspondent

On Christmas day, Anthony Weber will find Nintendo's new system, the Wii, underneath his Christmas tree. But with the incredible hype surrounding the Wii and Sony's PlayStation 3, it will be almost impossible for other people to get their hands on one of them without beating through a crowd or shelling out its weight in gold.

Weber, a freshman at the University of Massachusetts, is one of the lucky few around the country who will get his hands on a next generation system this holiday season. His mother paid $560 for the system through an online dealer, exactly double its retail value.

"She thought it was a good deal," he said.

And she isn't alone. The PlayStation 3 launched on November 17, and the Nintendo Wii hit the shelves on November 19. Since then, it seems that these systems have been even more difficult to get a hold of.

Customers have been lining up at big-box stores like Best Buy, Target, and WalMart in hopes of finding new shipments. Online, bid-wars run rampant on sites like eBay, with the PlayStation 3 selling for several times retail value.

The question is: with the upcoming holiday season and the inevitable frenzy of last-minute shopping, will the already-bloated hype swell even more? Around the country, people are getting beaten, robbed, shot, and trampled over to get their hands on these magical machines. The hysteria could just as easily strike home.

One of the most violent incidents on the launch weekend happened as close as Putnam, Connecticut. On release day, Michael Penkala was shot while waiting in line for a PlayStation 3. However, even a shotgun blast couldn't stop him from getting his PlayStation. As the robbers fled, Penkala's zeal remained intact.

"When they let us in the lobby there at Wal-Mart, I was on the floor coughing up blood and telling the workers to take the wallet out of my pocket

See GAMING on page 3

Students scramble for gift ideas

GIFTS from page 1

photography. The Craft Center is open Monday through Saturday for walk-in crafts, and also offers evening workshops that range from $7-$20.

Handmade gifts require some time, some imagination, and not a lot of money. Scrapbooks or collages are a good gift idea for friends. Students can easily find pictures through Facebook and MySpace, use funny quotes, ticket stubs, or other memorabilia to gather a great collection of good times with friends. Scrapbook decorations are plentiful and reasonably priced at craft stores like Michael's.

Some other gift ideas are mix CD's, Christmas ornaments, candy in a mug, or personal art. A tape of music recordings, a book of poetry, or a painting are all thoughtful gifts that any family member or friend would enjoy. Another gift that is always appreciated is baked goods, especially if the recipient is a fellow student. A plate of peanut butter cookies with a Hershey kiss really goes far.

However, if handmade presents are out of the picture and students prefer to buy an actual gift, websites like EBay and Amazon have features such as "gifts under $25" that help control funds. Also, the website betterbudgeting.com has numerous tips on how to save, budget, and shop frugally. One key tip on saving money during the holiday season is wrapping gifts with newspaper, magazines, or coloring book pages.

As far as Christmas cards go, some ways to work around spending a lot of money on a list of letter recipients are to recycle old Christmas cards, use postcards or homemade cards, or deliver "e-cards," popularized by websites like ecards.com, 123greetings.com, and egreetings.com. E-cards are personalized greeting cards that are free and fun to design. Better yet, there is no need for a roll of postage stamps.

Also to keep in mind is the holiday sale "Wacky Wednesday" at the University Store this Wednesday. Sweatshirts always are great gifts for family members, especially when the second one bought is half off.

Holly Seabury is a Collegian staff writer. She can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu.

To the World's Best customers:

Good Luck on your exams and Happy Holidays!

We look forward to serving you next semester.

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst

www.umass.edu/diningservices

Students sound-off on living conditions in new apartments transitional lifestyle. For many people it is the first time for them to have to do dishes and take out the trash," said Apartment Living Advisor Colin Glatzel.

NORTH from page 1

North also provides students with the same safety protections found in dorms. To gain access into the building, students must swipe their U-cards three times: once for the main entrance, again for the elevator or stairs and a third time to enter their apartment. To get into their individual room you then must use a key. Some students feel this to be a hassle.

"I feel like we live in a prison, it's ridiculous that we have to swipe so many times, it is like living under constant surveillance," said Kate Fontaine, a junior and North resident.

Since North is still on campus housing, there are rules about the number of guests allowed in each apartment. You can sign in a maximum of four guests an evening and a maximum of ten people are allowed in each apartment, including residents. The limit on the number of guests is due to the safety of the students. If you are 21 or older the amount of alcoholic beverages are also controlled. The rule states that you are not allowed to possess or store more than 12 bottles/cans of beer, two (750 mL) bottles of wine, or one bottle of hard liquor (1L).

Junior Leslie Salomone is pleased so far with her living situation. Salomone lives with her three girlfriends and enjoys going out on the weekends to parties. Since North has the "sign-in" policy, it is difficult for residents to be able to have large social gatherings in their apartments.

"It's really nice being able to go out to parties and come back here and have it be nice and clean" said Salomone.

Salomone and her roommates plan to live in North next year, but they recommend that students who want to live in North try to find three friends, because it is more enjoyable.

For some students, North's restrictions are too strict and they have chosen to relocate for next semester.

Angelo Frangiosa, also a junior living in North, enjoys his living arrangements, but will be moving off campus next year. Unlike Salomone, Frangiosa wishes he were able to invite more friends over to hang out.

"I am not going to be living here next year because if I want all my friends over at 8 o'clock it is a process," said Frangiosa. "I don't like the fact that you can get written up for playing drinking games at the age of 21. I think having to swipe three times and use a key should be security enough."

Last spring, senior Tim Greene was ready to move into North this fall, with his two friends. He soon changed his mind once he realized it was not as independent as he thought it would be.

"I heard the apartments were going to be really nice and new," said Greene. "Once I found out we would have to sign people in I changed my mind, I wasn't going to pay more to live in a dorm."

Having been a Residential Advisor last year and now an Apartment Living Advisor, Glatzel feels he has less contact with his residents. At times he feels it can be very challenging, he finds it difficult to prop open the door; he feels this cuts down on community development. But at the same time he understands upperclassmen are already set in with their group of friends.

"People who are upperclassmen, at this point they don't want to frost cupcakes and play ice breaker games," said Glatzel.

Before North opened up Glatzel was very curious of what the culture of students would be like. He feels it is safe to say North represents a good mix of people from each living area.

Some students love North, others don't. Like everything in life, personal preferences and situations depend on the individual. North can be a positive experience, or it can be negative. North is good for students who want the apartment style living option, yet are content with the fact that they will still have to follow some rules.

According to some of its residents, if you're a student who is looking to throw parties, North is not the place for you.

Students create inflatable vest for psychiatric patients for everyone, but has been shown to soothe many, and is almost always preferred over physical restraints. Today's treatments are nearly all derivative of the "hug machine" created in the 1960s by then 18-year-old Temple Grandin, a high-functioning autistic author and professor at Colorado State University.

UMass graduate student Brian Mullen (left) and UMass junior Mike Santos (right) test the newly developed inflatable vest designed to be used by psychiatric patients.

HUG VEST from page 1

Deep pressure doesn't work for everyone, but it has been shown to soothe many, and is almost always preferred over physical restraints when a patient becomes rowdy or violent. Weighted vests carry their own downsides, however, as they can be used as weapons if thrown.

"We want to improve upon current treatments. Weighted vests are heavy and can be too much for children," Mullen said, noting that long term wearing of such vests can cause children to become hunched over, much like with heavy backpacks.

Santos has been helping Mullen improve upon the original prototype that was created this past summer by senior Mechanical Engineering student Joe Patterson as part of his Research Experience for Undergraduates (REU) Program project. Santos also participated in the REU program but worked on a different assistive technology project with Professor Sundar Krishnamurty.

"We are constantly trying to design with their preferences and wants in mind, rather than designing what we think or theorize that they want," Mullen said. They are still working on keeping the inflation time up and deflation time down. The vest makes a slight hum when it inflates, but other than that it is very discreet—it doesn't puff up around the wearer or noticeably change in appearance at all.

A great deal of improvements have been made between the original and current designs. There have been several safety upgrades, including a double zipper lock which makes breaking into the potentially dangerous pieces such as wiring very difficult. The new design is much more modular and streamlined to make and manufacture easily—the air bladders are the same ones found in blood pressure cuffs and the vest is powered by ten AA batteries. By using easy to replace pieces, future customers will have less down time without the vest should any malfunctions occur and they will be able to make repairs on their own or with little assistance, rather than having to send the vest out for weeks at a time in order to be fixed.

The original, being the first manifestation of the idea, was very custom-made and the internal framework could not be removed from the vest. Now, it can be taken out to wash the vest or even be moved to another adapted garment, such as a lighter vest or jacket, which Mullen hopes to see made in the future.

For Mullen, this "portable hug vest" is just one piece of a larger scale project he is conducting on deep pressure and sensory modulation and forms of treatment and is the basis of his Masters and Doctoral work. Since the story about the vest appeared in the Boston Globe in October, he and Krishnamurty have been approached by ten different organizations, mostly all of which deal with children with special needs, interested in helping to market the design. Mullen will also be entering the vest in this coming year's Technology Innovation Challenge, a joint effort between the engineering and management departments to commercialize UMass-designed technology.

Krishnamurty's research team has already completed three studies on weighted blankets, with the collaboration of occupational therapist Tina Champagne at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton and the UMass School of Nursing laboratory.

Testing on the hug vest begins next semester, on at least 30 patients and 30 students. Meanwhile, Mullen and Santos continue to work on their background studies and finding volunteer participants.

"The technology is always ahead of the science," Krishnamurty said, noting that a fully marketable design would be ready in months to a year, "but there will be ongoing research for years to come. There is still a long way to go before it addresses [patients'] needs in a most comprehensive way."

BEN & JERRY'S
Stop By For an Ice Cream!
Store Hours:
Sunday-Thursday
Noon- 9 PM
Friday and Saturday
Noon - 10 PM

UM officials fear housing crunch

HOUSING from page 1

graduate enrollment to 20,200 while still having the resources necessary to support them, said Gargano.

The student body grows in any of three ways, he explained: an increase in freshman enrollment, an increase in transfer enrollment or an improvement in student retention. The administration will use a combination of the three to achieve the target student body size, Gargano said, in hopes of achieving the 150-200 student growth mostly through an improvement in student retention. Under that scenario, campus officials say, the campus now provides adequate housing to sustain that growth.

"While there is a plan to systematically grow," Gargano stated, "it will be incremental over the next five to six, seven years—and it's a lot easier to grow from within, to improve student retention, because the students are already here and we know that we already have them accommodated."

Equally important in expanding the student body, besides adequate housing, is an increase in the number of academic classrooms, the size of classrooms, the right student-faculty ratio, ample dining service facilities and adequate healthcare. Gargano insisted, however, that the University can accommodate this gradual growth in students without making significant changes to the current housing resources.

There are no plans for expansion beyond the current goal of an undergraduate student body of 20,200, Gargano said. While that could change in the future and require reevaluation, he stuck firmly to the position that for the time being, plans for additional campus housing are not in place.

"It's very expensive to build housing, so unless there is some arrangement with a private developer, I don't see us building any more housing on campus," Gargano said. "We would like to renovate some of the other housing we have on campus, particularly in Southwest, but I don't see us building any more."

UMass houses some 12,000 students in 10,119 housing units, according to the Association of College and University Housing Officers international, the professional group for college and university housing officials. That makes UMass the fifth largest housing program in the U.S. The schools that topped UMass on the list are: Indiana University (10,400 units), Pennsylvania State University (11,796 units), New York University (12,000 units) and Michigan State University (15,012 units).

Hot toys flying off store shelves and give it to my friends so they could continue waiting in line and purchase the PS3s," Penkala told the Worcester Telegram & Gazette. "For some reason I wasn't thinking about my wound, I was all about those PlayStations."

GAMING from page 2

Strangely enough, Penkala was never even looking forward to playing the PlayStations. Instead, like most of his compatriots, he planned to sell them on eBay for a profit. Video game consoles are no longer just for playing. As the hype grows around these consoles, the crowd they attract changes. The PlayStation 3 and the Nintendo Wii are ways to make a quick buck. Now, it is a business.

Abel Lin, a senior in Business Management at UMass, was present for the launch of both consoles at the Hampshire Mall.

"We were able to go in on launch day and pick it up. It was relatively pain free," he said. "We literally had a 20-foot perimeter camped outside Target ready to sprint towards the door. People got knocked over, and a couple of my friends almost got arrested." For the initial few seconds, it was a wild rush.

Like Penkala, Lin plans to sell the consoles for a profit. He is part of a group that capitalizes on big consumer items: everything from the PlayStation 3 to iPods to Tickle Me Elmos. Lin's group has connections inside malls and over the internet, and they are able to get the jump on hyped items. The entrepreneurial group even has one member whose job is entirely devoted to scouting out potential ventures.

"I plan to sell them on an undisclosed date to maximize the market opportunity that is on eBay," said Lin. The day of November 17 everyone just dumped their PS3 on the market. Before November 17, the average bidding price was $3,200. By the time it p.m. fell on November 17, the average price was $1,100 and it has stayed around there since.

"We are waiting for all of the PS3's to be sold off on eBay, and eventually it's going to get back to that sweet supply number." When the time comes and the holiday season escalates, desperate consumers won't have any choice other than to shell out money for this product. "These types of things — people don't realize until it's too late."

Joshua Combs, a freshman at UMass, also camped out for the Nintendo Wii on its release date. He received a tip that while all units at the Hampshire Mall had been claimed, the Holyoke Mall was almost empty on the night before launch.

Combs, who considers himself a relatively avid gamer, realized that lining up early was unavoidable – to get his hands on the Wii he would have to camp out for several hours.

"The crowd was mostly friendly people, not too many heinous people who would buy the system and sell it for money," he said. "People were sitting in the cold, looking miserable, but still excited about getting and playing the Wii."

Dave Viola, the general manager of the Hampshire Mall, allowed campers on the PlayStation and Wii launch days as long as they followed the rules and regulations. He said that they could stay, as long as they kept the lot clean and acted respectfully to the property and customers, according to the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Viola did not see any problems with the group. This was the first time he had seen tents pitched for a hyped release, but he expected things would go smoothly. Target security made sure to catch each camper on video. Those who were unruly were kicked out and didn't receive a game console.

"We've had no issues in the past. I don't anticipate any now. Viola told the Gazette.

And he was right. Both releases, for the most part, went smoothly. But in the coming holiday season, supplies will wane and hype will grow.

At Lin's house in Amherst, the Nintendo Wii and PlayStation 3 sit in their boxes, waiting to be sold at the right time. But even for the business minded, the systems have their charm.

The trouble is, he says, is that "The longer I look at them the longer I want to open them and play them."

2006 NCAA. Division I
Game Time: Friday, December 15 at 8:00 pm ESPN 2

NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP

Go! Go U! Go UMass!

Congratulations to the University of Massachusetts® Minutemen and Good Luck in Chattanooga
From your award winning UMass Dining Services

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
UMass Concessions

www.umass.edu/diningservices

Police patrolling at UMass raises questions of privacy

Those of you who picked up yesterday's copy of The Boston Globe probably couldn't help but notice the front-page article concerning UMass Amherst. A large, above-the-fold spread showed a picture of a cadet in uniform standing guard in Southwest while the article itself focused on the heightened security on the University of Massachusetts campus; mainly the new responsibility of campus police to patrol the hallways.

In James Vaznis' report, titled "Police walk the dorm beat," he leads off with an account of two UMass police officers patrolling the seventh floor of Washington, sensing the smell of marijuana and stopping "at individual doors, nearly pressing their noses to the cracks," before locating the suspected room and knocking.

This idea of campus police being able to roam the hallways has outraged some of the student body. Yesterday afternoon, the Cannabis Reform Coalition held a rally outside of the Student Union, and Vaznis' report in the Globe said that more than 2,000 students have signed petitions in protest of the patrolling of dorms.

An accompanying graph signifies a startling jump in the number of liquor and drug violations from 2003 to 2004, increasing by more than 290 percent. The number of 2005 violations is slightly higher than 2004.

Placing animosity with the campus police, though, is futile – they are merely acting upon orders. Instead The Massachusetts Daily Collegian senses that this is yet another scare tactic by the administration in an attempt to alter the image of this university.

In November of 2005, a report on the ABC network news magazine "Prime Time" rated the University of Massachusetts Amherst as the most violent campus in the United States, among large schools. Furthermore, statistics from the 2002-03 school year (when the Class of 2006 were freshmen) were used, and did not include the stabbings at the Zeta Beta Tau fraternity house on North Pleasant Street – which made national headlines – that happened a month prior to the report.

The fallout of this report stirred conversations nationwide, and moved the administration to beef up security in certain areas of the campus. Dorms such as Thoreau, Moore and the five Southwest towers saw security desks in effect as early as 3 p.m. on Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays.

It didn't stop there. Several weeks before the start of the Spring 2006 semester, a mass email from the administration was sent out to remind the student body of the new rules put in place during that fall. "Drinking games" were prohibited in the dorms, as well as empty containers of alcohol, and alcohol or drug-related paraphernalia – such as posters advertising alcoholic beverages – in the dorms. In turn, the extra security was taken away.

The heightened security this semester does not solve problems, however. Merely, it raises more questions. Consider a quote from University Legal Services director Charles DiMare in the Globe, where he says, "Students don't throw away Fourth Amendment rights because they walk onto a college campus ...Students do have an expectation of privacy in their homes." Our Fourth Amendment rights guarantee us the right to no illegal searches and seizures in our homes, without a search warrant.

What defines the "home" for students in the dorms? Does it end when you step out into the hallway? Theoretically, if the hallway is UMass property, then a student who is walking through the halls in a towel can be reprimanded by police for indecent exposure. Yet "homes" typically have bathrooms, and at UMass you can only get to the bathrooms by going through the hallways.

The problem with this new initiative to curb student debauchery is the inability to clearly draw lines between our rights to privacy and when those rights no longer exist. Are the suites in Sylvan private property? After all, the students there leave their toiletries in the bathroom, a defining feature of a home.

These questions must be answered, and they must be unambiguous.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board

The fear of obesity

Andrew Freeman

I regret to say that my job is to scare you. As a member of the media, I am compelled to write alarmist tracts with the intention of horrifying my innocent readers. The media, from books to newspapers to Web sites, is structurally and philosophically inclined towards creating fear.

There are two extremes in what the media produces. On the one end is "muckraking," which consists of finding corruption, degeneracy or the Decline of Western Civilization. Media that concerns kittens being rescued from trees by firefighters and such delights is referred to as "fluff." These two extremes have differing philosophies.

Muckraking is based on the idea that it is the duty of the journalist to expose the truth of human nature and institutions; indeed, it is only through revealing society's ills that they can be eliminated. The public is assumed to be unaware of these problems, but would be roused if only they knew the truth.

The fluff philosophy derives from the marketplace. A newspaper (or any other medium) is a product to be sold, and it must be marketed to appeal to its audience. If the audience wants stories about Brangelina, kittens or sports, it should get them, despite their unimportance. People are assumed to understand the world, and if they choose to focus on something trivial, it is a reasonable choice.

Much of what you read falls between these two extremes. An article detailing a bloody murder incorporates social responsibility – the community should know about a death. Realistically, however, most people are not as affected by such an event; very few of us will commit murder or become victims of it.

Media focus on such stories because they sell. They provide stimuli to consumers, usually emotional. Two of the strongest emotions are fear and horror, and commodities based around them sell very well. Witness the success of the "Saw" franchise if you doubt this.

The result of basing a system around emotion is excess. Media will often inflate, distort or conjure "crises." This is done both to advance perceived social goals and to sell products.

An ongoing example is the "Obesity Epidemic." In the past few years, we have been bombarded with ominous warnings of the dangers of excess weight. People are getting fatter, and this is causing more disease, death and the decline of Western civilization. This muckraking has commercial ramifications, helping to sell diet books and other products as people overreact.

When a study finds a correlation between excess death and weight, it does not prove that being overweight causes you to die earlier. Another factor could be at work.

Much of this outcry is based on flawed interpretations of research. Most studies seek to prove correlation – that two concepts are linked rather than causation – that one concept leads to the other. When a study finds a correlation between excess death and weight, it does not prove that being overweight causes you to die earlier. Another factor could be at work.

The dangers are overstated as well. A 2005 study found that being overweight, but not obese, reduced the chance of excess death, while being underweight increased it.

All this is lost on the breathless reporter, scientifically ignorant, who trumpets the crisis. This discourse helps to spawn drastic remedies: radical diets, surgical procedures and harmful eating disorders.

Lost in this mania is a significant discovery: the genetic link to obesity. Between 50 to 80 percent of weight difference in a population may result from genetics, asserted University Colorado Professor Paul Campos in a June 2005 Scientific American article. J.M. Friedman, writing for Nature in 2000, noted a connection between obesity and the hormone leptin – low levels of which induce a response similar to starvation. "In general," Friedman observed, "obese individuals are leptin-resistant."

If obesity is substantially genetic, efforts to "cure" it through diet will invariably fail. Indeed, Friedman claimed that "more than 90 percent" of dieters regain their former weight.

Now, I could argue that this War on Fat will produce casualties, that people will suffer from anorexia nervosa or bulimia, starving their bodies in a desperate quest to stay thin. However, the greater danger is not in the misunderstanding of health and weight, but the process that causes such overreaction. The media distortion that created the "Obesity Epidemic" affects other issues, charging them with emotion and leading to radical behavior.

It is unlikely that the orientation of the media will change. This system works. It appeals to something in human nature, and accordingly enjoys commercial success. Nevertheless, there are ways to reduce the harmful consequences. Individuals producing media content should consider its accuracy, avoiding unfounded declarations and apocalyptic tones. Those consuming media should avoid overreacting to it, and evaluate its precision on their own.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist

Lamenting about lethargy

Nick Milano

Playing pool in the Pierpont Residence Hall the other day, my friends and I were shocked by the number of people using the elevators. Pierpont, in case you do not know it, is one of the many towers among the five towers in Southwest. It has only four floors, yet the overwhelming majority of the people used the elevator instead of the stairs. At first, it was funny, but then it got out of hand. It got me thinking about gripes I have with people, so I developed a list.

I don't do not say you live in Boston unless you live in Boston. I get excited thinking you might be from my neck of the woods and to discover you really live in Newton, Andover or Attleboro. It is understandable to reference Boston when you are on vacation in a distant part of the country or world, but most of us here at UMass (except for Massachusetts Hicks in Massachusetts) We have a general idea about the locations of the towns and cities in the state and speak the truth. I am not about to say I live in Rockport, Please do not go ahead and assume we Bostonians want to be associated with you just because you drop your "r"s and cheer for the Red Sox does not entitle you to claim a connection to Boston.

Knowing your Boston in relation to other cities of the road. Does your mom or my father suggest to you that the government should subsidize people who do not know how to drive or who break rules of the road – overpopulation will be solved. No longer would the poor elderly be forced to walk an extra 100 feet to their car because somebody parked in the last handicapped spot. Anyone who has driven the Jamaica Way in Boston has been frustrated by the people causing traffic to come to a stand still because they attempt to make an illegal left hand turn across traffic. Since tickets have obviously not acted sufficiently as a deterrent, the electric chair should do the trick.

Refusal to read signs affects more than only handicapped people. For some reason, people seem incapable of finding seats at sporting events and concerts.

Learn how to read signs. Refusal to read signs affects more than only handicapped people. For some reason, people seem incapable of finding seats at sporting events and concerts. There are signs everywhere, read them. If you sit in my seats in section 19 when you should really be sitting in section 9, do not be surprised when I become angry, combative or maybe laugh in your face.

Last year while working for the Red Sox, it was unbelievable how many people would walk in, breathe in the Fenway air, then make a beeline for me or some other employee to ask where their seats were. They did not even try. All we are asking is a little effort.

Having worked at a grocery store for nearly five years, I think I have been asked where every item we carry is located. People have to be more reasonable. I know it may sound unreasonable, but the milk is not with the apples and oranges. My guess? The milk is with the butter and yogurt, but that would make too much sense.

Lastly, the elevators. I have not visited every Southwest low-rise so I do not know if they have elevators running in every one, but Pierpont's was running. Maybe there is a resident with a broken leg or work was being done on the building and I am being inconsiderate. It had not been working or was shut off since the first weeks of school, but now everyone was using it to not only go up, at most, three flights, but they were also using it to go downstairs. Can you not walk? How do you think us Orchard Hill people feel? If it's really too much, enlist a Sherpa to carry your bag and the extra oxygen for you. It can be your own little Mt. Everest.

It is difficult to discuss the difference between suburbs and the actual city of Boston, but it does exist. For the most part, my other annoyances can be boiled down to a single problem. I have with people taking the easy way out. It is easier to park in a preserved spot and it is easy to make an illegal turn to get home earlier, but those actions just handicap those with real physical problems and others on the road. Walk three flights of stairs and burn off a couple of those DC calories. Attempt to find your seats while exploring the ballpark and you might run into a player or two. As my high-school chemistry teacher said famously in response to our complaints about anything that might require even minimal effort, "It builds character."

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist.

Texaco is toxico

In 1954, a subsidiary of the company Texaco went to Ecuador to drill oil in the Amazon. They made Ecuador a major oil exporter. The consequences of this were – and still are – great. Experts say that Texaco may have caused the biggest oil disaster to date.

During the time that Texaco was operating in Ecuador, they admitted to dumping more than 18 billion gallons of toxic waste in an area that was home to six different indigenous tribes, one of which has completely died off. When the company left, they left a contaminated area three times the size of Manhattan with 600 open toxic waste pits. The soil is covered with a salty coating and scattered with sticky black pools, which have overflowed and have burned into the air.

Samantha Kaufmann

Chevron Texaco's Web site says that one of their social responsibilities is "Integrating social, environmental and economic considerations into our core practices and decision making..."

If Texaco dumped the toxins in an environmentally friendly manner, the cost would have been an estimated $1 to $3 per barrel. That may add up, but a multi-billion dollar company can pay it. They clearly were not thinking about social responsibilities.

A simple solution to this problem is for the younger generation to be knowledgeable about what products they are purchasing.

Now assemblies of indigenous people who reside in the rain forest are suing Texaco over environmental damage, which they say has contaminated their water, destroyed their food supply and caused disease. The CEO of Chevron suggested that the rainforest residents should look to their own poor personal hygiene as a reason for their "health woes."

The results of the toxic dumping have been devastating. The U.S. government has linked the exposure of the toxins to health problems such as cancer, reproductive problems, nervous system problems, immune system impairment and other health problems.

The cancer rate in the area Texaco operated in is 130 percent higher than the rest of Ecuador's normal rate. Ninety-one cases of juvenile leukemia were reported, while the rate of juvenile cancer is four times higher than anywhere else in South America. Spontaneous miscarriages and birth defects were also reported.

Chevron's Web site says another one of its social responsibilities is "Maximizing the positive impact of our operations on current and future generations." So far, the future generation in the area that Texaco has dumped their products gets to look forward to leukemia, cancer and birth defects.

In an attempt to end the lawsuit, Texaco negotiated with the government of Ecuador (which some accused of being corrupt) a "clean-up agreement." Texaco spent up to $30 million bulldozing earth on top of the oil ponds. One hundred and forty-one ponds were covered with dirt. Since 1995 the oil has resurfaced, and it continues to run into the environment.

A simple solution to this problem is for the younger generation to be knowledgeable about what products they are purchasing. The first step is to educate yourself on the matter that is occurring and to boycott the company.

For instance, I will drive past the Texaco station even if I will have to pay a little more somewhere else. My one decision might not have much affect; but if I can convince a few people not to do it, and they can convince a few more people not to do it, maybe one day it will make a difference.

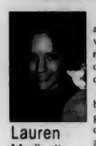
Texaco is not accepting full responsibility for their actions. I'm calling on all students and faculty of the University of Massachusetts to boycott Texaco's product. Drive by their gas station – even if it is a few pennies less – and know that you are not supporting such actions.

Another thing that I ask the students of the University to do is spread the word. Tell people what you've learned, and explain to them the damages that have taken place. Education is important, so educate your friends and family about Texaco's dirty business in the Amazon.

What made me aware of what was going on was a presentation that was given by David Poritz, a high school senior who has been educating people on the issues that are taking place in Ecuador from the destructive effects of the dumping. To find out more information, he recommended the website www.texacorainforest.org.

Samantha Kaufmann is a UMass student

Free press and freedom



Lauren Modisette

As everyone in the world is aware, the United States is still at war in Iraq. Some of us support it, many of us resent it. Still, everyone voices their opinions about it openly and freely.

Many of you reading this will be familiar with the points I am going to make. In fact I hope most of you already know everything I am about to tell you, but I know some of you won't. I believe you should.

Not many of us realize how lucky we are to have the freedom to voice our opinions about our government. There were times when you could be charged criminally for speaking your mind and passing judgment on those in control.

Today, the media works together with the American people in search for truth in the government. A significant portion of the media therefore "watchdogs" the government and ensures that what they do is justified and lawful. This is known as a Libertarian Press Theory, and the media didn't always work this way.

The government has only recently become open to the criticism of its citizens and the media. Until 1725, all documents that were to be published had to be run by government officials to ensure that the papers' contents weren't critiquing their choices. If a writer did this, he would be charged with seditions libel and jailed. All newspapers also had to be licensed in order to publish. Even so, many papers printed anyway but found themselves serving jail time.

Eventually people were allowed to print criticism about the government as long as they could prove that it was true. This eliminated the option of incorporating opinion into the mix, continuing the oppression of freedom of expression.

Even as this process receded, there were still many instances where the government did not tolerate views against it. There were also several points where the media itself had been divided and attempted to oppress the expression of the opposite party. Even today we can see this hostility radiating between Republicans and Democrats.

Until 1725, all documents that were to be published had to be run by government officials to ensure that the papers' contents weren't critiquing their choices.

With the Federalist and Democratic-Republican parties of the 1790's, both debating the validity of the First Amendment and freedom of the press, came another form of expression repression called the Sedition Act of 1798. This was the Federalists' attempt to silence the Democratic-Republicans and their idea of a Bill of Rights. This is a document that has been attached to the First Amendment which prevents Congress from making any law abridging the freedom of the press. In the opinion of the Dem-Reps, if nothing said Congress couldn't, then they surely would.

There have also been the Abolitionists in the early 1800's, who were labeled as rebels and trivialized for their views by those who disregarded the ethics of slavery and women's suffrage. The Abolitionists experienced the greatest level of restraint in peacetime.

Abolitionists would spread their news and their papers through the mail. Those who opposed their views attempted to stop this because of the radical material printed on these papers. Many feared it would lead to slave revolts and riots even though the material wasn't meant to be read by the slaves. Fortunately for them, they were allowed to distribute the papers to circulate though the mail. Yet, people in the south still made many attempts to restrain them. If southerners were caught with these papers, they would be fined and sometimes jailed.

The most oppressive time for freedom of speech, however, was during World War I. During that time, if you voiced an opinion opposing the war, you were risking having your citizenship annulled. How many of our citizens today would be deported for anti-war expression if this was still in effect?

People were being punished for what they said rather than what they did. Citizens were enlisted to spy on each other and turn in residents who could have been considered spies. There was a theoretical war within the country among the American people while the war overseas was taking place.

As you stand on street corners with your anti-war signs and attend rallies and protests, take into consideration how much work was done to allow you to freely express your hatred and disapproval of the Bush administration and the war. The American media is so protected now because of all the suffering our ancestral journalists and editors went through.

"Now, the government is more likely to have to take criticism from its citizens – even though it doesn't like it and often tries to stop it," said Karen List, professor and head of the UMass Journalism Department. This freedom is something I have not considered before and, as a journalism student, am now completely grateful for.

Imagine just how many people in our great country would be arrested, deported, charged and even jailed for expressing their views against the government. We must remember how far expression has come while we willingly and openly express our criticism.

Lauren Modisette is a Collegian columnist.

Not fighting for what you believe in

Tristan Brosnan

The U.S. intervention and occupation of Iraq and the Middle East seems to have no end in sight. The construction of fourteen large military bases in Iraq, the increase in deployment of soldiers to over 140,000 in Iraq and now the deployment of the Eisenhower Strike Group, which includes a nuclear aircraft carrier, off the coast of Iran.

Talk of even some plan of troop withdrawal has been replaced with an increase of 'stop loss orders,' which requires troops to serve additional tours of duty, often violating their contracts with the military. Couple this with an increase in attacks against coalition forces over the summer in Iraq and its no wonder more and more troops are turning their backs on the war.

This past February a Le Moyne College/Zogby International survey found that 72 percent of U.S. troops think the U.S. should leave Iraq within the year. The poll also showed that 29 percent of U.S. troops said the U.S. should leave Iraq "immediately." It's no surprise that dissent has started to reach the ranks of soldiers and veterans; they've experienced the brutality and insanity of war first hand.

If this wasn't enough, more and more troops are being forced to serve multiple tours of duty in Iraq. The same Zogby International poll found that 45 percent of troops in Iraq were there on their second tour of duty, with another 29 percent in Iraq on their third or more tour. Politicians tell us that the alternative to this is a draft that instead of taking our brothers and sisters out of harms way we need to ship more of them there.

As Camilo Mejia, the first soldier to go public with his refusal to deploy to Iraq said, "Show me a society where everyone has access to decent wages, where everyone lives a dignified life, and then I will show you an all-volunteer army."

The truth is, for many Americans a draft already exists, the draft of poverty. It is however, war resisters like Camilo Mejia and Pablo Parades who have lead the movement around the country to confront military recruiters in our schools and on our campuses. They do so to expose both the lies that recruiters tell and to let potential recruits know that they have other options then being forced to kill or be killed.

This call has been taken up by students, teachers, parents and PTAs around the country. Knowing the facts and the truth when making such life altering decisions isn't encouraged by the military, filling quotas or getting new enlistees is their priority.

During the Vietnam War it wasn't just anti-war activists and students who were part of a movement to bring the troops home, but it was a movement of soldiers and veterans.

Members of the military and veterans haven't just challenged the military's recruitment operations, but have challenged the war itself. This radicalization in the ranks of the military isn't just happening around issues of immediate concern to their life, sanity and well being, but is coming to grips with the politics of the situation in Iraq.

Traveling Soldier, a newsletter and internet journal that commonly features writing pieces by service members and their families highlights this. As one unnamed GI explained, "...a solid number, perhaps a majority, of the ordinary soldiers believed this war was bullshit." This fact is reflected in the population as a whole with most people seeing through the lies. Every day that passes it becomes more and more clear that there were no WMDs and Iraqis aren't liberated.

During the Vietnam War it wasn't just anti-war activists and students who were part of a movement to bring the troops home, but it was a movement of soldiers and veterans. On returning home, thousands of veterans flocked to join Vietnam Veterans Against the War, while others still in the military or serving overseas produced underground newspapers, took part in anti-war protests or helped organize GI coffee houses.

Today a movement of soldiers and veterans against the war in Iraq is growing. Recently Jonathan Hutto, a Navy seaman based in Norfolk, Va., with the help of other active duty personnel, produced "An Appeal to Redress," which is a route in which active duty members can voice their opinion without fear of reprisal. The Redress calls on Congress "to support the prompt withdrawal of all American military forces and bases from Iraq," and has already been signed by over 700 active duty service members.

Likewise, other members of the military have chosen to take direct action and refuse to deploy to Iraq. This winter the first Lieutenant, Lt. Ehren Watada, refused to be deployed overseas. In a speech he gave, Lt. Watada stated, "Today, I speak with you about a radical idea. It is one born from the very concept of the American soldier ...The idea is this: that to stop an illegal and unjust war, the soldiers can choose to stop fighting it."

Soldiers have far more in common with ordinary Iraqis than Bush and the rest of his administration. The enemies of everyday Iraqis and Americans reside in Washington, they're the ones who've pillaged and plundered Iraq. It's far past time we stand up and demand the troops be brought home now and send the message to our brothers and sisters in the armed services that their voices of opposition won't be silenced.

Tristan Brosnan is a UMass student

A view about our veterans

Jason Mizula

When our troops come home from war, they don't ask Uncle Sam for much. As the late Theodore Roosevelt once said, "Any man who is willing to shed blood for his country deserves a fair deal when he returns home. More than that no man is entitled, less than that no man shall have." It is sad to say, but at least some of our men and women aren't getting that fair deal. The military is great at getting soldiers ready to survive and kill, but what happens when they take the uniform off? These are our friends and loved ones, but when the elite on Beacon Hill and Capitol Hill see them it's usually for a picture and a handshake and nothing more.

In the case of a dear friend of mine, as soon as the therapist knew he had served three tours in a combat zone with an Infantry MOS they seemed ready to write him a prescription and send him to AA meetings. He felt like the therapist had him pegged the minute he walked through the door. In doing so, the therapist immediately alienated himself from getting to the real issues and getting my friend the help he needs.

He is a proud man and our government can't expect him to open up to a person with a clip board in their hand and the clock ticking away with the next veteran waiting in line. Whatever issues he might have, he knows that it should take more than one therapy session to find out.

Living with him, I can see that his only problem is the lack of someone to relate to. Whether it's the poor screening process, the need for other combat veterans to do the work of the therapists, or more nurses to deal with the growing number of patients, the government should provide that help. When 28.5 percent of our income tax dollars go to fund the military but only 3.7 percent go to fund the veterans of the military, we need to ask ourselves if the government has it's priorities straight.

Uncle Sam is asking more of the VA nurses and paying them less than they deserve, which translates into lesser quality treatment for those who need it. The human mind is a precious thing and should be treated as such. A master's degree in psychology is not a ticket to judge those who confide in you.

The Veterans Administration does some great things and their therapists have good intentions, but good intentions can't make up for a lack of funding and our troops deserve better than good intentions. To have an opinion is one thing. We do live in the land of the free, but let's not forget the men and women whose job it is to uphold that freedom. The men and women in uniform most certainly do not pick the wars in which they fight. That is done by civilians in Washington, so why punish our dedicated troops?

To continually preach that we must leave Iraq now but forgetting those who have already left isn't supporting the troops.

If Americans keep supporting the troops the way we currently are, I don't think that it's too far fetched to think we might be seeing homeless Iraqi vets standing 30 years from now where homeless Vietnam vets stand today. Call me crazy, but I think this could easily happen if we continue to think that two points on the Civil Service Exam and a put on the back from a local Congressman is enough.

"I support the troops" some may say, but having an "Out of Iraq" bumper sticker next to a yellow ribbon magnet on your trunk is far from support. To continually preach that we must leave Iraq now but forgetting those who have already left isn't supporting the troops. The war will not end tomorrow, and left in the wake of people like Cindy Sheehan and the Raging Grannies, our brothers and sisters are coming home to a country that at times seems ready to blame them for the world's troubles.

It's not just the mental health problems, it's also the physical and financial problems that we need to help our veterans with. Supporting the troops is not a Democrat thing, an Independent thing or a Republican thing, it's an American thing. If you can't find it in you to support the people who have gone to war and now may need a little help, support them because they are your fellow Americans, and it is the right thing to do. They all have a story to tell, are we too good to listen?

Although you may want the war to end today and the troops to come right home, as do I, realistically that won't happen. Let's instead show some love and respect for the troops who are home, and even more for those who don't have a home. Let's not forget that the Soldier's Homes aren't just for World War Two, Korean and Vietnam veterans anymore. We can't just help some; we have to help all of them. There is only one way we can possibly do this, in the words of Mother Theresa, "one by one."

Jason Mizula is a UMass student

YOU, THE AMERICAN PEOPLE! HOW ARE YOUR SONS AND DAUGHTERS DOING?
WE'D LIKE TO GET THEM OUT OF IRAQ, MR. PRESIDENT!
THAT'S NOT WHAT I ASKED YOU!
IF IT ISN'T BACKED AND HELD COOLING IT'S SOME OTHER BUNCH OF WINEY CUT-AND-RUNNERS.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

DRIVING ESCORT SERVICE A NECESSITY

I am sure many female college students are familiar with being told never to walk alone at night. UMass is no different. Women on this campus are constantly told not to be alone on campus. As a junior here I can testify that I've heard this safety rule multiple times, but knowing and doing are two different things.

Earlier this month a senior at the University of Vermont went missing while walking back to her dorm alone on a Friday night. I'm sure Michelle Gardner-Quinn had heard countless times to not walk alone at night, but never thought anything would happen to her. When her body was found five days after her disappearance female students felt a shock, realizing that it could have been any one of us in Michelle's place.

No matter how many times we are told not to walk alone at night it, clearly, still happens. We know the dangers of doing it but never think it could happen to us. For many women, walking home alone is unavoidable for a number of reasons. Maybe your roommate and walking buddy met a guy and went home with him, or you were tired and wanted to leave a party early. For many our judgment is altered due to intoxication and we make poor decisions, thinking we are safe and invincible.

Whatever the reason, walking alone at night does happen, but something needs to change. Having a driving escort on campus would reduce the number of women walking home alone at night and therefore lower the crime rate on campus. The rape rate is higher on campuses that do not have an escort service. This service would reinforce safety on campus and ensure women with a safe way home at night.

The current Escort Service at UMass is highly ineffective. It offers someone to walk home with you, but only runs until 3 a.m. The service is also prohibited from escorting those who are sick or injured and can decline service to anyone who is under the influence of drugs or alcohol. This is clearly impractical since many women walking home alone are under the influence of something that is clouding their judgment and enabling them the will to walk home alone in the first place.

A survey done in 1997 about the current Escort Service found that most women are aware that the service exists but don't use it for a number of reasons. The survey found that 50 percent of women walk alone at least 2-3 times per week, even though most of them know they could call the Escort Service. They said they do not call because it takes too long for the service to come, because they have been denied service before, or because they have not been able to get through to the service a previous time.

If the current Escort Service is not doing its job then it is time to modify it. Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania has recently modified their escorting service. Their service now consists of police officers on bikes patrolling the pathways, walking escorts on campus, and a van escort service on and off campus. The walking escort service is provided from "dusk until 10 p.m." and the vans from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m. on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights. After 3 a.m. the university police will provide escorts home.

Evidently it is necessary for UMass to modify its Escort Service, offering rides home and providing women with a way to return home alone, but safely. We need to reduce the number of women raped and killed on campuses all because they did not have a safe way home and this needs to start here at UMass right away.

Dana Pulde
UMass Student

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 13, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CKY will enter 'Familiar Realm' at Pearl Street

Underground rockers CKY will perform at the Pearl Street club on December 19. Doors will open at 7 p.m.

BY JEREMY FOWLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After becoming famous with the popularity of MTV's "Jackass," CKY has become one of the biggest names in underground rock. Originally formed in 1998 after engineer/producer Chad Ginsburg loved what singer/guitarist Deron Miller and drummer Jess Margera were creating. He joined CKY as a second guitarist and began writing new music with them. They have been making amazing underground rock ever since.

Their first release under the name CKY was entitled "CKY: Volume 1" and it was released on Volcom records. After touring with Vans Warped Tour over the summer of 1999 they outgrew the underground label and signed to Island records.

With Island records they recorded their most well known work to date entitled "Infiltrate. Destroy. Rebuild." This contained most of the great dark and mysterious songs that CKY is known for such as "Escape from Hellsnew." It was with this record that another phenomenon helped kick the band into people's living rooms.

"Jackass" and skateboarding were dominating the minds and eyes of teenagers nationwide and at the forefront of this revolution was Bam Bam Margera, Jess' brother, is still one of the most well-known skateboarders in the country, second only to Tony Hawk. He has his own signature line of clothes with Element, as well as some of the most popular skate decks in the company. He was a founding member of the hit show Jackass, and most of all, was a huge fan of CKY.

Songs such as "96 Quite Bitter Beings" started popping up on a weekly basis on Jackass and created a buzz with those who watch the show. Bam also released several self made full length films of he and several of his "Jackass" friends doing the same shenanigans as seen on "Jackass" but to an even greater length. With this, CKY gained an even bigger following which gave way to their most recent release entitled "An Answer Can Be Found."

Its third album is a completely different CKY. For the first time they have brought acoustic guitars into their catalogue. Also, the album includes several all instrumental pieces. A definite change from the muddy guitars previously used on their other albums. It shows a growing maturity within the band and they are stepping out to define themselves and step out of the shadows of a television soundtrack.

Lead Singer Miller has also just returned from a stint in rehab for alcohol and antidepressant abuse. This is another good sign of things to come for the band. He has said he feels much better and has already written new material for CKY. All things seem to be coming together for this great band. They were released from their contract with Island records after a mutual agreement that they were not a good fit for each other. However, they will have no trouble signing with another major label and in the meantime continue to tour. This will be the first tour for the newly sober Deron and it should be like seeing a new CKY.

CKY will be rocking Pearl Street Tuesday, December 19th and their large cult following of devoted fans are sure to turn out in great numbers. CKY will not disappoint as they are known to put on amazingly energetic live shows. Doors open at 7 p.m. so make sure you get your tickets!

Amherst Survival Center

offering a helping hand in a welcoming environment

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A little more than two miles north of Amherst Commons is a little nook of kindness that's built it walls on the spirit of giving, and community camaraderie. The Amherst Survival Center, located at 1200 North Pleasant St., offers a welcoming environment for families and individuals who are struggling to make ends meet.

Founded by long-time community member Jane Holappa in 1976, the center aims to offer a place where the affluent wealth of the area can be harnessed and given back to those who need it most. In addition to serving free lunch during the weekdays, excluding Wednesdays, the center is home to a "free store" where clothing, appliances and even toys are available to anyone in need, completely free of charge — completely donated by the community.

Lunch is served at noon, and offers high protein vegetarian as well as meat dishes. Any left-over food is wrapped up in to-go containers and given away, ensuring nothing goes to waste. The center also gives away a daily distribution of day old bread, fruit and vegetables.

Julia Agron has worked at the center for four and a half years, first working as a cook and then taking a job as Assistant Interim Director. "The opportunity to work here, support my family and give back to the center just seemed absolutely perfect. I've been really connected and really plugged into the center ever since."

According to Agron, the local community plays an indispensable role in the Center's operation, not only in financial support but also in donations.

"Everyday at eleven we distribute fresh produce and bread that comes from businesses and farms in the community," said Agron.

But in addition to donations and financial contribution, the center truly values the dedication of their volunteers, who take the form of college students, sporadic drop-ins, and individuals who have lent their efforts since the center's opening thirty years ago.

It's this intangible aspect that truly distinguishes the center as a place of relief. Going beyond offering material resources, the center opens itself up as a warm place for companionship and socialization.

"The human connection is a lot of why people are here," said Agron, who believes that human connection is what is most inviting not only to clients, but volunteers as well.

A growing trend of poverty and homelessness in Western Massachusetts is what motivated Holappa to open the center. A growing population in the area (due to the closing of institutional state facilities) was also a key factor in the problem, along with cuts in welfare spending and increased unemployment.

"She understood the community a lot," said Julia of founder Holappa. "She saw that there were tremendous needs combined with a wealthy community. She just went to the town and asked for a building."

Originally the center resided in the basement of a house before temporarily moving to the Jones Library. Today it inhabits an old brick school in North Amherst — a fertile ground where, much like children of the past planted the roots that enriched their minds, the center grows with an ever strengthening enrichment of human compassion.

While the center isn't exclusively sponsored by any religious organization, much of their donations and support comes from different church groups and fundrasers done in affiliation with religious organizations. Others are undertaken solely by their own staff, like their bi-annual "Trash to Treasures" fundraiser.

"Trash to Treasures" is the biggest fundraising event of the center, and contributes to a great deal of their financial support. The two-day fundraiser, which is held in May and September, collects used furniture donations that are in good condition, and sells them in Amherst Town Common with all proceeds benefiting the center.

Whether interested in lending their service to fundraisers such as this, or helping with cooking and collecting donations, the center emphasizes flexibility for individuals who want to volunteer in many aspects.

"With a staff as small as ours, we couldn't possibly do everything by our selves," said Agron. "We'd be absolutely overwhelmed if we didn't rely on our volunteers."

Some areas of volunteering include sorting clothing, lunch preparation, picking up food donations, and entering data. People of all ability levels and backgrounds are welcome to volunteer. Any specialized skills such as computer proficiency, grant-writing, event planning or carpentry would greatly contribute to the center.

However, as the cold weather intensifies, and the holidays send many college students out of town, donations of warm clothes and non-perishable food items are a helpful way to give back to the community. This local shelter is alive with an array of vibrant personalities who will undoubtedly open their arms and embrace more of the community generosity that's done so much good over the years.

To get involved in the Amherst Survival Center, send an email to survivialcenter@verizon.net or call 413-549-1968.

The shelves are stacked at the Amherst Survival Center, offering help for those struggling to make ends meet.

A volunteer helps cook meals for needy families. Lunch is served everyday at noon and offers high protein vegetarian and meat dishes.

Some of this year's musical hits and misses–a look at eight albums

BY DAN DELUCA
THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

Record stores are closing and sales of downloads — and ringtones are soaring. Short attention spans and iPods continue to make listening to a CD all the way through seem even more anachronistic, like reading a Victorian novel or dropping a coin in a pay phone.

So does it even make sense to use full-length CDs as the artistic yardstick to assess the musical merits of 2006?

It does — for now, anyway. Though CD sales are down 5 percent compared with last year (a figure offset slightly by increased legal downloading), the music industry still organizes itself around the album when it brings its product to market. And, more important, artists — or at least most of the artists on the best-of list that follows, along with narrow misses like the Decemberists and the Roots — still use it as a defining principle when they get down to the business of making music.

Of course, they do so knowing that once they let it loose, their carefully conceived baby will be shared, stolen and consumed in all sorts of bite-size ways. Plenty of that went on in 2006, when sales of hit "master tone" ringtones, which sell for about $3 a pop, started to outpace legal downloads.

Last week, Akon and Eminem's "Smack That" sold 115,000 ringtones, making it the top seller, compared with 76,000 downloads.

The Billboard charts were ruled by hip-hop and country hitmakers such as Jay-Z and Rascal Flatts, plus teen-targeted "American Idol" alums and Disney's "High School Musical" (the year's biggest-selling CD, with 3.4 million copies).

But there's plenty of high-mindedness afoot in the underground, from the burgeoning "freak folk" scene that includes over-praised harpist Joanna Newsom to such indie subsets as the gypsy-rock movement, with bands like Beirut and Gogol Bordello.

Three years after the start of the Iraq war, 2006 was also the year that pop stars from Pearl Jam to Pink took on President Bush in song, while the Dixie Chicks stood their ground with an unapologetic CD and movie, and Neil Young blasted away with his feedback-fueled album "Living With War."

The best barometer of the nation's mood, though, might have come from country singer Darryl Worley, who wrapped himself in the flag in 2003 with the Sept. 11-invoking "Have You Forgotten?" This year, Worley returned with "I Just Came Back From a War," still sounding patriotic, but also confused, disconsolate, and "no longer the same good ol' boy" he once was.

Here then, is my Top Eight list, with recommended downloads for anyone in a hurry. And for those who think the album is truly dead, a selection of singles for a mix CD is below.

ART BRUT

"Bang Bang Rock & Roll." This album came out in England last year, but wasn't released in the United States until May. And since I had more fun listening to it this year than any other minted-in-2006 disc, it jump-starts this list with cheeky pop-punk panache. The levels of irony begin with "Formed a Band," in which British funnyman Eddie Argos tells the Art Brut story in what he insists "is my singing voice, it's not irony." But he and Art Brut are never merely clever, because "Bang Bang Rock & Roll" ultimately gets over on its boundless enthusiasm and

See HITS on page 7

Durfee director Prevost says goodbye

As the semester winds to an end, so too does the stay of our dear friend, Armand Prevost, as Interim Director of Durfee. We bid our leader a sad goodbye after three years of dedication and passionate work at the Durfee Conservatory. Armand first got involved with the conservatory in 2000, when he came to the University as an undergraduate in the plant and soil science major.

He took the position of Interim Director of Durfee Conservatory in December of 2003, even before graduating spring of 2004. Since that day Armand has been the heart and soul of the Durfee Conservatory and the Durfee team, eagerly sharing the wonders of the greenhouse with our community and working tirelessly to improve and manage this special collection of plants.

Told in the beginning that he'd have no budget to work with, Armand started the weekly Durfee plant sale to raise money for the greenhouse, providing an outlet to the community in the process. The sale has since become a modest but steady source of funding for the greenhouse. The holiday wreath and basket sale has been an especially big success this year. Armand also started the Durfee volunteer program, which has grown from five members in September of 2005 to fifty-five members this semester. Armand attracted students from all walks of campus life to work in Durfee, providing Durfee with the care and attention needed, while giving many curious students the opportunity to experience the world of horticulture and the exotic Durfee collections.

Durfee's position has been a labor of love for Armand. "Horticulture is fun to me, and I shared that experience with everyone," he says. "You're not coming in to work, you're coming in to relax and have fun." This is what he wanted everyone who walked through the greenhouse to understand.

Weekly workshops such as bonsai art, orchid culture and plant propagation, all open to the public, were started and personally supervised by Armand. He also taught bonsai art through the University, organized regular tours of the greenhouse for faculty, students, children, and outside community, with an emphasis on plant diversity and interacting with the environment. This summer he even opened the greenhouse up to an internship program for a student from Smith College. Armand provided a place of peace, growth, and creativity over the summer by sponsoring and overseeing a program for troubled youths in the greenhouse.

"Education is sharing," explains Armand. "Knowledge is power, but a greater power

See DURFEE on page 7

My last headline

Today's paper is, for some, just another paper. For me, it's the last paper I'll be a part of as the Arts&Living assistant editor.

Big deal, right? Well, I'm going to bore you all with the story of how I got to be here, or even what I plan on doing next. What I want to do is thank everyone I've worked with for the past year. The Collegian is not something that just appears every weekday. Countless hours are spent by a handful of dedicated students with their hearts set on constantly improving an already great newspaper.

Everyday a devoted set of students head down to the bowels of the Campus Center and work on the issue for the following day, and spend the night working on it until it is done, sometimes for the entire night. It's amazing to see all the work that goes into making just one paper. The Sports section has been absolutely amazing, the Op page is always widely talked about, News has been on top of tons of material, and I hope everyone has enjoyed the Arts&Living section. It certainly has had its ups and downs, but I am very proud of the section over the past semester.

It's a lot of work for a thankless job, sometimes, but I hope that everyone can appreciate the time that goes into every single paper that the Collegian puts out. So the next time you read the Collegian, try to understand the work that has gone into it. Not just the articles, but the layout, headlines, captions, photos, copy editing, graphics, and the website. Thanks everyone, and good luck with finals.

Alex Butler

Durfee head signs off

DURFEE from page 6

is sharing that knowledge... my time here was for sharing my horticulture knowledge, as well as life skills, with others." For Armand work in the greenhouse was, and is, "a release, a medicine, therapy." He worked to share this message and his passion with everyone. "[Durfee] is a place of living, of life. [Horticulture] is a way to express yourself, a learning experience and a reflecting experience."

Small traces of Armand will remain along with his larger legacies, like the fish food dispenser in the tropical room along with the food, for visitors to enjoy, "Small things like that mean a lot... to visitors" he says. The turtles too, which Armand learned to care for when they were donated to Durfee will remain, as well. His friendly and enthusiastic spirit, which made this place a welcoming place and a home for many, will be remembered and perpetuated as well by his staff and his colleagues.

"Durfee needed to have a friend, and I'm a friend to Durfee, and I want everyone to be a friend to Durfee," says Armand. This was the attitude he maintained from day one and this is his message to all — students, faculty, administration and public — as he leaves.

"My love was for Durfee, my work here was for Durfee,"he explains. He wants to thank all those who've helped support Durfee and his efforts over the last years - his staff, all the volunteers, all the visitors, and Durfee's benefactors. Special thanks goes to Arts editor Alex Butler and the Daily Collegian for "doing this [column] for Durfee; walk-throughs of Durfee have increased 100 percent" Armand beams.

Finally Armand would like to say thank you to the UMass administration for having the opportunity to work with not only faculty and staff but also students and the public, in the oldest plant conservatory in the country.

"I've had an opportunity of a lifetime for these three years" says Armand with a smile. "Durfee has a special place in my heart, and it always will. I may be sad on the outside but inside I'm happy because the work and love I've put forth for Durfee Conservatory has finally paid off."

Paul Jackmauh is a regular volunteer at the Durfee Conservatory and a plant enthusiast.

Waste not this holiday season

BY EDWARD M. EVELD
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

The holiday season does a number on the planet. It's a time when we marvel — and cringe — at all the extra trash we generate.

Many have responded over the years with stepped-up recycling efforts. Nothing wrong with that. But experts are calling for a broader focus, one that goes beyond a recycling mind-set.

Robert Lilienfeld, environmental planning consultant and co-author of "Use Less Stuff," thinks people are more ready this year to do just that.

Environmental issues are grabbing attention on the national stage, he said, after years of being pushed aside by terrorism concerns. With record spikes in gasoline prices and new warnings about climate change, people are ready to consider more intense efforts at having a greener Christmas.

"The significant issue isn't really garbage," Lilienfeld said. "It's consumption."

Plenty of environmentally friendly attitudes and practices could brighten up the holiday season. Experts suggest at least two broad approaches to augment recycling:

Consider ways to use fewer resources at the start.

Participate in "offsetting" your contribution to environmental damage.

The first is a tough challenge because it requires an attitude change for many: to make the holidays more about experiences than about objects, Lilienfeld said. That doesn't mean doing away with gifts. It means thinking differently about what to give and how to give it, he said.

"Like giving theater tickets and cards for downloading music," he said, gifts that are more about shared experiences and less about product packaging.

Christine Fanning, executive director of the Go Zero program of the Conservation Fund, said the "offset" idea has taken off in the last six months. It started with businesses and is now being embraced by individuals.

For a donation, the Go Zero program plants trees on protected property, such as national wildlife refuges, to offset people's "carbon impact" on the planet. The new trees take in carbon dioxide, a greenhouse gas, and help to "zero out" the greenhouse gases you've added by such things as home energy use and car travel.

Individuals can go to gocarbonzero.org to calculate the carbon emissions they help generate. A typical person generates 20 tons of carbon dioxide a year, Fanning said. It takes about 16 trees at a cost of $80 to offset that imprint, she said.

"For an issue that has such mass proportions, one answer can be as simple as planting trees," Fanning said.

Businesses are starting to offer such opportunities to customers.

Travelocity, for example, offers customers an option to donate to Go Zero to "offset" their trips, including holiday travel. And at gaiam.com, which sells "eco-conscious" products, customers can make a Go Zero donation to offset shipping.

Jill DeWitt of Kansas City, Mo., likes homemade ornaments, such as paper snowflakes and gingerbread figures, to complement the family's vintage ornaments. She also makes ribbon for packages from long strips of comics and catalog pages.

And she plans to skip the Christmas tree lots filled with pine and fir trees and instead get a cedar tree to decorate.

THROWING A PARTY?

Save energy by turning down the heat. Extra bodies in the house will naturally warm up the place.

Avoid paper plates and plastic utensils and accept the extra work of washing dishes. If you don't have enough non-disposable dinnerware, borrow from a friend. Use cloth napkins.

As host, do the math on how much food you really need. Throttle back. As a guest, don't pile your plate with food you can't eat. None of it can be leftovers after it's on your plate.

Send leftovers home with guests.

Don't forget to recycle what you can. Hosts should station receptacles around the house. Guests don't mind.

Indie music tops charts in 2006

HITS from page 6

catchy tunes. Recommended download: "Good Weekend."

BECK

"The Information." Beck albums are so busy, so dense with sonic allusion, that they can be wearying. He's not showing off, he just has so many ideas. Here he takes information overload as his subject, dazzling with the anxious romance "Think I'm in Love" and the Rolling Stones homage "Strange Apparition." While "The Information" can be grim, it also goofs around, with customizable album art and a disc of goofy videos. Extra credit for the year's funniest concert tour, in which pint-size puppets stole the show. Download: "Cellphone's Dead."

CAT POWER

"The Greatest." Chan Marshall pronounces her name Shawn, and with "The Greatest," the Southern-bred singer succeeds with a luxuriously soulful album that's deeply personal and universal in its appeal. The sonic glue is the Memphis Rhythm Band, which flavors "Lived in Bars" and "Love and Communication" with horns and strings, but the focal point is always Marshall's sultry vocals. Like a Norah Jones album, but with considerably more depth. Download: "Living Proof."

CLIPSE

"Hell Hath No Fury." What gives the music of Virginia Beach brothers Gene "Malice" and Terrence "Pusha T" Thornton its chilling power is the laid-back, understated way in which it depicts a drug dealer's nightmarish world, where death lurks around every corner. Dismiss it as "crack rap" if you will, but "Hell Hath No Fury" plays like an audio equivalent to HBO's "The Wire," with Malice and Pusha T convincingly portraying a closely observed, no-hope world stripped of glamour. With the Neptunes' minimalist production and no special guests to distract, "Hell Hath No Fury" makes other gangsta rappers seem like a bunch of ninnies. Download: "Mr. Me Too."

THE COUP

"Pick a Bigger Weapon." The Coup may be best known for the cover to their 2001 album "Party Music," which was to have shown the group blowing up the World Trade Center towers — and was pulled before its release. But trust me: Rapper Boots Riley and DJ Pam the Funkstress are humanists, not nihilists. And while Riley once again proves that he is the cleared political thinker in pop music, his dexterity as a schooled-in-James-Brown-and-Prince beatmaker is what makes "Pick a Bigger Weapon" go boom. Download: "My Favorite Militry."

BOB DYLAN

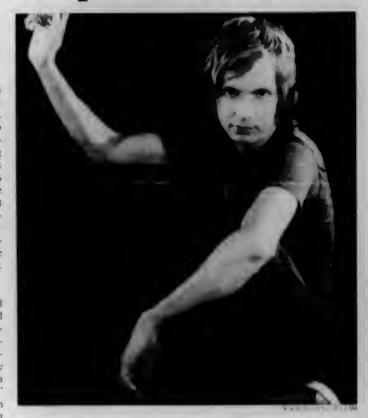
"Modern Times." Sure, I wish Bob Dylan hadn't written the 10 wise-cracking, weary and worldly-wise songs on "Modern Times" with a book of outlandish verse by Henry Timrod's poems in front of him. But Dylan has always been an artful thief, and the impure provenance of thorny blues such as "Thunder on the Mountain" and spooky meditations such as "Ain't Talkin'" don't take away from their effectiveness. And anyone who thinks the grizzled Bard's voice is beyond hope should hear the tenderness he coaxes out of "Spirit on the Water." Download: "When the Deal Goes Down."

LUPE FIASCO

"Food & Liquor." Besides possessing the most winning stage name of 2006, Lupe Fiasco produced the most cliche-free hip-hop album of the year (that is, until the must-skip 12 minutes of thank-yous that close the album). On the single "Kick, Push," the 25-year-old Muslim MC deftly tells a skateboard romance without fear of being labeled soft. But the Chicagoan with the featherweight touch digs deeper on his debut, nimbly navigating the sprightly "I Gotcha," trading verses with Jay-Z on "Pressure," and coming to terms with his own hypocrisy on "Hurt Me Soul." Download: "Daydreamin'" with Jill Scott.

THE HOLD STEADY

"Boys and Girls in America." Like a rapper or Bob Dylan, Craig Finn lets the words tumble out of his mouth as if he's competing with his band to fill up every inch of space in a song. Good thing, then, that the crooks, Kerouac-spouting singer has so many rewarding stories to tell about misdirected Midwestern youth, and the titular boys and girls having "such a sad time together." It's an even better thing that the bar band bursting with energy behind him has an arsenal of pumped-up power chords to keep the music nearly as entertaining as the words. Download: "You Can Make Him Like You."



Beck's new album, "The Information," was one of the top picks of the year, complete with a DVD featuring all the music videos.

PREMIER MASSACHUSETTS NIGHT CLUB
Earn $$$$ for school or fun
ARE YOU INTERESTED IN DANCING?
Earn up to $400 a night
Waitresses Shot Girls Wanted
No Experience Necessary
Flexible hours
Call for more details!
Anthony's Strip Club
(413)246-0299

From Your Dorm* To The Airport And Back!
*or other major pick ups during heavy travel times
VIP Exclusive Service
Door-to-Door Service
Charter & Group Service
Professional Drivers
New, Well Maintained Vans
Scheduled Van-Share Service
Call: 253-1350 or Out of Area Toll-Free at 1-800-872-8752
Or Book Online at www.valleytransporter.com
Valley Transporter The Easy Way to the Airport!

Join Us for This Year's
Late Night Exam Treats!
Featuring:
Pancakes (Plain, Blueberry, Chocolate Chip),
Scrambled Eggs, Sausage Links, Potato Puffs,
Cereal Bar, Yogurt, Seasonal Fresh Fruit Bar,
Granola - From the UMass Bake Shop
Cheese Cake with Assorted Fruit Toppings
Bluewall Chocolate Chip Cookies
Banana Bread and Assorted Beverages
All DCs
Thursday
Dec 14, 2006
9 pm–Midnight
DINING SERVICES
www.umass.edu/diningservices

'Tis the season for GIFT GIVING

Earrings starting @ $10
Exotic Necklaces
Colorful Scarves and Handbags
M&M LINKS
M&M LINKS TM
Amherst Cinema Building
28 Amity St. Unit 1F
Amherst, MA 01002
877-226-9755
www.m2mlinks.com

COME JOIN US!
Make your holiday gifts at the
Student Union Craft Center
Mon - Thurs 11-5 pm • Fri 11-6 pm • Sat 1-6 pm
We also offer Holiday Gift Workshops on Tues, Wed, and Thurs night.
Located downstairs in the Student Union, across from the Hatch
(413) 545-2096

RIVAGE
Special of the Month:
Buy a 13.4 oz. of foam bath and receive a 8 oz bath salt of your choice!
GIFT SETS AVAILABLE FOR ALL BUDGETS!
For more information on products contact Loretta Wynn or Melanie Bleau at 413-478-5575

Newman Cafe & Catering
Breakfast served all day!!
A GREAT PLACE TO STUDY, RELAX, AND EAT!
OVER 100 MENU ITEMS
DAILY LUNCH AND DINNER SPECIALS
WE DO CATERING
For all types of events, we can design a menu to suit your needs
M-Th 7AM - 8PM
Fri 7AM - 5PM
Sat & Sun 8AM - 2PM
Located on UMass campus, next to SOM building
472 NORTH PLEASANT ST. WWW.NEWMANCAFE.COM
413-549-0401 413-263-6798

WINTER SPECIAL
10x20 FOR $60
A MONTH TILL MAY AMHERST SELF STORAGE
(413) 253-0664
1270 Federal St. (rt. 9)
Belchertown, MA
01007
OFFICE AT STADIUM STORAGE
333 ROCK HILL RD HADLEY
SECURITY GATE • SURVEILLANCE CAMERAS
WELL LIT • LOCK CHECK
7 DAY ACCESS • 24 HOUR ACCESS
OFFICE HOURS 9AM-3PM
PALLETS INCLUDED
MOVING SUPPLIES SOLD
U-HAUL RENTAL AVAILABLE

ATKINS FARMS Country Market
Gifts of Good Taste
Let Atkins deliver a Specialty Gift Basket or Gift Box to friends and family locally or anywhere in the U.S.
Food gifts are hand selected and packed to preserve freshness.
Shipping orders must be received by Dec. 10th.
Order online at: www.atkinsfarms.com

Gifts for Mom & Dad
• Hand Tools
• Power Tools
• Gift Certificates
• Benjamin Moore Paint
231 MAIN ST. EASTHAMPTON, MA
413-527-2693
WWW.FLEURYLUMBER.COM
Fleury Lumber Co., Inc.

CASH FOR BOOKS
10% extra cash for books when you get it on a gift card.
UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS

One last test for Minutemen

Receiver Brandon London will enter the final contest of his collegiate career on Friday when he takes the field against Appalachian State in the Division I Championship game. London has caught 46 passes for 750 yards and nine touchdowns this season.

GREENFIELD from page 14

After replacing Tim Day at the helm last season, Coen entered this year's campaign amid doubts about his ability to handle a prolific offense.

He has answered the call and become one of the most efficient quarterbacks in the nation. Coen has completed 197 of his 302 pass attempts with 26 touchdowns and just eight interceptions.

The UMass defense has been even better than the 2005 edition, and many didn't think that a possibility after the loss of NFL-caliber safety Shannion James. But senior James Ihedigbo took the role of punisher in the secondary and led the defense to a memorable 2006 season.

In those playoffs, UMass has not allowed a point in the second half. Think about that one for a second. These aren't no-name teams that they played. This is the cream-of-the-crop for Division I-AA, and the Minutemen did not allow a single point after the break in the first three games of the playoffs.

Lafayette entered the ball with 14 points and stayed at 14 points. New Hampshire's high-voltage offense entered the ball with 17 points and put up a goose egg in the second half. Montana scored 17 points in the first half as well, but fell victim to the UMass D in the second half and ended the game with (you guessed it) 17 points.

Special teams has been spectacular for the Minutemen this season as well. Senior punter Christian Koegel is surely getting some hard looks from NFL scouts after his performance in Montana, where he buried the Grizzlies inside their own 10-yard line on three separate occasions.

Against UNH in the quarterfinal round, Koegel punched a 66-yard bomb down the field after kicking from his own end zone. The punt turned the field-position game around and became another piece that fit perfectly into the puzzle.

Brown has incessantly talked about playing well in "all three phases" of the game. He got that from his team this season, and had steadying senior leadership to accompany his talent.

It is a mix that every coach on the planet would love to have – the blend of leadership with skill, the balance of passing and running, the ability to outscore a team or shut down a team.

The Minutemen have had many opportunities to drop the ball this season, and they haven't slipped once. They have outperformed and outmaneuvered every single A-10 team on the schedule, and their only loss – a 21-20 down-to-the-wire game against Navy on Sept. 9 – came against a Division I-A opponent.

But there are many Minutemen who will be gone come next fall. Boylark, Ihedigbo, offensive linemen Alex Miller and David Thompson, defensive lineman John Hatchell, wideout Brandon London and Koegel are major impact players that will be done with the Maroon and White after this season.

And they are all deserving of a victory on Friday. Miller and Thompson have started every game they've played for the Minutemen. London has 46 catches for 750 yards and nine touchdowns. Ihedigbo has five sacks and two interceptions, and has put lethal hits on pretty much every quarterback he lined up against. Boylark is Boylark, and will go down in history as one of the best running backs to ever play Division I-AA and one of the best running backs to ever play at UMass.

So Friday's game is their last chance. And it might be the Minutemen's last shot at a national title for some time. Appalachian State is the best team in I-AA and it has proved that over the last two years. The Mountaineers beat a capable Youngstown State team by 25 points in the semifinal game on Saturday to advance to the final against the Minutemen this Friday.

UMass will have its hands full – but it's had its hands full before Appalachian State's one weakness is in its turnovers (the Mountaineers have fumbled 34 times and thrown 13 interceptions) and the Minutemen will surely look to exploit that.

Now is the time for these seniors, and now is the time for the Minutemen. They went to the national championship game in 1998 and won, and eight years went by before their next appearance.

You never know when an opportunity like this might be the last. Brown was there in 1998 and he knows that this might be his only chance to win a title at as a head coach at UMass. He knows that teams like this don't come around very often, if ever.

On Friday night, 60 minutes of football will define months and years worth of preparation and hard work. For the seniors, it is the biggest game of their careers and, for some, the biggest game of their lives.

So don't blink. You don't want to miss a second of this.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com

UM can claim title with win over ASU

FOOTBALL from page 14

But as Brown said, his team is very good on the defensive side of the ball. UMass' scoring defense is tops in the nation at 12.3 points per game. And the Minutemen are 14th in the nation in defensive yardage, allowing 269.21 yards per contest.

After facing a straight drop-back passer last week in Montana's Josh Swogger, the Minutemen's complex blitz package will play big role in the outcome of Friday's game. Pressuring the opposing quarterback is something UMass does just about every week.

"We have a particular style that we play and we're just going to be aggressive, get after the quarterback and let the chips fall where they may," Brown said. "It's been a good formula for us, especially throughout the playoffs. We're pretty good too, there's a reason we're No. 1 in the country two years in a row in scoring defense."

The Minutemen have shutout their opponents in the second half the last three consecutive games. Lafayette, UNH and Montana all pressured UMass in the first half, but couldn't get anything going in the second.

All season long each side of the ball has been there to bail the other out of tough situations. Both Brown and his players attribute that to the character the Minutemen have. During the regular season, Brown points to a number of occasions when UMass could have panicked, but didn't. He says against Navy, Villanova, Rhode Island and Maine, his team stuck together.

Ihedigbo agrees that it's a testament to the team's character, but the Minutemen's work ethic also has a hand.

"Going through the playoffs you don't get the success without a team that has the character that we have – the attitude to always press on," he said. "You don't do that unless you have a different type of work ethic."

Gunning to bring home a trophy, James Ihedigbo and the UMass defense will take on the ASU offense Friday night.

With a new coach and a new season, the UMass ski teams will kick-off their seasons at the U Conn Carnival on Jan. 12.

Fox begins 2007 season as new head coach

By Jeremy Rich
Collegian Staff

While most students will be at home in January, enjoying warm, toasty living rooms, the Massachusetts men's and women's ski teams will return to the slopes for the first time since last season's USCSA finals at Sugarloaf in Maine.

Led by their third coach in three years, the Minutemen and Minutewomen have been joined by UMass coach Skip Fox, in his first season as head coach of both squads.

"He works with some very high caliber ski racers so he knows what it takes," said men's captain Rush Hawkins. "Which makes working with him pretty easy. We all know what the goals are and basically what it takes to get there."

The season officially begins on Jan. 12 for the UConn Carnival. The two-day event will hold the giant slalom race on Friday, followed by a slalom on Saturday. There is also a preseason event the last weekend of December. The Schaefer Cup giant slalom is scheduled for Dec. 30, followed by the Seibert Cup slalom on Dec. 31.

For years up until last season, the opening event for the MacConnell Division had been the UMass Carnival, held at Berkshire East. For the second consecutive year, there will be no proverbial home game for UMass, though Fox says the University has made efforts to begin talks with the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference and the United States Collegiate Ski Association.

The entire season is 10 races – five slaloms and five giant slaloms – held at five different Carnivals. The season concludes with the ECSC Regionals, held at Waterville Valley, N.H., followed by the USCSA Nationals.

The coaching position is not the only spot that has changed on the UMass roster. There are 11 newcomers between the two groups, making for a very young Maroon and White in 2007.

For the women's team, the captains – 2006 National women's champion Eliza Hawkins and sophomore Amanda Lea – are the only holdovers from last season. The rest of the team consists of true freshmen and one transfer from Berkshire Community College, Maria Owczarski.

The men have six returning skiers. Hawkins, a senior, juniors Jason Small (who is also co-captain with Hawkins), James Green, and Jon Sussman, and sophomores Paul Leventberg and Alex Zahoruiko all return from last year's squad.

There are 11 men on the roster going into the season. However, Fox only has room for 10 players on the active roster, and eight on the travel team.

"I think it's going to be a hard decision because I'm not going to base it solely on [race] times," Fox said. "There are going to be some other factors in there – their grades, their attitude, their attendance at dry-land training. It's going to be a very, very tough decision because they're all good kids and they all work hard."

With such a young team, the future is certainly an issue when deciding who makes the roster as a freshman. Fox will lose Hawkins to graduation at the end of the season, and Small will be gone a year after that. So finding new leadership for the years to come is one objective of Fox.

"The guys that help the team are the ones you want to keep," said Fox. "I'm looking forward to it because it is such a young team. When Rush came here, he got better every year that he skied here. That's what I look forward to with the young guys. If we're this good now, how good can we be in four years? So I'm looking forward to that challenge."

At the end of last year, many of the players that are leaders of this new group were disappointed with their performances individually, and the team's performance in the Nationals. The situation with former coach Justin Rouleau's release from the team only exacerbated the problems.

This year, those racers have shown a renewed sense of determination through preseason training.

"Their attitude has been good," Fox said. "They work hard, and the leadership that [the team] follows has been exemplary from Eliza and Amanda and Jason and Rush. I think part of the captain's job is to make the coach's life easier – to take a little of the responsibility, and to take a little bit of the leadership role."

Rush Hawkins is recovering from knee surgery he had at the end of last season. Plagued by knee problems most of his career, he and Fox are happy with his progress and expect him to be ready in plenty of time for the UConn Carnival.

"So far everything feels fantastic, but that could be just from being back on snow," Hawkins said.

He has tested his knee out twice on snow this fall after gradually increasing his dry-land training regimen until he could perform the team's full training sessions.

"The guy has been busting his butt," Fox said. "He is a leader of the team, a great captain and he works hard. He wants more. He's been skiing a couple of times and his knee held up ok. He's been coming in [to training sessions] and doing everything that everybody else is doing plus more."

As a former national champion, Hawkins will be looking to improve a somewhat disappointing junior year, in which he was hampered by the same knee problems. Small had a breakout year last year. Now as a senior-junior pair, Hawkins and Small look forward to putting together a successful season for the Minutemen as a team.

"Jason and I are working well together," said Hawkins. "We have a difference of opinion on some things, but not in a bad way. Usually it's more like a supplement to what the other thinks."

Zahoruiko came on strong at the end of last year, and freshman Ian Hohmeister has shown promise in the early goings for Fox and the team.

"It comes down to consistency as well as speed," said Hawkins of hopes for the fourth straight ECSC Regionals title. "I know we have the potential to be the fastest team on the hill on any given day."

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Hampshire Mall
Santa Claus
Fri - Sat 12pm-7pm; Sun 12pm-5pm
Located center stage Nov. 24th-Dec. 24th.
Photo packages are available upon request.
Gift Cards
Available during all Mall Hours
Mall-wide and American Express gift cards are available in the Holiday Customer Service Center located next to Bath & Body Works
Thru November 24th.
Extended shopping hours begin November 24th.
Visit www.hampshiremall.com for more holiday info.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Ford returns to old stomping grounds player. They have a bunch of very good basketball players.

MEN'S HOOPS from page 14

"They've got a good, young basketball team combined with some veterans that have been in his [coach Pitino's] system, which I think is going to be key for this Louisville basketball team."

Pitino and Ford know a thing or two about each other. Ford played under Pitino at Kentucky in the early '90s, and admits, it wasn't a walk in the park.

"It's the hardest thing I've ever done," Ford said on playing under Pitino at Kentucky. "It's the most challenging thing you could ever go through, but it was the most fun I ever had. He made basketball fun. He was hard on you, but he knew what he was talking about.

"I've played for a lot of different coaches, and some coaches are just great x and o guys, but they can't motivate you," Ford said. "And then I played for guys who could really motivate you, but didn't spend a whole lot of time on the x and o's. Coach Pitino can do both."

Ford takes the Minutemen to that very school where Pitino coached him just nine days later, as the Kentucky Wildcats host UMass on Dec. 22 in Lexington. The Wildcats got off to a strong start, but were knocked out of the Top 25 after losses to UCLA, Memphis, and North Carolina.

Tubby Smith's Wildcats are led by 6-foot-11 center Randolph Morris. Morris leads the team in scoring with 17 points per game and eight rebounds per game.

The game against Kentucky is the first game during winter break. Until then, UMass plays two more non-conference games against Yale and Miami (at the Mullins Center), and begins A-10 play on Jan. 6 in Philadelphia against La Salle.

The next four games before the second semester begins will be against George Washington, Temple, Xavier, and Duquesne. The game against Xavier is scheduled to be broadcast on ESPN2 on Jan. 18.

Senior Stephane Lasme looks to upset UMass alum Rick Pitino's Louisville team tonight. Lasme leads the Minutemen in blocks so far this season, boasting 43 total and is averaging 13 points per game.

High-profile contests on tap for Mass Attack during break conference games, there's always a little bit more of a flavor to it," Cahoon said. "The opportunity to get a chance to play against [Minnesota], to measure yourself, is always a good one, and something we'd like to take advantage of."

HOCKEY from page 14

Junior P.J. Fenton, who has scored six goals in 2006, will try and get by Ferris State in the Dodge Holiday Classic on Dec. 29.

Some of the players will meet in Amherst on Dec. 26, have one practice and fly as a team to Minnesota the next day. Other players that live too far away for that to be practical will simply join the rest of the squad in Minneapolis, where Cahoon will hold practice on the 27th and 28th before the first game on the 29th.

UMass will play Ferris State at 5 p.m. eastern. The championship game will be at 8 p.m. the following day, with the consolation game at 5 p.m. the same day.

A week later, UMass dives back into Hockey East play for good. The Minutemen play seven conference games in the month of January before classes resume in the spring. Cahoon expressed the importance of winning early and often in a tight race for the Hockey East tournament.

"Every game we've got under our belt right now helps us," Cahoon said. "Those two points count the same now as they do in February. The old adage of playing your best hockey at the end of the year is still one that you consider. You want to play your best hockey when it matters most, but the points are all the same. As many points as we can get early, the better off we'll be."

The very first conference game after the break for the Minutemen is back in North Andover, where the Minutemen fell hard to Merrimack last week, 3-0. Cahoon says revenge will not be on anyone's minds because keeping pace with the rest of Hockey East will be top priority.

"It really didn't make a difference if it was Merrimack or anyone else. We need to play well in-league," Cahoon said. "We need to improve ourselves on the road. We're under .500 on the road, and one of our objectives is to have a winning record on the road, so we need to start making headway right from the beginning."

One group that will need to continue to play well is the top-scoring trio for the Minutemen, sophomores Cory Quirk and Chris Davis, and senior Chris Capraro. Quirk leads the Minutemen with 16 points, including a team-best eight goals along with eight assists.

Capraro is right behind him, with 15 points on four goals and a team-leading 11 assists. Chris Davis has tallied 13 points on six goals and seven assist, and is third on the team in scoring.

Earlier in the year, the group played on the same line and put up monster numbers for the Minutemen, including a 15-point night against Connecticut.

Quirk and Davis have been working alongside P.J. Fenton lately (fourth on the team, 6-5-11), but it seems whenever the Quirk-Davis-Capraro group are together on the ice, good things happen for the Mass Attack. The three skaters teamed up for a pair of power play goals over the weekend against Boston College.

"I think the power play in general has been a big improvement over where we were last year, in that we've been a whole lot more consistent," Cahoon said. "Those guys have a good feel for each other. They're unwilling with the puck. They seem to understand principles like 'take what they give you.' I'm real pleased with the development of those three, and in conjunction with the power play, even more so."

Whether it be with Capraro, Fenton, freshman Will Ortiz, or anyone else, Cahoon has kept last year's Co-Rookie of the Year Quirk and Davis, on the same line for every game this year. He has used the pure speed of the two to create matchup problems for opponents. So far, it has worked against some of the top teams in Hockey East, including BC, New Hampshire, and Boston University.

"They're both quick, so they play off each other where they both play at the same speed," said Cahoon. "Chris is a little bit more explosive, but Cory has great quickness, and so I like their quickness together. Sometimes you have people with hands playing with skaters, but I like the tempo to be faster, and those two make the tempo on that line extremely fast."

The biggest challenge for Cahoon in regards to his speedsters has been matching them with someone on their line who can keep pace Capraro and Fenton have both big years points-wise, and have seen considerable time with the sophomore duo.

"Sometimes it's Chris Capraro. Sometimes it's P.J. Fenton, but it has to be a real good player to play with them," Cahoon said.

UM Puerto Rico trip up next

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

One body of water that won't be freezing over during the cold New England winter is the Joseph R. Rogers, Jr. Pool in Hoyden Gymnasium. While most students return home for all of winter break, the Massachusetts swimming and diving teams will be hard at work in the water preparing for February's Atlantic 10 Swimming Championships.

Once the semester ends, the players will have a week and a half off at the end of December to return home. However, both men's coach Russ Yarworth and women's coach Bob Newcomb require that the swimmers train while on break in order to maintain their high level of conditioning.

"We're really training to maintain what we've done over the whole semester during the next few weeks," Newcomb said. "Ten days of doing nothing can put you behind."

Once they return to UMass, the emphasis will be on preparing for the last two months of the swimming season. It will also provide an opportunity for the swimmers to work on their individual needs in the water.

"They don't have any distractions," Newcomb said. "They are able to focus on swimming and I think it's a great way to get them set up for the end of the year."

The next competition for the Maroon and White will be at the Loyola Invitational on Jan. 6. Since the meet is held in San Juan, Puerto Rico, it will provide both teams an opportunity to practice swimming in a foreign environment, while giving the athletes some much needed rest and relaxation.

"Going to Puerto Rico is a great trip. It accomplishes two things – training and tanning," Newcomb said in jest. "Their goal of course is to get the best tan they can get, while my goal is to get the best training they can do."

Yarworth has been using the trip to reestablish recruiting links in the area in recent years. Minuteman freshman Jean Moliere hails from San Juan and attended the College San Ignacio.

"We have a lot of history down there," Yarworth said. "Back when UMass had a water polo program, I used to recruit a lot of my players from Loyola's club."

After spending eight days on the island, the Maroon and White return to the states to participate in the Rhode Island Invitational. The teams will have an excellent opportunity to compete against Atlantic 10 swimmers from La Salle, George Washington and URI.

"I won't expect them to swim fast," Newcomb said. "But I expect them to race well and that's our goal for the meet."

This competition will be the final preparation of both teams for their last home meet of the year. Not only will UMass be competing against rival Boston College, but it will also be the seniors' last chance to swim in front of the home fans.

"Senior Day is very important because we have a good group of seniors," Newcomb said. "We're excited about this group that has put a lot into this program. But BC has a good team and they'll provide some good competition for us."

The Eagles will provide a formidable challenge for both the men and women. The Minutemen defeated the Eagles last season in a home dual meet, while the women lost by 50 points. Both squads faced BC swimmers at the BU Invitational in November, but team scores were not kept at the meet. Regardless of any previous results, Yarworth knows the men's team will have to swim well if they want to defeat Boston College.

"The seniors will definitely be ready to swim," Yarworth said. "Especially since we don't have very many home meets."

After that meet, the Maroon and White's next competition will be against Colgate and Binghamton in Hamilton, N.Y., on Jan. 27.

The meet will be a UMass reunion of sorts between the coaching staffs. Sean Clark, the coach of the men's and women's teams at Binghamton, was an assistant at UMass until this season and is also an alumnus. Clark's assistant is a 2006 graduate of the university and also swam for coach Newcomb. In addition, the coach of Minutemen's other opponent, Colgate, was a four year letter winner in swimming at UMass.

Although the month of January is packed with competitive events, the winter break period will allow the team to devote several weeks just to practice.

"This is the flat period right now of the season," Yarworth said. "As we are a month between competitions and are just trying to get ourselves ready for A-10's later this year."

The UMass men's and women's swimming and diving teams will head to San Juan, Puerto Rico on Jan. 6 to take part in the Loyola Invitational.

Practice.
It's a show stopper. And a career starter.
Anthony Morrison
STHM 2002
Event Operations
Philadelphia Phillies, Citizens Bank ark
At Temple, we provide students with hands-on opportunities to learn.
Whether you're a student of tourism, hospitality, sport or recreation management, you'll learn by doing. We place 100% of our students in hard-to-get internships, externships, or jobs. So when you graduate you'll be ready to get on the field. And stand out within it as well.
To learn more call 215-204-3103 or visit us at www.temple.edu/sthm/colleges
Join us for one of our upcoming events at Main Campus, Room 412, 1700 N Broad St., Philadelphia, PA:
Information Sessions
Noon or 5 p.m.
December 13 March 12
February 19 April 9
Prospective Graduate Student Forum
2 p.m.–4 p.m.
January 5
School of Tourism and Hospitality Management TEMPLE UNIVERSITY

UM makes return to Mullins

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's basketball team (8-2) returns to the Mullins Center for the first time in almost two weeks in a tilt against the Eastern Michigan Eagles (4-3) tonight at 7 p.m.

The Minutewomen look to slow down the streaking Eagles, while making up for last year's 63-45 defeat at the Convocation Center. UMass managed just 13 points in the first half in that game, but they have come a long way since then.

"We're a different team," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We never got our feet wet at all. We were tentative, timid and unaggressive. We're a new team this year and I expect us to come out of the gates fighting hard."

Dacko's squad is excited to return home – where they are a perfect 3-0 – but they know that the Eagles will present a challenge on the defensive end.

"Anytime we play in the Mullins Center it's a good day for us," Dacko said. "Our transition defense will be key because Eastern Michigan comes down and scores a lot of points. We need to get back on defense, stop the ball and make sure we recover their players. I don't care who we get but we got to get somebody and then get in our defense."

The Eagles rebound the ball extremely well – with three players averaging over six rebounds per contest. Junior Patrice McKinney is a force on the glass – averaging 10.7 rebounds – despite playing at the guard position. The trio of McKinney, senior Sarah VanMetre and freshman Emily Hartles combine for 41 points and over 25 rebounds per night.

To prepare for the Eagles' dominance on the glass, Dacko spent a lot of time in practice focusing on what her team needs to do to minimize Eastern Michigan's biggest strength.

"We really focused on boxing out," Dacko said. "We also looked at the film against Buffalo, in order to see where we made a lot of our mistakes. Hopefully we can turn those into positives."

The Maroon and White will stay at home on Sunday against an 8-1 Delaware Blue Hens team. UMass was dominated by Delaware last season, falling 71-44 in the season opener.

Delaware has won seven straight contests, including a 16-point win over a Kentucky team that was ranked 20th in the country at the time. UMass managed just 15 points in the first half against Delaware in last seasons meeting – including a 4-for-19 shooting performance.

"Delaware is playing some really good basketball right now," Dacko said. "They're a very confident team and they present a different challenge. We played like we were a deer in the headlights against them last year. They're very aggressive and we will have to attack their defensive zone."

The Blue Hens are led by seniors Tyresa Smith and Chrissy Fisher. Smith leads the team in scoring at 18.8 points per game, and is second with her eight rebounds per game average. Fisher leads the team in rebounding with 8.8 per game, and is second in scoring with just over 16 points per contest. Fisher has a nice touch from the outside, hitting on 12 of her 22 attempts.

The Minutewomen hit a difficult stretch following Sunday's contest, as they don't return to the Mullins Center for over a month. UMass has three more non-conference games to deal with before they hit the Atlantic-10 slate of games.

UMass will first have to deal with a Boston College Eagles (8-3) team that slaughtered the Maroon and White by 39 points last season. The two remaining non-conference games are against the Holy Cross Crusaders (4-6) and Yale Bulldogs (2-7). UMass defeated Holy Cross last season and hasn't met up with Yale since the 1992-93 campaign.

The 14-game conference schedule begins on Jan. 9 with three consecutive road games against the Rhode Island Rams (1-7), Richmond Spiders (4-7), and the George Washington Colonials (8-2). In all, UMass will have six straight games away from home during break.

"It's a tough stretch," Dacko said. "Every team in America has these same issues, but unfortunately we have six games in a row on the road. We're just going to attack them one game at a time."

The Minutewomen will finally return to the Mullins Center on Jan. 18, for the first of four straight home games. The Temple Owls (4-4) who dropped UMass last season by 35 points – will be the first opponent during that stretch. Following the first A-10 home game of the season – the LaSalle Explorers (8-1), Saint Louis Billikens (7-3) and the Charlotte 49ers (4-5) will all come to Amherst for pivotal conference games.

It will be imperative for the Minutewomen to begin the conference stretch on the right foot this season, and Dacko knows exactly what her team needs to do to accomplish it.

"We need to beat Rhode Island first," she said, with a grin.

MICHAEL PHILLIS/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen will look to keep their three-game home win streak alive tonight against the Eastern Michigan Eagles.

Weinsten leaves mark on Minutewomen

BY DOMENIC PALI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

She is the one you didn't hear much about. She was the one in the backfield and behind-the-scenes working her tail off day after day making sure things went right. She was the one whose name was often absent from the postgame stat sheet, but you were knowing that she did her job. She is senior Elizabeth (Liz) Weinsten, midfielder on the UMass women's soccer team. And she says she is fine with having played ball under the radar screen of most lookers-on for the last four years.

"I don't really mind not getting any recognition. I don't need to be praised for my abilities on the field or whatever," the 5-foot-6 Weinsten said. "If you deserve the recognition I'm not going to say anything bad about you. If you're not playing well and you're getting recognition – which is rarely the case – then that's something to worry about. But my teammates are awesome, and I'm glad they're receiving the achievement awards and whatnot because they did play very well.

"I just think that sometimes there are other people on the field, though, who are doing a lot of work," she continued. "And just because they're not scoring the goals does not mean that they shouldn't be getting the recognition."

UMass coach Jim Rudy certainly recognizes and acknowledges the hard work that Weinsten manifests on the soccer field and he appreciates that he has a player who is not looking to rest on the spotlight.

"She is a great person," Rudy said. "Not everybody can be the star. And our style has often depended upon being effective at re-starts – you know, restarts around the goal and on the counter-attack.

"We play short and then go long and get [junior forward and team's leading goal-scorer Britt [Canfield] behind the defense. Or we get lead passes coming from behind," Rudy explained. "So in order to do that, you have to have people that allow us to build the ball until we can get those people in position. And she's done a nice job with that. She has helped perpetuate that sort of play."

Rudy went on to mention that players like Weinsten can act as the adhesive of any given team.

"She's one of those players that is like the glue on the team," he said. "She holds things together, keeps us connected, she maintains possession and other people are getting the goals. But they wouldn't be getting the goals if she wasn't doing her job."

Rudy first discovered Weinsten over four years ago when the North Salem, N.Y., native came to his Advanced Girls' Soccer Camp – like so many of the other athletes who later play for Rudy. Weinsten attended the camp after being encouraged by a close friend who had played at UMass and she showed her skills.

Rudy and his Massachusetts coaching staff liked what they saw.

"She acquitted herself very well and was always on our All-Star team. And we thought that the kid had some potential," Rudy recalled.

Weinsten eventually signed to UMass and geared up to test the waters of the college world. If it hadn't been for a little help from her friends, she may have more greatly felt panic of being a small fish in a big pond.

"I lived in a small town and the school is such a large school. But coming in I was lucky enough to have that group of friends right away," she mentioned. "It's not like coming in as a normal freshman. We loved the seniors. We all clicked right away."

In addition to the normal demands of freshman year, Weinsten had to endure the pain of watching her team finishing with a disappointing 4-12-1 record.

It seemed as if, in the blink of an eye, she went from the soccer field at Temple University after a frustrating 1-2 season-finale overtime loss her freshman year, to UMass' Rudd Field psyching up the newbies for what would be the first game of her senior season (versus New Hampshire).

The Minutewomen finished their 2006 season at 11-6-1 and 5-4 in the Atlantic 10.

Almost as quickly as it had begun, Weinsten's collegiate soccer career was over. She sealed up her four years at UMass having established a seemingly boring resume – just two assists (four points) over her four years. But don't let the minuscule numbers fool you. Liz's contributions to the team extend further than anything you could ever mark down as a statistic.

She didn't need to pocket any goals. She helped her team out with her own specialty.

"She has really good foot skills. She's a lot of help up front with all the great passes she makes," Canfield said. "She's a real big part of the team."

All of her teammates and coaches agree that Weinsten is a magician once she has the ball on her foot and that she can make you pretty dizzy when trying to get it away from her.

Even though Weinsten wasn't the one putting it into the back of the net, all of her peers admit that offensive stallions like Canfield (7 goals) couldn't post so many tallies without the textbook maneuvers of someone like Liz patrolling the field's no man's land.

"She's very technical and she has skills that you don't see in a lot of other players. I would call her a 'technician,'" Rudy said. "She's not one of those kids that wins balls and overpowers you, but, I'll tell you what – she can skim you. She can skim you with the ball. She is very technical and she's got a bag of tricks in her arsenal of weapons. She can shoot with both feet.

"Her moves are deceptive. They're different," Rudy continued. "I would say her method of playing is much more European South American than the stuff that we usually experience at UMass. She plays with deception and that's something you don't see a lot of in Division I women's soccer. Women's soccer is pretty honest-looking stuff – what you see is what you get," he would go on to say. "And if [a player] looks up [she's] usually going to play in the direction [she] is looking, whereas [Weinsten] will look up and play in the opposite position with a back-heel or a flick."

Rudy's kudos to his midfielder were echoed by some of her classmates.

"She always comes up with some weird moves, and dribbling-skills and crazy foot-skills that always surprise me," senior Nadia Villarroel said.

It's those supernormal tactics and her dry, clever sense of humor that those close to her – like longtime warm up buddy Stephanie Barrett – are going to miss most about Liz.

She and Barrett would kick the ball around in a certain designated spot together to loosen up before every game since they were freshmen. It's something that Barrett says she will miss terribly.

"I always warmed up with her in a certain place for the last four years before every game and we never missed a game," Barrett said. "She's my best friend so I would turn to her for anything in my life. She knows everything about me and I know everything about her – so, it's pretty cool."

And it's not just Barrett. Everybody is going to miss Liz. But they all said they would all do whatever necessary to keep in touch with the person they have grown so close to over the last four years – even if she moves to Los Angeles.

Weinsten is a sport management major and, after receiving her degree in the spring, plans to put it to good use.

Having been born and raised on the East Coast, she is itching to get a change of scenery and intends to move to L.A. sometime in the summer or fall.

"I don't think I want to work with a professional team," Weinsten said. "If I use that degree it would be for maybe a company like Nike or Puma in the apparel industry or possibly as a sports agent."

No matter what career this sharp, 21-year-old winds up choosing, Rudy, the man who has seen her grow from a timid and unproven kid to vibrant and well-spoken young woman, has full confidence that she will use the experience and maturity she gained at UMass in any adventure she may embark on.

"She's a very smart kid. She's intelligent, focused, disciplined and she's a great student. She's fun to be around, Rudy said. "I find her to have a dry sense of humor. She's not going to knock your socks off all the time, but she comes out with just some really witty things that you just find hilarious. I feel that whatever she ends up picking as her avenue, she is going to be successful with it."

The whole plan does have one drawback, however.

"For some reason…I just don't see Liz on a surfboard," he joked.

Track and field gears up for 2007 season

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts track and field winter season is around the corner. All the other winter sports have almost hit mid-season. Both the men and women's teams will start the season on Jan. 17 at Boston University for the Quad Meet.

According to the Atlantic 10 coaches poll the Minutemen have been selected to finish fourth in the A-10. The Minutewomen have been chosen to finish 9th in the A-10 standings. Last year in the Atlantic 10 Championships the Minutemen finished fifth overall and the Minutewomen placed ninth.

The Minutewomen had three runners compete Friday, Dec. 8 at the 10th Annual Rhode Island Pentathlon. Senior Crystal Therrien finished with fourth place finish 3,039 points. Behind her, Sophomore Ashley Creel placed ninth overall with 2,840 points and senior Nastaran Shams finished 11th overall with 2,724 points. The Minutewomen competed in the five-event meet that featured the 60-meter hurdles, the high jump, the shot put, the long jump and the 800-meter run.

Junior Christina DeRosa is coming off her outstanding cross country season. She finished first in every race for Minutewomen. During the indoor season, DeRosa runs the mile, 3,000 meters, 5,000 meters, and the distance medley relay. Last season DeRosa ran one of her best races in the 5,000 meters, it was the fourth-fastest 5,000 meter race in school history.

In the A-10 the Charlotte women are the preseason favorites to take that A-10 Championship.

Notable meets this season: Feb. 17 the A-10 Championships in Rhode Island followed by the New England Championships in Boston. The IC4A Championships will conclude the season on March 3. The teams do not have any home meets, however the farthest the team will travel is Kingston, R.I.

The Maroon and White have added a new assistant coach to the staff this year. Joining men's coach Ken O'Brien who is in his 39th season and women's coach Julie LaFreniere entering her 19th season is Mark Gottdenker. Gottdenker has been the former assistant coach at Penn State for the past four years. He joined the staff in late September and he will help the athletes in the throwing events, jumping events and also the heptathlon and decathlon.

In the men's A-10 coaches polls, last years top three teams Charlotte, Rhode Island and La Salle have been picked to finish in the same top spots respectively.

This season the Minutemen are returning quality athletes. Senior Erik Hoagland is returning for his final season with the Minutemen. Last season, Hoagland earned A-10 Most Outstanding Field Performer honors. His events include the 55-meter dash, the triple jump, and the long jump. Hoagland owns the UMass record for the triple jump and is third all time for the long jump event.

Also a returning Senior James Godinho, who set the UMass record in the 500-meter event in 2005. Senior Brandon London is known as the explosive wide receiver on the football field, but he is also a high jumper for the indoor track team. Last year London placed second in the high jump at the A-10 Championships. Also from the football field to the track team is junior thrower Sean Caliechio. This red shirt offensive lineman earned second team all A-10 honors and he has recorded the fourth longest shot put in school history.

A-10 conference play heats up in January

BY JOE MELLONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A-10 Basketball

Last year's Atlantic 10 women's basketball champion Temple is off to an unexpected 4-4 start. Although all of their losses came to very good teams, including a loss to defending a national champion Maryland on Sunday.

The Owls begin their defense of last season's A-10 championship on Jan. 9 when conference play begins for all 14 teams in the conference. Temple opens conference play against Big 5 rival Saint Joseph's at the Liacouras Center.

Charlotte (4-5) heads to Saint Louis to tackle the upstart Billikens (7-3). The 49ers were last year's most prolific offense in the conference averaging 73 points per game. The 49ers are pouring in just under 73 points per contest this season and allow 69.6 per contest.

Many believe Xavier (7-3) to be the class of the A-10 and the Musketeers will have the chance to prove that they are when they face in-state rival Dayton (4-6) to open up conference play.

The Duquesne Dukes (5-5) welcome the Saint Bonaventure Bonnies (4-5) to the A.J. Palumbo center. Neither team projects to make much noise in the conference this season but could prove to be something of a spoiler if taken lightly.

The struggling Fordham Rams (2-7) head to La Salle to take on Crista Ricketts and the Explorers (8-1).

Richmond (4-7) faces a tough battle in its first conference action of the season when it takes on No. 20 George Washington (8-2) on the road.

Marnie Dacko's upstart Massachusetts (8-2) team heads south to take on New England rival Rhode Island (4-7).

TOP 25 VS. THE A-10

The A-10 women's basketball schedule is heating up at just the right time. After the mandatory break for finals, there are several games featuring A-10 teams and squads ranked in the Associated Press Top 25 poll.

On Dec. 30, Dayton (4-6) travels to Hanover, N.H. for the Dartmouth Tournament where they will most likely take on No. 4 Duke. The Blue Devil's first game is against the host Big Green, which is the underdog in the matchup.

The Saint Louis Billikens (7-3) welcome the No. 25 Arkansas Razorbacks to the Bauman-Eberhardt Athletic Center. The Billikens hope to continue their strong start. They've won seven of their first 10 games. They also take on the Iowa State Cyclones who currently sit just outside the top 25.

Andy Landers' No. 11 Georgia Bulldogs take on two A-10 teams over the break. On Dec. 21, the Bulldogs travel to Richmond for a contest with the Spiders. A week later, UGA and the No. 20 George Washington Colonials meet as part of the San Diego Surf n' Slam Hoop Classic.

The No. 12 Vanderbilt Commodores host La Salle on New Year's Day. The Explorers, led by senior forward Crista Ricketts, are off to their best start since 1996-97.

The Rhode Island Rams currently have the worst record against non-conference foes at 1-9. They travel to Berkeley for a game with the No. 15 California Golden Bears on Jan. 2.

The A-10 coaches selected the Rams to finish ahead of Saint Louis, but if the out of conference schedules hold true, the Billikens will surpass at least one expectation this season.

FIRST SEMESTER STARS

Although most schools in the conference have played just 10 games, a few players have used the limited time to emerge as the stars of the season's first month.

Ricketts has been the most consistent scoring threat for La Salle this season and has been great defensively as well.

She averages 21.4 points per game to go along with an even 10 rebounds per game. She won A-10 Player of the Week three times already this season.

Temple's Kamesha Hairston leads the conference with 22.3 points per game and is third behind Ricketts and UMass' Tamara Tatham in rebounding.

Xavier's Amber Harris has been the most impressive freshman thus far. Offensively she has been great but her 39 blocks lead the A-10.

3-Bedroom Apartments Available Now!
Mill Valley E·S·T·A·T·E·S
CALL FOR DETAILS:
253-7377
MILLVALLEYESTATES@WINNCO.COM

Introducing Jill...
$15 haircuts normally $25!
$50 foil highlights normally $75
New Clients Only
Absolutely
479 West Street
Amherst, MA
413. 253. 7110

CKY
plus Down The Drain
TUE. DEC. 19 · 7:00 PM
DOORS OPEN 6:00 PM/BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub
10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

7						6
	2	5	1	8	3
1						9
	5	6		2	9
6						4
	7	9		4	5
5						7
	1	2	6	7	8
2						3

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Choose by ballot
6 Racetrack boundary
10 Pang of mina
14 I want in!
15 "Born Free" lioness
16 National airline of Israel
17 Blocks and bonds
19 Test one's courage
20 W alliance
21 One that got away
23 Shop window
27 Beginning
28 Always
29 Hoover or Alexander
31 Adolescences
32 Nairobi native
35 More tender
37 Conclusion
38 Pathetic
40 Young Scot
43 Page number
44 Symbolize
46 Union branch
48 Young newt
51 Arab sultanate
52 Is of use
54 Having tired footsies
57 Expression of ratsuke
59 Rotating rod
60 Get bigger
61 Armed services branch
66 Author Ferber
67 Toy with a tail
68 Blunder
69 Optimistic
70 Intrepid vehicle
71 Prepared

DOWN
1 Printer's measurements
2 Peggy or Brenda
3 & more
4 Nation
5 Pentateuch
6 Passed gustep
7 Mr. Baba
8 Words of understanding
9 Lariat
10 More composed
11 Slip by
12 Lunch and seelve
13 Falls as ice
18 Ice-skater Midori
22 Overly precious
23 Small lapdog
24 Baking compartment
25 Tear apart
26 Decorate
30 Bovine call
33 "13"
34 Soccer zero
36 Cart track
39 Equal score
40 Ritzy wheels
41 To a distance
42 Unit of force
43 Most of a golf hole
45 Stance
46 On a greener scene
47 Carry to excess
48 Choice chickens
50 Flying
53 Soft footwear
55 Choose (to)
56 Woods of the inks
58 Tiberi
62 Had a meal
63 Guach Parsieghian
64 Gangster's nester
65 Matter-of-fact

THE HARP
FALL SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURS • Scrambled Porn
FRI • Irish Seisiun
SAT • Rudy Brown
CD Release Party
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006 Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
163 Sunderland Rd. · N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

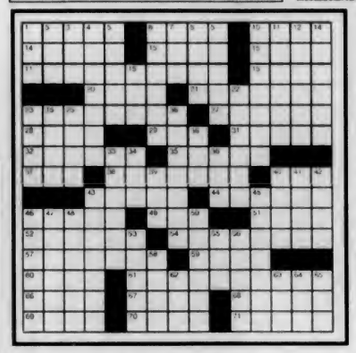
"Don't be too timid and squeamish about your actions. All life is an experiment. The more experiments you make the better."

—Ralph Waldo Emerson

JAMES CRONIN
COMICS PAGE CHAMPION

19 BY RAY FRANK

PHD (PILED HIGHER AND DEEPER) BY JORGE CHAM



HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Forest Ranger Arnold says, "watch where you drop that dube, man!"

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You're no ugly duckling. You're someone's one and only swan.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Could you really expect that uncovered manhole just to explore itself?

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
If you didn't read your horoscopes, you wouldn't know anything about yourself.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Just be happy you're not an astronaut stranded in outerspace headed for the sun.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Things you think you can't do 'cause they're so hard, are actually easier than they seem.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You were not actually born a leo.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
All around the world, orphan babies cry because you're so cheap.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
If you don't get a Sega for Christmas, it's proof that Santa's not real.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
An Ostrich will wake you late tonight to get a sweater it left. And to lacerate your belly.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
They're planning a surprise birthday party.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Did you ever consider; sheer possibility, that everyone you know, is an extra-terrestrial!

BEST BAR AROUND
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
FRIDAY & SATURDAY
12/15/06 & 12/16/06
MARK SNOW
Student Band Wanted
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8780
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
NEXT TO CLIFTSIDE APTS.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Be and Do something Bigger than yourself. Learn, Lead, and Succeed with Army ROTC Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly. Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 1 beds available starting now or Jan.1 www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AUTO FOR SALE

94 Nissan Pickup Good Condition 130k $1800 call 413-695-9292

EMPLOYMENT

Summer on Cape Cod… Professional family requires two women to share responsibilities for transporting teen to summer activities and light housekeeping in return for rent-free use of cottage on property. Vehicle/gas provided for activity transportation only. Clean house once per week. Walk to downtown Hyannis and local beaches/entertainment.Email: littleonr@aol.com

EMPLOYMENT

Winter break jobs available at the Boston University Bookstore in Kenmore Square! Stop by our job fair all day Thurs. Dec. 14 in Room 178 on the Lower level of the UMass Campus Center or email bnhmnres@bu.edu

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties… Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

HOUSE FOR RENT

Cute 2 to 3 bedroom house, neat, on bus stop in Northampton Available mid December. No pets $1300.00 Skibiski Realtors 586-1827

ROOM FOR RENT

1 bedroom available for spring semester. $400 a month including utilities. 3 male roommates, across from bus stop call 781-492-5588 for more details.

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthnght.org

TRAVEL

Alternative spring break Now taking applications Trips to New Orleans, Birmingham and Mississippi Delta. Space is limited, email: umassasb@gmail.com

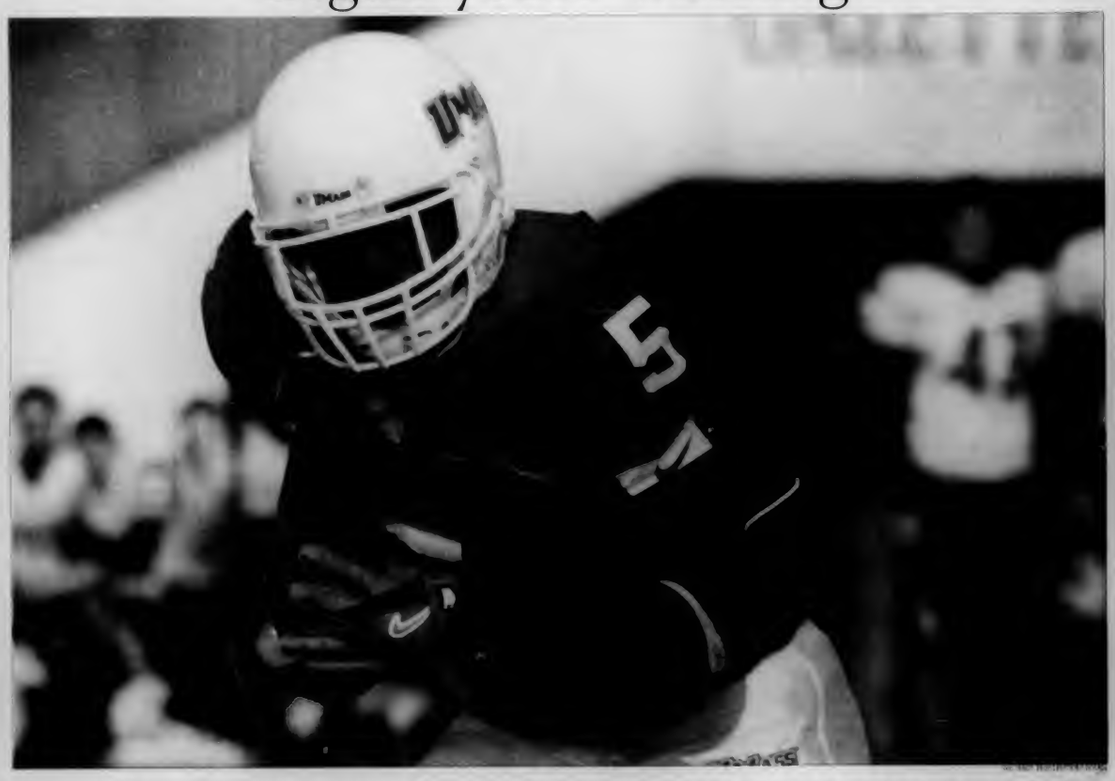
HAVE A SAFE AND HAPPY HOLIDAY BREAK FROM THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 13, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Eight years waiting



Running back Steve Baylark and the UMass football team will face Appalachian State in the NCAA Division I Championship Friday night, for a chance to earn its first national championship trophy since the 1998 season. So far this season, Baylark has rushed for 1,884 yards on 314 carries and has garnered 15 touchdowns.

UMass returns to first title game since 1998

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The anticipation is getting to the Massachusetts football team. Many of the Minutemen are ready to arrive in Chattanooga and play in the Division I Football Championship.

Third-ranked UMass (13-1) takes on No. 1 Appalachian State (13-1) on Friday night at 8 p.m. at Finley Stadium.

"We just want to get the heck out of Amherst," sophomore quarterback Liam Coen said. "As happy as we are to be back, we're anxious to get down there and see what it's like."

Senior captain James Ihedigbo used his facial expression to describe what the Minutemen are feeling.

"You can see by the smile on my face, the guys are very excited," the safety said. "You can look at seniors across the country and their college careers are over and we're privileged to be at this point in time and playing for something so important, which is more than winning a national championship.

"We're just ready to get to Chattanooga and get to work."

Taking down the Mountaineers will be no small task for the Minutemen. ASU is the No.1 team in the nation and in the midst of a 13-game winning streak. Its only loss of the season came in the first weekend, a 23-10 loss to North Carolina State.

Unlike UMass, who hasn't been to the NCAA National Championship game since 1998 (when it beat Georgia Southern 54-43), ASU played in Chattanooga just last season. It used a Marques Murrell forced fumble and the return by Jason Hunter to down Northern Iowa, 21-16.

This past Saturday, the Mountaineers downed Youngstown State, 49-24, in the semifinals at Kidd Brewer Stadium. Quarterback Armanti Edwards passed for 164 yards and threw for one score. But Edwards did most of his damage against the Penguins with his feet. The true freshman ran for 110 yards and three touchdowns.

Edwards began the season on the ASU bench, backing up Trey Elder. After the Mountaineers beat Mars Hill, 41-0, coach Jerry Moore made the switch to Edwards. He wasn't pleased with the way his offense was playing and not only changed his quarterback, but also his entire offensive system. ASU went from a standard-option offense to a spread offense.

Since the switch was made, Edwards hasn't looked back. He became only the fifth player in Division I football history to throw for 2,000 yards and rush for 1,000. His totals to this point in the season are 2,105 passing yards and 1,072 rushing.

Senior defensive end John Hatchell drew comparisons between New Hampshire quarterback Ricky Santos and Edwards.

"Ricky is a great quarterback, you can't say enough great things about the kid. I don't know if he has the foot speed Armanti has, but I don't know if [Edwards] is as good a passer as Ricky is," he said.

But as scary as it is, Edwards isn't the only weapon ASU deploys on offense. The Mountaineers have another 1,000-yard rusher, junior running back Kevin Richardson. He set two school records this season, one for rushing touchdowns in a season (26) and rushing scores in a career (44).

Richardson's season total stands at 1,497 yards entering the weekend.

See FOOTBALL on page 10

Minuteman season rides on one contest

Rob Greenfield

So it has come down to this.

The Massachusetts football team will play the final game of its season on Friday against Appalachian State in Chattanooga, Tenn., for the right to call themselves national champions.

There is no 3-out-of-5 playoff or two-loss elimination. This is it. It is the culmination of countless hours of preparation, conditioning, watching film and studying opponents' every move.

It has taken a prodigious amount of discipline to enforce the mental game plan that UMass coach Don Brown plugged into the system from Day One: one practice at a time, one game at a time, one week at a time.

It would have been easy to get caught up in the expectations. This season is the Minutemen's shining moment, the year that all the pieces have come together on both sides of the ball and on special teams.

They have rolled over opponents with ease and are established as the 2006 Atlantic 10 juggernaut – the team that averaged 28.3 points per game on offense and allowed just over 12 points per game on defense.

The Minutemen's all-everything running back Steve Baylark has averaged over 130 yards rushing per game and, with 1,884 on the season, is approaching the 2,000-yard mark for rushing yards.

Sophomore quarterback Liam Coen has been more than anyone expected.

See GREENFIELD on page 10

UM aims to gain national recognition

BY DANIEL PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The NCAA selection committee may not be watching right now, but if the Massachusetts men's basketball team can come out of Louisville or Kentucky with a win, it just may turn some heads come March.

UMass (8-2) gets another opportunity to take advantage of its high-powered non-conference schedule this evening, as it takes on Rick Pitino's Louisville Cardinals at 7 p.m. The Minutemen head to Kentucky (6-3) on Dec. 22 to take on the Wildcats after that, ending their longest road trip of the season at four games.

Point guard Chris Lowe and the UMass men's basketball team takes on Louisville tonight in a faceoff against UMass alum Rick Pitino.

The Minutemen are coming of a 79-66 win over Central Connecticut State on Saturday night and have won their last two contests.

Louisville (5-2) comes into tonight's game riding a three-game winning streak, defeating Ohio, Saint Joseph's, and Bellarmine. The Cardinals suffered one of their two losses to Dayton, 68-64 back on Nov. 24.

UMass can't afford to give up the big play on Wednesday if it looks to have the same success as its Atlantic 10 foe.

"We have to keep them out of transition," UMass coach Travis Ford said on the strategy against the Cardinals. "We don't want to slow the game down, but we have to make sure that we get back and not give them what we call, the spectacular play. They like to dunk, they like to make the big three, and that gets them going.

"They really get out in transition, and they're very fast," Ford added about Louisville. "They're very aggressive offensively. They'll drive it, they'll shoot three-pointers relentlessly. They may miss 20 in a row, but they're going to come right back down and they're going to shoot the 21st."

Tonight marks just the second time UMass plays at Freedom Hall. The last time the two teams met in the arena that holds approximately 19,000 people (March 2, 1996), the Minutemen won 62-59. UMass was No. 2 in the nation at that time, and this season marks the best start for the Maroon and White since that year.

Both UMass and Louisville are different teams since the last time they played, which was in the first round of the NCAA Tournament in 1997. The Cardinals sent the Minutemen home with a 65-57 win in that meeting.

Louisville is led by sophomore guard Andre McGee. McGee leads the Cardinals in scoring with 16 points per game, and shoots a team-high 56 percent from the field and 60 percent from the three-point line. Louisville relies on junior forward Juan Palacios and sophomore forward Terrence Williams to grab rebounds, who both average eight boards per game.

"They're a typical coach Pitino team," Ford said. "Right now, the only thing that's holding them back is just youth, and learning to play. I don't think they have one great basketball

See MEN'S HOOPS on page 11

Mass Attack faces challenges in tourney

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The holiday break will be a short one for the Massachusetts hockey team. The Mass Attack (8-5-2, 5-4-1 HEA) will return to the ice immediately following Christmas this year, as the Minutemen will head out to Minneapolis for the Dodge Holiday Classic, hosted by No. 1 Minnesota.

No. 16 UMass will face Ferris State on Dec. 29 in the first round of the tournament, the winner of which will square off against the winner of Alabama-Huntsville and the top-ranked Golden Gophers the next day.

The tourney marks the final non-conference portion of the regular season for the Minutemen. UMass coach Don Cahoon is excited about the chance to face the top-ranked team in the nation, and a chance to build the team's NCAA Tournament resume.

"First, it's a high-profile tournament," said Cahoon. "Minnesota is one of the all-time great programs, so being in their tournament gives us a chance to be in the limelight, so to speak. The second part of that is if we do well it works towards NCAA consideration at the end of the year."

Cahoon recognizes that if his players can get past Ferris State, they have a tremendous opportunity to showcase their ability to the country against the nation's best team in its own building.

"Whenever you play these non-

See HOCKEY on page 11

Be sure to check www.dailycollegian.com over winter break for continued coverage of UMass teams.

RECESS IS OVER FOR UMASS ATHLETICS | PAGE C1

SHEPP SPEAKS THE LANGUAGE OF JAZZ | PAGE B1

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 23 LO: 10 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 2007

Riot ravages Southwest campus

More than 1,800 riot after UMass loss

BY ANNA DOLIANITIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last month's riots in Southwest resulted in the arrest of almost a dozen people, the expulsion of five University of Massachusetts students and several injured police offers, according to police and university officials.

The UMass Police Department, in collaboration with the Amherst Police Department and Massachusetts State Police, arrested 11 people during the Dec. 15 riots in the Southwest residential area of the UMass campus.

The riots immediately followed UMass Football's 28-17 Division 1 Championship loss against Appalachian State University in Chattanooga, Tenn.

The game ended at approximately 11 p.m., and by 11:10 p.m. more than 1,800 people filled the Southwest area, according to the UMass News and Information Office. The disturbance concluded at approximately 1:50 a.m.

"The UMass Police Department was prepared and in riot gear before the event, which is standard procedure for potential student gatherings following high-profile athletic events. More than 60 offi-

See RIOTS on page A13

Police in riot gear try to control University of Massachusetts students in the Southwest plaza on Dec. 15, 2006. Using photos and video footage, police have identified up to 70 more students involved in the riot.

Police identify roughly 70 more suspects

BY ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After reviewing photos, video footage and student tips from last month's riot, the University of Massachusetts Police Department has identified about 70 more suspects, and 80 to 90 students total could be prosecuted in this case, according to police.

Ten students were arrested the night of the riot, five of which were later expelled. Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald said the investigation into the riot has led to more suspects.

"We have no intentions of stopping until we've identified every single rock thrower and every single person who is responsible for the damage," said Archbald.

A team of detectives and line officers have been investigating the Dec. 15 riot and about 70 more suspects have been identified, said Archbald.

He said detectives used photos from networking Web sites Facebook.com and MySpace.com, and videos from YouTube.com, an online video Web site to identify suspects.

The Hampshire District Attorney's office is

See POLICE on page A13

UM scientist combats hackers

Program gains recognition

BY MICHELLE OSORIO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In an age where many computer software developers are concerned with speed, University of Massachusetts computer scientist Emery Berger is honing in on another problem: hacking.

This concern led Berger to the development of DieHard, software dedicated to enhancing computer security from technology savvy hackers.

"Today we have way more memory and more computer power than we need," Berger said. "We want to use that to make systems more reliable and safer, without compromising speed."

After coming up with the concept of DieHard last summer, Berger attended the Microsoft research facility, hoping to build on him ideas. With the help of Microsoft researcher Ben Zorn, Berger's idea began to take shape.

Still, when Berger left Microsoft at the end of the summer the software still had to be written. It took six months before DieHard was ready for download.

Several companies awarded Berger for his work in the creation of Diehard. He received a $300,000 grant from the National Science Foundation, a $30,000 grant from Intel, and was presented with $30,000 from Microsoft.

The DieHard software acts as a wall between your computer and

See HACKERS on page A11

Emery Berger, computer science, has developed a new program that helps prevent computers from crashing and increases defenses against hacker attacks.

State probes UMass project

Union alleges unlicensed workers hired

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A Springfield union filed complaints with state agencies this month against the contractor that worked on apartments at the University of Massachusetts.

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW) Local 7 of Springfield filed the complaints in January against Wayne J. Griffin Electric Incorporated, a contractor on the North Residential Area apartment project at the University of Massachusetts.

Griffin Electric was charged with hiring subcontractors without the proper licensing or permits to help complete work on the North Residential Area project, IBEW Local 7 The complaint against Griffin Electric was filed with the Division of Professional Licensure, according to the Springfield Republican.

IBEW Local 7 had also filed complaints against Griffin Electric subcontractors CLP Resources, Tradesource Incorporated, LPTI Technologies, and A11 Shepherd Associates Incorporated with the Massachusetts Attorney Generals Office, the Department of Occupational Safety, and the Division of Professional Licensure. According to Paul Gour, Business Agent for IBEW Local 7, all four temporary help companies were employed during the construction by Griffin Electric.

Gerry Richards, Director of Operations for Griffin Electric, said that the company had yet to see anything official from the state agencies involved.

"We have been waiting to see what the state agencies pass along to us," he said. "We don't agree with some of the general allegations, so we are waiting to see specifics."

See UNION on page A11

Student arrested on drug charges

Junior busted in John Adams

BY ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A University of Massachusetts junior was arrested from his John Adams dorm room in December for possession of narcotics with the intent to distribute, according to police.

Richard J. McGrath, 20, of 29 Standish Ave. in Falmouth, Mass. was charged with possession with the intent to distribute class C and D narcotics and possession of class C, D and E narcotics, according to a UMass Police Department press release.

Police seized 25 pieces of property from McGrath's room, including approximately one pound of marijuana, psilocybin mushrooms, oxycodone pills, Ritalin, and $8,000 in cash, according to Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald.

"Clearly this guy was busy," said Archbald.

The arrest came after a month-long investigation into drug dealing in John Adams hall in Southwest. On the evening of Dec. 13, 2006, narcotics detectives and uniformed members of the UMPD executed a search warrant at McGrath's 313 John Adams residence, states the press release.

Archbald said McGrath lived in a single in John Adams and was present when police executed the search warrant.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
issue 55
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Eric Athas
Managing Editor Rob Greenfield
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherel Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jaimeson Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Editorial Editor Tucker Merrick
News Editor Matt Bellrose
Sports Editor Danny Picard
Sports Editor Jon Pelland
Circulation Manager Jeff Prutz
Finance Manager David Vilade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Comics Editor Adam Staigin
Assistant Advertising Nicole Paddester
Assistant Business Phil Smoller
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Sydney Towne
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Editorial Brendan Hall
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 A.M. and 3:30 P.M.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield, Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Rob Greenfield, Eric Athas

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Chris Martin

Winter's here, finally.

Kaits Azaiovich/Collegian

The University of Massachusetts campus withstands the first blow of winter in this photo dated January 14. In what has been a relatively warm winter, even small amounts of snowfall has been hard to come by.

Campus construction update

New Dirt is getting older as buildings begin to take shape around the University of Massachusetts campus. With construction projects continuing through the winter, these multi-million dollar buildings are getting closer to becoming finished products. Below is an overview of some projects on campus.

Integrated Science Building
Location: The northeast side of campus next to Worcester Dining Commons.
Estimated end date: Fall 2008.
Estimated cost: $92.7 million.
Size: 155,000 gross square feet.
Main features: The Integrated Science Building will be home to all undergraduate chemistry labs, upper division science labs and research lab space for up to 10 principal investigators. When finished, it will also have a 300-seat auditorium with scientific demonstration facilities and active-learning technology, an 85-seat classroom, office space for teachers and computer rooms.
Update: The main gate for the Integrated Science Building has been established on Thatcher Way. Project officials warn that pedestrians and drivers should proceed though the area with caution.
Go to www.dailycollegian.com to find a link to live streaming video of the building project

Studio Arts Building
Location: North Pleasant Street near Franklin Dining Commons.
Estimated end date: Spring 2008.
Estimated cost: $25 million.
Size: 47,000 square feet.
Main features: Located next to the Fine Arts Center, the Studio Arts Building will act as the entrance to campus. It will be constructed as an energy-efficient building, with sustainable building materials, operable windows for natural ventilation, and other energy and water conserving methods. A common area in the center of the building will serve as space for special events, art shows and guest lectures. Other features include a Digital Studio with high-end computer graphics, a new Instructional Darkroom for photography and other studio space.
Update: Excavation and foundation work continues at the Studio Arts building site. All work is taking place inside the fenced area.

Skinner Nursing School Renovation
Location: North Pleasant Street
Estimated end date: October 2007.
Estimated cost: $16.2 million.
Size: 55 square feet.
Main features: The decision to renovate Skinner Hall to accommodate the School of Nursing was made when it was decided the 67-year-old building did not support the modern curriculum. Parts of the structure were demolished down to the skin and roof to make way for a two-story edition on the east side. The renovations will include new mechanical and electrical systems, wireless Ethernet, and patient bed teaching labs.
Update: Work continues behind the fenced in area.

Michael Dwyer/Collegian

Two men work on the construction of the new Studio Arts building at UMass, Friday. Construction is planned to be completed in Spring of 2008.

Learn More About GCC's Health Career Programs:

Licensed Practical Nursing Certificate Program
Location: VA Medical Center, Leeds
Thursday, March 22, 2007 ..... 7 p.m.
Thursday, May 10, 2007 ..... 7 p.m.

Stillpoint Massage Therapy Certificate Program
Location: Downtown Center, 270 Main St., Greenfield
Wednesday, March 7, 2007 ..... 6:00 p.m.
Wednesday, April 11, 2007 ..... 6:00 p.m.
Wednesday, May 9, 2007 ..... 6:00 p.m.
Wednesday, June 13, 2007 ..... 6:00 p.m.

Paramedic Certificate
Location: Downtown Center, 270 Main St., Greenfield
Tuesday, March 20, 2007 ..... 6 p.m.
Friday, March 30, 2007 ..... 4:30 p.m.
Monday, April 9, 2007 ..... 5 p.m.
Wednesday, April 25, 2007 ..... 6 p.m.
Thursday, May 3, 2007 ..... 4:30 p.m.

Associate Degree Nursing
Location: Downtown Center, 270 Main St., Greenfield
Wednesday, April 18, 2007 ..... 4 p.m.
Tuesday, June 12, 2007 ..... 3 p.m.

GREENFIELD Community College
For more information contact (413) 775-1802 or visit www.gcc.mass.edu

Construction Poll
What's your perception of construction on campus?
A) It's promising. The campus should look great when everything is finished.
B) It's annoying. All the construction makes it difficult to get around campus.
C) I'm apathetic. It's not a big deal. I barely notice it.
Go to www.dailycollegian.com to cast your vote!

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

(actual e-mail)
BW56
"I saved 200 plus dollars on my books. thank you so much, BIGWORDS.com! I'll be telling people about this site all year."
Ebahi from U. Cincinnati
bigwords.com
protecting the universe from high textbook prices!!!
(price compare textbooks, DVDs, music, and games)

Patrick blocks cut in funding

Funds could be directed toward 'facility repair'

By Jamie Mason
Collegian Staff

The newly elected Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick reversed the $383 million in budget cuts on his first day in office made by former Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney, according to the University of Massachusetts News and Information office.

Governor Mitt Romney used his 9C emergency fiscal authority powers in November to make a one percent reduction in state accounts, a total of $425 million, according to the UMass News and Information office.

"He viewed the budget trends as disturbing and the use of the rainy day fund was not something that he supported," said Ed Blaguszewski, director of News and Information at UMass.

Romney later restored $42 million in the cuts, before his office term ended. Patrick viewed the cuts as having a negative impact on the state's education, public safety and social services, said Blaguszewski.

"Slightly higher-than-expected revenue in November and December was sufficient to sustain his decision to restore those November 9C reductions not already restored by Governor Romney," said Kyle Sullivan, Deval Patrick's press secretary. "It reflects a decision on the part of the governor that there are a lot of programs that are very worthwhile to restore to avoid negative impacts on people in the Commonwealth who were already depending on this funding."

According to Blaguszewski, the cuts, had they not been reversed, would have had large consequences at UMass.

"Of the $425 million, $23 million was for the UMass system," he said. "Of the $23 million, approximately $10.9 million in reductions was facing the

See PATRICK on page A12

One of the first moves of newly elected Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick's inaugural term was the reversal of a $383 million in budget cuts originally brought forward by former Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney.

University to begin offering new dual degrees

By Kevin Foley
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts who wish to integrate graduate studies in management and engineering will have three new dual degree options beginning in September 2007.

UMass announced in December that the Isenberg School of Management and the College of Engineering will offer three Master of Business Administration (M.B.A.) Master of Science (M.S.) dual degrees in Civil Engineering, Environmental Engineering and Industrial Engineering.

Graduate students can complete the dual degree program in three years – one year less that it takes to attain the two degrees separately.

"At least one-third of the College of Engineering's graduates wind up in management," Michael Malone, dean of the College of Engineering, said in a UMass News and Information press release. "For them and many of our other graduates, business skills have become survival skills."

A National Science Foundation study shows that people with degrees in both management and engineering become leaders in their industry twice as quickly as those with only one degree.

"The engineering M.B.A./M.S. students will take their M.B.A. courses with our full-time residential M.B.A. students," Eric Berkowitz, Isenberg School associate dean of professional programs, said in the press release. "That will add great interdisciplinary synergy to the classroom. Without question, students who complete our M.B.A./M.S. programs will graduate with a considerable competitive advantage."

Students who are currently pursuing graduate degrees in engineering will not be able to enroll in the program without applying, according to Ana Muriel.

"We are requiring students to apply for the M.B.A./M.S. program together," Muriel said. "You can't go for one and then change your mind and take both."

The cost of the program is similar to other engineering graduate programs. Students will be given the chance to earn money by working during the program.

"Most of our graduate students work with faculty and are funded in that way," Muriel said. "We hope that these students would do that as well."

The Isenberg School and The College of Engineering

See DEGREES on page A11

UMass will now offer dual degrees in Civil, Environmental and Industrial Engineering.

Police use Craigslist to nab suspect

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

A 50-year-old Springfield man was arrested several weeks ago for attempting to solicit sex for a fee to a male student, according to the University of Massachusetts Police Department.

John H. Schulthess III, of 40D Yorktown Dr. was nabbed on Jan. 14 after posting a message on Craigslist.org which offered sexual conduct for a fee of $50, said Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald.

"One of our detectives noticed the posting, which

See SEX STING on page A12

UMass debates January term

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

As early as May 4, students from Hampshire College and Smith College will be attending their last classes of the spring 2007 semester. A few days later, Amherst College and Mount Holyoke College students will do the same.

It isn't until May 15 when University of Massachusetts students will be able to say goodbye to their teachers before studying for a week's worth of final examinations.

As UMass students endure the five week winter session, other colleges in the area are running on a different schedule, causing UMass officials to reconsider the University's academic calendar.

"There are preliminary discussions happening on all five campuses about the possibility of beginning spring term early (around Martin Luther King Day in January rather than at the end of January)," said Cecilia Trachy of the Registrar's Office at UMass. "That means that the spring semester will end earlier and Commencement will be earlier (around Mother's Day)."

Trachy also said that the changes to the academic calendar have not been approved by the Faculty Senate or the other four colleges. Meetings will take place this spring semester at UMass to discuss the issue, but even if the proposal moves forward and is approved, it is likely that it will not take effect until the 2009-10 academic year at the earliest.

The reason for UMass' difference in schedule is due to the long winter session known as January term. Last semester, UMass students were able to leave campus as early as Dec. 13, assuming he or she

See JANUARY on page A11

Looking for an Apartment?
Now is the time to apply for Summer & Fall of 2006!

Excellent location...1/2 Mile from UMass
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, cooking gas, and off street parking

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
www.pufftonvillage.com
For more information call:
413.549.0145
8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday

SGA officials developing community project

SCERA Representative and SGA official Jonathan Pumarol addresses the Senate. SGA President Elvis Mendez said he would like to see a series of forums so that the U Mass community would be able to come to an agreement on how its budget can be spent.

By Amber Vaillancourt
Collegian Staff

As the first month of 2007 rolls on by, the Student Government Association prepares to roll into action.

The Student Bridges Program was granted independent agency status in a vote at the Dec. 8, 2006 senate meeting. The goal of the Student Bridges Program is to "build reciprocal relationships between University of Massachusetts students and local communities in order to enrich the Amherst campus and to increase access to higher education for underrepresented students," said Mishy Leiblum, SGA Student Trustee.

Though it has been a time for students over break to catch up with friends, work for extra cash, or just sleep in all day, Leiblum has been working to promote and help develop the Student Bridges Program, in which she is one of the representatives for in SGA.

"I have been busy making plans for the spring," said Leiblum.

The Student Bridges Program has been sending tutors and mentors into the Holyoke area all break, and has also been sponsoring community based events. One of those community events has been hosting tours through the U Mass campus for young prospective students from the surrounding areas.

Another plan that Leiblum is working on with the Student Bridges Program is the hosting of a popular hip hop play called Plantanos & Collared Greens at Bowker Auditorium on Feb. 21. Approximately 40 high school students from Holyoke are expected to be attending the performance.

On Nov. 14, the SGA held a forum to discuss the new budget plan and the resulting dissatisfaction among many Registered Student Organizations regarding the rising activity fees. The fee outlined in the new budget proposal would move from $40 to $43.

"The basic idea of this forum is to have a frank and open discussion about our budget," said SGA President Elvis Mendez.

Mendez also said that in the future he would like to see a series of forums so that the UMass community would be able to come to an agreement on how the shared monies should be spent.

Towards the end of the fall semester, the SGA in a vote of 24-3 approved an increase in the student activities fee from the original $40 to $43.

The reason for the increase of fees, supporters of the $3.50 raise said, was to enable organizations to continue in receiving the funding they currently are granted by the SGA, instead of having and cut. The new activity fee is slated to go into effect at the start of the 2008 fiscal year.

The SGA was also seeking more student interest and more importantly, increased involvement in SGA voting. Attendance and immersion on students' parts was encouraged by Mendez. But did more students show up and vote? Mendez says yes, student participation had increased this past semester, but not in meeting attendance.

"SGA is an organization that doesn't lend itself for that type of student involvement; we need to rework SGA to be a body where students can participate," said Mendez.

"We registered over 1,600 new students to vote as well as hundreds

See SGA on page A8

Students awarded for hybrid car show

By Jason Katsos
Collegian Correspondent

MTV Music Television announced last week the five winners of the Fall Assignment of the Break the Addiction Challenge; a nation-wide eco-competition that originally launched in September and challenged high school and college-aged youth to demonstrate environmental changes in their lives and schools.

For this assignment, MTV in conjunction with the Campus Climate Challenge asked students to earn media recognition for their school group's green activities. MTV and the Campus Climate Challenge chose five schools that had received print or broadcast attention, either locally or nationally, and awarded each of the five groups a $1,000 grant.

The winning schools included the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, St. John's University , Southern Methodist University , the University of Colorado and James Madison University.

Students at UMass organized a Hybrid Car Show on campus that featured information on clean energy and a petition to get a wind turbine back on campus which would provide clean, wind energy.

Students at St. John's University created an on-campus, extra-curricular club called "Students for a Sustainable Future," that rallies the student body to promote a 100 percent clean energy policy.

Southern Methodist University students successfully lobbied to join the United States Environmental Protection Agencies', "A Green Power Partnership", a membership requiring that at least three percent of the electricity on campus come from new, renewable energy sources.

A group of students at the University of Colorado previously achieved their goal to use 8,800 megawatt hours per year of renewable energy and now vow to have zero emissions by 2008 by powering the campus with wind and solar.

James Madison University students created the Clean Energy Coalition, an association of student organizations dedicated to convincing the university to purchase environmentally friendly electricity.

"2006 represented an integral year in the fight against global warming. For the first time ever, young people cited the environment as the most important issue their generation would have to face a major breakthrough and critical shift in attitude amongst our audience," said Christina Norman, President of MTV. "And now, via MTV's partnership with the Campus Climate Challenge, we are

See MTV on page A12

Trustee illustrates student loan woes

By Hayden Marx
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association representatives of the Massachusetts Public Higher Education Coalition addressed the Faculty Senate on Dec 14, sharing their thoughts on what they deemed as an accessibility and affordability crisis at the University of Massachusetts.

The Massachusetts Public Higher Education Coalition consists of a group of students, faculty, staff and members of the campus community brought together to address issues concerning the state of higher education.

The Coalition believes federal and state level budget cuts have left students behind. State allocated funds have decreased 36 percent from 2001 to 2004.

To compensate for the cuts, tuition and fees have increased. For the 1995-96 school year, an instate student paid $5,514 dollars. In the 2005-06 school year, the same student would pay $9,278.

Students turning to loans to help offset the cost have received less help than necessary. Over the last 15 years the MASSGrant

See FAC SENATE on page A10

CSTV
Atlantic A10
SHOOTOUT
2007
PONTIAC
SmartEdge by GMAC
Coca-Cola
UMass
SPALDING
The Daily Collegian
wmua 91.1
COMPETE FOR A CHANCE TO WIN A TRIP TO ATLANTIC CITY FOR A SHOT AT $10,000
— PLUS OTHER GREAT PRIZES! —
EVERY PARTICIPANT GETS A T-SHIRT, FREE FOOD & A GOODIE BAG
Open to men, women, and co-ed teams of two. Single participants can enter & get matched upon-site to form teams.
UMass Minutemen
February 2, 4:30PM
The Cage
Visit a10shootout.com for event registration & more details

Longtime UM broadcaster O'Neill dies

By Vincent Capone
Collegian Correspondent

Legendary sportscaster Jack O'Neill, best known as the on-air announcer of University of Massachusetts sports, passed away on Dec. 15, 2006.

O'Neill, 58, lost his battle with esophageal cancer last month, passing away at Baystate Medical Center, surrounded by close members of his family.

O'Neill leaves behind his wife of 34 years, Linda, and their three children.

One of the most recognizable voices of Western Massachusetts, O'Neill had spent nearly 40 years broadcasting his own sports talk show and announcing football, hockey and basketball games for UMass.

After graduating from Cathedral High School in 1966, O'Neill decided to continue his education at Emerson College in hopes of pursuing a career as a sports broadcaster.

O'Neill began working at local radio stations in the Connecticut area and began a television career at WHYN, which later turned into WGGB in 1968 and continued at WHYN until 1981 when he left television to revisit radio broadcasting where he began to host his own sports talk show.

Towards the end of the decade, O'Neill became the director of the Greater Springfield Convention and Visitors Bureau and later joined the staff at Springfield Technical Community College.

O'Neill's final sports broadcasts were shown on WMAS in Springfield in which he hosted a weekly golf talk show "From Tee to Green" with co-host Cindy Johnson.

Aside from his broadcasting career, O'Neill was devoted to his community, hosting numerous charitable events in the area, such as the Make a Wish Foundation and Ronald McDonald House Charities.

He also had strong ties in the Irish-American community of the Holyoke area. O'Neill was a 20-year member of the Holyoke Saint Patrick's Day Parade Committee, and was president of the committee in 1998.

Cough medicine abuse growing among teenagers

Abuse has risen 10-fold since 1999

By Loraine Burger
Collegian Staff

Teenagers today are using over-the-counter cold and cough medicines to get a cheap and easy high, and the number of users is increasing drastically.

Since 1999, the abuse of cold and cough medicines by teens has risen 10-fold, and has decreased the use of Ecstasy, LCD, and GHB as a result, according to the California Poison Control System.

This practice has been commonly called "Robotripping," a term that generated from the most commonly abused drug, Robitussin. However, recently Robitussin has taken a backseat to Coricidin, the newly preferred drug to get high.

"Abuse" in the context of nonprescription medicines, can be defined as the intake of extremely large doses of cough medicine, whether it be tablets, gel caps, or syrups, for the purpose of getting high.

"People tend to have the perception that medicine abuse is different from illegal drug and alcohol abuse," said Fred Aleguas, Clinical Manager of Poison Control, "because it's a legal household substance so people believe it should be dealt with differently."

The types of medicines that can be used for getting high are Alka-Seltzer Plus Cold & Cough Medicine, Coricidin HBP Cough and Cold, Dayquil LiquiCaps, Dimetapp DM, Robitussin cough products, Sudafed cough products, Triaminic cough syrups, Tylenol Cold products, Vicks 44 Cough Relief products, Vicks NyQuil LiquiCaps and hundreds of store brands similar to these.

These cold remedies contain dextromethorphan, or DXM, an ingredient that can cause hallucinations and out-of-body experiences, reports the Los Angeles Times.

In extreme cases, the abuse of this ingredient can lead to death. Other side effects of misuse of the drug include confusion, dizziness, double or blurred vision, slurred speech, loss of physical coordination, abdominal pain, nausea and vomiting, rapid heart beat, drowsiness, numbness of fingers and toes and disorientation, according to the Partnership for a Drug-Free America.

"Parents notice something is wrong usually because the high lasts much longer than it would with other drugs," said Aleguas. "We consistently receive calls regarding the overdosing of cough medicines, at least once a week. The kids are generally 12 years or older."

According to Archives of Pediatrics & Adolescent Medicine, 74.5 percent of these abuse cases are children between the ages of nine and 17. The highest frequency of abuse occurs among teens between 15 and 16 years old. They use slang terms for DXM such as Dex, Robo, Skittles, Triple C and Tussin.

According to the partnership for a Drug-Free America, children are learning these habits from the Internet. Certain Web sites actually promote the abuse of cough medicine, and even suggest how much to take, what other drugs to combine with DXM, and how to extract the ingredient from cough medicines and turn it into a powder form to snort.

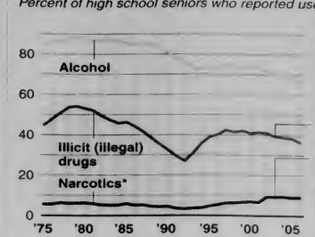
Most drug-abuse professionals say the abuse of these over-the-counter medications is the result of any adolescent mental or emotional issue, including depression.

The issue should be handled the same way any other addiction problem should be, with the help of doctors and therapists. If anyone you know shows the symptoms of the overuse of these medicines or other poisonous substances, the Poison Control Center is always available at 1-800-222-1222.

Loraine Burger is a Collegian staff writer. She can be reached at lburger@student.umass.edu.

Teen drug use

Percent of high school seniors who reported use in past 12 months:



Overall

- New to the 2006 survey, over-the-counter cough or cold medicine use is reported to be 7%
- Marijuana use has decreased by 2.1%
- Misuse of prescription drugs, such as Vicodin, OxyContin and Ritalin, remains high

*Use not under doctor's order

Source: U.S. National Institute on Drug Abuse
Graphic: Angela Smith

© 2006 MCT

Local police forces close to agreement

By Kevin Foley
Collegian Staff

The town of Amherst and the University of Massachusetts police departments are reworking the mutual aid agreement that lets officers call on each other when needed, and the proposal could be finalized sometime early this week, according to the Amherst Town Manager.

While the town and the University currently have a mutual aid agreement, complaints from Amherst residents and other factors have caused it to be redrafted.

"The new mutual aid agreement would allow for each department to have police powers in the other's jurisdiction," said Laurence Shaffer, town manager. "It allows for University police to, in the event that they see a violation or a crime, be able to react as police officers of the town. And conversely, the same would be true on campus for town officers."

Shaffer said it makes sense for the University and the town to have a mutual aid agreement because the two entities share similar responsibilities and jurisdictions.

"We're a small town, we have little resources, so from the town of Amherst's perspective, it's important for us to have that additional resource and we think it make s a lot of sense to collaborate and cooperate with the University police," said Shaffer.

Shaffer also said the negotiations between the town and the University have gone smoothly and he is pleased with UMass' cooperation.

"We're absolutely delighted with the University," he said. "We're very happy with the cooperation the University has demonstrated throughout the whole negotiation process. We think the University police officers do a terrific job."

Once a final draft is agreed upon, the Amherst Select Board will vote to approve or deny it. The next Select Board meeting is one January 24th at 6:15 p.m. in the Town Room at Town Hall.

"We've been working with the town, working over drafts," Edward Blaguszewski, Director of News and Information at UMass said. "We hope to have a final draft in the next few weeks."

Kevin Foley is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at kfoley@student.umass.edu.

Collegian editor Eric Athas contributed to this article.

With the new agreement the police forces of Amherst and U Mass will be able to call on each other when needed.

SKYPLEX
SPRINGFIELD'S HOTTEST NIGHTCLUB
3 CLUBS & 3 DJ'S ALL UNDER ONE ROOF!!!
"LA & NYC NIGHTLIFE COMES TO SPRINGFIELD"

Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"
Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs
"Top 40" Upstairs
Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"

WANTED: Hip Young Promoters/Hosts • Earn $$$$

Calling all DJ's

Do you do campus and house parties?
Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ!
OPEN TRYOUTS THURS 2/1
Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us

10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

Become a School Psychologist at MSPP
Visit www.mspp.edu/school or call 617-327-6777 x210

The Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology offers a comprehensive graduate program in School Psychology, leading to a master's degree and certificate of advanced graduate study, in an intimate and supportive learning environment. This innovative program integrates coursework with expertly supervised fieldwork to ensure that graduates enter the field with practical knowledge and confidence. The curriculum emphasizes the clinical skills schools need and value: counseling, system interventions, psychodiagnostics, and consultation.

"One of the top ten hot professions"
(U.S. News and World Report)

Applications are still being accepted for Sept. 2007

Next Open House is Feb. 6, 2007, 6:00-8:30 pm*. RSVP to* admissions@mspp.edu or call toll free 888-664-6777 x210*.*

For details, visit www.mspp.edu.

MSPP
221 Rivermoor Street, Boston, MA 02132

The Area's Best Fitness & Health Club
UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9
For more information call 253-7571

SEMESTER SPECIAL
$175
FREE UNLIMITED TANNING!
First 100 to Join

Full Aerobics Program
Included with membership:
- Yoga, Pilates
- Hip Hop and Core Training
- And many more

- Tanning
- Sauna
- Juice Bar & supplements
- Personal Training

Cardio Equipment Including:
- Treadmills
- Bikes
- Crosstrainers
- Large Free Weight Area
- Complete circuit training area

NO ENROLLMENT FEE!
Now offering Aerobics only memberships

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

It's time to start the new semester off right

There is always a sigh of relief after the conclusion of fall finals. You get to look forward to a change of scene, enabling you to take a well-deserved break from the all too often arduous nature of schoolwork. It's a time to celebrate the holidays with family and friends. A time you're just thankful to be doing nothing.

It's unfortunate that this sublimity lasts but a moment. Though at first you ordered yourself to be productive, you soon see that goal slipping away. That book you wanted to read becomes vividly dated midday reruns, and that salad becomes potato salad. Before you know it you're eating bon bons and watching Springer. As break progresses you begin to sleep later and later everyday. When there's nothing to do, doing something proves almost impossible. Eventually day enters into night, night enters into day, and still you haven't left the house.

You know what is happening and condemn yourself for it, but the worst is yet to come as your parents begin to catch on. You attempt to escape the constant reminders of your sloth through your friends, but this solace does not last long. Remember that you are a UMass student, and your break is longer than a celebrity marriage. By the last week, many are drooling in the numbing boredom and self-loathing that is winter break.

As humans, often our conscience is our downfall. It's a cruel irony that we lust to do nothing, but can't stand when we actually achieve that desire. If nothing else, Winter Break helps UMass students to understand this revelation.

Most of you in your final days of January come to terms with this lethargy, rejecting its temptation and wiping off your mouths. The slurred New Year's resolutions from weeks ago return to the forefront of your thoughts, and you swear that when you go back to school, things will change. You will become a good student and maybe even read the newspaper. (Perhaps that's why you're reading this column.)

Well now you have your chance. Now is your moment of truth. Spring semester has officially begun. If you haven't already, soon you will be sitting shoulder-to-shoulder in an overcrowded class. It is now that you must decide whether you're going to stick it out or help thin it out.

During the school year, you all must be careful not to repeat the mistakes of Winter Break. Going to bed late is one of them; another is television. Be wary of these devices of dullness and distraction. Most importantly, understand that the hardest part of college is not often the work, but consistently doing the work.

In reality, the spring semester isn't that long. Though to most all of us it often seems never ending, we are here for a little over three months. In that time, we all have to fight to keep trudging through. For inspiration, think back to the previous week. Remember that doing nothing only feels good until your conscience creeps up to poke at you.

Remember this as you're standing in line at the Textbook Annex, or when you're finding it hard to wake up before 11 a.m.; remember how your ego rewards you with a sense of self-satisfaction when you finish your work. Remember that you want these feelings to never end. If you can do this, then maybe you can give the rest of us some tips. Welcome back.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Everyone needs an excuse

Joshua H Wilder

Honesty is the best policy. At least that is what most people are told while growing up. So matter what situation you found yourself in, it was always important to tell the truth. After all, people who twist the facts around usually get caught, and being known as a liar is a reputation that's hard to reverse.

The great Bob Dylan once wrote "the times they are a-changing." He saw how much society was shifting when he uttered those words in 1964, but the phrase resonates even louder with American culture in 2007.

We have made great advances over the last decade, especially with technology. Due to the hard work and ambition of scientists, the Internet empowers the average person with the luxury of taking part in activities unimaginable during Bob Dylan's heyday. Americans are now watching sporting events of extraordinarily high-definition picture quality, hook up any information they can imagine online with a laptop, and even [illegible] Uzbekistan.

But most importantly, now we can cheat in school without getting caught personally. The widespread availability of the Internet coupled with [illegible] capital's ingenuity has fueled the creation of what possibly the most convenient [illegible] service: the Alibi Network. For a fee, this service will provide a person to lie about [illegible] circumstances without creating any suspicion in the mind of the employer lied to.

Looking at the company's Web site, the lengths to which they will go to cover up the truth [illegible] endless. The service includes [illegible] online ticket confirmations for car rentals, hotels, [illegible] interviews, sporting events, [illegible] and even [illegible] phone conversations. [illegible] can [illegible] up the [illegible] out [illegible] office, [illegible] and even [illegible] [illegible] card.

[illegible] cannot [illegible] all of the [illegible] the [illegible] Alibi Network [illegible] Web site [illegible] under the [illegible] Network openly lies for people, for a fee. It seems that they might not be so far off.

The cynics in this country have become the realists; talk about a future. Who can you trust? It may depend on who you pay.

Joshua H Wilder is a Collegian columnist

> Need to cover up the fact that you are unemployed? No problem.

After all, you would have to be an extremely naive person to believe that people tell the truth 100 percent of the time. Politicians have long been able to rearrange the facts to fit their own agenda; Bush isn't the only guilty party. From Nixon to Clinton to even those who run for positions ranging from city clerk to student government here at UMass, none of them are above the temptation to lie. Politicians aren't the only guilty parties either. Corporate CEO's like Jeffery Skilling and Ken Lay told lies that cost many hardworking people their pensions and livelihoods. But now, thanks to the Alibi Network, everyday citizens can lie easily and without worry. It takes a power usually reserved for the elite and makes it available to everyone. Hooray.

In reality, this really isn't something to celebrate. Granted, I'm all for equal rights for all citizens, but this one obviously lowers the bar for society in general. It calls into question the integrity of essentially any citizen, and could work to add an element of distrust to society.

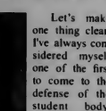
At this point in our culture we have given up on trying to get people to be honest, and now we are content with knowing that everyone is full of hot air. Aside from people who oppose this service on a religious basis, what about the practicality of the whole thing? What will happen in five years once this service gets popular? Will anyone trust anyone anymore? It seems doubtful.

It used to be that people who distrusted everyone they encountered were viewed as grumpy, cynical downers. Yet now that the Alibi Network openly lies for people, for a fee, it seems that they might not be so far off.

The cynics in this country have become the realists; talk about a future. Who can you trust? It may depend on who you pay.

Joshua H Wilder is a Collegian columnist

A letter to the student body



Brendan Hall

Let's make one thing clear: I've always considered myself one of the first to come to the defense of the student body. Collegian articles in the past have actively lobbied for students' rights, and we predict there will be no shortage of such in the future. With that in mind, the actions that occurred in Southwest following last Dec. 15's football game is something that I cannot vouch for.

You're on your own this time. Have fun not having fun.

Much of the state tuned in to ESPN2's telecast of the NCAA Division I-AA national championship game and saw a great University of Massachusetts team lose to an even greater team in Appalachian State. There was plenty of action to look forward to, with Appalachian's vaunted spread attack going against UMass' feared defense. But for a good chunk of our UMass peers living on campus, the action started after the game.

That was when nearly 2,000 students gathered in the Southwest residential area to participate in rioting, and effectively vandalize school property to levels rarely seen at college campuses these days; a rating that one officer on duty that night told reporters was a "four out of five."

Let's not forget that Southwest has always been a hotspot for such events – this goes back decades. In a recent conversation I had with an alum, before the riots happened, he asked my friends and I if people still do "elevator rides" in the Southwest towers.

Fill in the blanks.

Rioting is, yes, inane, but there is a huge difference between what happened in the infamous Red Sox riots of 2004 and what happened on that December night. Many of those students in 2004 seemed cheerful, overjoyed at what their favorite baseball team had just done. People jumped over a makeshift bonfire, threw rolls of toilet paper, lit off bottle rockets, chanted "Yankees Suck" for the sake of chanting, and lit "victory cigars" in the true spirit of the late Red Auerbach.

Impromptu, unorganized euphoria.

One UMass student said last December's group of rioters "just seemed like there was far more delinquents, looking for a reason to be destructive. It's deplorable, and I hate the fact that this is how I'm represented now." Yours truly was not on campus that night, but based on the reports of the damage incurred in Southwest, that depiction seems as accurate as any.

> If you're blaming the police for this mess, you're out of your mind.

Maybe the legends of riots past helped spawn this one. Maybe the freshmen and sophomores who make up the majority of Southwest residents needed to carve their own initials into the tree. But that's not the point.

There was absolutely no reason to go as far as we did; to break over 100 windows, including, as one student reported, every window on the first floor of Crampton; to ram a folding table through the doors of the Southwest Café; to huck rocks, bottles, full beer cans and trash barrels at cops; to drop a one-gallon container of liquid off of JQA and nearly take an officer's head off; to inflict what the Associated Press reported as over $100,000 in damages.

Unorganized, pissed-off barbarism.

But what are we hearing from the students? Sorry? Yeah, that was kind of stupid? We'll never do that again? No, we're hearing tales of "that was fun" and "the cops started this."

The latter of which I pose this question: what were you expecting? What did you think would happen when the police showed up with orders to disperse a riot? Did you expect them to simply survey the scene, deem everything to be under control, and go back to doing their daily routine, with the assurance that everyone would just clean up after themselves?

If you're blaming the police for this mess, you're out of your mind. They're acting on orders from the administration, and confronting them with violence is only going to heighten the measures this school will go to in protecting the student body.

Conversely, you cannot pin this on overreaction by the administration. The people in charge of this university have been working hard to change the image of this school – granted, some of their procedures raise questions, not answers – and this just fuels their fire.

Why? Because that raging act of stupidity was the last straw. If the bleeding doesn't stop now, it never will, which is why you're not going to see us staging sit-ins in protest of some kid getting expelled for partaking in shamelessness. Maybe those kids didn't deserve such a harsh punishment, especially if they're first-time offenders with a clean slate. But those are chances you take when you're forced to draw a line in the sand, and that's a chance we have to risk.

The only people you can blame for this ignorant mess is yourselves.

What were you trying to prove in committing those very acts on the night of Dec. 15? What were you rebelling against? What was the reason?

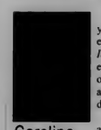
Whatever excuses you come up with can't possibly justify what went down on that fateful night.

This is 2007, not 1967.

Grow up.

Brendan Hall is a Collegian editor.

Knowing when to quit



Caroline Moretti

When it was announced several years back that they were considering making a fourth film in the Indiana Jones series, I was initially excited. Who wouldn't love more of those kitschy action sequences and another peek at Harrison Ford's debonair smile?

Shortly afterwards, I was hit with a sinking feeling of apprehension: Harrison Ford, though the consummate action hero, was starting to look more and more like his climbing age, and I doubted his capability to be believable as the jet-setting, whip-cracking archeologist.

When it was announced earlier this month that, at the ripe old age of 65, Ford finally resolved to pursue the project, I wept bitter tears for the dignity of action films. Harrison Ford and his band of aging colleagues seem to be conspiring to create a new brand of Hollywood hunk: the geriatric action star.

> These actors' inability to admit they're past their prime is a genuine and realistic reflection of the rest of their generation.

It started in 2003, when Sean Connery embarrassingly karate-kicked his way through The League of Extraordinary Gentlemen. He was 73, and it was awkward to watch the bad guys tumble to their feet after a few stiff and brittle karate chops.

Sylvester Stallone also recently got into the act. I don't know how many times he'll have to step in the ring as Rocky before he's satisfied with the permanence of his machismo. Don't get me wrong, Rocky Balboa was a genuinely enjoyable film, but I don't believe a 60-year-old man can beat up the heavy-weight champion of the world, no matter how many raw eggs he drinks while listening to "Eye of the Tiger." Old Sly also has Rambo IV in the works, making me wonder if John Rambo has gone over the age for enlistment.

The point of my cinematic dissection is that despite the many good years of service as pinnacles of masculinity in pop culture, it may be time for these guys to stop jumping out of planes and getting the girl. These actors' inability to admit they're past their prime is a genuine and realistic reflection of the rest of their generation.

Undoubtedly, just as our grandparents will forever be connected to the legacy of Word War II, the baby boomers will be remembered for their staunch resistance to the reality of their mortality. This is manifested in their continual insistence on their youthful veracity, despite the evidence to the contrary, with films like these as a fine example. Certain members of the boomer population spend much of their energy on the vigilant fight of aging, with the pharmaceuticals industry wasting no time bending over backwards to serve them.

While I was home over winter break, I spent many evenings watching the nightly news with my father. Nearly every commercial during the broadcast was for a prescription drug that you didn't know you needed. I swear, I saw no less than 650 ads for "natural male enhancement" over the course of January. Problems that were once considered natural parts of aging are all disorders, and just because you're not 20 anymore doesn't mean you have to lie down and take it. There's a pill, potion, or topical rub to make you forget you're aging until you're too senile to remember why you started taking the meds in the first place.

Aging is an inevitability of life that you can't escape, no matter how much botox you pump in your cheeks. Personally, I'm OK with the prospect of getting old, and I don't intend to fight it. Why can't baby boomers see how cool it seems to be an old person?

When I'm a crazy old lady, I'll be able to say what I want all the time and blame it on dementia. I'll be able to chase kids out of my yard on my little scooter waving my cane. I'll even be able to eat that super-cheap tuna melt at Friendy's. I say to the onslaught of aging, bring it on. The more wrinkles I have, the more life lessons I can instill with long, meandering, tangential stories of the good ol' days.

Incidentally, one life lesson my parents always tried to teach me when I was a kid was the importance of acting my age. Throwing tantrums like a three-year-old when you're 15 is unacceptable, and everybody knows it. So why is it OK for 60-year-olds to play action hero like they're 35 and pretend like nobody can see the absurdity of it all?

It's time the baby boomers take heed of this message, and consider acting their own ages. Though you can put off the symptoms for awhile, old age comes for us all in the end.

Deal with it, Indiana Jones.

Caroline Moretti is a Collegian columnist.

WANT TO BECOME A COLUMNIST?

GAIN THE RESPECT OF PEERS
THE ACKNOWLEDGMENT FROM YOUR ELDERS
AND THE CRITICISM OF ALL

Send an email to:
editorial@dailycollegian.com

...ht in the Middle

Dying for a reason

Andrew Freeman

Sergio Pelico, age 10. Alsen Akti, 12. Alab... 9. As we were on break, these and other children across the world hanged themselves, in imitation of Saddam Hussein's Dec. 30 execution by the Iraqi government. Death followed Hussein even with his passing.

While most of these hangings occurred in heavily Islamic nations such as Pakistan and Turkey, Pelico lived in Texas. Police believe his death was accidental. He had watched [illegible] execution the day before he died.

The combination of heavy media coverage and curiosity may explain some of these hangings. In other cases, the reasons are clearer. Moon Moon Karmakar, a [illegible] Indian girl, was extremely disturbed by the execution. Her father told reporters, "She said she had had a [illegible] and "she told us she wanted to feel the pain Saddam did during his execution." On Jan. 3, she committed [illegible].

Saddam Hussein was hanged on the first day of [illegible] Adha, a Muslim holiday of sacrifice. It commemorates Abraham's willingness to sacrifice his own son to God – at the last moment God bade him to sacrifice a ram instead, having proven his loyalty. Hosni Mubarak, the president of Egypt, urged Bush not to allow Saddam to be executed during Eid al-Adha. Mubarak declared that killing him in this fashion, they "turned him into a martyr."

> Yet Hussein's death has had unintended consequences. Some view him as a martyr, despite his atrocious crimes.

Killing Saddam on this holiday seems [illegible]. Imagine carrying out a major political [illegible] Christian nation on Easter. Moreover, the [illegible] and killed before he could finish his prayers. Even the execution was recorded by a guard [illegible] Internet access can watch it.

The fiasco of Saddam's death also detracted from the president Bush declared that [illegible] him the justice he denied to others. The [illegible] like it was kind of a revenge killing. What [illegible] lies between justice and revenge is blurred [illegible] ishment.

On the surface, men like Saddam Hussein [illegible] example of those who deserve to die. Hussein [illegible] killed over just one of the many massacres [illegible]. He started two wars, and slaughtered thousands [illegible] he infamously employed chemical weapons [illegible] Iranians and Iraqi Kurds.

Yet Hussein's death has had unintended consequences. [illegible] despite his atrocious [illegible] execution of the Iraqi government, [illegible] hang heads on more martyrs; no more [illegible] Muslim [illegible] people were inspired [illegible] their own. One murder, in [illegible] and justified, has led to [illegible] deaths.

[illegible] that there is such a concept as [illegible] death. There is a powerful idea – one viscerally [illegible] religions. Japanese kamikaze [illegible] Christians embracing martyrdom [illegible] and Muslim suicide [illegible] this same feeling. We see it [illegible] this fate willing to [illegible] all that [illegible] alive while in [illegible] prison was that [illegible] a meaningless [illegible] faces on the mean[illegible] the living use/ube to [illegible] ideologies that aim [illegible] fanaticism and [illegible] of human life. [illegible] killing him in this fashion, they "turned him into a martyr."

Killing Saddam on this holiday seems [illegible]. Imagine carrying out a major political [illegible] Christian nation on Easter. Moreover, the [illegible] and killed before he could finish his prayers. Even the execution was recorded by a guard [illegible] Internet access can watch it.

The fiasco of Saddam's death also detracted from the president Bush declared that [illegible] him the justice he denied to others. The [illegible] like it was kind of a revenge killing. What [illegible] lies between justice and revenge is blurred [illegible] ishment.

On the surface, men like Saddam Hussein [illegible] example of those who deserve to die. Hussein [illegible] killed over just one of the many massacres [illegible]. He started two wars, and slaughtered thousands [illegible] he infamously employed chemical weapons [illegible] Iranians and Iraqi Kurds.

Nothing was more telling of the farce the trial had become than the timely sentencing of Saddam on November 5, two days before the mid-term elections in the U.S.

that he was no longer harboring any WMDs, and Saddam had in fact slowed his role as evil tyrant, but that does not excuse him from justice for past crimes. Saddam was a murderous man, and he met the sort of murderous end that he deserved.

It does not trouble me that Saddam was killed for his crimes, but it bothers me terribly that the trial and execution were handled with the same care that an infant shows a bowl of Cheerios. Hanging is a savage way to kill a man, a fact that has made itself even more evident following the beheading of Barzan Ibrahim al-Tikriti, half-brother of Saddam and former chief of Saddam's secret police, when he was hanged on Jan. 15 for the same Dujail killings. The brutality of the killings mimics the state of the country as a whole: falling apart and gasping for air as it drowns in violence.

Now that Saddam and his aids are dead the regime has fallen, and our presence serves only to incite civil war. Here again, the goodhearted goal of our nation does not line up with the means we are using to accomplish it. We want to turn over the security of Iraq to Iraqis, help them to regain control of their nation, but President Bush wants to send in more of our troops.

The fire that has engulfed Baghdad can not be put out by throwing matches at it; we must focus our efforts on teaching Iraqis to use their own manpower and the strength of their desire for peace to extinguish the flames themselves. America created this war, and only the removal of American aggression will bring the end of it.

Adam McGillen is a Collegian columnist

WRITE A LETTER TO THE EDITOR

RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT
(550 WORD LIMIT)

Analyzing the antagonists

Adam McGillen

You had to know it was going to happen. When Saddam Hussein was pulled out of his hole in December of 2003, he knew his fate: his reign in Iraq was over, he became a prisoner in his own country, and his days were numbered. There was no doubt that he was responsible for the atrocities at Dujail, where 148 men and boys were slaughtered for having acted out and raised their voices against the tyrant and his regime. Was the trial a sham? Yes. Was the execution rushed and botched? Yes. Did Saddam Hussein deserve to die, regardless of the ridiculous way in which the Iraqi Tribunal managed proceedings? Yes.

I am not an advocate for the war in Iraq. When September 11th happened, I admit I was confused and wanted revenge, wanted it as fast as possible. When troops went into Afghanistan, I felt they were doing the right thing, seeking out Osama bin Laden. When troops went into Iraq, I recognized that Saddam Hussein was a beacon of evil in the Middle East, but I felt the timing and the massive effort to take him out was disproportionate to the effort of bringing bin Laden to justice.

Saddam Hussein was an evil man, there is no refuting that. His regime deserved to be destroyed. The world should be a better place without him, but the fact is, it is no safer today than it was on September 11th, in fact many would argue it is even more dangerous. This is no, because killing Saddam was wrong, it's because America grew belligerent in the aftermath of 9/11 and President Bush took advantage of this vengeful mentality to push the nation into a poorly timed and exceptionally poorly planned war.

The trial and execution of Saddam Hussein epitomizes the failures of the war in Iraq: an improper and mangled means to an end that had a chance to be good. Had things been handled correctly, with more patience and wisdom, a victory in Iraq could have come without so much bloodshed and money funneled down a drain.

America could have garnered more support from other nations, swept Saddam out of power and truly helped Iraq become a better, more stable place, and in doing so increased our prestige and influence in the Middle East. The same could have been gained in an organized and meticulous trial of Saddam, but that chance was wasted too. A heavy political hind was constantly twiddling away in the background, a judge and several defense lawyers were assassinated, and the outcome of the trial was already decided before the trial even began. Nothing was more telling of the farce the trial had become than the timely sentencing of Saddam on Nov. 5, two days before the mid-term elections in the U.S., where the Republicans needed all the help they could get.

Saddam Hussein was a ruthless dictator, he used chemical weapons on his own people, ruled with an iron fist and mercilessly killed those who opposed him. We now know

Misuse of language

Dan Nicastro

Back in the days of the Republican Congress (as of last summer), there was increasing pressure to make English the national language of the United States. This measure was not only a victory for English-speaking racists, but it also provides a clear example of the influence of political language in American life.

The framers of this bill twisted and warped the English language in order to mask the racist, xenophobic purpose of the legislation, and they were successful in doing so, mostly because Congressmen are tricky.

Most of these kinds of wordplays are so subtle that you wouldn't think twice about them. For example, the debate over the national language turned into a debate about what to actually call the "national language." James Inhofe, the bill's sponsor originally called English the "official language," a phrase which suggests second class citizenship to all non-English speakers. After some debate, he conceded to change the phrase "official language" to the slightly less-offensive "national language," which suggests no real legal repercussions for non-English speakers. The media, not the American people, picked up on all of this. This "clever" use of language does not stop there.

In a Jan. 10 speech to the nation, President Bush called for an escalation to the War in Iraq, as he ordered another 22,000 troops to the country. But he didn't call it an escalation or an increase in American forces. Instead, the 22,000 members of the military headed over (or back over) to Iraq are part of a more ambiguous "troop surge," not to try and end a civil war, but instead to quell "increased insurgent activity." The term "troop surge" has little to no real

> The media has adopted the phrase "troop surge" to describe the redeployment of troops, and it has become a phrase the American public has adopted.

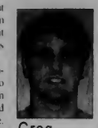
[illegible] sites, the administration [illegible] it while you are walking [illegible] out of your way in the [illegible] through dungeons, sewers [illegible] like you will look at the sign, [illegible] the reason for this delay [illegible] to find a clear exit sign, you [illegible] with the phrase "New [illegible] a fresh start, making [illegible] New this! Well, at least it [illegible] intention to [illegible] make me wet, [illegible].

[illegible] fault [illegible] the widespread [illegible] language and the basic [illegible] of it is part of our culture [illegible] politicians who created [illegible] "[illegible]" [illegible] the [illegible] unashamedly accepting [illegible] and will look at them to the [illegible].

As much as I would like to blame all [illegible] ness on politicians, it's all of us. [illegible] use political language [illegible] serves their own purpose. [illegible] and [illegible] to count on the hard [illegible] of the matter. People [illegible] because it works, and it [illegible] American citizens (and [illegible] don't want to hear [illegible] of the matter. People [illegible] support it if they can live in a [illegible] clear cut options for [illegible] are to either "cut and [illegible] course on where they [illegible] something" is not a hill on [illegible] themselves, but instead, a [illegible] statement [illegible] and [illegible] solutions are much [illegible] darker than those which are [illegible] to carry, and we've become [illegible] that we let the government [illegible] terms in which they are to [illegible] us. There are two options for [illegible] with the problem: either we [illegible] and realize that the truth is not [illegible] easy, or we slowly waste away [illegible] days in a world where our thoughts [illegible] opinions are spoken by a select few [illegible] American political discourse needs an overhaul. It's time to bring in the "New [illegible].

Dan [illegible] is a Collegian columnist

Right never meant easy



Greg Collins

President Bush's recent decision to send 21,500 more American troops to Iraq reveals two salient points about the current political situation. The first is that the majority of the American public has grown increasingly frustrated with the progress made in the country. Second, they are skeptical about the possibility of troop escalation, evidenced by a CNN study revealing that two-thirds of Americans polled do no support President Bush's plan.

It also exposes the limited amount of alternatives facing the White House in combating sectarian violence and strengthening democracy in Iraq. The other major policy proposal, promoted by mainly Democrats, is to withdraw troops, either immediately or through phases. Most serious foreign policy analysts with Middle East expertise acknowledge that doing this is counterproductive. It will allow religious and ethnic strife to exacerbate in an already unstable region, which will allow neighboring countries with strong terrorist connections to infiltrate the area through proxy militias. American lives will be put further into danger if various terrorist organizations are unchecked in such an environment.

Furthermore, it is important to realize that members who make up the insurgent militias are among the most radical of Iraqis and of their religious sects of Islam. In fact, how we perceive the division between different religious ideologies and ethnic factions is shaped significantly by information conveyed through third parties, in this case primarily being media outlets.

The argument that the mainstream media, such as The New York Times, disproportionately emphasizes the religious divide and carnage in Iraq while underreporting its progress has large merit. This is why listening to other perspectives from people who have experienced the goings-on in Iraq firsthand should be strongly considered in order to more accurately assess the extent of the sectarian strife and to determine whether there is hope for Shia.

> The Shia and Sunnis, as well as Kurds, will be able to coexist peacefully.

Sunnis and Kurds to live peacefully with each other.

Last spring, for instance, David Vacchi, the head RTOC officer at UMass-Amherst, gave a presentation emphasizing that most moderate Iraqis identify themselves first as Muslims, then as Iraqis, and thirdly as Sunnis or Shia. This depiction belies the argument that establishing a unified Iraq is unattainable due to the irreconcilable differences among Iraqis of various sects and ethnicities.

Of course the problem is quelling the influence of domestic terrorists and other Muslim insurgents infiltrating Iraq from Iran and Syria. The continual surge of militias from neighboring countries is the foremost conundrum the Bush administration failed to anticipate adequately when outlining a post-war plan for peace in the region. With the benefit of hindsight, I hold President Bush accountable for this. What the current situation in Iraq really reveals is the assumption that one has enough knowledge to completely transform the sociopolitical structures of an entire society. When such a society has deeply complex ethnic, religious and social histories embedded in its past, this assumption is often illusory and is based on the vacuous premise that human beings are omniscient.

Nonetheless, based on observations from Lieutenant Colonel Vacchi and others who have confronted directly the daily interaction among Iraqis, I still believe the Shia and Sunnis, as well as Kurds, will be able to coexist peacefully.

The key to providing conditions for them to live peacefully lies in the ability of American and Iraqi security forces to kill militias already in Iraq and preventing insurgents in neighboring countries from entering the country. Increasing troop numbers, as President Bush plans to do, is not the final solution to solving this problem but it is a step in the right direction.

I would even support sending additional troops to try to secure Iraq's borders. Domestic security and stability is so crucial to making progress. It will provide the conditions under which Iraq's citizenry, government and law enforcement officials can assume more responsibility in maintaining an effective functioning government while bolstering its internal security forces. Additionally, American military personnel readily admit that Iraqis are unable to conduct basic utility operations such as lighting police stations because insurgents continually knock down electrical towers. This problem will not persist if the violence is thwarted.

In the long run, congressmen have proposed various solutions to ensure stability in the region, such as dividing Iraq up by ethnic and religious groups into a federation.

The Bush administration could very well be considering them seriously right now. Realistically, however, these suggestions are in their early stages and need to undergo more intense scrutiny from foreign policy experts and administration officials before implementation. This was the case of the current surge, a tactical change which gathered support from experts, think tanks, and officials for months.

Either way, the recent troop surge is the best of conceived options right now for the Bush administration. Leaving right now would be an ill-conceived decision and would possibly create irreparable conditions and consequences for present and future generations of Americans.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist

Names from the past are winning parents over

New parents are turning back the clock

BY ALYSSA MONTALBANO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

While most University of Massachusetts students hope they won't have to decide on a name for a baby anytime soon, there are a wide array of options for parents-to-be.

Many people name their baby using traditional family names. Others name their baby after their favorite athlete or television star.

In 2006, Aiden and Emma held the top spots as the year's most popular names. Throughout the years, there have been certain baby names that have held on to the Top 10 most popular baby names. Since 1996, the names Emily and Kaitlyn have stayed near the top. Since the 1980's, the boy's names Matthew and Joshua have remained in the Top 10 most popular names.

While the name of a child may seem like an important part of a child's life, Claire Hamilton, associate professor for the UMass School of Education said she has never seen research that links a person's name to their development.

"I've never seen any research that's looked at a kid's name and said if your name is a more popular name, like Sue, that's going to be easier than if your name is Joracio," said Hamilton, who teaches early childhood education.

A new trend seen in 2006 was the comeback of many old fashioned names, especially when it came to girls. Many names from the 1800's have climbed their way up the baby name list. They are now some of the most popular names around.

In 2006, the list of baby names for girls consisted almost solely of old fashioned names. The list included Emma, which found its way to the top of the list, Emily (No.4), Isabella (No.5), Sophia (No.7), Olivia (No.8), and Abigail (No.9). Many of the names that used to be considered unique are now becoming more and more popular.

Hamilton said one minor effect a child's name can have on their early childhood is when they begin to write. She said longer names are more difficult to learn.

"If your name is very long, you have a long name to write when you're learning how to write your name," said Hamilton. "This is with somebody who has an interesting name or different kind of spelling."

It is not a secret that people also name their children after popular television series or movie characters. Many people also name their babies after their favorite athletes. When the television series "Bewitched" was popular for a span of eight years in the 1960's, three new names became popular with it: Samantha, Darren and Tabitha. Samantha is still popular today, being 22nd on the list of 2006 names.

In 2006, the name Addison rose up 57 places to 26th place. This may be due party to the new hit series Grey's Anatomy and one of it's main character's, Addison Shepherd. Also, although the name Emma has been in the top 1,000 most popular names in the United States since the 1880's, in 2002 when Friend's stars Ross and Rachel named their baby Emma, the popularity level rose even more. In 2003,

Emma rose from No. 11 to No. 2. From 2005 until the present, Emma is the No. 1 name for a girl. The name Ashton also became more popular for males after Ashton Kutcher became a star. Also becoming more popular is the name Peyton — the same name as the SuperBowl-bound quarterback of the Colts.

"I think that the names tend to go in cycles, you tend to get them named after movie stars and singers," said Hamilton. "We've got more ethnicity in the names than we did before." The names Julian, Tyler and Zachary are slowing making their ways farther and farther down the list of boy's names. Makayla and Bailey are also making their way down on the girls list.

Some may ask what celebrities themselves are thinking when they named their children.

2006 was definitely a baby booming year in Hollywood. Many couples, including Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie, Britney Spears and Kevin Federline, Katie Holmes and Tom Cruise, Donald and Melania Trump, and Heidi Klum and Seal all had a baby. While Spears and Federline stuck to a more traditional name, Jayden for their son, other celebrities went a bit more unique. Pitt and Jolie named their son Shiloh, while Cruise and Holmes named their daughter Suri, and the Trump's named their son Barron.

Some even more unique names included Dweezil (Frank Zappa), Coco (David and Courtney Arquette), and Jermajesty (Jermaine Jackson).

Some names that are rising up and may be more popular than ever in 2007 are Landon, Brayden, Logan, and Noah for boys, and Addison, Camryn, Charlotte and Chloe for girls.

Alyssa Montalbano is a Collegian Staff writer. She can be reached amontalb@student.umass.edu.

Top 10 Baby Names

	2006 Girls	2006 Boys	1996 Girls	1996 Boys
1.	Emma	Aiden	Emily	Michael
2.	Madison	Jacob	Sarah	Matthew
3.	Ava	Ethan	Ashley	Jacob
4.	Emily	Ryan	Kaitlyn	Christopher
5.	Isabella	Matthew	Jessica	Nicholas
6.	Kaitlyn	Jack	Megan	Joshua
7.	Sophia	Noah	Rachel	Tyler
8.	Olivia	Nicholas	Samantha	Daniel
9.	Abigail	Joshua	Taylor	Jonathan
10.	Hailey	Logan	Brainna	Andrew

	1910 Girls		1910 Boys
1.	Mary	6. Anna	John	6. Charles
2.	Helen	7. Mildred	William	7. George
3.	Margaret	8. Elizabeth	James	8. Edward
4.	Dorothy	9. Alice	Robert	9. Frank
5.	Ruth	10. Ethel	Joseph	10. Henry

Celebrity Baby Names

Baby	Parents
Fifi Trixibelle	Paula Yates and Bob Geldof
Moon Unit	Frank and Gail Zappa
Satchel	Mia Farrow and Woody Allen
Peaches	Paula Yates and Bob Geldof
Tiger Lily Heavenly Hiram	Paula Yates and Michael Hutchence
River	Arlyn and John Phoenix
Dweezil	Frank and Gail Zappa
Brooklyn	Victoria and David Beckham
Phoenix Chi	Mel C and Jimmy Gulzar
Banjo	Patrick and Rachel Griffiths
Cosima	Nigella Lawson
Daisy Boo	Jamie Oliver
Racer, Rebel, Rocket	Robert Rodriguez

UMASS STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
Helping students protect their rights for over 30 years.
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation & Counseling for UMASS Students
Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
Student & Worker Rights, Family & Criminal Law
Call 545-1995 or stop in at 922 Campus Center
Visit our website: www.umass.edu/rso/siso siso@stuaf.umass.edu

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas $5 Each!
Domino's Pizza 413 - 256 - 8911

Do you have a Plan B?
Emergency Contraception (EC) is now available without a prescription at Tapestry Health if you are 18 or older.
EC helps prevent unintended pregnancies up to 5 days after unprotected sex.
Always the Lowest Price
Always Accessible
Always Confidential
Amherst | Athol | Great Barrington | Greenfield | Holyoke | North Adams | Northampton | Pittsfield | Springfield | Westfield WALK INS WELCOME
TAPESTRYhealth CARE WITHIN REACH 800-696-7752 413-586-2016 tapestryhealth.org

OPEN WEDNESDAY, VALENTINE'S DAY 5PM–10PM
Gotem OF JAPAN STEAKHOUSE
FAMOUS FOR CAPTIVATING CUISINE PREPARED AT YOUR TABLE
RT. 116, SUNDERLAND 413-665-3628

Get A Room at
Alpine Commons, Aspen Chase or Sugarloaf Estates Apartments!
1, 2, 3, and 4 Bedroom Apartments!
Move in now or reserve your home for Summer/Fall 2007 Take advantage of our early bird specials, guaranteed housing, washers & dryers in select homes, fitness center, pet friendly, and much more!
Call us today!!
1-866-301-1445
1-866-301-2808

THE UMASS COLLEGIATE READERSHIP PROGRAM
Proudly Funded by The Student Government Association
Pick up your copy of the following publications:
USA TODAY The Boston Globe The Pulse of Boston The New York Times Knowledge Network
Available daily at:
The Campus Center
The Student Union
Franklin Dining Worcester Dining Hampshire Dining
Berkshire Dining
For more information or to view a complete list of participating campuses, visit www.usatodaycollege.com or contact Jim Maghran, Account Manager, 781.939.8510

SGA set for the new year

SGA from page A4

of absentee ballots," Leiblum said. All the voter registration activity resulted in new Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick's two trips to the UMass campus, including a rally before the state elections and attending the Public Higher Education Summit.

Leiblum is also gearing up for a new organization working to broaden the educational coalition beyond UMass' campus for the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM).

A founding convention for PHENOM is tentatively planned for Feb. 14, activities are to include a small lobby day in the statehouse in Boston.

"It is always significant to go to the statehouse," said Mendez. "We will not be portrayed as needy children, like the media usually show us, but as responsible, tax-paying adults."

Mendez says that the two proudest accomplishments of SGA from this previous semester were being able to bring the statewide issue of affordable higher education to the Massachusetts gubernatorial race and also being able to diplomatically deal with the administration and other student organizations on campus.

"A lot of SGA decisions were financial this year, but it has been that way forever," said Leiblum.

The SGA also participated in and invited the UMass community to walk in the Walk for Lights. While walking around campus, the SGA, along with UMass officials and police officers, searched for dimly lit areas, broken street lights and depleted call boxes.

Amber Vaillancourt is a Collegian staff writer. She can be reached at availlan@student.umass.edu.

Cell phone troubles

Schools try to keep phones off the hook

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In an age where technology has spread across today's youth by means of the Internet, MP3 players, and so much more, the time has come when small, scribbled pieces of "cheat sheets" have been replaced by one of the country's most modern tools: cell phones.

Just five years ago, students may have been writing last minute historic dates or vocabulary words on the back of their hand, but today, kids are putting their technological knowledge to use. According to a teacher from a Milwaukee high school, several ninth grade students have been caught cheating using their cell phones.

The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel recently reported that high school students have been using the camera feature on cell phones to photograph tests and send the pictures off to other students who haven't taken the test yet. This has caused teachers to change the tests before every new class and put a restriction on cell phones in school.

Milwaukee public schools aren't alone in this issue. Reports of similar incidents have occurred in Massachusetts. Andrea Keating, assistant principal of Norwell High School, said that students are text messaging other classmates during a test to either send or receive answers. As far as college students go, there seems to be no complaints from a portion of the teachers at the University of Massachusetts. Because many are aware that cheating with cell phones is a major possibility, instructions on many exams warn students: "If you are seen with a cell phone…we will take your exam."

"I cheated on a test my freshman year here," said an one junior at UMass. "I wrote on my arm though. I didn't do anything fancy with my cell phone…too risky."

Meanwhile, at Silver Lake High School in Kingston, students have been caught accessing the Internet from their phones in order to search for an answer to a test.

"We've repealed a ban on cell phones," said Principal Richard Kelley. "Now, we simply require students to turn them off when they get to school."

In order to prevent students cheating with cell phones, officials from different schools in Massachusetts have issued special cell phone policies. At the Galvin Middle School in Wakefield, students are allowed to have a cell phone in their backpacks or lockers, but it must be turned off. If the student is seen making a call, receiving a call, or text messaging — even in the hallways during school hours — the phone will be confiscated.

"It's pretty stupid because everyone has a cell phone now," said eighth grader Dave Ryan. "IPods are banned too but that doesn't stop kids from using them."

"The rule is self-explanatory," said science teacher Bill Walsh. "We realize today, cell phones are helpful tools, especially to these students who need rides after school since they're not driving yet, but it's important to restrict the use of phones during school, for the sake of honesty."

According to the Josephson Institute of Ethics in Los Angeles, 75 percent of 12,000 high school students have admitted to cheating on at least one test in the last year. The survey also listed several "high tech" cheating strategies in which students at schools nationwide have been caught.

The top tricks included: recording answers onto a compact disc, then listening to them during tests with tiny earphones, entering answers into an electric diary, such as a Palm Pilot, sending answers across the room with calculators that communicate with infrared technology and storing math formulas or answers in programmable calculators.

Programmable calculators, such as the popular Texas Instrument devices required for most upper-level high school math classes, have a feature in which the user is able to make notes in letters and in numbers. This way, in math class, students who take advantage of this feature are able to access their notes without looking suspicious to the teacher.

"I know that if I don't have the time to study the night before a math test, I will definitely add in some helpful stuff on my calculator," said one student at a North Shore high school. "No one can tell that you're doing it so it's safe and easy."

Holly Seabury is a Collegian staff writer. She can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu

Travis Misurell, a freshman at Montclair State University, uses a $250 Motorola cell phone during school hours.

SGA rescinds ASM funding

Redirects money towards USSA

BY SAMANTHA M. FRONTIERA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the fall semester came to an end, the Student Government Association at the University of Massachusetts continued to implement changes to better serve the student body.

The SGA passed a motion to rescind the $9,500 that was to go to Associated Students of Massachusetts and will re-allocate $7,500 for dues to the United States Student Organization.

Officials in the statewide student organizing committee attended the assembly for Associated Students of Massachusetts and were unimpressed by the lack of professionalism, organization and executive leaders.

"It was obvious that they were an organization in disarray," said SGA senator Lindsay McCluskey during the meeting on Dec. 15. "We were the only college there. Our money would have basically gone to this one woman and her lawyer."

The United States Student Organization tracks and lobbies federal legislation and policy. USSA will even train students to win concrete victories on their campuses. An example of this would be organizing a budget to prevent major fee increases. USSA would represent students on Capital Hill, and even the Department of Education.

The USSA mission statement states: "By mobilizing and uniting a powerful grass roots force of students all over the country, we build our power and win concrete victories. Educated, organized and united, USSA leads the fight to make education a right, not a privilege."

Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum, urged SGA officials to check out USSA's Web site.

"The hope is that if we rescind the dues from ASM to USSA, they will have more of an impact on campus," said Leiblum.

In the final meeting of Fall semester, the SGA passed a motion to rescind $9,500 intended for the Associated Students of Massachusetts.

UMass was cut a deal this year due to many non-profit contributions to USSA: if there was an increase in fees, UMass would not be locked in for longer than a year. Universities and Colleges join USSA on a year-to-year basis. It will be up to next year's senate to decide whether or not UMass will join USSA.

A resolution was unanimously passed to change the current residential sign in and sign out policy. In most living areas, not including the North Apartments, students are only able to sign in a maximum of four students and are unable to sign them out. In the North Residential Apartments, the four residents are allowed six guests total.

Matt Giacoia, the university policy chair, called the current policy, "inadequate, especially when you might be living with people you don't know."

A new sign-in policy would allow students to sign out guests when they leave the dormitory they were signed into, allowing additional visitors to enter.

Although security sheets are currently equipped with an Hour Out section, security guards are not required to sign guests out.

Eric McGurdy, a campus security guard when having heard of a possible change said that "the only problem would be in Southwest because in some of the buildings there are two levels and two entrances. On the weekends when tower traffic is crazy, there are times when I'm constantly signing people in for 20 minutes. There's no way I would be able to have time to sign them out."

The SGA did however discuss the idea of a computerized sign in policy. This would be not only more dependable but faster. No changes have been officially made yet, but officials are hopeful.

An announcement was also made that the graduation ceremony process is expected to change in May. Commencement Coordinator Gloria Fox traveled and observed several different graduation ceremonies at various universities. Students will be seated by school. There will be two large screens on each side of the center stage. After a student receives his or her diploma, a picture is taken and will appear on the two big screens.

State, UMass exploring new energy conservation methods

BY SUSAN KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the looming threat of global warming, soaring fuel prices, and a larger pollution-conscience population, consumers are searching for energy efficient alternatives, and the University of Massachusetts, has been heavily active in supporting those demands.

The University of Massachusetts Renewable Energy Resource Lab (RERL) constructed the Commonwealth's second largest turbine in 1994. However, the 250 kW turbine is currently standing unused, according to Jim Manwell, the RERL director.

In addition to exploring wind power, UMass is working hard and pouring over $26 million a year into conservation efforts.

"We are doing a lot," said Robert Francis, Associate Vice Chancellor of Facilities and Campus Planning. "There has already been improvement and we look forward to more improvement in the future."

Throughout the entire campus, steam lines have been repaired, buildings have been fixed to ensure heat retainment, and energy-guzzling machines have been replaced with more efficient ones. According to Francis, space has increased over the past year by three percent with the introduction of the North Residential Area. Despite the increase, there have been substantial decreases in energy use: the use of steam is down 24 percent, and electricity is down a total of 9 percent.

The Whitmore Administration Building uses 50 percent less electricity than a year ago. The decrease is created by the installation of variable frequency drives on cooling fans, though the building is at full capacity, fan speeds are able to be run at 80 percent of their total power, leaving the building comfortable, and creating a sizeable reduction in electricity.

The largest energy decrease is seen in water consumption, with the addition of low flow devices and improved usage. The University is using 40 percent less water than a year ago. This is largely due to the new Reclaimed Water Treatment Plant (RWTP). The RWTP takes treated wastewater from the Town of Amherst and uses it in boilers to create steam and provide condenser water for coolers. The process could potentially save $400,000 in fuel and water costs as well as reclaim 9 million cubic feet of water, according to Francis.

The Massachusetts Maritime Academy recently erected a wind turbine in Bourne, Mass.

Photovoltaic, or solar energy, is currently being used to power the lights in the Mullins Center parking lot. Solar energy is hard to use in larger structures because, Francis said, it is expensive to install the panels and is difficult to generate large amounts of electricity. However, it makes sense in a parking lot because it does not require installing power lines and connecting them to every light, making solar power more cost effective.

Education and awareness is another way UMass is working to conserve energy. Last year, MassPIRG held the "Residential Hall Energy Competition," which encouraged students to save as much energy as possible during a three-week period by shutting off lights and computers when not in use, taking shorter showers and not leaving the water running. Suggestions are also included on the Housing and Residence Life Web site. The Web site also includes energy facts, it states that a computer left on 24 hours a day costs over $65 and releases up to 1,500 pounds of CO2 into the air.

In October, UMass was awarded the Massachusetts Environment Purchasing and Sustainability Award.

The award was in recognition of

See ENERGY on page A10

whosyourpadre.com

Welcome Back Students
From The Amherst Brewing Company
Great Food
Nice People
Award Winning Beer
Join us for Jazz Mondays and Mt. Snow Promo Wednesdays
Mt. Snow Promo only in Feb/March 2006
Upstairs Lounge & Game Room: Pool, Ping Pong, Foosball, Darts & Big Screen TV
24 North Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002
www.amherstbrewing.com
Get more information about our menu and calendar of events at amherstbrewing.com.
Design By Intangibleinc.com

Adult video store divides Northampton citizens

Local couple sounds off against store

By Kevin Foley
Collegian Staff

Sex...it grabs your attention, right? That's why CBS's Steve Kroft reported in 2004 that pornography is now a $10 billion industry.

Porn is all over the Internet, but what would you do if you found out it's moving in next door? Can porn ruin a community? Some citizens of Northampton believe it will.

In December, the Northampton Planning Board approved a plan by Capital Video Corp., a Rhode Island-based adult chain store, to open a 6,000 square foot adult store at 135 King Street in Northampton.

Adam Cohen, who started www.nopornnorthampton.org along with his wife Sandi Reiter, is trying to educate residents of Northampton about the dangers of porn in communities.

"We want to see less porn sold and consumed," Cohen said.

Cohen and Reiter's Web site offers evidence that explains why porn is harmful. The Web site has a feature called the "Anti-Pornographer's Bookshelf" that offers links to texts that explain the female oppression in porn.

Kevin Foley/Collegian

Adam Cohen and his wife, Sandi Reiter, founders of nopornnorthampton.org, believe the proposed porn shop will terminate the vista of the leafy residential area.

The "Bookshelf" also links to a CNN story about country singer Sara Evans and her recently filed divorce papers that cite her husband's actions of adultery and porn watching as reasons of divorce.

Talk Back Northampton is a blog that was started in response to www.nopornnorthampton.org. The blog was created to fight against censorship in Northampton.

Talk Back Northampton offers material that counters many of the points that are offered on the "Anti-Pornographer's Bookshelf."

Some of the information provided is from a feminist group called "Feminists for Free Speech." According to the Feminists for Free Speech report, the majority of people who buy porn are women.

"That's just not true," Cohen said. "I got on the Internet and found a lot of research telling exactly the opposite of that."

With all of the seemingly contradictory evidence displayed in the debate over pornography, both sides of the argument expressed different opinions.

"There is not a control to this experiment," Cohen said. "It's the real world, it's sloppy. What we're asking people to do is not use common sense. Bottom line, [porn] is oppressive to women."

Cohen focuses more on the harmful effects on porn in his arguments, but he also says that Capital Video is a company that isn't consistent with the rest of the locally owned shops in town.

"If it weren't for the censorship issue, everyone would agree that they don't want this store moving in," Cohen said. "It's a large chain store that's not locally owned."

"Oh My" and "Pride and Joy" are two other shops in Northampton that sell pornographic material.

Carol Gesell, the owner of "Oh My" told the Boston Globe that the movies that she sells are probably similar to the ones that Capital Video will sell.

Gesell's store also sells oils, harnesses and DVD guides to domination according to the September Boston Globe report.

Teri Anderson, Economic Director of Northampton, says that despite the similarities between the two stores, there are concerns about the effects the large chain store may bring.

"There will be more traffic and it's more noticeable and visible to the town," Anderson said.

Cohen wants people to know the dangers of porn so they can be educated about how Capital Video Corp. might affect their town.

"When you're invested in a community, your interest in this thing soars," Cohen said. "I don't want to feel afraid to walk around my neighborhood."

Kevin Foley is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at kfoley@student.umass.edu.

New wind project put on hold

ENERGY from page A9

water conservation initiatives, purchasing programs for locally grown produce and seafood from sustainable sources and environmentally friendly cleaning practices.

Massachusetts, along with about 15 other states, is offering tax incentives for residents who install renewable energy sources, such as solar or wind power, in their homes. Residents are qualified to receive up to $1,000 in income tax credit, according to the Massachusetts Division of Energy Resources Web site. Also, the sale of equipment directly relating to any solar, wind or heat pump system, which will be used to as the primary power system in a resident's home, is exempt from sales tax.

Tax incentives are just one of the ways the state is trying to do its part to conserve energy. Wind power has become an attractive form of renewable energy because of the windy coastline in the east and the exposed hills and mountain ridges of western and central Massachusetts.

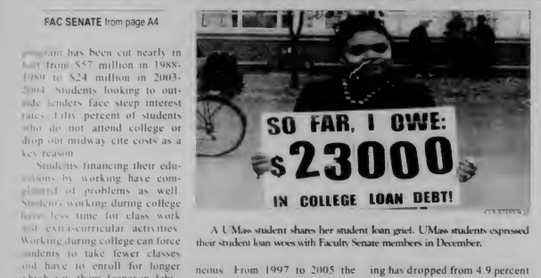
The Nantucket Sound project, a controversial proposal from Cape Wind to construct 130,417-foot turbines on Horseshoe Shoal, 13 miles off the coast, could potentially produce 420 megawatts of energy, enough energy to provide electricity to three quarters of the Cape and Islands, according to Cape Wind officials. Lawmakers have remained divided on the issue, due to navigational and ecological issues. Currently, the United States Coast Guard and Department of Defense have been given authority to determine if the planned construction would interfere with radar systems.

The largest alternative energy project for the Greater Boston area is the 600 kilowatt wind turbine located in Hull. Since its first day of operation on Dec. 17, 2001, the town has saved approximately enough money to cover the cost of streetlights for the town, or about $50,000 a year. The 150-foot tall turbine, the largest commercial wind turbine on the east coast, is able to generate 1.5 million kilowatt-hours per year.

Susan King is a Collegian Staff writer. She can be reached at sking@student.umass.edu.

Student Trustee illustrates student loan woes

FAC SENATE from page A4



Collegian

A UMass student shares her student loan grief. UMass students expressed their student loan woes with Faculty Senate members in December.

program has been cut nearly in half from $57 million in 1988-1989 to $24 million in 2003-2004. Students looking to outside lenders face steep interest rates. Fifty percent of students who do not attend college or drop out midway cite costs as a key reason.

Students financing their educations by working have complained of problems as well. Students working during college have less time for class work and extra-curricular activities. Working during college can force students to take fewer classes and have to enroll for longer which puts them deeper in debt.

The Coalition believes that the crisis is causing the student body to become more homogeneous. From 1997 to 2005 the percent of black students entering UMass has dropped from 6.3 percent to 3.8 percent and the number of Latino student enrolling has dropped from 4.9 percent to 3.5.

ALANA's support programs' budgets have been cut by over 50 percent since 2001. Recruitment and retention programs are disappearing. Upward Bound in the late 1990's, Talent Search this past summer and the entire Department of Outreach in 2003 after only two years.

"We are seeing a lack of fully funded recruitment and retention programs for underrepresented students, specifically underrepresented ALANA students and working-class students," said Mishy Leiblum, Student Trustee for the SGA. "We have dismantled affirmative action, and, at the same time, we have placed increased emphasis on conventional measures, such as SAT scores and weighted GPAs, which have proven to favor white, upper middle class students."

The Coalition addressed the crisis by creating the Student Bridges program. Student Bridges, a student agency, intends to build reciprocal relationships between UMass students and local communities and to increase access to higher education for underrepresented students. The Coalition also prepared a document and met with Governor Deval Patrick at a higher education summit and presented their concerns to him.

The Governor has expressed support for many of the ideas in it, and at the public meeting, he said that he understood that the problem of public higher education was that there had never been a champion.

"Patrick said, 'Well, you have got one in me now,'" said SGA senator Steven Brewer.

Senator Brewer said that was very encouraging, and looked forward to seeing what Patrick would do with the new year.

Make your mark!
UNH's Graduate Programs in Economics
"I get to work on issues that I really care about, such as the health care industry and Medicare, with a leading expert in the field. I hope that one day my research will make a difference in the lives of millions of people."
—Tim Page '05
M.A. Economics
• Ten-month M.A. program
• World-class faculty
• Dual-Track Ph.D. program: Training in Economics and College Teaching
• Assistantships for both M.A. and Ph.D. students (March 1 deadline)
• Professional career placement
It's your time.
Spend it wisely.
Whittemore School of Business and Economics
University of New Hampshire
(603) 862-1367 wsbe.grad@unh.edu
www.wsbe.unh.edu/economics

UM scientist's program spurning hackers the people waiting to gain access to it through programmer mistakes. When a program like a Web page needs memory, the browser requests a certain amount of memory. Many times, the browser will ask for less memory than it actually needs.

HACKERS from page A1

This is where DieHard comes in.

Berger compared memory to houses. Each house only has room for a certain amount of memory. When a program asks for a smaller house than it actually needs, the excess memory overflows into another "house." This creates an override in other houses, or parts of the memory. While this can be a common occurrence, Berger said this causes computers to crash and can allow hackers entry into a system.

This overflow is caused when programs are only allotted a minimal amount of space.

"They make a sports car when what you might want is a truck," Emery said.

These programming mistakes are exactly what hackers look for. They look for the house with important information such as your social security number or IP address and then override it with information of their own. Berger said the way DieHard thwarts these hackers is the same way a homeowner keeps burglars at bay – using different keys and stashing important valuables somewhere safe.

"Every house is the same, the floor plan is the same, the important information is all in the same place and you have keys to the house," said Berger. "That's the symbol of all computers. If you have one key you can rob anyone blind. What DieHard essentially does is to make the key different for every house and stash the valuable in different places."

Kevin Foley/Collegian

While DieHard increases your memory consumption by 50 to 75 percent, it should not make a system visibly slower unless there is a small amount of memory available in the first place. By using this amount of memory DieHard can prevent crashes in a system so programs will continue to run.

However, DieHard in combination with Linux or Solaris can do much more for a computer system. An experimental system being used on the DieHard for Linux, an alternate to Windows, can run three of the same programs simultaneously. This is called the "replicated mode" that can only be used in Solaris or Linux. Windows uses standalone mode, where memory is replaced with the DieHard randomized memory manager.

For example, if a user is running Adobe Photoshop, DieHard will run two other versions of the program. Two of the programs will be ghost programs, and the user will never know they are running. The two ghost programs will measure the security of the program while mimicking all the work the user does in the Photoshop program.

Once one of the programs becomes corrupted by a bug it will crash without the user ever noticing, because the other two programs will remain functional. This is remedy to losing important work when your computer crashes.

Though DieHard can protect any application in Linux or Solaris, for now it can only protect Mozilla Firefox on Windows XP and 2003 systems. The program itself is still undergoing improvements and more programs will be added to Windows operating systems in the future. DieHard doesn't make hacking into a system impossible, but it does lessen the chances.

The software is readily available for all non-commercial use through the Web site downloads of www.diehard-software.org. UMass has the sole copyright for the program. Linux, Solaris and Windows downloads are available though no Unix-based program has been written and therefore DieHard will not work in Macintosh computers.

While computer technology may be advancing the speed of programs, security is still at risk. And Berger's DieHard secures the users houses, and protects its valuables.

Derrick Perkins is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

Length of winter session is debated

JANUARY from page A3

did not have any final examinations, but were home for nearly seven weeks until the start of spring semester.

Meanwhile, Hampshire College students moved back in late August, left campus as early as Dec. 8, and will be able to go home for summer vacation starting May 4. This gives Hampshire students, along with students from many other schools, the advantage of applying for summer jobs and internships before UMass students.

According to a Hampshire official, the five colleges generally begin classes within three days of each other to allow students to attend classes if they decide to use the Five College program.

"Each institution has its reasons for determining the length of the semester, and the number of weeks of class meetings and exams are set by calendar committees and faculties at each institution," said Roberta Stuart, director of central records at Hampshire.

Even though Hampshire College classes end on May 4, our students are allowed to remain on campus as long as necessary to finish their classes and take their final exams," said Stuart. "Our classes ending earlier than UMass' pose very few problems for its students."

There is a possibility that UMass will decide to change the duration of its winter session by either shortening it or moving it back a few weeks. This means that students would move back earlier in late August and January, but move out in early December and May. It would also mean that the schools in the Five College area would have to follow suit.

"I would prefer to have more time at home before the holidays and move back to school in mid-January," said Dillon Hanratty, a junior at UMass. "Winter break shouldn't be shortened, if anything, it should just be moved back."

The Faculty Senate must first vote on the outcome of January Term, and then send the decision to the university administration for approval or rejection. Ernest D. May, secretary for the UMass Faculty Senate told the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Holly Seabury is a Collegian staff writer. She can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu.

State probes UMass dorm construction

UNION from page A1

The Division of Professional Licensure confirmed that several complaints had been filed against Griffin Electric, but would not disclose the specific nature of the complaints. Neither the Massachusetts Attorney General's Office nor the Department of Occupational Safety could be reached for comment.

Questions concerning missing certified payroll records from the construction of the North Residential Area were raised by IBEW Local 7 in November 2006. A letter listing all received Griffin Electric and Griffin Electric Subcontractors as of September 2006 from Project Secretary Rebecca Chiaiura only included Tradesource and LPH Technologies with no mention of either CHP or AH Shepherd.

In addition, according to Gour, Griffin Electric failed to file certified payroll records for several weeks in July and August of 2006, violating a state law requiring contractors and subcontractors to file weekly payroll records with the awarding authority on a public works project. IBEW Local 7 requests for those missing payroll records from the UMass Building Authority were refused, according to a letter sent to the UMass Building Authority by Aaron Krakow, the attorney representing the union.

"The refusal to provide the information and this interference with a legitimate request for information are unlawful," Krakow wrote, threatening later in the letter to file a lawsuit against the UMass Building Authority if the missing payrolls were not immediately furnished to IBEW Local 7.

Gour believes that Griffin Electric may not have had the manpower to properly finish the North Residential Area without bringing in the temporary help companies, violating public works regulations set by the Division of Capital Asset Management (DCAM).

"If [Griffin Electric] is spread too thin then he should not be bidding on all these projects," Gour said. "If he does not have the manpower, that's against the DCAM laws."

Robert Wilson, Assistant Business Manager for IBEW Local 7, does not think that Griffin Electric listed all of the subcontractors eventually used during the construction on the original bid for the project.

"We believe that the qualifications [for the North Residential Area project] would require Griffin Electric to list all of the subcontractors they were planning on using," Wilson said. "If in fact the qualifications asked for that and [Griffin Electric] did not list them, that is a violation."

Richards could not recall specifically which subcontractors were required to be listed on the bid by Griffin Electric, but maintained that Griffin Electric had followed all of the requirements.

"I do believe that any [subcontractors] we were requested to list, we did," he said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian was unable to procure a copy of the original bid by Griffin Electric for the North Residential Area project from the UMass Building Authority.

Patrick J. Callahan, spokesperson for UMass, said the University would wait to see what action state agencies would take regarding the complaints in a statement issued to the media in January.

"The work was all approved by the electrical inspector and has functioned without incident for five months," Patrick said. "The campus is participating in responding to the allegations. The government departments to whom the complaints were made will determine whether there is any substance to the claims."

Derrick Perkins is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

New dual degrees offered at UMass offer other interdisciplinary initiatives including: Technology Management, Innovation and Entrepreneurship, a project-based course focusing in the entrepreneurial process in science and engineering; The Technology Innovation Challenge, an annual business plan competition; and a minor in business for engineering students.

DEGREES from page A3

"All of these collaborations involve the integration of business skills with innovation in science and technology – crucial skills for our graduates' competitiveness in the global economy," Soren Bisgaard, Dean of the Isenberg School, said in the press release.

The fulltime residential M.B.A. program received four Top 10 rankings out of 11 categories in the 2007 Princeton Review annual survey of business schools. Best 282 Business Schools.

The Isenberg School of Management was one of seven schools to receive four or more Top 10 rankings. The other schools were Harvard, Stanford, Dartmouth, NYU, Northwestern and UC Berkeley, according to the SOM Web site.

The Isenberg School of Management ranks second in the category of Best Overall Academic Experience, fourth in the Best Professors category, fifth in the Greatest Opportunity for Women category, and 10th in the Toughest to Get Into category.

Kevin Foley is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at kfoley@student.umass.edu.

myStudentBody.com
It's here when you need it

ARE YOU A FIRST YEAR STUDENT?

Don't forget to complete the MyStudentBody.com by the Monday, March 12 deadline!
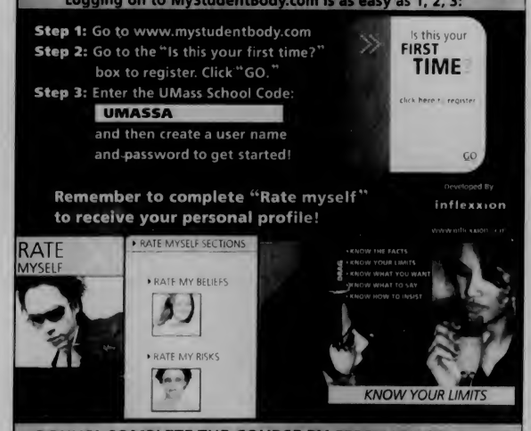
Go to www.umass.edu/uhs to get instructions to log in.

Personalized, interactive website to fit your needs and lifestyle

Logging on to MyStudentBody.com is as easy as 1, 2, 3:

Step 1: Go to www.mystudentbody.com
Step 2: Go to the "Is this your first time?" box to register. Click "GO."
Step 3: Enter the UMass School Code: UMASSA and then create a user name and password to get started!



BONUS! COMPLETE THE COURSE BY FEBRUARY 23 AND AUTOMATICALLY BE ENTERED TO WIN A PRIZE!!!

PRIZES INCLUDE:
• Flash Drive
• Gift Certificates To Bueno Y Sano
• Movie Passes
• University Store Gift Cards
• And Many More...

MyStudentBody.com was developed with support from the Boston Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism

Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention
University Health Services • Health Education
577-5181 • www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS AMHERST

eastern mountain sports

THE #1 REASON TO SHOP AT EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS®

COLLEGE STUDENTS

Now thru 2.15.07 get

15% OFF everything*

(including sale and clearance items)

STOP BY YOUR LOCAL EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS TODAY Mountain Farms Mall
351 E. Russell St. – Hadley, MA 413-584-3554

*Presentation of a valid college or university student ID and a valid email address is required to receive this discount. Offer valid at Eastern Mountain Sports retail locations only thru 2/18/07. Not valid for purchases at www.ems.com or over the phone. In-stock merchandise only. No rain checks. Discount does not apply to Merrell® products, shipping and handling, repurchase of returned merchandise, product rentals, or gift cards. Offer not available to Eastern Mountain Sports employees. Other limitations and exclusions may apply—visit store for details.

Sales of hybird cars on the rise

MTV from page A4

beginning to see behavioral change. Young people at high schools and colleges around the country are developing innovative solutions to lead our society to a clean energy future."

Climate change is one of the central issues of our generation and young people are rising to the challenge and urging solutions, not rhetoric, to treat our addiction to fossil fuels," said Jessy Tolkan, Campaign Director for the Campus Climate Challenge. "The actions that young people are taking now as part of the Break the Addiction Challenge will lead the way towards comprehensive clean energy policies across the United States."

Through "thinkMTV's" partnership with the Campus Climate Challenge, the Break the Addiction Challenge has played a crucial role in the student climate movement, in only 4 months, nearly 130 new students groups have popped up across the country to join the largest network of students demanding a clean energy revolution.

As part of the Spring Assignment, the Break the Addiction Challenge next asks students to achieve a 100 percent clean energy policy at their schools. This Spring Assignment will reward two schools with $5,000 each to throw an MTV Break the Addiction eco-party to celebrate their success. The year-round challenge culminates with the Final Exam in March, honoring the top high school and college that went the farthest and the fastest to reduce their school's global warming pollution down to zero. The Grand prize winners of the Final Exam will receive an eco-renovation valued at up to $10,000 of their student lounge or other hang out space at their school as well as the chance to be featured in an MTV on-air news segment.

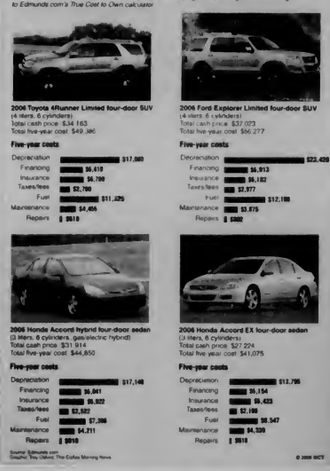
Break the Addiction is "thinkMTV's" 12-step, 12-month campaign that launched on Earth Day 2006 aimed at educating and empowering young people to make daily choices that improve their life and simultaneously curb the impact of global warming.

With the credo "Reflect. Decide. Do", "thinkMTV", in partnership with almost 40 national and international organizations, is attempting to enable young people to get involved in important domestic and international issues such as education, sexual health, discrimination, the environment & natural disasters, and global affairs through long-form documentaries, public service announcements, news segments, think moments, a comprehensive website and interactive forum at think.mtv.com, emerging media platforms, speaking engagements, and grassroots activities, materials and issue guides.

Campus Climate Challenge is a project of 30 leading environmental and social justice organizations throughout the U.S. and Canada that have already worked with more than 400 high schools and colleges to assist them in their efforts to make their schools greener. Campus Climate Challenge will launch a week-long series of action, "Rising to the Climate Challenge: Visions of Our Future," on Jan. 29 in which student activists from more than 540 college and high school campuses will demand that their campus administrations enact clean energy policies as one solution to reducing the emission of greenhouse gases causing global warming.

True cost of owning a car

Here are four examples of the actual five-year cost of buying and operating a car, according to Edmunds.com's True Cost to Own calculator



Patrick blocks UM funding cut

PATRICK from page A3

Amherst campus. Of that, $3.2 million has already been paid out to University employees in retroactive pay."

Retroactive pay is delayed payment for salary increases that were negotiated in a contract but not immediately funded by the state government, said Blaguszewski.

"This is great news for UMass," said Blaguszewski. "It's a major plus for the campus. UMass can avoid difficult financial decisions now."

The restored money is not new money or extra money coming to UMass; this was money that was unexpectedly excised from the budget, according to Blaguszewski.

"The restoration can easily be handled fiscally for this fiscal year," said George Sulzner, a political science professor at UMass. "But given revenue projections for the next fiscal year, these programs may be at risk for continued increases in funding unless other sources of revenue are introduced."

Sulzner said he does not expect there to be any significant backlash over the restoration because the money is going to human services programs that "Patrick championed during the campaign which resulted in his landslide election and mandate to govern."

UMass plans to use the money for "critical facility repair projects," he said. If the money had not been restored the projects would have had to be pushed back, which would have decreased the likelihood of UMass being able to preserve the buildings needing the most repair work.

The projects on campus this year will take place in buildings needing repairs and renovations to fire alarms, safety, leaky roofs and asbestos removal. $3.5 million is planned in repairs to Machmer Hall, $5 million to Goessmann Hall, and $2.5 million to Hasbrouck Hall, said Blaguszewski.

In Machmer Hall, UMass is planning on replacing the antiquated heating and ventilation system. Goessmann Hall will have improvements made to its fire safety. In Hasbrouck, improvements to the fire alarm system and the removal of asbestos, said Blaguszewski.

According to Blaguszewski, there were major budget cuts to UMass three to four years ago. Not only are there maintenance repairs needed to buildings, there is also a need to increase the size of the faculty and staff.

The amount of full time staff members of campus has shrunk by 248 positions since fiscal year 2001 through early retirements and leaving for other reasons, and UMass has not been able to replace the staff that they have lost, he said.

As stated in the June 2004 report on UMass by the Massachusetts Taxpayer Foundation, UMass educates more Massachusetts residents than any other university, but it has sustained 25 percent of state support cuts in the previous three years before the report was released.

In 2004 the state spent more money on prisons and jails than on public higher education, states the Massachusetts Taxpayer Foundation Web site.

Jamie Mason is a Collegian staff writer. She can be reached at jlmason student.umass.edu

Deval Patrick speaks to students at the University of Massachusetts.

INCENSE • SHIRTS & BLOUSES • POSTERS • CHOPSTICKS • BOOKS
HAIR STICKS
GLOVES
THE MERCANTILE IS FULL OF FUN, AFFORDABLE GIFS AND CLOTHES FROM AROUND THE WORLD!
EARRINGS
INCENSE ACTION FIGURES CANDLES
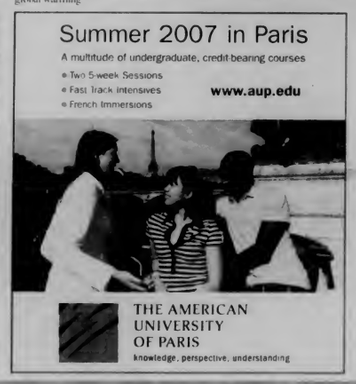
KISSI STONE
CARVED FIGURES
The Mercantile
Northampton 199 MAIN St 584-1205
Amherst Carriage Shops 549-1196
Mon-Fri: 10-9 Sat: 10-6 Sun: 12-5
PEWTER GODDESSES • SILVER RINGS • TAPESTRIES • RUGS • PILLOWS



Man nabbed in sting

SEX STING from page A3

was looking for a college student for a fee," said Archbald.

A UMPD detective responded to an ad on Craigslist.org, a site that offers free online classifieds and forums in 450 cities. Posing as a college student, the detective setup a specific time and place for Schulthess to meet. When Schulthess arrived in Amherst the following day to engage in sexual activity, he was met by UMPD officers and arrested around 1 p.m., said Archbald.

Archbald said a college-aged male employee of the UMPD stood in at the location and confirmed the identity of Schulthess before his arrest.

"If they're targeting our students we know it's important to intervene to protect the students," said Archbald. "Meeting with a complete stranger in that situation, aside from all the transmitted diseases, it's pretty risky behavior."

While the UMass police department has been cracking down on online sex solicitors searching for college students, this is the first arrest in several months.

"Hopefully the word is getting out," he said. "We did have a flurry of these during the fall semester and in the spring. They seemed to have lessened somewhat. It takes the officer's initiative to spend the time searching the sites and watching for the solicitations."

Typically in a sex sting operation, said Archbald, the detective provides a meeting place for the solicitor.

"We know what the person will be wearing and what they'll be driving," he said. "And there's a name that is given, so that the person identifies themselves by name. And that's the key that we're most certain that we have the suspect."

Calls to Schulthess' home went unanswered.

Over 1,800 riot after UMass loss

RIOTS from page A1

cers were at the scene," said Ed Blaguszewski, Director of News and Information at UMass. The officers used pepper spray, sting balls, flash bangs, and smoke to deal with the crowd.

"I'm outraged and terribly disappointed in the students involved in this disturbance," said Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano. "Whether they were active participants, urging on lawbreakers, or being bystanders, they in some way contributed to what transpired."

Bottles, cans, rocks, trash cans and bicycles were thrown at the police officers, small fires were set, and more than 100 windows were broken along the Southwest plaza, said Blaguszewski.

"These assaults resulted in two officers being injured at the scene and many more now reporting substantial bruising," read a public safety alert released by the UMPD.

UMass Police Chief Barbara O'Connor, was nearly hit by a "one gallon container, believed to be water," according to the public safety alert. The projectile was reportedly dropped from an upper window in the John Quincy Adams tower.

"This container landed within a few feet of the Chief of Police. Had this container hit its target severe injury and possibly death would be the expected outcome," read the report.

The 11 arrests made immediately following the game included one non-UMass student. The charges against these individuals included rioting, disorderly conduct, failure to disperse, malicious destruction of property, assault with a dangerous weapon, possession of illegal substances, and mistreatment/interference with a police horse/dog.

"Alcohol and substance abuse played a significant role in these events," read the UMPD safety alert.

Of the 11 students initially arrested, five were expelled from the University immediately, one was suspended for a minimum of one year, two received deferred suspensions, and one received probation, according to the UMass News and Information Office.

"These disciplinary measures send a clear message that the University will not tolerate such violent and egregious behavior," said Blaguszewski. "Meanwhile, the UMass Police and the Dean of Students Office will continue to gather and review evidence that may lead to the discipline of additional students."

Gargano, who attended the football game in Chattanooga the night of the riot, said students who encouraged the illegal behavior through cheering are also responsible.

"Many students engaged in rock throwing and uncivil acts that led to the destruction of property and injury," said Gargano. "Many others stood and cheered on their peers and they are equally culpable and share responsibility for this incident."

Opinions varied among students. Some agreed with the disciplinary actions taken against arrested students, while others felt the University was too harsh.

"Students are just trying to have fun, and yeah, it's wrong, but the cops are out to get anyone they can," said junior Nicole Tkacik. "It's a sticky situation, because there are the students who just tag along, but then there are the real troublemakers, the window-breakers and whatnot."

Sophomore Dennis Scott said punishment of some sort is inevitable.

"I think people have to be responsible for what happened," said Scott. "If it went unpunished, then how would that look? How do you arrest the whole student body?"

Another student thinks the police are just trying to make examples of the students, and that it is unfair to only arrest some of the individuals involved.

"It's not fair every student that was destructive deserves to face punishment, but obviously it is impossible and out of the police's control," said freshman Shaina Jackson. "The cops were more or less trying to make examples out of people, it seemed. There was no possible way every single person doing something wrong could have been caught."

Since the riot, the UMPD has conducted a detailed investigation into participants involved in the riot, said Blaguszewski. He said police are using video taken by university cameras and students to identify rioters.

The UMPD also posted photos on their Web site, with the caption, "If you recognize anyone from the following images or have information about the Southwest disturbance, please contact the University Police."

"It's important to emphasize that the great majority of UMass Amherst students had no involvement in this riot, and in fact some stepped forward to assist the police in their investigation," said Gargano. "I want to thank them for their help and their support of the campus community."

The UMPD plans to conclude the investigation in the coming weeks, and to file charges against additional students.

The estimated cost to repair the damage – including property damage, labor, and materials – exceeds $100,000, according to the UMass News and Information Office.

While the damage creating controversy on the UMass campus is mostly property destruction and personal injury, Gargano believes that the real damage is to the University's reputation.

"The unfortunate, but unavoidable truth is that when UMass Amherst students are arrested for behavior that is destructive to people and property, the public tends to associate every student at the University with such reckless acts," said Gargano.

He argued that the reputation associated with UMass as a result of such destructive behavior is a detriment to all students, from seniors entering the workforce or underclassmen seeking internships and summer employment.

"It makes us all look out of control," said Tkacik. "Everyone who sees it only sees the riots, and they don't see any other things that the students do here."

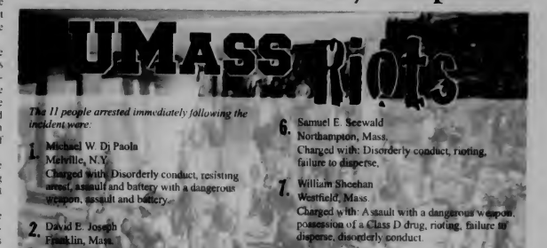
Tkacik said this type of behavior is expected at UMass. She said all it takes is some students who initiate the behavior, and some students who are easily persuaded to riot.

"Students gathering and cheering is acceptable and shows UMass pride, but once they started becoming destructive, the riot level grew too intense and the behavior was completely uncalled for and ridiculous," said Jackson.

Anna Dalhanitis is a Collegian Staff writer. She can be reached at adalhani a student.umass.edu

According to the UMass News and Information Office, the estimated cost to repair the damage – including property damage, labor, and materials – exceeds $100,000.

Police use videos posted on YouTube to identify suspects



The 11 people arrested immediately following the incident were:

1. Michael W. Di Paola
Melville, N.Y.
Charged with: Disorderly conduct, resisting arrest, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, assault and battery.

2. David E. Joseph
Franklin, Mass.
Charged with: Disorderly conduct, rioting, failure to disperse, possession of liquor by a person under 21.

3. Jeremiah Drummey
Norwood, Mass.
Charged with: Disorderly conduct, rioting, failure to disperse.

4. Michael Cevoli
Brunswick, N.J.
Charged with: Disorderly conduct, rioting, failure to disperse, mistreatment/interference with a police horse/dog.

5. Kelsey Okuda
Paikou, Hawaii
Charged with: Rioting, failure to disperse.

6. Samuel E. Seewald
Northampton, Mass.
Charged with: Disorderly conduct, rioting, failure to disperse.

7. William Sheehan
Westfield, Mass.
Charged with: Assault with a dangerous weapon, possession of a Class D drug, rioting, failure to disperse, disorderly conduct.

8. Clinton Wilkerson
Dighton, Mass.
Charged with: Disorderly conduct, malicious destruction of property over $250.

9. Yves Paul
Cambridge, Mass.
Charged with: Rioting, failure to disperse.

10. Brandon R. Donovan
Buffalo, N.Y.
Charged with: disorderly conduct.

11. Jeffrey Bowe
Belchertown, Mass.
Charged with: disorderly conduct, breaking and entering a building in the nighttime for a felony.

Of these 11, Jeffrey Bowe is not a University of Massachusetts student.

POLICE from page A1

currently reviewing those cases, said Archbald.

The riot took place following the UMass football team's 28-17 loss to Appalachian State in the Division I National Championship in Chattanooga, Tenn. According to a police report, more than 1,800 students gathered onto the plaza of the Southwest residential area shortly after the game concluded around 11:10 p.m.

As police tried to control the mass of people, "many projectiles, including rocks, bottles, full beer cans, trash cans and other objects were intentionally thrown at police," states the report.

Eleven people were arrested, 10 of which were students, and five of those students were expelled from the University. Two officers were injured during the riot and several others reported bruising afterwards.

The report also stated a "projectile identified to be a one gallon container of liquid, believed to be water, was dropped from an upper floor of JQA on the west side of the quad." The projectile reportedly came within feet of hitting UMass Police Chief Barbara O'Connor.

Since that night, the UMPD has been using photos and video to identify more people involved in the riot. A mass e-mail was sent out to all UMass students on Dec. 18 seeking information regarding the riot.

The e-mail included a link to the UMPD's Web site, which posted photos of the riot. Below the photos read the caption, "If you recognize anyone from the following images or have information about the Southwest disturbance, please contact the University Police."

Archbald said many students came forward to police with photos and videos. He said students took photos using their cell phones and later handed the photos over to police.

"I think there is a pretty good sized contingent of students out there who are very upset about the damage that was done that night," said Archbald.

Students also copied photos from Facebook.com and MySpace.com and offered those up to police, said Archbald.

Last summer, 325 new security cameras were placed around campus and in all residence halls Archbald said video from those cameras, along with student interviews, have helped in the investigation.

He said the large size of the Southwest area of campus, coupled with the amount of people involved, forced police to review video footage in the month following the riot.

"They've been a valuable tool for us in this particular investigation, because we only made the 10 arrests that night, that's all we identified," he said. "The footage that we've been able to take in terms of tracking a particular suspect from one area of Southwest to another, we've been using all the technological resources we have at our disposal."

Although Archbald said the investigation has been successful so far, he noted that it put a strain on the UMass Police Department during the normally easygoing month of January.

"It's really drained our resources," he said. "In a normally quiet January, we have been working extremely hard."

During the riot, sections of the campus were damaged. Over 100 windows were broken, and the University had to account for roughly $100,000 in damage. A dumpster was thrown into bushes, rocks and chairs were thrown at windows and the area was littered with garbage.

"There's no doubt in my mind that the vast majority of students here value their education, and take pride in the University, and they see the damage that's devaluing their diploma," said Archbald. "Taking pride in damaging something that many people are working towards building up is a phenomenon that I can't understand."

The use of cameras to catch suspects has been a common method of investigation in the past, said Archbald, but this case required it more than ever. He said the use of technology is prevalent around the country.

"Whether it's at the mall or the bank, or a public way in a downtown city, quite a bit is recorded now," said Archbald. "We're just a microcosm of what is happening nationally, where technology is helping law enforcement in many ways."

Eric Athas is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at editor@dailycollegian.com

(Go to www.dailycollegian.com for video of the riot and more photos)

The student rioters caused substantial damage felt throughout the Southwest campus.

Tired of the Dorms?

IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE

Lincoln Real Estate

25 N. Pleasant St.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2006

GO TO www.daily-collegian.com FOR MORE RIOT PHOTOS

This fur collar wants her mother.

Baby foxes are playful, social animals who bond with their family members. But on "fur farms" they know only bare cages and a painful death. Over 85% are killed just for collars and other fur accessories.

Help stop this! Don't buy fur.

CFAS!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

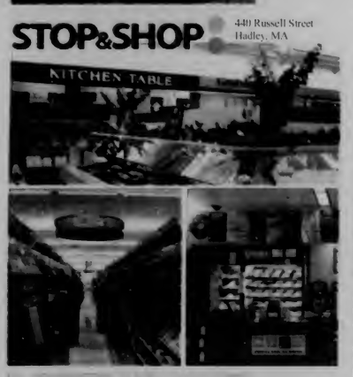
THE CAMPUS SCENE

A WEEKLY LOOK AT THE UNIVERSITY LIFESTYLE

Grocery Stories

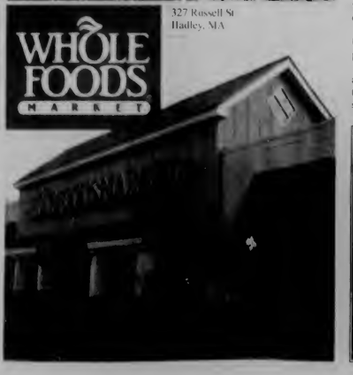
A look at grocery store options available to UMass Amherst students

175 University Dr.
Amherst, MA



STOP&SHOP

440 Russell Street
Hadley, MA



375 Russell Street
Hadley, MA

327 Russell St
Hadley, MA

By Dan Terk
Collegian Staff

The weekend is over and the only thing lower than my energy and my motivation to do work is my food supply. The worriment of upcoming exams, homework assignments, and if Grey's is new this week, fade to the back of my mind and one thought overpowers everything else: What in the world am I going to eat?

Work gets put on hold. Plans get changed. To the grocery store we go.

As I pull out of my conveniently located house directly onto Route 9, I see the next half mile of commercialism and another, maybe more important, question arises: where do I get this food?

My four choices resemble an election ballot: there is Big Y and Stop and Shop, the two heavy weights, and Whole Foods and Trader Joe's, the "earthy crunchy" candidates.

Convenience is something of an issue. Big Y is closest, but I dread that parking lot. Stop and Shop is pretty easy to get to but annoying to get out of. Trader Joe's and Whole Foods are a bit more of a drive and you may hit Target or Wal-Mart traffic respectively.

With more concerns than just convenience, however, I undertook the mission to find out which grocery store is the best for me and my fellow UMassers. I found that each store has it strengths and its weaknesses but no two stores are alike. Here is my report:

All four of the supermarkets contribute to the community at large by making donations to local charities, helping with fundraisers and taking part in university events. But Big Y is the only store that can be deemed a truly "local" store.

Big Y was founded just down the road in Chicopee. University of Massachusetts sports décor is on the walls and a poster advertises the Big Y scholarship.

Leonor Salvador, the Stores Sales Manager, told me about many different ways that this Big Y caters to students. The Big Y card allows customers to buy items at the sale price and win Big Y Coins.

When a customer checks out they can "play the game to get more coins and the more they spends the more coins they get," explained Salvador. The coins act like coupons for store items.

Jon Dasilva, a freshman at UMass, said the reason he shops at Big Y is "because you get to gamble when you pay…and I feel like Stop and Shop cost more."

Dasilva and his roommate, Matt Fourcere, a junior, live on Route 9 and both agreed that Big Y was the most convenient and had the best-priced items, but "you have to buy the Big Y brand" said Fourcere.

Why else should a student shop at Big Y besides the possibility of winning round, shinny, plastic discs? Similar to Whole Foods and Stop and Shop there is a large prepared food section at Big Y.

The fact that both Big Y and Whole Foods accept the Off Campus Meal Plan (OCMP) sets these stores apart from the other two. Yet only prepared foods can be purchased with OCMP at Big Y while everything is fair game at Whole Foods except for beer, wine, and gift cards.

"[Whole Foods] has better food; only if it had better prices…I would rather eat [their food]," said junior Jim Cullen while browsing for produce in Big Y.

Cullen boiled down a common half-truth about Whole Foods; good food and high prices.

This is a concern that Ann Walsh-Sullivan, the Marketing Team Leader at Whole Foods understands, which is why she told me about Whole Foods' strict standards.

"Our store is like no other…nothing is artificial," said Walsh-Sullivan. "No one else can make that claim."

And are the prices really that high? Yes and no. You will end up spending more money if you do not shop smart, a must at Whole Foods. You can pay over $20 for a pound of cheese, but there is also some for $4 a pound.

The Whole Food's in-house brand, 365, is an excellent value for natural or organic food while still costing about the same as their counterparts in other stores.

Lily Knowlton is a nutrition major at UMass, a patron of Whole Foods, and a self-proclaimed foodie.

They have the best selection of organic and natural food of any of the stores, especially the produce and dairy," said Knowlton. "The stuff you buy at Whole Foods isn't full of junk, the majority of the products are pretty clean."

Without considering the prices, Whole Foods is to a food-lover as Disney is to a young child – the happiest place on earth. The store has a beautiful seafood counter, an array of snack dispensers lining one corner, and a desert counter full of deliciousness.

But with some odd items it presents an issue, like what does one do with a fresh emu egg? Well to be honest I have no idea, but I bet the in-store cooking classes can help you figure that out. Beer and wine classes are also offered.

It should be noted that Whole Foods is the only store to carry beer and wine, with a huge selection for anyone's taste and wallet.

The other "earthy crunchy" store just up the road from Whole Foods is Trader Joe's. The smallest of the four stores, Trader Joe's seems to be an enigma in the minds of the students.

This is not something that Greg Glei, the store's "Captain" and Chris Massaro, a "Merchant," are worried about.

"I notice that everyday you meet someone in for the first time" said Massaro, who noted that most of the time it is a friend that brought that person in.

The goal of each Trader Joe's is to be the local grocery store and to be the "first place people shop," explained Glei.

With the aisles boasting names like "UMass Ave." and "Amherst Lane" Trader Joe's really would not fit in anywhere else. Now this is all well and good, but the aisle's name is meaningless if the aisle's food is no good.

Trader Joe's serves the students in many different ways. Firstly is the price; Trader Joe's never has sales. The prices are as low as possible at all times, according to Glei and Massaro.

About 80 percent of the items in the store are Trader Joe's Brand. This allows the company to deal directly with the manufactures and producers to get the best food at the best prices.

"We go all over the world to find these great foods," said Massaro. He went on to explain that if they cannot get a good quality item at a low price then they will not carry it. This however can be problematic because they may not have every item on your list.

Stressed out college students will be able to find the perfect meals though; some frozen and some dry, all inexpensive and easy to make in a microwave or with boiling water.

The options range from soup bowls full of veggies and frozen pizza, to burritos and eggplant parmesan.

Without sales, big red BOGO signs, and a Trader Joe's card hanging from my keychain, it does feel like the local market from a time long gone.

Unfortunately the sacrifice for the small store feel is that Trader Joe's lacks a meat, deli, or seafood counter. Fresh meat and deli are all pre-packed and a large variety of college-student-priced seafood can be found in the freezer case.

This is quite a difference from the final store on the list: Stop and Shop, or rather Super Stop and Shop. The Stop and Shop produce section alone seems to be as large as all of Trader Joe's.

If Trader Joe's is Amherst College, then Stop and Shop is UMass. It has everything and anything you could need under one roof.

In addition to the basic grocery store department, Stop and Shop also has a natural and organic food section, an in-store bank (as does Big Y), a pharmacy, a large selection of home goods and toys, a Dunkin' Donuts, a Staples office supply aisle, a dollar-a-day DVD vending machine, and several self-checkout kiosks.

Store manager Gary Denno explained that these features are perfect for students who are on the go and can do most of their shopping in one stop. Stop and Shop also reaches out to the students by supplying some items for the first year student.

"It is a real successful program to let them know who we are and welcome them into the community," said Denno.

I spoke with Robert Keen, a Stop and Shop spokesman, about the ownership of Stop and Shop. He said a Dutch company called Ahold owns it and explained that they are considered local stores. All the stores are locally operated; local people work in the stores and make decisions about the food that is carried.

"[Stop and Shop] has origins in Somerville, the company was born in Mass," said Keen. "And it is one of the top two employers in Massachusetts."

Stop and Shop also has a card that is needed to get items at sale price and, as mentioned before, does not except OCMP. The store does, however, house a large prepared food section with both hot and cold food including Boston Market items and an olive bar.

"There are only two places to shop and Big Y is pretty ghetto," said Matt Lalli, a junior at UMass who shops at the Stop and Shop. Lalli was not familiar with Whole Foods and does not think Trader Joe's would have everything on his list.

Good food shopping decisions should be like a good democracy. A good democracy is built on informed citizens and good food shopping decisions are based on informed consumers.

Now I am not saying you need to drop your Whole Food routine and make a Big switch, maybe just Trade yours in for one trip and try Stopping and Shopping at a different store, maybe you will be surprised by what you find. I know I was.

Comparing Prices
at your local grocery stores

	Trader Joe's	Stop & Shop	Big Y	Whole Foods
Orange Juice	$1.99	$2.99	$1.49	$3.89
Milk	$2.99	$3.79	$3.99	$2.99
Eggs	$1.29	$1.99	$2.67	$3.29
Block Cheese	$2.68	$2.93	$2.69	$2.49
5 Yogurt	$3.45	$3.75	$5.00	$3.45
Ground Beef	$1.99	$3.79	$3.79	$4.29
Chicken Breast	$2.99	$3.99	$4.90	$6.29
Bread	$2.49	$2.29	$1.69	$2.99
Cheerios	$1.99	$3.79	$2.29	$2.99
Oreos	$2.49	$2.69	$2.99	$2.99
Hot Dogs	$3.99	$3.39	$1.49	$3.39
Deli - Ham	$3.99	$6.49	$5.99	$8.99
Deli - Turkey	$5.29	$6.49	$6.49	$8.99
Salsa	$2.29	$1.89	$2.49	$2.99
Tortilla	$1.99	$1.99	$1.99	$1.99
Reg. Chips	$3.69	$1.99	$1.99	$2.99
Ice Cream	$7.78	$4.99	$4.99	$3.99
Pizza	$4.29	$5.99	$5.79	$3.99
Clementines	$5.99	$4.99	$7.98	$5.98
TOTAL	$63.95	$69.21	$70.80	$78.96

Shopping Smart 101: keep these tips in mind as you shop

- Try not to buy something that you can make yourself.
- Check expiration dates.
- Store brands are usually just as good as name brand, especially with spices and medicine.
- Check unit prices to compare items. Sometimes it's more expensive to buy in bulk.
- Plan meals ahead of time. Check the fridge, then make a list.
- Stick to your list – avoid impulse items.
- Don't shop on an empty stomach!
- Two for $5 usually means one for $2.50 as well.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

From the 1970s to the early 2000s Archie Shepp was a professor in the African American Studies department at the University of Massachusetts, where he taught both music and music history for 30 years.

Shepp speaks language of jazz

Retired UMass professor discusses music of today, and jazz of yesterday

By Bradley Farberman
Collegian Staff

In his autobiography, "Live at the Village Vanguard," Vanguard founder Max Gordon describes Professor Archie Shepp as a "professor of jazz at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst" before there is any mention of saxophones or club dates.

"It's an innate quality I've always had," said Archie Shepp, 69, during an interview with the Daily Collegian in December. "I've always enjoyed sharing information with other people. Teaching at the university level was really exciting to me."

Shepp taught at UMass for 30 years beginning in 1971. He taught two classes: "Revolutionary Concepts in African-American Music" and "Black Musician in the Theater."

That's what has become of the music you call Jazz. It's essentially dance music. Jazz is a dead music like Latin is a dead language.

"Revolutionary Concepts" followed the history of African-American instrumental music from its origins in Africa to its current incarnations today.

"So we see John Coltrane as a product of an entire experience that cannot be extrapolated from [Louis] Armstrong," said Shepp. "There is continuity in Black Music which begins in Africa and is still important today when we hear a performer like Branford [Marsalis] or Aretha [Franklin]. All related by a set of circumstances."

Differently Black Musician in the Theater was performance-oriented, with an emphasis on improvisation the blues and songbooks of Charlie Parker and Thelonious Monk, including Parker's "Now's the Time" and Monk's "Straight, No Chaser."

"The idea was to give these students a chance to do what they would do on the bandstand," said Shepp.

Ironically, Shepp himself did not frequent the bandstand during his time at UMass.

"The first 20 years I was here, I made up my mind that music performance would have to take a backseat to teaching," said Shepp. "Most of my performances took place during the summers." When Shepp did miss class, alto saxophonist Marion Brown, who appears on Coltrane's "Ascension" alongside Shepp, often took his place.

But no one took Shepp's place in the studio. Between 1971 and 2001, more than 40 albums were issued under Shepp's name, for labels like Black Saint, Soul Note, Impulse!, and Impulse!, who signed Shepp on Coltrane's recommendation.

"After Coltrane, there was really nothing that happened," said Shepp. "Maybe the avant-garde."

The avant-garde, or "free jazz," has a substantial following in the Pioneer Valley, as evidenced by the response to Glenn Siegel's "Magic Triangle" and "Solos & Duos" concerts, and the ongoing Hermite music series, often staged at the Unitarian Meetinghouse in Amherst.

But this worries Shepp, a pioneer of the music.

"The audience becomes more and more white and middle-class," said Shepp. "Go into a black community, in Chicago, or I was recently in Florida, and people listen less and less to the instruments. Hip-hop, rap, break-dance [music] have four bars, or two bars of a saxophone solo or trumpet solo. That's what has become of the music you call jazz. It's essentially dance music. Jazz is a dead music like Latin is a dead language."

According to Shepp, this phenomenon is due in large part to the fact that many African-American artists no longer live in African-American communities, something that once kept the music fresh, and vital.

"Unfortunately, things changed quite a bit after the 1960s," said Shepp. "Before, Dexter [Gordon] and Dizzy [Gillespie] lived right in Harlem. There was Minton's, and The Apollo. All these places have moved downtown, places where working-class people are not apt to go."

Also worrisome to Shepp is the perpetuation of the term "jazz," a "brand name" that, for many, refers to anything but what drummer Albert "Tootie" Heath calls "American Classical Music," or what Shepp calls "African-American Instrumental Music." "We created this music," said Shepp. "The irony is that everyone is so timid about calling it African-American music."

Shepp is quick to point out, however, that someone like Stan Getz should not be disallowed to play the music because he is white and Jewish.

But Shepp believes in giving credit where credit is due. "If I have heard a Greek chorus singing 'Swing

See SHEPP on page B5

Leibovitz's exhibit makes NYC debut

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Correspondent

It was a cold Thursday afternoon in New York City, and the Brooklyn Museum of Art was pleasantly surprised with the unusual attendance. For a weekday, it was exceptionally packed with people slowly floating through the halls, as if completely entranced by photographs in the highly anticipated exhibit, Annie Leibovitz: A Photographer's Life, 1990-2000. The exhibit, which displayed 197 photographs of celebrities, politicians and family members taken by Leibovitz, attracted a large crowd of students, fans and photographers.

Annie Leibovitz's journey to become one of the most distinguished photographers in the nation began in 1970, when she started working for Rolling Stone magazine, and was made chief photographer only three years later, according to her first book "Annie Leibovitz: Photographs, 1970-1990." Leibovitz lived out the dream of most rock photographers when rock band the Rolling Stones commissioned her to document their world tour in 1975. Some of the most well-recognized and celebrated photos in rock 'n' roll history were shot during that time.

Leibovitz expanded her horizons when she became the first contributing photographer for Vanity Fair in 1983, a place where her camera took a break from rock stars and took on celebrities and politicians. She published five books, created successful ad campaigns for companies such as American Express and Gap and now works for Vogue magazine. The display of the photos at the Brooklyn Museum of Art provided New Yorkers with a summary of Leibovitz's outstanding accomplishments as a photographer throughout her career.

Perhaps the most astonishing aspect of the exhibit is the photographer's choice and the order of the photos presented. A pregnant Demi Moore and a stunning Nicole Kidman share the wall space with Leibovitz's parents, sisters and daughters. Although the settings of the celebrity and family photographs differ, the same grace and beauty are present in both categories of the shots. Such an arrangement of photos takes away from the often assumed "perfection" of celebrities, and places them on the same level as the exhibit's attendees. Placing a photo of her aging father next to a colorful shot of The White Stripes indicates that no boundary exists between Leibovitz's personal and professional lives. The interfusion of the lavish photo of Donald Trump with the simplistic shot of Leibovitz's friend Susan Sontag hints that, perhaps, the relationship of those two lives nurtures the photographer's identity. The camera in her hands allows them to occur simultaneously and flow in and out of each other to contour the life of a passionate artist.

Captivating photos of celebrities and personal shots of her family are not the only aspects of Leibovitz's work that she chose to share at this exhibit. Her personal journeys to places of turmoil and warfare are also on display. Bloody feet trace the massacre of Tutsi schoolchildren in Rwanda and an abandoned, blood-smeared bicycle in Sarajevo allowed viewers to share Leibovitz's eyesight and experience those painful scenes. People had fewer things to say about these photos as opposed to celebrity shots, as if taken by surprise by their authenticity and sincerity.

"I think the realism of her photographs strikes me the most," said exhibit attendee Yelena Kotlyarskaya. "When Leibovitz was young, her parents made her smile in pictures even if she was unhappy. She resented that view and now portrays people as they really are in her work. I think she has a talent for humanizing everyone in her photos and make them timeless and very engrossing," she added.

Indeed, the photographs at the exhibit are difficult to simply gaze at. The details, the lightening and the positions of the individuals require a thorough examination of the photographer's intentions, which become more enthralling with each photo. At times, it seems as if the observation is almost concurrent: the eyes in the picture are viewing the observer as well. Even the candid shots leave little or no room for improvement, while Leibovitz's camera is in charge.

In her book "Annie Leibovitz: Photographs, 1970-1990," she explains: "I no longer believe that there is such a thing as objectivity. Everyone has a point of view. Some people call it style, but what we're really talking about is the guts of a photograph. When you trust your point of view, that's when you start taking pictures."

The Brooklyn Museum of Art welcomed hundreds of visitors to Leibovitz's exhibit over its three months' debut, a turnout that signifies people agree with and fully trust her inventive point of view.

"Annie Leibovitz's Photographer's Life, 1990-2000" will continue its international tour in February. The exhibition will travel to the San Diego Museum of Art, the High Museum of Art, Maison Europeenne de la Photographie in Paris and London's National Portrait Gallery, with additional venues and dates to be announced.

Here, Gwyneth Paltrow and her mother Blythe Danner pose together in one of Leibwitz's famous celebrity portraits.

John Lennon and Yoko Ono, New York City, Dec. 8 1980 in their Rolling Stone cover and the last shot taken of Lennon before his death.

Going home sheds light on new you

By Sydney Towst
Collegian Staff

You can go home again, but it will be different. Maybe it won't be different, but after at least one semester living at college, by the time winter break comes along inevitably you will be. Going home means different things to different people. For some it's simply a place to wash dirty clothes free of charge, but for others it is a refuge from the stresses of college.

Perhaps the best and jointly most awkward part of returning to your parent's house is seeing the people you grew up with. It is the friends from home that remember when your mom cut your hair and you had braces. Returning to the place where everyone knows your name can be a trip.

It is easy to enter this new phase of adulthood and wish to leave the child you were behind you.

UMass is a large enough campus that even if you came from a nearby town you can expand your social horizons beyond your high school circle. It is easy to enter this new phase of adulthood and wish to leave the child you were behind you. It isn't so easy to go home for the holidays and avoid people who want to confront you about the changes you've undergone.

Some changes are small and you are unaware of them until they're directly commented upon. For those out-of-state students the addition of vocabulary words like "wicked" or "jimmy" can draw mockery.

Sometimes the changes are physical. The freshman 15 can cause uncomfortable moments for friends who used to share clothes. Dreadlocks or festively dyed hair might be ignored here at UMass, but cause a commotion at home.

There are those changes that college and the classes they teach intend to bring about. These are alterations in what you believe to be socially acceptable, morally right, and politically worth fighting for. It is tempting to absorb these ideas and debate them to parents or relatives who have their own long held ideas about the world.

College is a safe place to explore what sort of person you are going to be, how you want to present yourself and what you want to believe in. But sometimes the journey can bring you far from where you came and you can get lost along the way.

Going home provides a reality check. Are you moving in the direction you want to? Are you honoring the people you love? Are you remaining loyal to a place and to people who don't fit in with your changing world?

There are friends from childhood that you had hoped to live with after graduation, but somewhere in the past three months or three years, you have lost touch. When you return home for break you meet and the silence is overwhelming. That can hurt, but may be that's just a part of growing up.

There are always those you see only twice a year and inevitably pick up where you left off last summer. Those are the people who are honest with you about the changes you've undergone. They are the reason you go home.

FAC gears up for Spring

UMass offers a lively mix of arts and entertainment

By Matthew Caldwallader
Collegian Staff

With the new semester comes a brand new docket of artistic performances and showcases organized by the University of Massachusetts Amherst Fine Arts Center. Some of the performances sellout rather quickly so be sure to reserve your tickets ahead of time for performances. Here is a quick look at just a few of the events slated over the coming months.

The Fine Arts Center is offering a medley of events during the Spring 2007 semester, starting with the return of Cirque Eloize on Feb. 6 and 7.

February

The Fine Arts Center Concert Hall will play host to a number of visiting performance arts pieces starting in early February with the return of Cirque Eloize to UMass on Feb. 6 and 7. Their new production, entitled "Rain" will make its UMass debut, promising "heart-stopping panache accompanied by an awesome mix of all things magical." The Canadian troupe, often likened to the more glitzy Las Vegas show "Cirque de Soleil," showcases a mixture of acrobatic stunts with music and dance, creating a unique and exhilarating show.

Photographer Kiriko Shirobayashi's project, "Lines, America/2747 miles" will be on display from Feb. 12 to March 12 at the Hampden Gallery. The Hamden Gallery is located next to the Berkshire Dining Commons. The exhibit features photographs of various skylines from all 50 states contrasting geographic and human features from across the nation.

"Desplazimientos," a watercolor painting series by artist Mercedes Taylor will be showcased from Feb. 13 to March 13 in the Augusta Savage Gallery in the New Africa House. Taylor, a native of Argentina and spent 12 years living in Deerfield, Mass., was struck by a sense of loss when she moved back to her original home of in Buenos Aires. Her experience of cultural assimilation in the United States left her feeling homesick in her native land. Taylor parlayed this into a series of abstract watercolor paintings separated into three parts, tension, fusions and connections.

On Thursday, Feb. 15, the genre defying composer/violinist Daniel Bernard Roumain and his 9-piece band The Mission will be performing at Bowker Hall. DBR has been described as "a classical-urban ambassador for the iPod generation" on the Fine Arts Center Web site for his fusion of hip-hop, rock, funk and classical music. His band incorporates elements like an amplified string quartet, drums, bass and a disc jockey to supplement his own performance.

Jazz musician Michael Gregory will make an appearance at the Bezanson Recital Hall on Thursday, Feb 22. "Gregory has that rare combination of virtuosity and versatility, able to play the guitar whiz...then slip easily into hugely commercial cuts," writes Q Magazine of his unique style. According to Rolling Stone, by the age of 21 Gregory was one of the most unique jazz guitarists to surface since the 1960s. The concert will be an experience to remember for both those who know Gregory through recordings such as "Situation X" and "RITD" and those new to his work. Gregory will be joined on stage by percussionist Terri Lynne Carrington and bassist Mark Helias.

Award winning fiddler Natalie MacMaster will perform on Wednesday, Feb. 28 at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. MacMaster is well known for her mastery of Cape Breton fiddle music, which takes its name from a small island off the coast of Nova Scotia where Scottish immigrants brought the tradition of Gaelic fiddling in the late 18th century. MacMaster is also well known for her work touring with artists including Paul Simon, Carlos Santana, Alison Krauss and Luciano Pavarotti. She has also earned numerous awards including multiple "Artist of the Year" honors from the East Coast Music Association and "Fiddler of the Year" from the Canadian Country Music Association.

UMass is always alive with theatrical performances thanks to the UMass Fine Arts Center.

March

The Fine Arts Center Concert Hall will play host to the world renowned Joffrey Ballet on Monday,

See FAC on page B5

Kilpatrick puts on a show at the Paradise

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Staff

The Paradise Lounge in Boston may be small, but with over 200 drunk twenty-something-year-olds, it can surely get loud. So when a couple of guys stand on stage and try to make themselves heard, it can be hard. Pete Kilpatrick took that risk in December and ended up rocking the Lounge.

Kilpatrick, a 23-year-old singer-songwriter, took the trip down from Portland, ME to join Boston's own Chad Perrone in performing in front of a sold-out Paradise Lounge. Kilpatrick and his band took the stage second, after Patrick Thomas, and enjoyed a warm welcome from the Boston crowd.

Acoustic rocker Pete Kilpatrick is touring in support of his new, independent album.

"It was my first time seeing Pete live and it will definitely not be my last. He has amazing stage presence that makes the audience wanting more," said Tanya Taylor, an 18-year-old audience member.

Kilpatrick is currently out touring to promote his new album "Louder Than the Storm." The album is full of love songs.

"I'm inspired by lots of different things. Old girlfriends mostly," said Kilpatrick. "A lot of my songs are about the ocean and being near it because I live in Portland, Maine, right on it."

Krista Perry, a sophomore at UMass Lowell, said, "Pete Kilpatrick's songwriting is vibrant and catchy, and his easygoing nature is apparent through his stage presence during his great shows."

Kilpatrick certainly has the support of the Portland area. In a 2006 poll conducted by the Portland Phoenix, he was rated Best Local Act and Best Pop-Rock Act.

The band is currently unsigned, but it doesn't seem to be hindering their ability to get the word out there.

"It makes it tough to tour far away because it's really expensive to finance a tour on your own," said Kilpatrick. "We play tons of shows without being signed and it really hasn't kept us from doing too much."

Kilpatrick's band is based out of Portland, M.E. and has played with Guster, O.A.R, and Ray Lamontagne among others.

"Acousticrock," said Kilpatrick when asked how he would define his music. His music style is much like Jack Johnson, John Mayer or even Marc Broussard. This is evident by the bands that he has opened for.

"We've played with Guster, O.A.R, Gavin Degraw, Ray Lamontagne, Blues Traveler to name a few," said Kilpatrick.

If you go to Petekilpatrick.com you will be instantly sent to his mySpace.com page. After you listen to the songs, check out the pictures. The first one is of Hanson drummer, Zac Hanson, holding Kilpatrick's album "Yesterday Love."

"I think it helps us get a foot in the door and hopefully people like that will pass the music on to other people that could help us out," said Kilpatrick of the picture.

RISD exhibits the int'l beauty of art

By Amanda Mitchell
Collegian Correspondent

PROVIDENCE, RI

Forty-five galleries spanning three floors and entire centuries of art are housed at the Rhode Island School of Design Museum. The museum contains work from famous artists including Andy Warhol, Monet and Picasso. The wings of the museum are home to entire galleries of modern photography, Egyptian, Greek, Asian, and impressionist art.

RISD's museum is open to the public six days a week, and also holds events for the community such as lectures and musical performances. The museum has been open for nearly 130 years and owns more than 84,000 works of art from across the globe.

The wide range of art contained within the museum walls appears disjointed at first glance. A closer look reveals a natural progression of creativity throughout human existence. Along with the question, "What is art?" the museum's galleries also ask the question, "What happened to art?"

Beginning in February, three galleries will be dedicated to Asian art. Sixty rare Japanese bird-and-flower nature prints will provide a look into the technique and evolution of wood-block printing. Another gallery will display additional Japanese prints along with customary printmaking tools and the uses and purposes for printmaking in the Japanese culture.

Finally, the last featured gallery for the spring semester will again display the bird-and-flower theme in Japanese art by demonstrating its influence on textile patterns.

According to Matt Montgomery, director of marketing at the museum, the decision to display the large print collection was to honor the donor of the collection.

"Abby Aldrich Rockefeller

See RISD on page B7

Write for Arts!
Email arts@dailycollegian.com

LOAD. USE. RELOAD.
OCMP
EASTHAMPTON • BARNEY • NORTHAMPTON
HAVE IT YOUR WAY WITH BIG SAVINGS
FREE 99¢ FREE FREE
99¢ FREE 99¢ FREE

PREMIER MASSACHUSETTS NIGHT CLUB
ARE YOU INTERESTED IN DANCING?
Earn $$$$ for school or fun
Wanted:
Bartenders
Shotgirls
Entertainers
Big $$$ Potential
Earn average $400 a night!
No Experience Necessary
Flexible hours
Positions open immediately
Call for more details!
Anthony's Strip Club
(413)246-0299

Hold Steady's latest arrives

'Boys and Girls in America' debuts new, hopeful sound

By Dave Master
Collegian Staff

With the release of the Hold Steady's third album "Boys and Girls in America," the Hold Steady has rightfully earned the title of "the best band around today." Rob Sheffield from Rolling Stone magazine said, "Damn you Hold Steady! How can any band be this good?" Pitchfork online music review gave the Hold Steady the highest rating this year, a womping 9.4.

The Hold Steady started as an homage bar band. With idols like The Band, the Hold Steady aspired to bring back the "bar band." Their debut, "Almost Killed Me," achieved the bar band mentality with tracks like "The Swish" and "Barfruit Blues." The entire album is laid with bar room scenes, full of bloody and beer-soaked drunks.

The band has humble beginnings, despite their monstrous sound. Tad Kubler, lead guitarist and vocals for the band, said "Me and Craig were just sitting around watching The Last Waltz when Craig said, 'Dude, why aren't there any bands like this anymore? Let's do this from now on.'"

Attending a Hold Steady show is like attending a child's little league game – even if they don't play well, you still cheer like hell. The band smacks smiles onto the faces in the audience while Tad plays shredding guitar solos. The audience cheers and proudly claps for a job well done. Franz Nicolay, piano player, opens a bottle of wine and pumps his fist in the air, making a sacrifice to the Gods of Rock.

The new release "Boys and Girls of America" from The Hold Steady offers hope to disillusioned youth. The former bar band show their true colors while promoting the highly reviewed new album.

"Boys and Girls in America" is one of the most hopeful albums ever. Finn's three archetypical characters, Gideon, Holly, Halleluiah, and Charlemagne, go through obstacles that the modern youth in America experience. They are broken, weak, and ready for something different. Bar rooms and drugged-up shows won't suffice what Holly is looking for.

The album is Craig Finn's interpretation of boys and girls in America. He says, "They have such a sad time together." His message of hope is found hidden underneath all the drunken and high pictures that he paints in the album. The hope comes from an alternative to the hard partying scene. The hope is faith, love, not the emptiness of getting high.

"We are trying to create an atmosphere," Finn said. "The people are having fun. I want people to make it to our shows and then the next time we come around, they're like, 'Note to self: take work off the next day.' 'Cause I know I don't want to go to work after that."

"There's a tiny pce of positivity to that record," Finn said. "That excites me the most just because that's the way I think about things in life. And I'm excited that people are buying into it, because there's so much out there that's so dark and so negative."

When Craig Finn sings, he shapes the words in the air with his hands. He looks like an uncoordinated kid, but he truly becomes the lyrics he sings.

The audience becomes part of the band at a Hold Steady show. Craig sings to the sea of hands as he reaches into the crowd, trying to make ripples into the crowd spreading hope throughout.

"We are trying to create an atmosphere," said Finn. "The people are having fun. I want people to make it our shows and then the next time we come around, they're like, 'Note to self: take work off the next day.' 'Cause I know I don't want to go to work after that."

During their Boys and Girls in America tour, the audience rushed the stage at the end of the set as Craig and the rest of the band soaked them with beer.

"We started pulling people on stage throughout the tour on that last song," Finn said. "And it was really fun. It just is a really awesome way to end the show. It just shows people that they are an important part of this tour."

Pulling people on stage eliminates awkwardness for the band and audience, according to Finn.

"You know, for the performer there's always that uncomfortable moment at the end of the show," He said. "When the audience kind of wants another song. But once you've pulled everyone on stage and all the instruments get unplugged and everyone gets beer-soaked, it's pretty obvious that the shows over. It's just a nice closer that way."

The band is coming out with a DVD of their "Boys and Girls in America" tour and has been interviewing fans at their shows. All of their crazy, rocking nights will be available soon through Vagrant Records.

Star-struck: Guster plays in planetarium

The band Guster enjoys time outside while promoting their new, fifth studio album "Ganging up on the Sun."

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Staff

In December, the band "Guster" performed live in front of 75 fans under the stars of the Hayden Planetarium in the Boston Museum of Science, while a laser light show played to the music.

The radio station WBOS sponsored a private event for their listeners and provided a rare experience. A section of the seats were removed from the planetarium to provide a small stage and the ticket winners filled in the remaining seats.

"I did always dream of playing in a planetarium," said Ryan Miller, the band's leading vocalist.

The band started off the show by saying that they were asked if they wanted to keep the lights on or off. Even though they may not have been able to see in order to hit their cords, the band decided to shut off the lights and turn on the stars.

Guster was there to promote their new single "Satellite" off of their new album "Ganging Up on the Sun." The show started with the single and as fans reclined in their chairs, satellites flew across the sky of the planetarium, followed by rocket ships and meteors.

"I just noticed that tonight," said Miller in reference to his songs and the sky. "I don't know where that comes from." Miller thought this over with band-mate Joe Pisapia. "Maybe we have starlust," said Miller.

"Ganging Up on the Sun" is the band's fifth full-length studio album and was released in June 2006.

"We wanted it to be better," said Miller. "We wanted the album to be a little more timeless."

Later that Friday night, Guster played at the First Act Guitar Studio where the cost of admission was an unwrapped toy for Toys for Tots. The show was recorded and fans who bought the band's new CD at the show could later go online at home and download the recorded set.

Giving back to the Boston community is important to this band since three out of the four band members met in 1991 while at Tufts University.

"Nobody even got close to studying music," said Miller. In fact, Miller's degree is in religion studies.

"We played a lot of really sh* college gigs," Miller said about the band's early days. With the band being from the local area, they seemed to know a lot about the local college scene.

"Just bus them into the girls' college," Miller said about the bus that sometimes carries older men from Boston to Wellesley College. "That's a great idea."

"My 101 is: concentrate on writing great songs," said Miller to aspiring musicians. "Put on great shows."

Miller said he feels that with the help of the Internet, musicians have been put on a more level-playing ground. As it becomes easier to make music public, the focus for aspiring musicians is to put the best music out there.

"It will become easier for great songs to be heard," He said.

Guster is currently touring the U.S. and will be back in the area at Lupo's in Providence, RI on March 2.

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE
Most Images Only $6, $7 and $8
1000's of Choices
Incredible Selection
Where:
Student Union Ballroom
When:
Mon. Jan. 29 thru Fri. Feb. 2
Time:
9 A.M. - 4:30 P.M.
Sponsor:
WMUA 91.1 FM
WE ACCEPT THE "U" CARD
CHECK OUT OUR GREAT POSTERS AND PRICES!!
WWW.POSTERSALE.COM

Save $$ on Textbooks at the Jeffery Amherst College Store
Check out our website at www.jeffbooks.com to order books online!
All These Courses and More at Discounted Prices:

Accounting	221	Intro. to Financial Accounting	HI-MGT	240-1	Hotel Operations
Accounting	311	Business Appl. of Comp	HI-MGT	250-1,2	Food Service Management
Animal Sci.	103	Intro. to Animal Management	HI-MGT	260-1	Hospitality Pers. Management
Anthropology	102-A	Archeology & Prehistory	HI-MGT	320-1	Hospitality & Tourism Law
Art History	110	Survey, Renaissance-Modern Art	HI-MGT	355-1	Menu & Food Production MGT
Astronomy	100-1,2,3,4	Exploring the Universe	Human Dev.	270	Child Development
Astronomy	101-H	Exploring the Universe	Italian	120	Elementary Italian II
Astronomy	105	Weather & our Atmosphere	Italian	126	Intensive Elementary Italian
Astronomy	114	Stars & Galaxies	Kinesiology	100	Intro. to Exercise Science
Biochemistry	285	Cellular & Molecular Biology	Kinesiology	110	Human Performance & Nutrition
Biology	101-2	Intro. to Biology	Kinesiology	560	Exercise Neuroscience
Biology	102	Intro. to Animal Biology	Math	100	Basic Math Skills
Biology	283-1	General Genetics	Math	101	Precalculus Algebra
Biology	285	Cellular & Molecular Biology	Math	102	Analytic Geometry
Biology	287	Intro. to Ecology	Math	104	Alg/Analytic Geometry, Trig
CEE	121	Intro. to CEE	Math	113	Math for Elem. School Teachers
CEE	270	CEE Systems Analysis	Math	127	Calc. I Life Soc. Sci. I
Chemistry	112	General Chemistry II	Math	128	Applied Calculus
Chemistry	241	Int./Descr. Inorg. Chemistry	MGT	260	Introduction to Law
Chemistry	250	Organic Chemistry	Microbiology	160	Biology of Cancer and Aids
Chemistry	261	Organic Chemistry	Microbiology	310	General Microbiology
Chemistry	262	Organic Chemistry (Non-Majors)	Microbiology	330	Microbial Genetics
Chemistry	266	Organic Chemistry (Chem. Majors)	Nutrition	170	Understanding Nutrition
Comp. Sci	187	Programming with Data Structures	Philosophy	100	Intro. to Philosophy
Comp. Sci	311	Intro. to Algorithms	Philosophy	110	Intro. to Logic
Comp. Sci	320	Intro. to Software Engineering	Physics	100	Conceptual Physics
Comm.	118	Intro. to Interpersonal Comm.	Physics	114	Theory of Sound
Comm. Dis.	312	Intro. to Speech Science	Physics	115	Physics of Music
Comm. Dis.	313	Intro. to Audiology	Physics	131 & 132	Intro. to Physics I & II
Comm. Dis.	401	Speech & Language Dev.	Physics	151	General Physics I
ECE	232-1	Hardware Org. & Des.	Physics	152	General Physics II
Economics	104-A-B-H-I	Intro. to Macroeconomics	Political Sci.	110-A	American Politics
Economics	204-A-B	Interm. Microeconomics Theory	Political Sci.	111-A	Comparative Politics
Education	325	Intro. to Special Education	Political Sci.	113-A	World Politics
Eng. W. Prog.	112	College Writing	Psychology	100-1,2,3	Intro. to Psychology
FOMGT	301	Corporate Finance	Psychology	241-1	Methods of Inquiry in Psych
FOMGT	304	Info. Tech. Finance	Psychology	305-1	Educational Psychology
FOMGT	320	Investments	Psychology	330	Learn & Think
French	230	Intermediate French	Psychology	350	Phys. Psychology
Geo Sciences	100	Global Environmental Change	Psychology	355	Behavioral Endocrinology
Geo Sciences	101-1	Earth	Psychology	356	Child Behavior & Dev.
Geo Sciences	102	Human Landscape	Psychology	358	Adolescent Psychology
Geo Sciences	103-1	Intro. to Oceanography	Sociology	106	Race, Gender & Class
History	115	Modern China	Spanish	120	Elementary Spanish II
HI-MGT	100-1	Intro. to Hospitality & Tourism	Spanish	240	Intermediate Spanish II
HI-MGT	150-1	Food Preparation Management	Spanish	246	Intermediate Intensive

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect Street, Amherst 253-3870
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop in downtown Amherst)

Dating guide for the college guy

Looking for the perfect date? Here are some helpful hints

BY JASMINE MONTEIRO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Whether you're just getting to know a girl, or you've been dating for awhile, these ideas are bound to strike your interest. Depending on your comfort level with someone, you can find something that satiates your conversational needs. The best thing about it, besides being cheap, is that it gives you a chance to open up.

It's clear that dates don't have to be expensive to be fun. And contrary to popular belief, many people prefer it that way. Yes, even girls, but especially guys. This is important to guys, especially those in college, because they're usually expected to pay, especially on the first date. Not necessarily because they feel they have to, but because they want to.

"I'm treating the girl. I think it's ungentlemanly to make a girl pay, but some girls want to be independent so you can't argue," said 24-year-old Rorth Som. "An ideal date to me would be something fun, not the usual dinner and a movie, it kind of breaks the ice."

Guys are just as willing to have a good time and engage in intellectual conversation as girls are. It's the best way to get to know someone.

Now that I have a girlfriend, I take her pretty much anywhere we want to go and be random," said Gregg Sunderland, a 23-year-old recent graduate of Bridgewater State College. "Whether it be the mall, grocery shopping, or sports events. It's cheap and doing random stuff is fun."

No amount of money should decide how much fun you have with someone; especially someone who puts the time in to focus on you. So give something else a chance and don't always hide behind the safety dinner and a movie. Take a risk and try something different, you never know what good things can come out of it.

So, you finally meet a girl you really like and you want to take her out. Unfortunately, the only idea you come up with is dinner and a movie, and money isn't as abundant as it was in the summer when you could work seven days a week. Don't sweat it. There are plenty of great dating ideas that can be fun and won't put a hole in your wallet. These ideas will surely kindle your attention, and hopefully some flames.

Go to a zoo or museum: I know this isn't a middle school field trip but it's a fun and different way to spend time together while learning some fascinating facts. The Forest Park Zoo in Springfield would be a great place to start. Open eight months out of the year, it has 735 acres filled with diverse species from all over the world.

Listen to music at a book store: Many cities have at least one book store with a café inside. These bookstores have different events all the time. Check out Barnes and Nobles in Hadley, they're open until 10 p.m. on most nights. Even Food for Thought in downtown Amherst has open mic nights. With or without music, you could buy some interesting puzzle books and try to solve them over pastries.

Have a car picnic: This is a perfect idea for the cold weather. Just pack some snacks and take a trip to the Mohawk trail. This vacation highway is equipped with 100 miles of nature and wildlife within 14 different state parks. A scenic overlook is located on Route 2 (off of River road) in Monroe State forest. If you don't have the whole day to enjoy it, check out one of the other parks strategically located throughout western mass. It also makes it a great place for a lawn picnic in the nice weather.

COURTESY MANSTED

Go to a playground: Wherever there is a school, there is bound to be a playground. Why not take a walk and sit on the swing? Check out Amherst Middle School on Chestnut St. or even the daycare located behind the Furcolo building. And if you're really feeling spontaneous, try some flirty hide and seek. Hopefully by then the children will be out of school, the sun will be setting, and you will have the place to yourselves.

Get coffee: Even if you are not a fan of coffee, everyone could use something warm to sip on, especially in the cold weather. Go to the coffee shop (a lot of people recommend Starbucks and Rao's in downtown Amherst) and get comfy. You can sit and chat over a nice hot cup of cocoa, because there's always room for hot cocoa.

Get some ice cream: It's a cheap and practical snack. Bart's in downtown Amherst is always a nice place for homemade flavors, and depending on the weather, you can sit inside, or outside. Load up on different toppings and chitchat at a picnic table. If you're bold, you can share

Go for a walk: In case you haven't noticed, western mass has an abundance of outdoor scenery. If you don't feel like traveling too far, check out Puffers Pond on State Street in Amherst. You can enjoy the wildlife while you get to know each other. It doesn't cost any money and it can help you burn off the calories from that hot fudge sundae you just inhaled.

Go sledding: Perfect for the New Englander because snow never seems too far away. All you have to do is grab a sled and bundle up. A hill is never too hard to find. At the first sign of snow, people usually head to Orchard Hill, off of Orchard Hill Drive. It's a perfect opportunity to get close while burning some calories. Not to mention a chance to get a little flirtatious in the snow.

Go window shopping: Who says you have to spend all kinds of money to go shopping? There are plenty of malls or plazas that offer stores where you can just browse around. A popular one is the Holyoke Mall located off exit 15 from Route 91. A girl doesn't want you to spend money on her, as much as she wants you to pay attention to her. So for future reference, remember when she showed you her favorite store, or that perfume she loves. You never know, could come in handy one day.

Go bowling: You don't always have to go with the family anymore. Also, lucky for you, bowling is cheaper with the less people you have. Give Sparetime in Northampton a try (formally Northampton Bowl on Pleasant Street). You pay by game, not by hour, so take your time and enjoy yourself. Try different bowling techniques, in between the legs is always a popular one. If you take the time to get to know each other while throwing in a few laughs, it'll be well worth the cost.

Play billiards: Not many people are pool sharks so you don't have to go for the technique, go for a good time. Check out Union Billiards right in the Student Union across from the Hatch. It's a good way to break some tension and laugh when you completely whiff the cue ball. After all, everyone loves a good sense of humor.

Play mini-golf: Not always meant for the kids, mini-golf is a great date where you can act like kids. There is a Western Mass Family Golf Center located right on Russell Street in Hadley. It can be fun as well as competitive, which means it would be a great time to make some innocent, friendly wagers. wink, wink.

Play a board game: It is as easy as taking a trip to Target and picking out something fun and entertaining. Board games are not just for kids anymore, they make them for adults too. Give Battle of the Sexes, Life, or B.S. a try. This is always a great group date idea also, if you're the shy type invite some other couples over. This will give you a chance to get comfortable and show her your more confident side.

Go ice skating or rollerblading: I don't know many adults who even attempt to skate anymore. Why not give it a try? You may fall on your butt once, or twice, but anyone would appreciate the attempt. The Mullins Center hosts public skating times everyday (check out www.mullinscenter.com for some specific times). No one is expecting you to be Tara Lipinski, it's just for a good time. It's also a great way to break the ice (just hopefully not with your backside).

BREAKING DOWN THE COSTS

Dinner and a movie: $40 – A typical meal at Chili's and a movie at Ginemark.
Trip to the Zoo: $9.
Puzzle books and pastries at a bookstore: $10.
Going to a sporting event (with UMass ID): $0.
Having a car picnic: $10.
Swinging at the playground: $0
Coffee/Lattes downtown: $5.
Ice cream at Bart's: $6.
Going for a walk: $0.
Going sledding: $20 with new sled.
Window shopping: $0.
Bowling at Sparetime (for two games and rental shoes): $20.
Pool at the Union Billiards: $6 per hour.
Mini-golf: $10.
Board games: $20.
Going Ice Skating: $6.
Getting that fantastic good-night kiss: Priceless.

Local campuses offer romantic rewards for all budgets

BY SYDNEY TOWNE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

College dates can be formulaic. Dinner and a movie or attending a party together sometimes seem like the only options available, but they don't have to be. In the valley there is a practically never-ending stream of shows, games and events that are great choices for the next date night.

For many students athletic games are a place to show school spirit, spend an evening and see friends. Why not consider a game as a great place to get to know someone new?

UMass has basketball, field hockey, football, rugby and ice hockey games all year long. Each week provides a wide variety of new, free opportunities to watch fellow students display their prowess with that special someone.

Pick any sport, any game, any day of the week and have a fun date. The atmosphere of an arena brightly lit and either overheated or too cool takes pressure off having a perfect date. The rules of the sport, the players, or the overly excited fans making fools of themselves all allow for easy conversation. That is something any date could use.

One sport that offers certain heightened romantic potential is ice hockey. The cold arena makes staying close easy, but also takes the guesswork out of dressing. Coats and scarves are obviously needed, but leaving mittens at home makes holding hands almost a necessity.

When sharing a dinner of hot dogs, the focus is on the other person, not on the cost of the meal as can be a problem with traditional dinner dates. Even with pretzels at $3 apiece, game dates afford enough leftover cash for coffee or ice cream afterwards, depending on the weather.

If the hockey game goes well but leaves a couple chilled they can head downtown for coffee. That allows the conversation started at the game to continue in a more intimate locale.

For a more personal interaction try ice-skating. The Mullins Center has free public skating throughout the winter with skate rentals for only $3. Blue plastic skates may not be the sexiest of footwear or the most comfortable, but they are good for a laugh, which is a nice way to start a date.

The action of skating, especially if one or both partners are beginners, provides a fun distraction from the pressure of entertaining a date. The first few minutes on the ice can be intimidating for the unpracticed skater, but with each completed lap confidence is gained and the likelihood of falling is diminished.

There are families and speed skaters in attendance that can limit physical contact while on the ice. For an early date, keeping PDA's to a minimum can make conversation easier. The ice can be full during the few hours the rink is open to the public so staying aware of other skaters can prevent crashes and make chatting more fluid.

For a more experienced or adventurous couple, dancing is something new to try. Starting at 6 p.m. each Wednesday, the Northampton Center for the Arts has waltz, lindy hop, salsa and swing lessons.

COURTESY NORTHAMPTON

Above, the ballroom at the Northampton Center for the Arts is an impressive and beautiful setting for an intimate date that includes dancing.

The classes circulate through a cycle starting with beginners the first week of each month. For students individual lessons are $5 or both lessons and dance afterwards totals $8.

As with skating, the dancing provides a couple something to focus attention on besides each other. Fumbling through a waltz box and turn together is a good way to get to know another side of a date.

The waltz may seem outdated, but slight variations are taught for ballroom and for social situations. Perhaps more importantly than learning the dance is learning to appreciate the music and the movement with a date. The physical closeness required by these dances makes flirtation almost mandatory.

During lessons, partners are changed to ensure that every student gets a chance to practice with the instructor. This also means that parts of or even entire songs might be spent twirling with someone other than who you came with. Watching a partner dance from across the room allows for sly eye contact that can be as sexy as the dancing itself.

Too often dates are conducted in the dark, like at the movies, when conversation is limited and at the conclusion of the date, neither person has gained knowledge about the other.

Another pitfall of standard dates, like a pricey dinner, is because of the expense and the limited entertainment the pressure for the date to succeed overshadows any fun it might be.

Attending a sporting event gives couples something to watch and comment on without the seriousness of a one-on-one date. Skating is an activity almost anyone can learn fairly quickly. It can easily be the first half of a long memorable date night. Dancing isn't necessarily for first dates, but for the couple whose dates have gotten stale it can be a great change of pace.

Dating doesn't have to be boring and it doesn't have to be stressful. Try something new, something unexpected and don't be surprised if the evening ends on a high note.

ATTENTION STUDENTS:
Come see what you've been missing out on!
ATKINS FARMS
Country Market
While grabbing your weekly groceries, stop by our...
• Sushi Bar
• Deli Bar
• Extensive Salad Bar
• Bakery
• Full Service Florist
COME CHECK OUT OUR SPECIALTY FALL PRODUCTS...
Homemade Caramel Apples
Apple Cider
Homemade Fudge
Cider Donuts
ALSO AVAILABLE:
Take - Out Food
Student Care Packages
Corner of Route 116 & Bay Road
South Amherst, MA 01002
(413) 253-9528 * WWW.ATKINSFARMS.COM
JUST A SHORT DRIVE FROM UMASS

McMurphy's
Welcome Back Students!
GUITAR DUDES
EVERY WEDNESDAY
No Cover Charge

Shepp: 'Art is love'

SHEPP from page B1

Low, Sweet Chariot," does that mean African-American spirituals come from Greece?" asked Shepp. "It doesn't change the identity of the experience."

Such an experience informed the work of a number of African-American artists-turned-UMass-professors, like Yusef Lateef.

"He was a hero to me when I was 17-years-old," said Shepp of Lateef.

"He did a lot to enrich the palette of so-called jazz music. He showed that jazz has as much scholarly and intellectual aspects as any other music."

Drummer Max Roach taught full-time from 1973 to 1978.

"I first began listening to Max Roach as a teenager," said Shepp. "I was impressed by his music and intellectual career. He always tried to demonstrate that Black Music was a music of liberation and struggle. He was very important for me for that."

One-time Coltrane bassist and [illegible] Jazz Messenger Reggie Workman taught bass at U Mass from 1972 to 1974.

"Reggie and I grew up together, and it was edifying to work with him again," said Shepp. Workman and Shepp co-led an improv workshop while Workman was at the university, but the brass did not receive tenure, and left in 1974. Shepp recommended that Ron Carter or Richard Davis be found in their of Workman, but neither [illegible] was taken on.

"Not only did we lose Reggie," said Shepp, "but we never got anyone to replace him."

Former UMass Professor Archie Shepp has had a long standing career as a musician, playing along with such idols as John Coltrane.

Workman's termination aside, Shepp recalls the 60s and early 70s as an exciting time.

"When I began teaching college, it was the end of the civil rights movement," said Shepp. "Socio-cultural issues were very much in the forefront and very much related to artistic events. Coltrane and Cecil Taylor were at the point where they began to drop harmonic elements and began to explore more rhythmic and pentatonic [approaches] and depart from the diatonic music that came before."

African-American instrumental artists also made political statements with their song and album titles at the time, according to Shepp. Charles Mingus' "Fables of Faubus" referred to the Arkansas governor who famously blocked nine African-American students from entering an all-white high school in 1957. Coltrane's "Alabama" was inspired by a Birmingham church bombing in 1963 that resulted in the deaths of four young African-American girls (the same church bombing inspired Spike Lee's 4 Little Girls documentary). Shepp also cited Sonny Rollins' "Freedom Suite" and Roach's "We Insist! Max Roach's Freedom Now Suite."

"Music that had not been associated with political events took us back to the days of protest songs and slave songs black people used to declaim oppression," said Shepp.

Music and the arts, however, have purposes beyond the political, according to Shepp.

"Art makes us less bellicose," said Shepp. "The nature of art is to encourage friendship and love... it gives our lives another dimension that is softer. It makes us more peaceful and better able to live with each other."

At a recent concert appearance in Israel with the saxophonist David Murray, Shepp was surprised to see so many young, orthodox Jews at the show.

"[Art] facilitates communication between different races," said Shepp. "With art, you're able to open up other intellectual avenues you're unable to with pedagogy and academia."

Shepp retired in 2001. He lives in Amherst, and performs internationally. His most recent recording, a collaboration with Roswell Rudd entitled "Live in New York," was released on Verve Records also in 2001.

From the 1970s to the early 2000s Archie Shepp was a professor in the African-American Studies department at UMass.

FAC gears up for new semester

"Cirque Eloize" is one of many new shows offered this semester by the Fine Arts Center. Some others are "The Tempest," "Apollo" and "Bloom."

FAC from page B2

The dance company was [illegible]est over 50 years ago by [illegible]ttfree and Gerald Arpino. [illegible] performance will perform a [illegible] dance pieces including "The [illegible] Fable," a powerful anti-war [illegible]choreographed by Kurt Jooss, [illegible] Balanchine's "Apollo," and [illegible] Coupe."

[illegible]espeare's centuries old play "The Tempest" will get a face lift [illegible]ore before on Monday, March [illegible] Fine Arts Center's Concert [illegible] Multimedia creators Michael [illegible] and Vitor Pilon, along [illegible] director Denise Guilbault, [illegible] found a way to transform "The [illegible] into a technological mas[illegible] combining live actors with [illegible] projections to create a [illegible] performance that joins real[illegible] and virtual reality. Everything [illegible] from the cinema to the dance, from the music and sound to the scenography, becomes a high-tech work of art. As soon as the show begins, audience members will be overwhelmed by this modern program they have created, right from Prospero's notorious storm. The program will be in French with English subtitles.

Jazz fans won't be disappointed on Saturday, March 31 when the Grammy-nominated Vanguard Jazz Orchestra performs at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Originally established by Thad Jones and Mel Lewis more than 30 years ago, the band has gone through many changes but has always stuck to the sound of its founders. The 16-musician ensemble will be led by composer Jim McNeely. Their recent album "Up From The Skies" was nominated for two Grammys, Best Large Jazz Ensemble and Best Arrangement.

APRIL

The Stephen Petrino Dance Company will perform the show "Bloom" at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on April 12. The music for the Bloom was written by Rufus Wainwright, using the poetry of Walt Whitman and Amherst's own Emily Dickinson for inspiration. The dance troupe has performed across the world in over 22 countries garnering critical acclaim across the globe.

One of the world's finest small orchestras will grace the stage of the Fine Arts Center's Concert Hall as UMass welcomes the Australian Chamber Orchestra featuring Cellist Pieter Wispelwey on Saturday, April 2. The Orchestra will be performing a number of pieces including Vivaldi's Concerto in B minor for Four Violins, and Tchaikovsky's Souvenir de Florence. The orchestra's unique in that all but the Cellists stand through the performance, giving the show a boost of energy unlike most other orchestras.

NOTES FROM THE BURSAR

—If you do not want to wait in line to pick up a refund check, sign up for Excess Express and have your refund deposited directly into your bank account. It's easy to do, log on to SPIRE and enter your bank information. Check out our website at www.umass.edu/bursar for more details on Excess Express —Methods of payment - Did you know that you can pay your bursar bill on line or by credit card? If you would like additional information about alternative methods of payment, go to www.afford.com/umassamherst or call 1-888-216-4258.

—Who is receiving your Bursar bill? If you want to avoid the bursar bills being sent to your dorm and want all of your Bursar bills to be sent to your permanent address, log into SPIRE, (http://spire.umass.edu), navigate to the Personal Portfolio options and simply add a new address and select bill as the address type.

—Are you waiving the student Health Insurance? If you are waiving the student Health Insurance, log into www.chickering.com. Student Health insurance needs to be waived each year. Keep the confirmation that you will receive from Health Services for your records.

—Don't forget, you have access to your bill at all times through SPIRE. It is your responsibility to monitor your bill and to pay close attention to any messages that you may receive on SPIRE. If you have any questions regarding your Bursar bill, please contact our office at 413- 545-2368. Our Teller office hours are Monday through Friday 9:00am-4:00pm and our Customer Service Center is open Monday through Friday 9:00am-5:00pm.

Have a great semester!
Bursar Staff

'Monkey Ball' scores plenty of bananas

BY ALEX SILBER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

SUPER MONKEY BALL

NINTENDO WII

GENRE: PUZZLE GAME RATED (E)

9/10

As soon as you see the box for a Super Monkey Ball game you cannot help but smile. "Monkeys, in a ball? We have to make them balance on a thin strip of land over vast nothingness while collecting bananas? Sounds to me like the developers are going to have a tough time with PETA!"

This is pretty much what I was thinking the first time I saw a Super Monkey Ball game about five years ago. Boy was I surprised when I found out how much fun it is to roll a monkey in a ball down a platform. When I heard "Super Monkey Ball: Banana Blitz" was headed to the Nintendo Wii I was overjoyed. Finally a true test of both physical and mental ability for gamers that isn't Dance Dance Revolution, and one that won't hurt.

The plotline of "Super Monkey Ball: Banana Blitz" goes as follows: You and your fellow monkey friends have found a bunch of, literally, golden bananas. A feast is about to ensue, when a giant claw comes down before you and snatches the bananas. Little do you know, but an "evil monkey pirate" with a metal claw and purple suit are after your bananas. Yes that's it — the entire storyline for "Super Monkey Ball: Banana Blitz." You know you can't get more of a reason to climb into a plastic ball and roll over dangerous terrain than for a bunch of golden bananas, and you really can't ask for more. This game isn't about storyline, but about patience, coordination and balance for the sake of that monkey in the ball.

With the "wiimote" the Super Monkey Ball series is brought to a whole new level of complexity. No longer will you control your character with a single thumb, but rather your entire hand and arm. It takes coordination and patience to tilt the "wiimote" from side to side and forwards and backwards without gaining too much momentum and flying off the ledge. To also help raise the difficulty of the game comes several different obstacles that require you to jump, pause and even do both consecutively in order to safely reach the goal at the end of the level. The game mechanics seem to be a perfect fit for the "wiimote" controller and although it takes a bit of getting used to, the "wiimote" really makes the title more challenging and fun.

While the graphics capabilities on the Wii obviously do not compare to that of the Xbox 360 or Playstation 3, the art style and animations of "Super Monkey Ball: Banana Blitz" fit the machines capabilities perfectly. The game runs fairly smoothly, without much loading time (about two to three seconds worth). The models are smooth and cartoony, while the colors are bright and cheerful. Everything about the visual style of the game will make you want to smile, no matter what age you are. The visuals are even, dare I say it, "cute."

Similarly to the visuals, the soundtrack just seems to fit everything perfectly. It has a nice upbeat, happy-go-lucky sound to it that makes you want to giggle like the monkeys within the game. (For those of you who have played a Super Monkey Ball game before – you know what I mean). Really the only thing to complain about in the sound department is the annoying use of the "wiimote" speaker. It doesn't work to hear the sounds that are already on screen, such as a cheer, or the sound when you collect a banana, doubled over onto the teeny "wiimote" speaker. It sounds terribly distorted.

Banana Blitz offers a larger variety of mini-games than any of its predecessors, many of which use the "wiimote" and "nunchuk" effectively. I put a small number of these mini-games to the test, many of them being quite addictive, while some not so much. The first mini-game I checked out was "Monkey Bowling" because I wanted to see how different this mini-game could be from the Wii System packaged Wii Sports Bowling. It turns out that it's not all that different, but it does lack the physical precision of the Wii Sports version, which leads to some gutter balls.

Overall, "Super Monkey Ball: Banana Blitz" was a fun game. It isn't much different from the previous versions of the title, but if you want a more difficult game with more replayability than the rest of the launch titles, this is the game for you.

Ringing in the New Year with Umphrey's

UMass students toast to '07 with music in the Midwest

BY LAUREN MODISETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On the last nights of 2006, the Aragon Ballroom in Chicago, Ill., had the pleasure of hosting a trio of performances by the leading Midwest jam band, Umphrey's Mcgee. Fans from all over the country gathered together for eight sets of Umphrey's between Dec. 29 and 31.

The venue was like no other. Walking through the main room where the concert was held was like journeying through the courtyard of a white castle under the midnight sky. The venue seemed plucked right out of a fairy tale. You could either float through the mass of people dancing in the courtyard or get a bird's eye view of the band from the balconies lining the interior.

On the first night, the scene filled with middle school and high school youngsters who stuck out among the crowd more experienced, college-aged music lovers. Despite the age difference, everyone was there for the same reason of music appreciation.

The North Mississippi All-stars opened that evening with an astounding performance. Band member Cody Dickinson joined in Umphrey's "Jimmy Stuart" time on his washboard. No one has ever played the washboard like that in a jam session and the noise distortions that were used made such an incredible sound; it made one wonder why it isn't something heard more often.

Umphrey's teased their audience several times that evening with little hints of "Linus and Lucy," the intro to the Red Hot Chili Peppers "Funky Monks." But when they played "I Want You" by The Beatles they sent the audience off the edge as they shouted the lyrics right alongside the band.

The washboard and the covers were only the beginning. In their first set of the evening they played "Much Obliged," "August," and "Plunger." Even though the set break was making the fans anxious, the wait was well worth it because the second set was just as amazing as the first. They started off with "All in Time" and continued into songs like "Mulche's Odyssey," "Blue Echo," and "Nothing Too Fancy."

Their second performance, on Dec. 30, was a little different from the normal sound you would usually hear coming from Umphrey's. During their jam sessions in the first set they really rocked out like many fans had never heard before. The band proved that they've come a long way, now delivering a fresh performance every time. Umphrey's is a band that will never be labeled dull or predictable because they keep their fans on their toes. During their performance they kept the audience guessing as their songs began to build up before breaking into the written melody. It's much like a musical orgasm that explodes over the crowd causing them to dance uncontrollably.

The Los Lobos opened on this evening and one of Umphrey's renowned guitar players, Jake Cinninger, sat in with them. Together Los Lobos and Cinninger played the popular Grateful Dead song "Bertha" and transitioned into "Not Fade Away" which was originally written by Buddy Holly and Norman Petty in 1957 but made famous by the The Rolling Stones' first release in the states. It was also later adapted by The Grateful Dead and is still played to this day by the remaining band's members in their new projects.

Umphrey's also pulled Los Lobos David Hidalgo and Steve Berlin into their own performance for some extra guitar and saxophone flavor to spice up their sound. For their first set they played songs like "The Fuzz" and "Ringo" and saved "Walletsworth," "Intentions Clear," and "Bloody Well Right," originally by Supertramp. The biggest treat of the evening, however, was the vocal performance by drummer Kris Meyers who sang John Lennon song "Instant Karma," dedicated to his mother.

The real pleasure of three days was the one and only New Years Eve Show. The Taj Mahal band opened for Umphrey's and performed "You'll Need Somebody On Your Bond," originally performed by Blind Willie Johnson.

Umphrey's played three sets on New Years Eve, and as each one progressed anticipation for the quickly approaching New Year began to grow. The ceiling was equipped with four massive nets filled with balloons of all shapes and sizes and more confetti than you could imagine.

The first set paved the direction of the evening as they played "Ja Junk," "Out of Order," "Miss Tinkle's Overture," and "Bright Lights." Once the set break passed they continued by feeding the audience songs like "Wife Soup," "Slacker," and "Higgins."

Once the New Year was reached, the balloons and confetti were released. As the decorations slowly floated towards the crowd the world began to slow down as the seconds ticked away. Fans were jumping for balloons, dancing in the confetti, couples were kissing, and Umphrey's Mcgee continued on stage in just as much awe as the rest of us.

Once the New Year was reached, the balloons and confetti were released. As the decorations floated towards the crowd the world began to slow down as the seconds ticked away.

With that came the third set as they continued to rock out. Adding to the already fabulous set list they presented us with, the amazement still continued. Throughout the entire evening the band members of Umphrey's teamed up with Jeff Coffin on saxophone, Michael "Mad Dog" Mavridoglou on trumpet, Chris Neal on saxophone, and Brent Sanders on trombone in their last two sets. Alongside of Umphrey's these musicians played "Bridgeless," "Partyin' Peeps," and "Mail Package" to name a few. Umphrey's also played "2x2" and as their encore created their own rendition of Saturday Night Live's recent skit of "Dick in a Box" – boxes and all.

This was a first for many Umphrey's fans because percussionist Andy Farag came to the front of the line to perform it with Brendan Bayliss, who was very successful in reaching the high notes just as Justin Timberlake did in the televised skit. They ended the evening with "Pay the Snucka" which is a song that incorporates something specific about each band member into it.

Considering the time of year, the weather was far from unbearable for these nights in the windy city. As the fans dispersed after every evening, many flocked to the public transportation "L" lines. Umphrey's fans scattered across the city, making the journey back to their homesteads. During this time it wasn't uncommon to catch individuals from the show wearing outrageous costumes (like the Red King, Batman, and The Joker) waiting patiently at random train stops.

One Umphrey's fan, Greer Lally, spent the time during and around the concerts to come up with an "Umphrey's-ism" that would fit the moment and came up with the clever line, "Umphreezing in Chicago." Only a handful of UMass students made it out to this show but they represented the fan base from New England.

"The band played like a low-key set because they focused on the music and they ended the year on a really spectacular note. The light show was spectacular, it was really well practiced and wasn't sloppy. It was a very well-balanced three nights and it was great seeing Kris and Andy sing," explained UMass Junior, Katie Madzar.

"The last couple of years they have spent their money and focused on associating these shows with themes," agreed Eric Radden, also a UMass student. "This time they seemed to shy away from that and focus more on the music and the light show which was a big plus from the years passed."

If you didn't get a chance to do something this great over the New Year, another opportunity to see Umphrey's Mcgee five is creeping up. They will be performing at The Calvin Theatre in Northampton on April 11. Ticket prices have yet to be posted so keep an eye out on Umphreys.com or HH.com to check up on it.

The saxophonist adds another dimension to the unique vibe of the Midwestern band.

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU 413•593•5222 705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee www.hukelau.com
MARCH 17TH
From HBO's "Tourgasm" and NBC's "Last Comic Standing 2 & 3"
GARY GULMAN
MARCH 10TH
JOHN VALBY
aka Dr. Dirty
FEB. 23RD
JEFF DUNHAM & FRIENDS
APRIL 21ST
ADELE GIVENS

THE LEADER in Clinical Social Work Education
Smith College School for Social Work offers
27-MONTH MASTER'S & DOCTORAL PROGRAMS BEGINNING EACH JUNE
Intensive on-campus course instruction
Field Internships around the country
CONTINUING EDUCATION PROGRAMS FOR THE POST-MASTER'S CLINICIAN
6- and 12-hour summer seminars
Postgraduate Certificates
SMITH COLLEGE School for Social Work

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(39 years of service ...and counting)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2007 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Ball Room • Feb. 5 (Mon) • Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 6 (Tues) • Feb. 7 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Feb 8th @ Boltwood Table (U. Concourse)
No telephone inquiries. YOU (each a freshman) must pay the application fee!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Globes offer mixed bag

A classy ceremony drew tears and laughter from recipients

BY TERESA REILLY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Jan. 15, teenage girls across the nation turned their television sets to NBC to see Patrick Demsey, Leonardo DiCaprio and even Brad Pitt graciously smile as they win an award at the Golden Globes. Unfortunately, that didn't happen.

In fact, the 64th Annual Golden Globes was a slight letdown overall. Aside from a few quirky remarks from award winners, the show pretty much resembled every other award show.

Sacha Baron Cohen did try to spice up the night with a disgusting recollection of his days making Borat.

"I saw some dark parts of America, an ugly side of America," said Cohen, "a side of America that rarely sees the light of day." The camera zoomed in on Cohen's co-star, Ken Davitian.

"When my 300 pound co-star decided to sit on my face and squeeze the oxygen from my lungs, I was faced with a choice," said Cohen, "death or to breathe in the air that had been trapped in a small pocket between his buttocks for 30 years."

Cohen's acceptance speech for Best Actor in a Motion Picture Musical or Comedy ended with: "Thank you to everyone who hasn't sued me yet."

Other award winners took a classier path. Meryl Streep's acceptance speech for Best Actress in a Motion Picture Musical or Comedy complimented her peers and asked the audience to demand the movies they want to see in their local theatres.

Hugh Laurie, who won Best Actor in a TV Series for his role in "House," was calm, collected and even had a few jokes prepared. "There seems to be a gap in the market," said Laurie. "I would like to be able to pull out a speech by Dolce and Gabbana."

It is always nice, however, to see the choked up award winner. The Golden Globes was graced with two such winners. America Ferrera, from "Ugly Betty," was all shook up when she won Best Actress in a TV Musical or Comedy. She smiled and tried to thank everyone, adding how important it is that girls are exposed to a more realistic role model.

The second heartwarming speech came from Forest Whitaker who won Best Actor in a Motion Picture Drama. He could barely get through his speech as he tried to thank people through gasping breathes.

Tom Hanks presented a tribute to the actor Warren Beatty.

"You will all agree with me when I say what balls this man has," said Hanks, "and by balls I mean artistic vision."

A quick montage of Beatty's films were shown and the Beatty himself took center stage. He promised another movie in the future but asked actors like Clint Eastwood and Jack Nicholson to slow it down and to stop making him look bad. "I asked Arnold to become a Democrat," said Beatty, "he did what I said."

To end the evening, Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger presented the award for Best Motion Picture Drama to Babel. As director Alejandro González Iñárritu stepped to the microphone, he assured the governor that he "has all his papers in order."

The winners all seemed to be justified and there doesn't seem to be any complaints yet. Some choices were no-brainers, such as Best Director of a Motion Picture – Martin Scorsese added another trophy to his collection for his work in The Departed.

In the same respect it would have been hard to not give the award to Letters from Iwo Jima for Best Foreign Film, which boasted both Clint Eastwood and Steven Spielberg.

The Golden Globes are meant to be classy and this show was no exception. Stars with their designer dresses and tuxes graciously accept their awards…As Schwarzenegger said before the credits started to roll, "Don't forget, next year, we'll be back."

Sacha Baron Cohen poses with his Golden Globe Award for Best Actor in a Motion Picture Musical or Comedy for his work in "Borat."

The Shipp sailing to Noho Center for the Arts

BY BRADLEY FARBERMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Northampton Center for the Arts' "A World of Piano" series commences on Friday, with a performance by pianist Matthew Shipp.

Hailing from Wilmington, Del., Shipp began at the piano when he was five years old and dove headfirst into jazz when he was 12. He drew inspiration from the likes of Oscar Peterson, John Coltrane and the organ at church.

Following a stint at the New England Conservatory of Music, Shipp moved to New York City in 1984, and made his debut as a recording artist on 1987's "Sonic Explorations," a duo set with alto saxophonist Rob Brown, who would go to play with Rashied Ali, Joe Morris and Billy Bang.

Shipp found an early mentor in saxophonist David S. Ware, who had played with Cecil Taylor, Andrew Cyrille and Bill Dixon, and studied with Sonny Rollins. He began performing with Ware in the late 1980s and has appeared on no less than 17 of the saxophonist's records since then, beginning with 1990's "Great Bliss, Vol. 1." It was in Ware's group, too, that Shipp became acquainted with bassist William Parker, a longtime collaborator and frequent visitor to the Pioneer Valley. Parker brought a trio featuring saxophonists Sabir Mateen and Daniel Carter to the Unitarian Meetinghouse in Amherst last semester and has performed at Bezanson Recital Hall on several occasions.

Shipp recorded "Points," his first album as a leader, for Silkheart in 1990. The record, featuring Parker, Brown and Whit Dickey on drums, drew comparisons to the work of the aforementioned Cecil Taylor. Shipp followed up with "Prism" in 1993, a live date from New York City's Roulette, also featuring Parker and Dickey.

In the years since "Points" and "Prism," Shipp has recorded 23 albums as a leader for labels like Hat Hut, Warner Bros., FMP and Thirsty Ear. These include collaborations with drummer Susie Ibarra and violist Mat Maneri, a duo record with Parker, and solo piano sets.

In 2000, Shipp was called upon by Thirsty Ear to head its new jazz line, The Blue Series. The Eclectic Series, of which Shipp is artistic director, has released seven records by Shipp and any number of innovative albums by Maneri, DJ Spooky, saxophonist Tim Berne, Craig Taborn, Charlie Hunter and Bobby Previte, Spring Heel Jack and Sex Mob, whose Blue Series debut, "Sexotica," was nominated for a Grammy last year.

MATTHEW SHIPP
NOHO CENTER FOR THE ARTS
FEB. 2
7:30 PM
$12, $8

In 2006, Shipp performed on an ambitious record entitled "Radical Reconstructive Surgery," out on The Blue Series line under producer Scotty Hard's name. The album featured Shipp alongside Parker, drummer Nasheet Waits, DJ Olive and the resourceful John Medeski on keyboards. Hard had previously worked with hip-hop acts like Cypress Hill and the Wu-Tang Clan.

Shipp's most recent record under his own name, "One," was released early last year on Thirsty Ear, and featured Shipp in solo piano mode once again. Shipp will perform solo on Friday in Northampton. Tickets are $12, or $8 for students and seniors. The show begins at 7:30 p.m.

Curated by Glenn Siegel, "A World of Piano" is also set to feature solo piano performances by artists Cooper-Moore and Ran Blake on Feb. 9 and 16, respectively. These shows will also take place at the Northampton Center for the Arts, located at 17 New South Street. There is a specially-priced $30 ticket that allows for entrance to all three performances.

One who is interested in the "World of Piano" series should also check out the Fine Arts Center's "Magic Triangle" jazz series this semester, also curated by Siegel. Guitarist Michael Gregory, pianist Michele Rosewoman and saxophonist Roscoe Mitchell (of Art Ensemble of Chicago fame) will each bring groups to Bezanson Recital Hall as part of the series. Gregory's performance on Feb. 22 will feature bassist Mark Helias and Herbie Hancock drummer Terri Lyne Carrington. Tickets to these shows are $12, or $7 for students and seniors.

RISD shows off collection

RISD from page B2

Special exhibitions such as the Asian art exhibits that will be on display starting in February are changed every three months, according to Montgomery. Other installations in the remaining galleries are permanent and only change to include updates.

A security guard stationed on the third floor of the museum offered a walking tour of the 20th century art gallery. Along the way, he pointed out which paintings and photographs were newly on display.

The museum's collection is so large that only two percent of the collection is on display at any one time, he said.

Cost for admission with a student ID is only $3, and is free on Sunday afternoons between 10 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Write for arts!
arts@dailycollegian.com

CANCUN, ACAPULCO, NEGRIL, MOBAY, NASSAU, S. PADRE, FLORIDA, CRUISES, AND MORE!
Join the Party!!!
SPRING BREAK 2007
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
STS Flight Finder™
Save Hundreds on Spring Break Packages!!!
Search airfares to Mexico and the Caribbean and save up to $300 per person. Best Deals Guaranteed!
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

FRUSTRATED? PUZZLED? DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS!!
PLEASE PARK SMART.
Avoid ticketing and towing - please do not park in employee lots! The University community appreciates your parking cooperation.
Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots Monday through Friday between the hours of 7 am and 5 pm. Parking is prohibited at any time in tow zones, handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces, reserved spaces and lots which require 24-hour permits.
Parking meters are enforced for payment Monday through Friday between the hours of 9 am and 5 pm.
Please visit Parking Services' website at http://parking.umass.edu for further parking information.

You'll Change Countless Lives — Including Your Own
AT FORDHAM UNIVERSITY'S GRADUATE SCHOOL OF SOCIAL SERVICE, we believe that there is no more noble pursuit than building a just, equitable and caring society. Our program, ranked 14th nationally by U.S. News & World Report, is educating and inspiring the next generation of leaders in the field.
Please see our Information Session Schedule online.
New York is my campus. Fordham is my school.
FORDHAM UNIVERSITY www.fordham.edu/gss

CHEAP TEXTBOOKS!

That's right, used copies of the textbooks
you need are up to 25% off
the price of new at the University of Massachusetts
Textbook Annex.

Shop early at www.umass.bkstr.com for the best selection -- order online and pick up in-store

Look for the Guaranteed Buyback sticker on our books and plan on half your purchase price back this spring!

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619

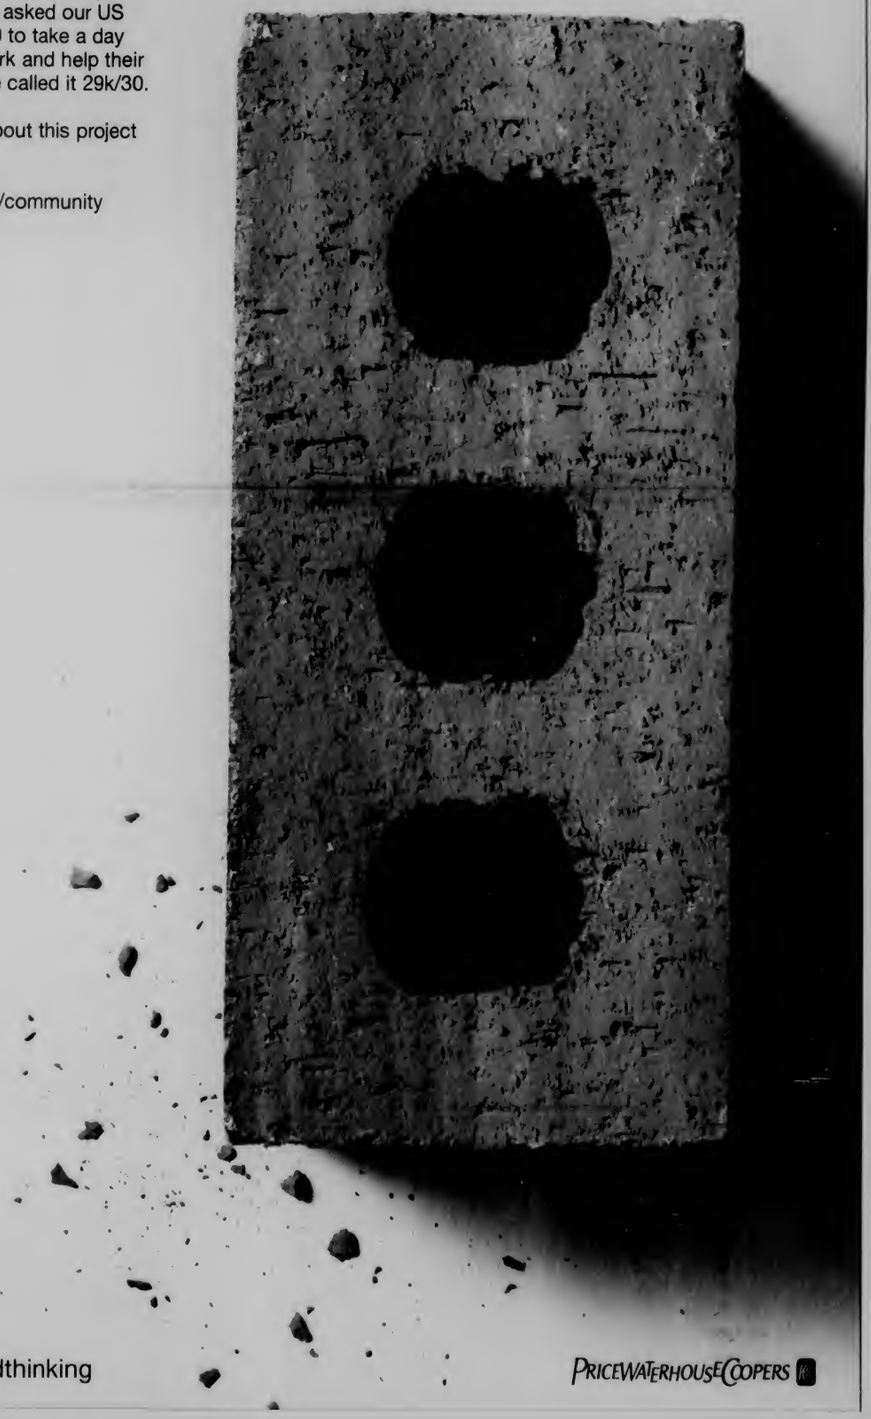
proudly part of efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

Leader
Bricklayer
Human being*

We believe community service is a part of our job description. Last June, we asked our US staff of 29,000 to take a day away from work and help their neighbors. We called it 29k/30.

Learn more about this project and others.

Visit pwc.com/community



*connectedthinking

PricewaterhouseCoopers

Winter films warm the heart, raise awareness

COURTESY WARNER BROS.

Djimon Hounsou puts on a powerful performance as a fisherman in Sierra Leone in "Blood Diamond."

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Beyoncé Knowles, Jennifer Hudson, and Anika Noni Rose sparkle and shine in Paramount Pictures' adaptation of the hit Broadway musical, "Dreamgirls."

'Diamond' bleeds powerful message

By Kate Bauer
Collegian Staff

Director Edward Zwick's newest installment into the "thoughtful do-gooder epic," Blood Diamond, is in fact nothing like the films the director has delivered in the past like The Last Samurai and Glory. Set in 1999 in war-torn Sierra Leone, Africa, Zwick delivers a brutal and bloody tale about two unlikely partners on a search for two very different things. Danny Archer (Leonardo DiCaprio) is a mercenary bent on using others to get ahead. Solomon Vandy (Djimon Hounsou) is a fisherman who wants nothing more than for his son to get a good education and a better life than his father's.

In the opening of the film Vandy's village is raided by guerrilla soldiers and Vandy is taken prisoner to mine Sierra Leone's diamond fields. After digging up a rare and coveted asset, Vandy finds himself in a serious situation. After another raid, Vandy is sent to jail with his fellow prisoners. Archer, in prison because he was caught smuggling diamonds across the border, just happens to be stuck in the same jail, and learns of Vandy's find.

Once released, Archer searches out Vandy in hopes of learning the location where Vandy buried his find. Convincing Vandy that it is the only way for him to get back his family and find his son, who was taken by the soldiers, the two set off on a desperate search. Though Archer may have convinced Vandy he wants to help him out, Danny has motivations of his own – finding the means to get off of what he refers to as "this godforsaken continent."

Along the way back to the mining fields Archer meets an American journalist (Jennifer Connolly) looking to do a story on the corrupt diamond trade. In exchange for his departure Archer agrees to give her information on how "the system" works, and therefore give her the big story.

BLOOD DIAMOND

DIRECTED BY EDWARD ZWICK

STARRING LEONARDO DICAPRIO

GRADE: A-

The most resonating way to deliver a message is to show how brutal it truly is, and Zwick excels in Blood Diamond at telling it like it is. Sierra Leone needs no art to display how truly devastating a place it is. In one particular scene, where Archer and Vandy are stuck in Sierra Leone's capital Freetown while it is under siege, the brutality and desolation taking place is so atrocious that it makes you want to look away from the screen. But Zwick is simply presenting it as what it is – a terrible and appalling act. While the film at times can be penetrating, there are no flashy camera moves or sweeping arcs to give an artistic eye to the town's destruction.

At one point Solomon asks, and in a way asks the audience, why a country, its people, could do something this horrible. Unfortunately there is no real answer to this question.

The film holds a strong cast of characters that gives more depth to an already deep story. Connelly and DiCaprio provide some humorous elements like when Archer asks "American?" and Maddy answers "Guilty," to which Archer responds "Most Americans are." Archer's somewhat father-like figure of a boss who is a dealer in the diamond trade, provides us with just one of many villains (Arnold Vosloo, not quiet reaching the creep level he achieved as Imhotep in The Mummy) to defy against.

This film isn't meant to be some grand-scale epic like what we last saw director Zwick transmit in The Last Samurai. And in creating a film such as this it helps keep the audience's focus onto what's happening, and on a very serious subject matter.

Freetown, the capital as well as the main hub in Sierra Leone, is littered with trash and miserable people. As Danny walks thru the streets he effortlessly lets everyone know that. Because of her raucous behavior she is eventually ousted from the group, and to make matters worse is replaced by a thinner, more docile girl.

Sequins, costumes, choreography, powerful ballads, relationships, corruption, sleazy men, beautiful women, Dreamgirls has got it all, rolled into one big extravagant musical.

Though it boasts an impressive cast, and some stellar singing on Hudson's

DREAMGIRLS

DIRECTED BY BILL CONDON

STARRING BEYONCE KNOWLES

GRADE: B

Condon's 'Dreamgirls' hits high note

By Kate Bauer
Collegian Staff

Bill Condon, the Oscar-nominated screenwriter from Chicago, saw the original Broadway musical "Dreamgirls" back in 1981, and, like his fellow audience members, was drawn into the whirlwind 60s of pop music and girl groups. So, thanks to the success of Chicago, it now seemed a prime time to bring the musical to the big screen.

Set in Detroit during the same time period as the musical, three young girls, Effie (Jennifer Hudson), Deena (Beyoncé Knowles) and Lorrell (Anika Noni Rose), performing in a talent show meet a car salesman looking to break into the music business named Curtis Taylor Jr. (Jamie Foxx). Convincing the girls to have him sign on as their manager, Taylor sets them up as backup singers for James "Thunder" Early (Eddie Murphy), an enigmatic and womanizing middle-aged man who is slowly making his decent into one-hit-wonder land.

As Early and his crew try to revive his career and break into the mainstream, Taylor comes to the realization that Early is just too, well, black for the mainstream. So he decides to give the "Dreamettes" their own act in hopes of gaining better access to a bigger audience. But instead of placing Effie's stronger and more resonating voice at the forefront of the group, Curtis puts the softer, thinner, and lighter-skinned Deena (Beyoncé Knowles) as the lead singer.

Curtis' decision is ultimately Effie's downfall – her personality and voice don't belong in the background, and end, Dreamgirls lacks a central star, and because of that the audience has no one to grab on to. While the audience in Chicago had Roxy to lead them through the film's story, Dreamgirls lacks enough depth in its characters to hook the audience in.

Besides the lack of a protagonist, the actors certainly play their parts well. Eddie Murphy bounds around a stage and strides across a room like he's found his youth again. Foxx as Curtis channels the change of a man from a charming wannabe to a hard-faced and corrupt corporate money-maker. Knowles' Deena is a quiet and "easy" girl, which makes her perfect as the lead of a girl group – she does as she's told. But as the film progresses you see Deena start to break out of her shell, as it is so well orchestrated in her big number, "I.isten."

Yet its Hudson's role as a hard-nosed diva that steals the show right out from under the feet of her more accomplished costars. Effie's big number, and the movie's most talked about ballad, "And I Am Telling You I'm Not Going" is pure energy and emotion dripping from every word Hudson screams, her whole body bent from the abandonment she feels at being booted from the group. Yet while she sure can sing, Hudson's acting comes off as a little too green.

As for its comparison to Chicago, Dreamgirls emanates too much of the 1930s jazz musical. Curtis is Billy Flynn-they're both conniving and slick, out for the big bucks. Effie is Velma Kelly, the attention-getter jutted aside to make room for the (in Dreamgirls) prettier and (in Chicago) newer talent Deena/Roxy.

While the first half of the film is a dazzling array of colors and blasting ballads, by the second half this viewer was on the verge of begging the screen to cut the music and switch to dialogue. Where Chicago was able to mix sassy and smart lyrics with a quick moving story line, Dreamgirls uses more music and not enough dialogue, which made it feel like I was at a concert rather than sitting in a theatre. Nevertheless, the film sure makes you want to clap along with the music.

'Freedom' teaches same old lesson

By David Humphreys
Collegian Correspondent

"Freedom Writers" does for the 2000's what "Stand and Deliver" did for the 1980's except with less fun, not as many life lessons, and more drama. The basic concept behind "Freedom Writers," is that even underprivileged inner-city youth deserve the same opportunities that suburban white kids do.

It is a true message that the film sometimes overlooks in order to add senseless scenes to help create "emotion." While not everything in "Freedom Writers" is perfect, the emotions and overall acting are done, for the most part, superbly. Let's use the "Sergio Leone" method of evaluation.

FREEDOM WRITERS

DIRECTED BY RICHARD LAGRAVENESES

STARRING HILARY SWANK

GRADE: B-

The good: While first impressions are always the best, sometimes actors can overcome a weak beginning to a film by creating a strong middle and end. Hilary Swank, playing the part of a teacher named Erin Gruwell, managed to do just that in "Freedom Writers." As the movie started, she seemed too fake in her portrayal of a real-life person. She seemed like she was, unfortunately, acting the part.

As the movie progressed though, more specifically at the start of her first monologue, there was a change in both her attitude as an actor, her character as a teacher, and the audience's reaction to the film. It's a truly moving scene. One of the best parts of "Freedom Writers" is the number of emotional scenes. While some came across as over-the-top, many were really touching and made the experience worthwhile.

The bad: The main place where "Freedom Writers" went wrong was by having scenes that did not contribute to the overall message of the film. Although these scenes helped with character development, there could have been some added scenes that developed characters more thoroughly while sticking to the central theme a little better. Also, the intensity of the film wavered throughout. The first third of the movie is full of racial tension and, although the tension's eventually lost, the intensity dies with it. If "Freedom Writers" is a truly great film, the same intensity showed by racism would have been carried through the film by other driving forces.

The ugly: The film is one of the most slowly moving movies of this year. With a two hour running time, "Freedom Writers" really feels much longer. Classroom scenes need to be amped up and given a boost of pizzazz or even just better dialogue. The problem in the dialogue was not in its simplicity, but in its monotony. Although some scenes were quite moving, the bulk of the talking in the movie just seemed canned and passé.

"Freedom Writers," although it has its shining moments, really ends up being an attempt to create a reaction from the audience while trying to force emotions where there aren't any. At some times the actors, script, and direction fall together so perfectly but at other times they seem so distant. "Freedom Writers" is definitely a good film if you are into movies about education, but it lacks the substance to make it truly great. If you were expecting the next Hillary Swank Academy Award, look somewhere else. She gives a great emotional performance but the rest of the movie does not fall neatly into place around her.

'Museum' alive on big screen

By Christina Fong
Collegian Staff

Who knew museums could be so much fun? Apparently the museums knew, and all it took was a huge blockbuster movie to advertise just how much fun they can be.

Ben Stiller plays Larry Daley, a man with unstable career plans and an unstable life. Daley takes on a job as the new night guard at the Museum of Natural History in New York City in order to mend a weakening relationship with his son and minimize his ex-wife's concerns. Before his first night, the three elderly night guards he's replacing fail to mention a small curse that brings everything in the museum to life at night. Larry soon learns about the curse the hard way when he discovers the fossils of a T-Rex drinking from a water fountain.

With the Museum of Natural History as the movie's backdrop movie, the list of fantastical characters is long and a whole lot of fun. Among the diverse and amusing cast is a mischievous monkey named Dexter, a playful and oddly funny Easter Island head, a group of Neanderthals experiencing the magic of fire once again, and the many other exhibition pieces.

Among the most recognizable were Robin Williams (Mrs. Doubtfire) and Owen Wilson (Wedding Crashers) who played Teddy Roosevelt and a miniature cowboy named Jedadiah, respectively.

NIGHT AT THE MUSEUM

DIRECTED BY SHAWN LEVY

STARRING BEN STILLER

GRADE: B+

FOX 2000 PICTURES

Ben Stiller, as Larry Daley in recent comedy "Night at the Museum," has an encounter with a miniature cowboy played by Owen Wilson.

US president Teddy Roosevelt, acts as a sort of mentor figure helping Stiller round up the chaos that ensues each night. Williams contributed some of the same familiar impersonation humor he does in almost all his films.

The movie turned out to be more humorous and enjoyable than initially expected. Director Shawn Levy (The Pink Panther) did a great job mixing childlike fun and more mature humor that makes the film perfect for children, adults, and everyone in between. It includes good old getting bit on the nose by a monkey-slapstick humor, some satirical dialogue and a tiny bit of wit.

Most of the fun came from the many interactions between Stiller and the rest of the museum's inhabitants. The most memorable two were Jedadiah (Wilson) and Octavius (Steve Coogan, Around the World in 80 Days), the comical duo whose quarreling later manifests into an all-out battle of the miniature cowboys and Romans. Reunited again, Stiller and Wilson score with a humorous bit by calling each other "Gigantor" and "Tiny."

But of course Stiller and Dexter did have a lovely relationship of their own. Getting urinated on by a monkey will definitely get a few laughs from the audience, as well as the many other pranks they pull on each other. In reference to the Easter Island Head, there are only two words: Dumb, dumb.

Williams' character, former

Night at the Museum could've done without the father-son morality lesson, but still the movie turned out pretty well. Full of laughs and action, this movie is perfect for a night of pure uncomplicated fun.

SPORTSMONDAY

School's in session

Minutemen get off to familiar 4-2 start in Atlantic 10 play

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

(Eds. Note: UMass played Charlotte after this article went to press. Check tomorrow's Collegian for coverage of that game.)

If you happened to sleep your winter break away this year, when you hit the sack, the Massachusetts men's basketball team was 8-2, with losses coming at No. 4 Pittsburgh and to Boston College at home.

You can wake up now.

The Minutemen are still on the winning track. They went 6-4 while school was in recess, and now stand at 14-6 overall. That's including UMass' 4-2 start in Atlantic 10 play, which began back on Jan. 6 with a 79-71 win over La Salle (9-11, 2-4 A-10).

Since the opening night of conference play, the Minutemen won three of the next five, and are coming off a 75-72 loss to Rhode Island (13-8, 6-1 A-10) on Wednesday night. UMass went into that game with a milestone 101-87 win over Duquesne (6-11, 2-4 A-10) on Jan. 21.

The victory over the Dukes not only marked the first time UMass scored 100 points in the Mullins Center, but it also showed a quick recovery from a tough loss just two nights prior.

Xavier (13-6, 3-2 A-10) defeated UMass 83-77 in Cincinnati on Jan. 18, giving the Minutemen their first A-10 loss of the season.

"I thought our team played with a lot of heart today," UMass coach Travis Ford said after the game. "I was proud of our effort. I don't like losing, but we played hard tonight. We did some good things."

The Minutemen ended the first half on an 11-0 run and went into the break down 37-36. The Musketeers took a 61-60 lead with 7:36 to play in the second half, and began to pull away. A late UMass comeback fell short when Xavier hit six consecutive free throws in the final 30 seconds after junior Etienne Browers's 3-pointer brought the Maroon and White within two at 77-75.

"I told our team at halftime that being down one, I would have taken this," Ford said. "I knew they were going to come out after a tough loss and be really jacked up to play.

"When you come into a gym like this against a very good team that's coming off a loss, there's a very small room for error," Ford added. "And we just made a few errors here and there. One error was in the first half, we gave up too many layups, and we gave up too many 3's. And those two errors were the difference in the game."

There were seven ties and 12 lead changes in the game. Xavier's 13-point free throw advantage made another big difference in the battle between the A-10's preseason No. 1 and No. 2 teams. The Musketeers were 15-for-22 from the line, while the Minutemen hit two of a stingy four free throws all game.

"I would have thought it was absolutely, 100% impossible that we would only shoot four free throws, and Rashaun Freeman and Stephane Lasme not shoot any," Ford said. "We're a team that force feeds the post. We come down and throw it inside every single time, and we only shoot four free throws, and those guys don't shoot any."

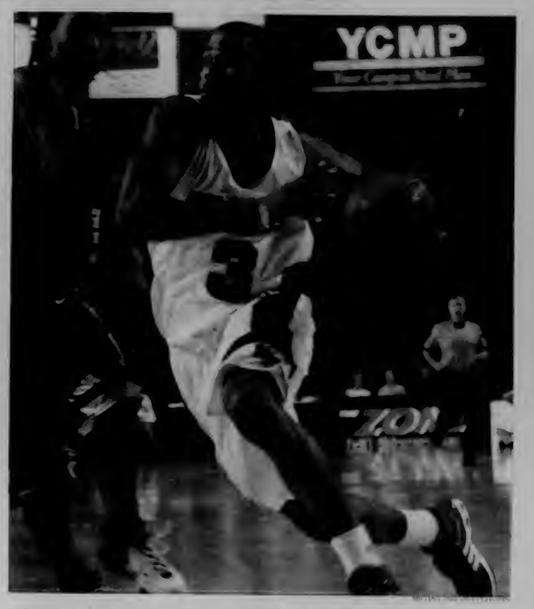
In between the first conference victory over La Salle and the most recent over Duquesne, UMass had established themselves as anything but pretenders with wins over Temple (7-10, 1-4 A-10) and George Washington (14-4, 5-1 A-10).

In particular, the win over George Washington, 91-84, was the one that stood out the most, only because the Colonials have been one of the elite teams in the A-10 for the past few seasons. It also ended GW's 18-game regular season in-conference win streak.

"This type of game gives us more confidence in the A-10," Freeman said after the win. "I think the rest of the A-10 was looking at this game to see who was the bigger team. It's exciting because [George Washington] has held down the A-10 for a few years now, so it was a quality win."

George Washington went on a 20-4 run to cut a 17-point UMass lead down to just one at 60-59 with nine minutes left in the second half. Guards Maureece Rice and Carl Elliott led the charge for the Colonials, finishing the game with 30 and 19 points,

See M. BASKETBALL on page C12



Junior Gary Forbes and the UMass men's basketball team are tied for third place in the Atlantic 10 with Fordham and Xavier. Forbes is fourth on the team in scoring with 12.1 points per game.

UM breaks even over winter break

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

(Eds. Note: UMass played two games after this article was sent to press. Check tomorrow's Collegian for coverage of the Minutemen's games against UMass Lowell and Boston University.)

The Massachusetts hockey team struggled with consistency over the winter break. After playing well during the first half of the 2006-07 season, it stumbled out of the blocks at the Dodge Holiday Classic and followed that with an up-and-down January.

After a tough loss to New Hampshire on Jan. 19 in Durham, UMass coach Don Cahoon voiced his displeasure with the Minutemen's winter performance.

"Not as good as we need to be," he said about UMass' quality of play in the early stages of the second half. "We're not really sharp. I don't think I think we just appear to be a little bit hesitant and a little bit sloppy."

But the homestretch of the season may favor the Minutemen (11-8-3, 8-6-1 Hockey East). Of their final 12 games, seven of them will be played at the Mullins Center.

Junior assistant captain P.J. Fenton played well against UML on Jan. 12. He recorded a goal and an assist in the 5-1 UMass victory.

UMass enjoys a 9-1-1 record at home, as of press time.

Now here's a look at what happened during the Mass Attack's 3-3-1 winter break.

UMass 3, UNH 0

UMass took the season series from UNH (18-4-1, 13-2-1 HEA) with its second victory over the No. 2 Wildcats at the Mullins Center.

the Minutemen beat the then-No. 8 Wildcats in Durham in late October.

"I'm really proud for our kids because we've been struggling to put three periods together, we've been struggling to do a lot of the little things," Cahoon said. "New Hampshire's had a lot of those games where they put it all together and we're struggling to find ourselves."

The win on Jan. 20 was the first-career shutout for Jon Quick. He turned away 27 shots in the contest, including 12 in the first period. Seven of those came on UNH power plays.

Sophomore Cory Quirk got the Minutemen on the board late in the second quarter after both sides couldn't light the lamp through nearly 34 minutes of play. UNH goalie Brian Foster saved an initial try by David Leaderer. Reacting quickly, Quirk slapped the bouncing rebound past Foster before he had time to recover.

Freshman winger Will Ortiz owned the third period. He scored two goals eight minutes apart to seal the win for the Minutemen. The first came at the 2:29 mark of the third.

Positioned in the low slot, Ortiz gained control of the puck, but began falling to his right. Showing a superb amount of athletic ability he was still able to fire off an accurate wrist shot that beat Foster.

He capped the scoring at 10:24 when Foster left another rebound in front of the crease. Senior Kevin Jarman took the initial shot that Foster turned away. However, the goalie wasn't able to recover in time and Ortiz slapped the puck into a wide open net with the goalie stuck at the other post.

UNH 5, UMass 1

The game at the Whittemore Center didn't begin the way UMass hoped, given its recent success in Durham.

Trevor Smith opened the scoring with a power-play goal at 11:52 of the first. The period was already favoring the Wildcats and the Chris Davis slashing penalty gave them more momentum. Smith gained control of the puck in the high slot and skated in alone on Jon Quick. After putting a move on, Smith stuffed the puck around the net-minder.

"Well the game ended like it started," Cahoon said. "The first 10 minutes it was all UNH. They were quick and reading plays real well."

Freshman Peter LeBlanc, playing in place of the injured Jacob MacIlfatrick, doubled UNH's advantage just two minutes later. LeBlanc and Brett Hemingway skated into the zone against three UMass defenders. Quick saved Hemingway's initial shot but left the rebound out front. With confusion in front of the net, LeBlanc sent it in for the first tally of his career.

Senior Chris Capraro cut the deficit in half with UNH's Jamie Fritsch in the box for cross-checking. Mike Kostka fired a slap shot from the point that was stopped by Kevin Regan, but he couldn't control the puck. Capraro collected it right in front and unsettled Regan with a deke. With the goalie off balance Capraro wristed the puck in for his fifth this season.

But the rest of the game would be all Wildcats. They netted three unanswered goals over the course of the final period and a half of play.

See HOCKEY on page C6

Junior Dan Rosario ranks third on UMass in scoring with 11.3 points per game. The Minutewomen have struggled in A-10 play thus far.

Minutewomen falter in conference play

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

(Eds. Note: The Minutewomen played three games since this article went to press. Check tomorrow's Collegian for coverage of UMass' games against La Salle, Saint Louis and Charlotte.)

While the rest of the student body was getting reacquainted with old friends from home, the Massachusetts women's basketball team (10-8, 0-3 Atlantic 10) dropped a number of crucial games to put themselves in a difficult position.

League play hasn't been kind to the Minutewomen in the early going, as they find themselves tied for last in the conference. They've fallen in six of their last seven games, including all three games within the A-10.

Despite the rough beginning to conference play, UMass coach Marnie Dacko remains optimistic that there is plenty of time remaining to steer the team in the right direction.

"I absolutely think there is enough time to battle back," she said. "There are enough teams that can get upset, but we have to take care of UMass. We just need to focus on our ability to prepare ourselves for practice and for games, and we have to stay positive."

Further adding to the disap-

See W. BASKETBALL on page C6

SPORTS INDEX

M. Basketball	C10, C12
Hockey	C6, C7, C8, C9
W. Basketball	C5, C6
Swimming	C2, C3
Track	C4

UMass utilizes training opportunities

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

(Eds Note The swimming and diving teams competed against Boston College, Colgate and Binghampton after this article went to press. Check tomorrow's Collegian for coverage of those meets.)

For many students at UMass, the break between fall and spring semesters is too long. Most schools return for their spring semester long before UMass does and when it's finally over, that final week seems longer than the subsequent semester. But for the Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving teams, the opposite is true.

After just over a week at home for the holidays, men's coach Russ Yarworth, women's coach Bob Newcomb and diving coach Mandy Hixon welcomed their squads back to Amherst to continue training in hopes of victory in Buffalo, N.Y., at the Atlantic 10 Championships, slated for Feb. 21-24.

Immediately upon the swimmers' return, the coaches got them right back in the pool to make up for the week off.

The time off barely affected the performances of the Minutemen. Before the team left for a nine-day training trip to Puerto Rico on Jan. 2, the team was in good spirits and even better condition considering the layoff.

"The kids came back with a good attitude and ready to go," Yarworth said. "Training was really good before we left for Puerto Rico and I think the work we did during the fall really paid off as we got into the training trip."

While in Puerto Rico, the Minutemen did get an opportunity to enjoy the climate in Puerto Rico – but the trip was certainly a working vacation. They practiced daily and took part in an unscored team event – the Loyola Invitational.

"Puerto Rico was great," Yarworth exclaimed. "It was warm and it was sunny. The training was incredible. I think the kids figured it out that we had 21 practices in 13 days."

See SWIMMING on page C3

Size vs. skill

UMass swimmer Evan Swisher defies 'bigger is better' notion

By Joe Melone
Collegian Staff

[illegible] basketball, you can't teach [illegible] and in football, rushing [illegible] is awfully hard when you're standing in front of you [illegible] 300 pounds. It's a lot easier for a 6-foot-5 pitcher to throw [illegible] than it is for a 5-foot-9 [illegible]. The point of all of this [illegible] is that in most sports, skills are [illegible] but size is at a premium.

Swimming, however, is not [illegible] of these sports. And as far as UMass senior Evan Swisher is concerned, there's absolutely nothing wrong with that.

Standing 6-foot-1 and weighing 150 pounds, Evan is anything but small. But when he steps to the starting block flanked by a 6-foot-4 swimmer and a 6-foot-1 swimmer, he may be smaller. But there is just one thing on the mind of this Bennington, Vt., native – "These guys can't [illegible]."

"I guess what I like about [swimming] is that it's a sport where it's not really about size and strength. It's about skill," Evan says. "So I can be up against some kid who's 6-foot-5, 6-foot-4 and he may be a lot bigger and stronger than I am, but if he doesn't have the same kind of feel for the water, I can beat him."

After a successful high school and club career, Swisher received no attention from Division I swimming programs. It wasn't until after he committed to UMass that he realized there was a mistake in his NCAA Clearinghouse information.

That very feel for the water is what enabled Evan to not just swim at such a high level, but succeed and become the accomplished swimmer he has become.

Swimming has been a part of Evan's life for as long as he can remember. He started swimming competitively at the age of seven. His older sister swam in meets all around New England and Evan's parents dragged him along for the ride. Eventually, Evan decided that the role of spectator just wasn't for him and asked his parents to sign him up.

It started out, as sports to do for most children, as just something to do – a pastime whose only real purpose is to teach children different lessons about life. But as he matured and spent more time in the pool, it was obvious to anyone watching that Evan wasn't just swimming. He was winning, and easily at that. And at the age of 10, Evan qualified for the United States Eastern Zone Meet held at Princeton University.

The best young swimmers from different zones in the Northeast and Mid-Atlantic regions of the United States were there. Evan recalls this as the first time he realized swimming could be more to him than just another activity. He performed very well in his first test against nationally renowned competition. One event in particular sticks out in Evan's mind. It was a third-place finish, but considering what he now knows about the winner of this particular race, third place was pretty good.

"I raced [Olympic gold-medalist] Michael Phelps actually in the [50-yard] backstroke and I came in third, he obviously won," Evan says. "He set a national record or something."

Around the age of 12, however, Evan began to gravitate away from swimming. It was still something he enjoyed doing, but as a 12-year-old boy in Vermont, your peers don't exactly shower you with praise for being a gifted swimmer. Very close to quitting the sport altogether at age of 14, Evan took place in another Eastern Zone Meet and again something happened that became a benchmark in his swimming career.

"When I was 14 I had been really down on swimming for a long time," Evan recalls. "But I went to the Eastern Zone Meet again and I dropped two full seconds off my [100-yard backstroke] time in one day. That really got me charged back up about swimming."

Since then, swimming has remained a large part of Evan's life and is something he genuinely loves to do. He competed in high school but the competition wasn't really up to par. As most NCAA Division I swimmers do, Evan competed for a series of club teams to improve and to compete against first-class competition – the last of these club teams was the Adirondack Bluefins. Evan continued his progression as a swimmer under the watchful eye of his coaches and became one of the club's better swimmers and one of Vermont's best.

UMASS/COURTESY MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Evan Swisher almost walked away from swimming at a young age, but increasing success made him stick with it. Now his time of 1:48.56 is good for both the UMass and Joseph R. Rogers Jr. Pool records.

Planning to swim at the collegiate level, Evan registered with the NCAA Clearinghouse, hoping to be recruited by coaches from Division I swimming programs, or so he thought. The process seemed simple enough and Evan appeared destined for a place in a top-flight swimming program. There was just one problem: he didn't get any responses. Not that he got responses from schools he wasn't interested in, he got no responses whatsoever – no phone calls, no e-mails, nothing.

Resigned to the fact that he wouldn't get any offers, Evan decided UMass was the place for him, whether swimming was to be part of college for him or not. Evan did still want to swim, so he reached out to UMass men's swimming coach Russ Yarworth, whose response was encouraging but slightly confusing at the same time.

"When I signed up for the Clearinghouse, on my mom's credit card, they thought her '1' was a '7.' So it didn't go through, they just canceled it, and I should've checked online to make sure it passed but I didn't," Evan regrets. "So I ended up contacting Russ to see if I could swim for him. He told me I could but I'd need to register with the Clearinghouse first."

Years of training and practice to fine tune his skills nearly went to waste because of a misread digit. But Evan amended the situation, re-filed with the Clearinghouse and enrolled at UMass.

Evan has maintained his excellence in the backstroke throughout his time as a swimmer, and has been the best in the backstroke for the Minutemen since he arrived in Amherst – more specifically the 200-yard backstroke. One would think that Evan's success in the event is why he considers it his favorite. But the reason he provided demonstrates the heady approach to swimming that Yarworth demands from his swimmers and transformed Evan from just another collegiate swimmer into a nationally heralded backstroke specialist.

"It's the event that I'm best in but also, it's still a sprint, but my stroke really fits the 200 the best," Swisher declares. "I feel like I'm rushing when I swim the 100 and even more when I do a 50. But when I swim the 200, it just feels so natural."

Evan used that feel for the 200-yard backstroke to etch himself a permanent place in the UMass record books. As a freshman, he won the Atlantic 10 Championship in the event recording a time of 1:51.68. In November of this year, Evan broke the school record in the event with a time of 1:48.63 – former UMass swimmer Justin Houck established the mark during the 2001-02 season. Then, in the final home meet of his career on Jan. 27, Evan broke the record once again, this time completing the race in 1:48.56.

"I was really happy for Evan. I told him after the race that a huge monkey just walked out of here," Yarworth said after Evan broke the record at Boston University in November. "He's worked really hard and it was just really cool for him and for me."

Since Swisher's victory, George Washington's David Zenk has won the event both times at the A-10 Championships. But the loss that hurt Evan the most was UMass' second-place finish at the A-10 Championships last season. Saint Bonaventure unseated the Minutemen as conference team champions for the first time in five years.

"It'd be great to win [the 200-yard backstroke] again," Evan says. "But my goals for this year are to win the A-10 [Team] Championship again and I want to get NCAA consideration."

Achieving the goals he sets for himself in the pool is, obviously, of the utmost importance to Evan, but he refuses to be defined as just a swimmer. He took part in the UMass student orchestra as a cellist, and he is also an accomplished pianist. He played in various school orchestras while in high school and junior high as well. The major Evan selected also allowed him to find an aspect of UMass that appealed to him.

"I like UMass because it's big enough that you can sort of make what you want out of it," Evan says. "I'm a social thought and political economy major and it's a really small major so it kind of shrinks the size of the school."

The program also introduced Evan to a few areas of study that peak his interest greatly.

"My favorite classes are philosophy and sociology courses," Evan says. "I like toying around with the different ideas. But some of the politics stuff just gets kind of dry."

Entering his final semester at UMass, Evan is forced to confront his future. At the moment, he doesn't really know what he is going to do or who he is going to be. Evan provided a few suggestions as to what he may do for a living when he leaves the Pioneer Valley for good.

"I'm not really sure. I don't have a specific career path lined up or anything. There's going to be a few years of figuring things out," Evan says. "I don't know, I really don't know. I could go any number of different ways but I'm going to need a few years to figure it out. I think swimming will always be there and coaching will always be something to fall back on, especially if I go the grad school route."

But considering one of his suggestions, it doesn't appear to be a topic he is too concerned about at this very moment.

"I wouldn't be surprised if I end up being a ski bum or something and working at a mountain giving kids snowboard lessons," Evan jokes. "I worked at a mountain for two years in high school teaching three-to-five-year-olds how to ski. It was really fun."

Regardless of where he ends up, the time Evan spent in Amherst has greatly changed him. Not only has he blossomed as a swimmer and a person, but his confidence in himself has grown exponentially. Considering what he has achieved since arriving in Amherst, it was only a matter of time.

UMASS/COURTESY MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Swisher has had a very successful career at UMass, but like many college students his future remains uncertain. With minimal professional swimming opportunities, he says he may become a "ski bum."

MONEY FOR COLLEGE
NOW
Because Aunt Joan needed more Botox®.
She got a facelift, you got the tuition bill.
Not to worry. a Campus Door student loan can cover up to 100% of your education costs, with online approval in less than a minute.
All without the painful side effects.
campusdoor.com
CAMPUSDOOR
GREAT FUTURES START HERE®
Botox® is a registered trademark of Allergan, Inc.
All loans are subject to credit approval. Programs, rates, terms and conditions are subject to change without notice. Other restrictions apply. Trade/Servicemarks are the property of Campus Door Inc. and/or its affiliates. Lender is Lehman Brothers Bank, FSB. ©2006 Campus Door Inc. All Rights Reserved. Equal Opportunity Lender

UMass puts in winter practice

Men's swimming and diving teams take 11 events at URI

SWIMMING from page C1

The trip was especially nice for freshman Juan Moliere who is from Puerto Rico's capital of San Juan.

"[Juan] loved it. He acted like the 'Host with the Most' while we were down there," Yarworth said. "We swam at his club pool, so that was really nice and he was happy to see the team."

The Minutemen then traveled to the campus of the University of Rhode Island for the Rhode Island Invitational where they met three A-10 foes – George Washington, La Salle and the host Rhode Island Rams.

The Maroon and White took first place in 11 events including victories by freshmen Justin Brooks and Moliere.

Yarworth needs continued contributions from his freshmen if the Minutemen are to capture their sixth conference crown in seven years – Saint Bonaventure defeated the Minutemen at last year's A-10 Championships.

Part of becoming a championship caliber team is overcoming adversity. The Minutemen have faced their fair share of adversity this season in the form of injuries – diver R.J. Rappe struggled earlier in the year with a hernia.

Now, junior A.J. Vozella could be out for the season with an undisclosed illness, and Moliere has also struggled with illness. Sophomore Nate Bromage is fighting a sprained ankle. Senior Mike Cordes is suffering from an undisclosed injury and freshman Mike Berthaume's shoulder has given him some problems recently.

Injuries aside, the Minutemen are in good shape heading into the second half of the season. Yarworth firmly believes in building his program around swimmers that excel in the individual medley. The versatility of these swimmers augments the team's depth greatly.

Senior Evan Swisher and Bromage are amongst those who can step in on the freestyle when called upon.

The Minutewomen also took well to their time off. Once back in Amherst, the Maroon and White began preparation for the trip to Puerto Rico and continued the successful training on the trip.

"We came back to Amherst and had a real good series of workouts before we went down to Puerto Rico," Newcomb said. "I think the combination of getting them together as a group and then the 10 days of long-course training was good for us."

The pools that UMass used while on the trip were Olympic-size pools. Rather than the 25-yard laps the teams are accustomed to, they swam 50-yard laps. The difference in distant intensified the training for Newcomb and his squad.

Although difficult, the training will prove worthwhile in February at the A-10 Championships.

Unlike the men, the Minutewomen report a clean bill of health. Minor injuries undoubtedly are a concern but no swimmers should miss any time.

One swimmer that did miss time during the first half of the season is senior Nicole LeBarge, who spent the fall semester of school abroad in Italy.

LeBarge is one of the team's best freestyle sprinters. She swam the lead leg for the Minutewomen on last year's A-10 Champion 200-yard freestyle relay that set a school record of 1:35.73. Collegiate swimming slants heavily in favor of sprinters. LeBarge's return enhances the Minutewomen's depth but also gives them another top-flight sprinter. She also ranks third all-time at UMass in the 50-yard freestyle.

LeBarge's swimming I.Q. and demeanor are also welcomed additions to the Minutewomen.

"She's incredibly experienced and brings a lot to the table; personality, work ethic and sheer speed," Newcomb said. "We're looking for a 50 and a 100 out of her and that's really all we need."

LeBarge's savvy will go a long way to offset the inevitable fatigue of some of the Maroon and White's freshman swimmers. Freshman Kathryne Chalikis performed extremely well in the first half of the season and will need to maintain the consistent excellence she displayed.

"Freshmen always go through it. You notice that the freshmen need more time to adapt to [collegiate swimming]," Newcomb said. "You look for your seniors to lead your group through and that's what we've been getting. Our upperclassmen have done a good job showing the freshmen that you can swim strong races even when you're as tired as they are."

The Minutewomen took part in the Rhode Island Invitational and performed just as well. All of the participant schools were coming off training trips, so everyone was at the same place when they swam.

"All of the schools has just gotten back from their training trip and were in a state of exhaustion and we did well," Newcomb said. "We showed that we've got good depth and a lot of talent."

Picked to finish third in the conference, the Minutewomen know they have the ability to finish higher and are in great shape to do so as they move towards the A-10 Championships.

Senior Liz Lovejoy ranks sixth in UMass history in the 200-yard butterfly with a time of 2:09.62 and eighth in the 100-yard butterfly (59.35).

Karen Upperco won the women's three-meter diving event at the Rhode Island Invitational and also took third in the one-meter dive.

Trip to Puerto Rico provides preparation

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Although the New England winter has been relatively mild this year, the Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving teams escaped to a much warmer climate.

For eight days in January, the players and coaches put in some hard work and relaxation in San Juan, Puerto Rico – preparing for the final part of the swimming season.

"The kids really enjoyed being there," UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth said. "We did a super job – the kids trained hard and we were able to get away from school for a few days, which is good. We took some side trips and were able to spend a day visiting a rain forest. But we definitely focused on our training."

On Jan. 6, both the men's and women's teams competed in the Loyola Invitational against Colgate and the local Loyola club team. Although the meet was informal in nature it provided both teams with the opportunity to practice swimming competitively in a foreign environment.

The Maroon and White won't see the Loyola swimmers until next year, but both squads face Colgate again on Jan. 27. This time the meet will include America East school, Binghamton, and feature team scores.

Regardless of the Puerto Rican weather and the opportunity to relax on the beach, the trip is more about tradition for Yarworth. Back in the 1980s and '90s, he maintained a nationally ranked men's water polo program and he recruited many of his players from the San Juan area. In fact, a significant number were from the same Loyola club that swam against the Maroon and White in the invitational. Freshman Juan Moliere is the latest product of Yarworth's connections to the area.

"Juan knew the Loyola kids when he was a little kid," Yarworth said. "When we were down there last year training, I met Juan and we talked about the possibility of him coming to UMass and it came to fruition. He's been a great addition to our program and he's a great kid and student."

And Moliere certainly brought impressive credentials to the Minutemen. He owns records in the 50- and 100-meter freestyle events at the Collegio San Ignacio High School.

True to his predecessors from the island, Moliere has already proved that he can compete at the college level in his freshman year. Against Army on Oct. 28, Moliere won the 50-yard freestyle, edging sophomore teammate Nate Bromage with a time of 21.43 seconds.

Moliere has also been an integral part of the Minutemen's 400-yard freestyle relay team. He swims the first leg of the race, along with fellow freshman Trevor Ziegler and juniors A.J. Vozella and Zack Priest.

Even if this year's trip doesn't lead to any future UMass recruits, Yarworth believes the trip was well worth it for his swimmers.

"It was just a great trip and the team came back in tremendous shape," Yarworth said. "It should set us up well for the rest of the season."

Senior Mike Herald came in sixth place in the 100-yard butterfly at the Rhode Island Invitational. UMass placed first out of four teams.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

EARRINGS • INCENSE • DRESSES • SKIRTS • RUGS
JOURNALS • CANDLES • INCENSE
GIFTS • TOYS • RUG BOWLS • CARDS • SWEATERS
THE MERCANTILE HAS TAPESTRIES!
AND COOL POSTERS!
TheMercantile
Northampton 199 Main St. 586-1205
Amherst Carriage Shops 549-1396
Mon-Fri: 10-9 Sat: 10-6 Sun: 12-5
JEWELRY • GODDESSES • SILVER RINGS • TAPESTRIES • RUGS • PILLOWS

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Rd. (At Echo Hill)
Amherst • 256-6446
Off Rte. 9, two miles east of Amherst College
OPEN 6AM-10AM MON-FRI
8AM-9PM SAT & SUN
★Swimming ★Tennis
★Basketball ★Fitness
COMPETITIVE BASKETBALL GAMES w/ JERRY Mon/Thurs 6-8pm
OVER 30 FREE CLASSES WEEKLY
HAMPFIT.COM for Rates & Info
Join Now
Winter Special
$188/ 15 Weeks
Student Rate
EFT available

2 out of 3 UMass students have 4 or fewer drinks when they party.
Based on a 2006 CCPI survey of UMass students
We got the facts from you.
Campus and Community Coalition
University Health Services
Health Education

GW enjoys highest ranking in 14 years

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

At the beginning of the 2006-07 college basketball season the George Washington Colonials (14-2, 3-0 Atlantic 10) were on the fringe of the Associated Press Top 25 Poll. A hot start including a key win over nationally ranked Georgia and a three-game win streak to kick off A-10 play has the Colonials occupying the No. 15 spot in the AP poll as of Jan. 17 – their highest ranking since they sat at No. 11 during the 1992-93 campaign.

The Colonials won their first five games during the school's winter break, and did so by an average of 8.4 points per game.

They held off Richmond to preserve a 79-50 victory on Jan. 9 in their A-10 opener. Sophomore Jazmine Adair came off the bench to record her first career double-double with 11 points and 10 rebounds. Junior Chrissy Allen and senior Kenan Ergin added 14 points each for GW.

The Colonials traveled to the Atlantic 10 their next contest against Saint Louis. George Washington jumped out to a 16-point lead at the break and quashed any chance of a late rally by the Rams, holding them to 3-of-21 shooting and forcing 14 turnovers. The Colonials dominated the game inside, scoring 42 points in the paint.

The win left GW coach Joe Mihalich one shy of the 400th of his career. Mihalich reached that mark the next time out when his team defeated UMass, 61-48.

Explorers ride Hightower and Ricketts

The La Salle Explorers (14-4, 2-1 A-10) hoped to get off to a good start in conference play to match the torrid pace they established during non-conference play.

The Explorers defeated Fordham, 69-59, in their first league game, only to fall to Saint Joseph's on the road three days later. Despite 20-point efforts from both junior Carlene Hightower and senior Crista Ricketts, the Explorers fell, 71-60.

Hightower earned A-10 Player of the Week honors for her performance in the first three games of conference play.

Two days after that, La Salle got back on stride, squeaking past Temple, Hand, 61-57. Ricketts led the Explorers' charge with 17 points and 10 boards, for her seventh double-double of the season and 20th of her career. Hightower poured in a game-high 26 points – her fifth straight game with at least 20 points.

The Explorers hit the road for their next two games, traveling to St. Bonaventure and UMass before their next home games, including a rematch with GW on Jan. 28.

Hawks' wings clipped

All A-10 coaches are notorious for their use of cliches when describing what a team needs to do to be successful. Consistency is always one of the most used topics and the Saint Joseph's Hawks (15-5, 1-2 A-10) are a perfect example why.

SJU has defeated strong teams including Boston College and La Salle, while failing to weaker opponents like Virginia Commonwealth and Western Carolina.

It might be less to cross-town rival Temple started the Hawks' A-10 schedule. The Owls held a 16-point lead with 8:35 remaining in regulation, but the Hawks went on a 13-1 run to tie the game and force overtime. Hawks guard Aybanna Cornish had a chance on an inbound pass with 1.6 seconds left, but tipped the ball right to a Temple player who made an easy layup to seal the victory.

The Explorers La Salle followed, but Hightower dropped a 64-57 decision to Rhode Island in their next game.

Rams charge halted

After a terrible start to their season, and conference play, the Saint Louis Rams (4-13, 2-1 A-10) have won two games in the A-10 against opponents. Both were hard-fought contest

La Salle junior Carlene Hightower scored a team-high 12 points in the Explorers' 49-47 loss to UMass on Jan. 22.

A-10 Basketball

to La Salle.

URI defeated UMass in overtime in its A-10 opener. The Rams held a two-point advantage over the Minutewomen at the half and held them off in overtime, defeating them by the same margin.

Junior guard Safi Mojidi scored 21 points and handed out five assists in the game to go along with 22 from sophomore guard Amanda McGrew off the bench.

Mojidi and McGrew led the way again in URI's victory over Duquesne on Jan. 12. The Dukes built an early advantage before McGrew hit consecutive 3-pointers and the Rams took a 33-29 lead into the locker room.

URI held a two-point lead with just under 15 minutes remaining before going on a 20-4 run to take an 18-point lead. The game ended with URI on the right side of a 74-57 decision. The loss to La Salle ended the Rams' two-game win streak.

49ers are good as gold

After a tough stretch that produced three consecutive losses, the Charlotte 49ers (12-6, 3-0 A-10) have won eight of their last nine, including their last five contests and first three conferences games.

Charlotte's win streak began with two non-conference victories at Clemson and at home against Winthrop before its A-10 schedule got under way.

The 49ers opened up the A-10 portion of their schedule against Saint Louis, winning 74-49. Junior guard Whitney Hoey led all scorers with 18 points on 7-of-15 shooting. Fellow guard, freshman Aysha Jones, added 17 points for the 49ers.

The Dayton Flyers came to town next and promptly went down, 82-70. Freshman Wendy Stywalt had a game-high 22 points on her way to A-10 Rookie of the Week honors.

The 49ers' toughest game came in their 61-59 victory over Xavier. Sophomore center Danielle Burgin led all scorers with 22 points.

Owls soar in 10 straight

At the end of November, the Temple Owls (13-4, 3-0 A-10) dropped three-of-four games – all three of the losses came to teams from the Atlantic Coast Conference. Since then, the Owls have won 10 straight, including victories in their first three conference games.

Temple rode a double-double from senior Lady Comfort to a 59-53 win over St. Joe's before traveling to Olean, N.Y. to battle the Bonnies of Saint Bonaventure. Senior forward Kamesha Hairston led all scorers with 20 points in the Owls' 73-55 victory.

The Owls laid a beating on Fordham in their next game, holding the Rams to just 34 points in a 62-34 win. Temple takes on UMass in its next time out.

Spiders look to spin web of wins

The Richmond Spiders (8-10, 2-1 A-10) are off to a great start in conference games to offset their poor non-conference record.

Richmond defeated inconsistent UMass and St. Joe's teams in response to a loss to conference powerhouse George Washington in the Spiders' A-10 debut.

Sophomore guard Johanna McKnight led all scorers in the Spiders' 46-40 defeat of the Minutewomen. She came off the bench to score 17 points. The Spiders shot 48 percent from the field in the second half, improving the 36.4 percent mark they set in the first half.

At halftime of their 64-57 double-overtime victory over St. Joe's, the Spiders were down 29-19. But an inspired second half performance from McKnight and freshman forward Kate Holzer propelled the Spiders back into the game and put them over the top in overtime.

Time to put up your Dukes

The Duquesne Dukes (6-9, 1-2 A-10) have dropped six of their last seven games with their only victory coming in their initial A-10 test against Saint Bonaventure, ending the Bonnies' six-game winning streak.

Senior guard Carmen Bruce led all scorers with 16 points even though she fouled out midway through the second half.

The three Musketeers

Xavier freshman Amber Harris has played 18 games so far in her career and has already broken the school's single season blocks record. She had 64 in her 18 games – the previous record was 39.

But Harris hasn't been the only hero for the Musketeers (13-5, 2-1 A-10). Seniors Suntana Granderson and Joei Clyburn have been stellar as well. In Xavier's conference opener against Dayton, the trio combined for 50 points and grabbed 36 rebounds in the Musketeers 71-54 victory.

Next, Xavier headed to St. Louis for a matchup with the Billikens. Six Musketeers were in double figures. Once again the trio of Harris, Granderson and Clyburn led the way, they combined for 41 points in the 85-61 victory.

Charlotte then outlasted the Musketeers, 61-59, in what was the third conference game for both squads.

Fordham gets Rammed

The Fordham Rams (2-16, 0-3 A-10) started out horribly and haven't gotten any better. They are in the midst of a nine-game losing streak since last winning at home against Manhattan College on Nov. 29.

The Rams average just 48 points a game while allowing more than 70. In their three conference games against La Salle, GW and Temple, they've conceded 71 points per game while netting just 50.

Flyers remain grounded

The Dayton Flyers (6-12, 1-2 A-10) ended a seven-game losing streak with a victory over St. Francis in their final tune-up before A-10 play began. But the Flyers couldn't maintain any momentum, dropping consecutive decisions to Xavier and Charlotte.

Senior Jennifer Strong led the Flyers with 15 points in their loss to Xavier. Junior Nikki Oakland poured on 10 points of her own. Strong leads the Flyers with 14.7 points per game – she also averaged 17 points in Dayton's three A-10 games.

The Flyers defeated Saint Louis for their lone victory, holding off the Billikens 74-67. Strong led the way again with 16 points. Four other Dayton players finished in double figures.

A-10 cools Bonnies off

The Saint Bonaventure Bonnies (10-7, 0-2 A-10) arrived in Pittsburgh to take on Duquesne while riding a six-game winning streak against non-conference opponents.

The Dukes held the Bonnies to just 29.6 percent shooting and 7.1 percent from beyond the arc in defeating St. Bonaventure 55-46.

The Bonnies offense struggled once again at home against Temple, but their defense would be their real doing. The Owls scored 73 points – the second most yielded by the Bonnies this season.

Billikens waste hot start

Since posting a 5-0 record to start the season, the Saint Louis Billikens (7-9, 0-3 A-10) have dropped nine of their last 11 games including their first three A-10 games.

Charlotte and Xavier shredded the Billikens by scores of 74-49 and 85-61, respectively.

Dayton defeated the Billikens by a score of 74-64. Freshman forward Maggie Hennegan led the Billikens with 22 points – three other Billikens were in double figures.

George Washington's Jazmine Adair (above) shares Atlantic 10 Player of the Week honors with Duquesne's Carmen Bruce. Adair averaged a double-double (13.5 points, 12 rebounds) in helping GW win its ninth straight.

UMass track teams get off to fast start

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

(Eds. Note: UMass participated in two meets since this issue went to press. Check tomorrow's Collegian for coverage of the New Hampshire Invitational and the Reebok Boston Indoor Games.)

The Massachusetts track and field teams started their season over the long winter break. The Minutemen raced in their first meet on Jan. 17 at Boston University for the Quad Meet while the Minutewomen started their season a week earlier at the Rhode Island New Year Classic and also participated in the BU Quad Meet.

The Minutemen ran out to an impressive start on the young season, finishing second in the Quad Meet that featured BU, Boston College and Sacred Heart. Senior Erik Hoagland had a strong performance for the Maroon and White. He competed in four events finishing no worse than third.

Hoagland won the triple-jump event with a jump of 14.23 meters. He placed second in the long jump, leaping 6.94 meters, and finished third in the 200-meter dash (22.11 seconds). Hoagland also took second place (6.45) in the 55-meter dash to round out his impressive performance.

Behind Hoagland in the 200-meter dash was junior Nathan Barksdale (22.40) and freshman Ian Hackney (22.71).

Senior James Godinho finished third in the 400-meter dash, checking in at 49.61.

Freshman Patrick Phelan placed third (1:06.64) in his first collegiate race. Sophomore Josh Boone finished fourth in the one-mile event with a time of 4:22.14.

Senior Wesley Jones ran the 800-meter race and took fourth place with a time of 2:05.98. Sophomore Peter Fortunato finished second in the 3,000 meters (8:40.19).

Competing for the first time as a Minuteman, freshman Brian Miller won the high-jump event. He cleared six feet, four inches – two inches higher than the second-place competitor.

The Minutemen's 4 x 400 meter relay team placed second with a time of 3:24.54.

The Minutewomen struggled at the BU Quad meet, finishing last in the overall standings. Many of the team's top runners, jumpers and throwers are freshmen, so for many of them it is their first competition at the collegiate level.

Freshman Holly Heinrieher finished first for the Minutewomen in both the 55-meter dash and the 200-meter dash. She placed sixth overall in the 55 (7.62) and ninth in the 200 with times of 7.62 and 26.86, respectively.

Junior Kendra Leighton placed third in the 400-meter dash with a time of 1:01.18, behind her were freshmen Brittany Bakanowski and Michelle Finley who finished sixth and seventh, respectively.

In the 500-meter dash freshman Nicole Serapiglia came in 10th with a time of 1:24.19.

Junior Taryn Trapp came in fifth in the one-mile run, finishing the race in 5:18.94. Freshman Shiyi Zan came in seventh (5:22.92). This was her first collegiate race after sitting out all of the cross country season with an injury.

Freshman Stephanie Matter placed third in the 800-meters with a time of 2:21.37. Junior Amanda Bodette was 10 seconds behind her in ninth place.

Junior Ashley Davidson took fifth place in the 1,000-meters (3:09.94) and Erin O'Donnell finished seventh with a time of 3:13.32.

Junior Christina DeRosa placed third in the 3,000-meters with a time of 10:18.28, about three seconds better than her time last week in Rhode Island.

In the long jump, freshman Elizabeth Biehl placed fifth by clearing five feet. Freshman Molly Chapin placed third in the pole vault and senior Dawn Cheri Soares finished fifth in the long jump, leaping 5.08 meters.

Freshman Lisa Wilson placed sixth in the shot put with a throw of 10.05 meters.

Last week the Minutewomen were in Rhode Island for the Rhode Island New Year Classic. The upperclassmen led the way for the Minutewomen. DeRosa placed third in the 3,000 (10.21.60). Junior Jennifer Rippel finished second in the 500-meter event with a time of 1:19.65 and senior Troyanah Evans came in third place in the long jump event with a jump of 16 feet, six inches.

Give your brain a $10 coffee break.

Get a $10 coffeehouse gift card when you have your student taxes prepared at H&R Block.

Have H&R Block prepare your 1040 EZ and state tax returns, and get a $10 coffeehouse gift card. All for just $49 with valid college student ID.

Offer valid 1/15/07–3/30/07 at this location only:
Campus Plaza
458-10 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035
413-256-2100

htrblock.com

H&R BLOCK®
You got people™

Valid only at participating locations. Student must present 2006-07 college ID. Additional tax forms require payment of additional fees. Refund anticipation loan is subject to credit approval. Offer subject to change. Terms and conditions ©2007 H&R Block Services, Inc.

Minutewomen have time to get back on top

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

With classes set to begin, the Massachusetts women's basketball team (10-8, 0-3 Atlantic 10) will have to buckle down not just in the classroom but on the court as well if it wants any chance at making noise in the conference.

Time is on their side with 11 league games remaining, including seven home tilts for the Minutewomen. UMass enters the stretch drive of the conference schedule with four straight games at the Mullins Center, and seven of its next nine at home.

Prerequisites for winning

If the Minutewomen wish to go dancing in March they will need to make some adjustments and improve in a number of areas. And with this team, it all starts with taking care of the basketball.

In eight games over the recess, UMass committed an astronomical 150 turnovers. The Minutewomen turned the ball over more than their opponents in six of those games, and, not surprisingly, lost five of them. UMass has turned the ball over almost 18 times per game, while its opponents average just 15.

During the four-game losing skid, the big difference had undoubtedly been points off turnovers. Had that statistic been equal for both teams in each game, UMass might have finished that stretch with a 3-1 record, as opposed to its 0-4 mark during that time.

"It's been a spiraling effect of turnovers for much of the season," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We're continuing to turn the ball over, and it hurts."

All season long, Dacko has been preaching to her team that they need to get the ball inside, initiate contact and get to the foul line. It was something the team was doing in excess early on this season, but has strayed from lately. The negative effect of UMass' careless mistakes is obvious.

"I'm concerned with the lack of free throw attempts we've had recently," Dacko said. "That goes back to being on the attack. We're just not doing that right now and we're not getting to the foul line because of it. That's very important to our game and for us to get in the win column."

Dacko also feels that the bench play for her team will be crucial – in more ways than one – for her team moving forward.

"We're looking for the bench to step up and help us in spots," she said. "Not just to give us rest, but to be proactive when they come on the court. If we can get them going then they can spell the starters some minutes."

Leading by example

With the recent struggles of the Minutewomen, it becomes even more imperative for the leaders of the squad to pull the team together. The two new captains this year – juniors Kate Mills and Alisha Tatham – are among those responsible of doing just that.

"I think they've done pretty well in their roles," Dacko said. "I think they're doing a great job off the court with their responsibilities. But I think their job now has to step up and we need a spokeswoman on the floor to get our kids together and rally the troops.

UMass Basketball

"They need to make sure we're in right offense and defense all the time," she added. "The shot clock expired four times against George Washington and that simply should not happen with five people on the floor. Our leaders need to step up and let their teammates be aware of the clock. They don't necessarily have to be coaching people, but they need to give us confidence on the floor so we can execute well."

Double trouble

Although she continues to turn the ball over at an alarmingly high rate, Tamara Tatham has been a force on the blocks, terrorizing her opponents in all facets of the game. A tremendous athlete, Tatham plays solid defense while grabbing rebounds, picking off passes and shooting a high percentage.

"She's playing very well," Dacko said. "She can play better and with more intensity but I'm very happy with her play. I'm not going to say that I'm completely satisfied with her play because she has the ability to get a double-double every game.

"If she limits her turnovers and turns them into points, we're a better team," Dacko added. "I just think she has the capability and potential to be giving us even more. She has to give us that mental edge."

In the eight games over break, Tatham recorded two double-doubles, but has just fallen short three additional times by a single rebound, and once by only two. In that span she has averaged 16 points per contest, on 50-for-80 shooting – good for 62.5 percent from the field.

In addition to her offensive prowess, Tatham averaged 8.5 rebounds and three steals per game in her last eight contests. She didn't record fewer than two steals in any of the games over break. For the season, Tatham is rather close to averaging a double-double – with averages of 12.9 points and 9.2 rebounds.

Stat central

Despite struggling of late, junior guard Pam Rosanio has maintained her double-figure scoring average, joining Mills and Tatham on that list. Mills continues to lead the team in scoring at 15.5 points per night. Mills and Tatham have been stellar from the field, with each shooting above 50 percent.

Freshman point guard Kim Benton may – thanks to the accuracy of her outside shot – join those three in double figures by the season's end. Benton has drained a team-high 34 3-pointers, almost triple the amount of Rosanio – who has knocked down 12 thus far.

Although Dacko remains concerned about the team's passing, UMass has recorded almost three more assists per game than its opponents. No player on the team averages more than 3.2 per night, but it's Tatham who actually leads the team in that category – something rare for a forward. Tatham also paces the team in steals by a wide margin (40 to Rosanio's 24), which is good for more than two per game.

In the low post, Mills has recorded 33 blocks, and has an almost laughable lead over the rest of her teammates. Mills has notched 33 of the 44 blocks registered by the entire team. Nobody else has even swatted away four shots.

Home cooking

A key reason why the Minutewomen struggled so much over break was the fact that they played six consecutive games away from home over a two-week stretch. Now that the brutal stretch is behind them, the team can return to its place of solitude. The Mullins Center has been nothing but kind to the Minutewomen. They recently had a stretch of 10 straight home wins finally snapped.

UMass has won four of its five games in Amherst, and its lone loss came by just one point to Delaware. The team is looking forward to returning home after over an entire month since its last home game on Dec. 17.

"I look forward to just being at home," Dacko said. "Having that level of comfort we have at home will be nice to have again. We need to be able to execute, as you're only as good as your next game. We need to put our offense and defense together against Temple and it will certainly help us to be playing that game here at the Mullins Center."

Teamwork will make a difference

Dacko feels the team will head in the right direction and start winning games as long as they play together on the floor.

"They were trying to do too much alone as individuals," she said about some of the recent games. "If we just get back to team play, we'll be fine. We're a much better team when we're getting assists on our field goals. As of late we haven't done that.

Senior forward Tamara Tatham became the 15th player in UMass history to score 1,000 points in her career. She accomplished the feat in the Minutewomen's 71-69 loss to URI on Jan. 9.

"Instead of us trying to create for our teammate's, the team is just going out there and trying to do everything themselves," she added. "We can't win that way. I think some things just aren't going our way right now. We got to the point where we got so tight we were playing not to lose, instead of to win."

Knock on wood

The starting lineup has remained in tact over the last nine games, due in large part to the good health of the entire team. Now is certainly not the right time in the season for the injury bug to infect the team.

"Knock on wood for me," Dacko said. "Pam got hit in the head the other day and we had to sit her out of practice. We have to guard against a mild concussion. But other than that, everyone else is OK and that has been the case for much of the season.

Dacko is happy with her starting lineup of Benton and Rosanio at guard, Mills and Alisha Tatham at forward, and Tamara Tatham at center. She expects to keep them that way in the future, but [illegible] hesitant to shake things up [illegible] be.

"I like Diatiema [illegible] Sakera Young coming off the bench right now," she said. "I've been getting a look at Sandra Gerardot and Whitney Mc[illegible] more than I had before. I just might mix it up quicker from now on."

Tatham joins 1,000-point club

Senior forward scores 16 points against URI to reach milestone

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

The 1,000-point plateau is a privileged and exclusive club for the Massachusetts women's basketball team, hosting such legendary UMass players as all-time points leader Sue Peters (1,858) and former WNBA star Jennifer Butler (fifth with 1,490). And entry into the club is no accident – it is the result of years of hard work and dedication, doing anything possible to improve both yourself and your team.

And who is the newest Minutewoman that the Maroon and White's best of the best have welcomed amongst its superior ranks?

It is none other than senior Tamara Tatham.

By tallying 16 points in the Jan. 9 Rhode Island game – a time when most students were still enjoying the hard-earned fruits of last semester's labor – the senior forward forever aligned herself with Massachusetts' cream of the basketball crop.

Tatham is only the 15th women's player to reach the millennium mark in UMass history – and that is something in which she takes great pride.

"It's more of an honor [because there's only 14 others]," Tatham said. "I didn't know I was the 15th player to ever do that. It feels really good though."

Being a member of such a heralded group is sure to make the entire Tatham family elated – starting with her younger sister, Alisha, a junior guard/forward and team co-captain.

"I'm really happy for her [because of] everything she's done since she's been here and how much she's improved," Alisha said. "I pray for her all the time, hoping that she can become better and better every time she goes out on the floor, so my prayers have definitely helped her."

Reaching the 1,000-point mark had been a work in progress for almost four full seasons. But, despite needing only seven points to count herself among the most prominent UMass women athletes, Tamara said she didn't approach the game against the Rams any differently than she has any other.

"It just happened. I was more thinking about [how] to win the game than scoring however many points I needed [to reach the plateau]," she said. "I was just more focused on going out and playing well and to help us win."

Unfortunately for Tatham and her teammates, UMass did not win that day. They lost an elongated contest to the Rams – 71-69 in overtime.

"We started turning the ball over at Yale [in a 70-60 loss on Jan. 6] and then that carried over to Rhode Island. So, we lost a little confidence and we're in the process of regaining that," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "I think we stopped ball movement, we stopped our bodies from moving and cutting hard and I think that Rhode Island, at Rhode Island, is tough to play anyway. But, we turned the ball over 24 times. You're not going to win too many ballgames when you turn the ball over like that."

The bitter taste the Rhode Island loss left with UMass did not erase the sweet sensation of Tamara's big day.

"It feels good. It took me a long time to get here, but I just kept working and just doing everything I can for my team," Tamara said. "It didn't really hit me until I got a lot of praise from other people and it was like, 'Wow. This really is a big deal.' It has definitely hit me now."

The 6-foot-1, Brampton, Ontario, native was Dacko's first recruit when she took the reigns of the Minutewomen's program just over five years ago. Dacko says she has enjoyed watching her once-shy, timid pet project turn into one of the key anchors of the Maroon and White squad.

"It's been a process with her. When you look at maturity, it happens in different ways both on and off the basketball court. I would like to see her be more assertive both [on and off the court]," Dacko commented.

"Tamara's the type of player that can carry this team on her back, so I think [the mark] came later, in my mind, than it should have for her," she continued. "And I think she is somebody that could be averaging 30 points a game.

"So, provided she made her free throws early in her career and shot how I like her to shoot, she'd be close to 2,000 points at this point. I'm not joking when I say that. She is an incredible player, with incredible talent. So, I'm very proud of her achieving the 1,000 points."

Having amassed a total of 1,065 points, Tamara currently ranks 13th on the Minutewomen's all-time scoring list, ahead of Alison MacFarland (1,060) and just behind Helen Freeman (1,105). But with Tatham's renowned grit – and seven games left in her collegiate career – Dacko sees plenty of potential to rise up even higher on the ladder of UMass greatness.

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
413-548-6900
163 Sunderland Rd.
N. Amherst

The Top Ten Reasons to go to The Harp

1. No one will pick a fight with you...or your boyfriend.
2. Where red-headed sluts and sugar daddies come together.
3. Giant Deck & Pavilion: at our bar, if you're outside it's cuz' you WANNA be.
4. The best live bands & NEVER a cover charge.
5. Super draft beer selection/great specials.
6. Our kitchen is bitchin' (Open 7 days a week til' midnight!)
7. Trivia Night! Trivia Night! Trivia Night! (Every Tuesday!)
8. Use our FREE Wireless internet: Homework munchies & beer, what could be better? (OCMP accepted)
9. The place to chill, talk, and NEVER wait in line.
10. Visit the hottest staff at the coolest bar.
* By Liz and Becky, disclaimer by Management

"Come Party Like You're Irish!"
www.theharp.net

KAREN KIM/COLLEGIAN

Assistant captain Mark Matheson continued his offensive outburst over the winter break. The senior recorded a point in six of the seven games the Minutemen played, including goals in three straight games against Ferris State, Alabama-Huntsville and Merrimack.

Big win caps mediocre break

HOCKEY from page C1

Bobby Butler and Matt Tomataro scored to close out the second while Brad Hardacker rounded out the scoring at 3:41 of the third.

UMass 5, UMass Lowell 1

The Minutemen dominated against their sister school, UMass Lowell (13-7-5, 2-12-2 HEA), in the first matchup at Mullins Center. UML came in with the Minutemen and UMass exploded for three goals in the final period to put the River Hawks away. David Leadeter, Alex Berry and Zech Klann all netted scores in the final period.

UMass jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first on goals by junior PJ Fenton and sophomore Chris Davis. Each notched on the other's tally. The Minutemen in all finished the night with a 14-2 line. Quick saved 33 shots with the River Hawks' long goal coming in the second period.

UMass 4, Merrimack 2

The Minutemen came back from a tough loss the night before to gain their lone win in the season series against the Warriors (3-18-2, 3-13 HEA), this time at Mullins Center.

The game was highlighted by Quick's first-career goal. Midway through the second period, Warriors goalie Patrick Watson headed to the bench because of a delayed penalty call. However, the puck got away from the Warriors on a wild pass and slid into the net. Quick was the last member of the Minutemen to touch the puck, crediting him with the tally.

Jarman and Davis netted goals in the first to give the Mass Attack a 2-1 advantage through one period. Berry capped UMass' scoring in the third to seal the win.

Merrimack 2, UMass 1

With the holiday tournament, and non-conference play behind them, the Minutemen returned to the Bay State to face ninth-place Merrimack. The Warriors beat the Minutemen in the two teams' previous meeting, 3-0, on Dec. 5. UMass had little more success in this one.

Scoring goals proved difficult for the Minutemen over the break and this game was no different.

Matheson was the lone Minuteman to beat Watson. The goal was his third in as many games and his team-leading 10th on the season. With heavy traffic in front of Watson, Matheson received the puck from Will Ortiz and stuffed it around the goalie.

However, just before the horn sounded for intermission, Matt Jones scored his first goal of the season to knot the score at 1-all.

It remained that way throughout the second, but it didn't take long for the Warriors to gain the lead in the third period. After going 17 games without a goal, Jones scored his second of the season just 17 seconds into the final period. He beat Quick with a clean slap shot from the far faceoff circle.

Alabama-Huntsville 5, UMass 2

After a strong showing in the opening game against Ferris State, the Mass Attack faced stiffer competition in the form of Alabama-Huntsville (7-14-1). But the Minutemen couldn't carry their momentum from the previous night.

The game began with the teams combining for four goals in the opening period – three of them going to the Chargers. They took the lead just 1:28 into the game on Kevin Morrison's goal.

UMass then took advantage of a 39-second, five-on-three chance. Matheson netted his ninth goal of the season to tie the score at one goal apiece. The Chargers' Kevin Galerno and Brett McConnachie added an even strength and power-play goal, respectively, to put UAH up 3-1.

Cahoon pulled Meyers after the freshman played the first 20 minutes of the game. Quick entered the game for the final two periods and stopped 15 shots while allowing two goals.

Morrison scored his second of the night shorthanded at 6:26 of the second. Then Steve Center beat Quick with a little over 10 minutes remaining in the period. The goal was UAH's fourth unanswered score and put the Minutemen in a deep hole.

Matt Anderson gave the Mass Attack a spark early into the final period. The Minutemen had the man-advantage and seized the opportunity – something they've done a lot more this season. The captain took a Jarman pass and capped the game's scoring.

Ferris State 1, UMass 1 (OT)

After a 20-day layoff, the Minutemen traveled to Minneapolis for the Dodge Holiday Classic, a tournament hosted by the top-ranked Minnesota Gophers. It was UMass' chance to matchup with some different competition.

Although the game against the Bulldogs (7-16-3) is officially recorded as a tie, UMass lost the shootout, 3-1, to decide who played Minnesota in the classic's championship game.

Both sides needed the first period to get back in rhythm and the horn sounded with neither team capitalizing. FSU struck first deep into the second period to take the one-goal advantage while playing shorthanded. Alex Spezia was sent off for holding to put UMass on the power play. But the Bulldogs managed a two-on-one opportunity that resulted in Matt Verdone beating Quick just below the crossbar.

UMass wasn't down for long. Matheson evened the score just 1:26 after FSU's shorthanded goal. The play began with Jarman controlling the puck low in the offensive zone. Matheson saw an open lane and crashed the net. Jarman slid the puck out front and Matheson redirected it, beating Mitch O'Keefe over his left shoulder.

The score remained tied through the third and overtime periods, prompting a shootout to decide who advanced. Cahoon sent out Quirk, Fenton, Matt Burtt and Alex Berry. O'Keefe stopped all the shots he faced except for Berry's try.

Welcome Back to your Award Winning Dining Services.
We've been expecting you!
Free bottled water-Lunch and Dinner
Free Caribbean trail mix at Dinner
Baked stuffed apples at Breakfast
Mixed berry and apple cinnamon crepes at Dinner
Get your C-Store $5 coupon
Chocolate croissant at Breakfast
Pretzel bar at Dinner
Coffee Cake from the UMass Bake Shop at Brunch
www.umass.edu/diningservices

UM winless in three conference contests

W. BASKETBALL from page C1

pointment has been the manner in which the Maroon and White has lost some of its recent contests. Especially the defeats they took in their first two conference tilts against Rhode Island (4-13, 2-1 A-10) and Richmond (8-10, 2-1 A-10).

The matchup against Rhode Island began strangely, with the Rams being assessed a technical foul for failing to hand in their starting lineup in time. Junior forward Kate Mills sank two free throws to take a 2-0 lead before the ball tipped off. The rest of the game proceeded to be just as wild.

The Minutewomen fought back from 24 turnovers and a seven-point deficit with just five minutes remaining to force an extra session. Senior forward Tamara Tatham – who became just the 15th player in UMass women's basketball history to record 1,000 career points – sank two crucial free throws in the final minute to help extend the game.

In the overtime, freshman point guard Kim Benton hit a big three-pointer with just 17 seconds left to tie the game at 69 apiece, and a second overtime was looking like a distinct possibility.

But on the ensuing possession for Rhode Island, Benton was called for a foul with under three seconds left on the game clock, and URI won the game 71-69 with two free throws by Safi Mojidi.

Tatham's career accomplishment was not enough to solace the Minutewomen, who were upset with the officials for their whistle on Benton at the end.

"I think there were some controversial calls at the end," Dacko said. "Certainly I thought it should have been a double-overtime game. But nevertheless, we got ourselves into a position where we dug ourselves into a hole."

UMass fell 46-40 just three days later in another frustrating game, this time against the Richmond Spiders. The Minutewomen struggled mightily on offense, committing nine more turnovers (27) than baskets made (18). Even a 14-2 run in the second half wasn't enough to overcome the carelessness with the basketball.

It was a struggle for both teams all night, with each squad having a scoring drought lasting in the neighborhood of seven minutes. At one point in the middle of the second half, UMass was down 28-26, and had already committed 23 turnovers. Despite committing 20 turnovers of its own, Richmond capitalized more on its opportunities, scoring 10 more points off turnovers than its counterparts.

Lacking any sort of momentum, the Minutewomen lost their fourth straight game a few days later against the No. 14 George Washington Colonials (14-2, 3-0 A-10). UMass shot terribly from everywhere on the floor, including a mere 2-for-16 from behind the arc. Benton finished 0-for-7 from three-point land, and 0-for-9 overall.

The Maroon and White once again reached the 20-turnover threshold, and managed to shoot just 34.5 percent from the field. A 21-7 George Washington run in the second half sealed the 61-48 victory for the Colonials.

The three defeats in one week – within the conference – will test the mental strength of the team, but Dacko remains upbeat that the team will be better to finish the season.

"I'm pleased right now with our inside game and I'm pleased with our defense," she said. "I think our defense has been playing extremely well. We held GW to 61 points and we kept Richmond to just 46, we should be winning ballgames.

"I think it takes the wind out of your sails a bit," she continued. "I think having six games on the road in 12 days has been grueling for our kids. Even though they were on break [from school] there's really no time to have your brain not to think about basketball. We just need to be prepared mentally moving forward."

Before league play commenced, the Minutewomen finished out their non-conference schedule with five games over winter break. They finished those games with a 2-3 record, including a wild win over Eastern Michigan (8-7) and a blow-out triumph over Holy Cross (6-12). UMass dropped games against Delaware (14-2), Yale (8-7) and Boston College (10-7).

After classes ended, the Minutewomen took to the court in an eventful game against Eastern Michigan. UMass almost let a 15-point halftime lead slip away, but managed to hold on for an 81-80 victory, in a game where nobody could miss from the outside.

UMass shot a blistering 67 percent in the first half, including 6-for-7 from beyond the arc. The Eagles followed suit by connecting on nine second-half triples to give the Minutewomen a serious scare. Eastern Michigan's Alyssa Pittman had a flair for the dramatic in the second half – almost single-handedly bringing her team back – but her 27 points weren't enough, as her 3-point attempt at the buzzer just missed.

Keeping with the latest trend of losing close games, UMass fell to BC by six and to Delaware by just a single point in their next two contests.

It was a close game throughout against the Blue Hens, with the Maroon and White holding its biggest lead of the game (six points) with four and a half minutes to play. Delaware went on a quick run to take a late two-point lead, but Benton hit a crucial three-pointer with 30 seconds to play to give UMass a brief lead, 62-61.

It was not to be in the end, as Chrissy Fisher connected on a game-winner with 14 seconds remaining to give the Blue Hens the victory. The Minutewomen had two chances to win, but they threw the ball away after the basket by Fisher and then missed a desperation half-court shot after a missed one-and-one by Delaware. The loss snapped a 10-game home winning-streak for the Minutewomen.

UMass enjoyed a two-week layoff before its next game against Boston College. The balanced attack from the Eagles – including big games from Kathrin Ress and Elisabeth Tgnell – proved to be enough as they went on to take the game 70-64.

The Minutewomen had four players in double figures and just 11 turnovers, but shot just 3-for-15 from behind the 3-point line and were out-rebounded by 15. The superb shooting by the Eagles – 55 percent from the floor – was simply too much to overcome.

It was a see-saw battle throughout, featuring 12 ties and 12 lead changes, but the Minutewomen squandered their two-point lead by failing to score in the final few minutes, and BC promptly reeled off eight straight points. UMass committed just one turnover in the entire second half, but it came at the wrong time, leaving the Minutewomen with no chance at the end. The six-point win marked the largest lead by either team in the game.

The Maroon and White found itself back in the win column after trampling the Crusaders of Holy Cross, 77-46. The 31-point win marked the largest victory for UMass since 2001 when it beat St. Bonaventure by the same margin.

Junior Whitnee McDonald notched a career-high 14 points and Benton knocked down three consecutive 3-pointers to blow the game wide open in the first half. UMass remained in cruise control the rest of the way, and four players enjoyed double-figure efforts.

Holy Cross attempted to fight its way back by launching up countless long-range shots, but it couldn't find the net, missing on all but one of its 16 attempts. UMass never trailed in the game.

Dacko's bunch ended non-conference play on a sour note, dropping a 70-60 decision to Yale. Although UMass cut the lead down to just two in the closing minutes, it was Yale's game from the get-go as it led for the entire contest.

Tatham's monster effort went for not, thanks to the 22 UMass turnovers, 10-for-20 from the free-throw line and its failure to hit a single shot from the outside. Tatham finished with a career-high 24 points in addition to her 10 rebounds.

UMass began the season scorching hot – winning nine of its first 11 – but the season has begun spiraling in the opposite direction with four straight defeats. The Minutewomen need to get back to what they were doing earlier in the season if they want to claw their way back up the conference standings.

"We're just not in sync with each other right now," Dacko said. "In the beginning 10 games we moved the ball so well and that's why we started off winning games. Now were just pressing a bit, and playing a little tight.

"We're not reinventing the wheel," she added. "We have to stay with what got us those wins. We need to make sure we're staying in the offense and staying on the same page defensively. It's the little things that escalate and that can turn our wins into loses."

With the recent losing skid creating a bump in the road, it's important for the Minutewomen not to lose focus and to keep their heads up. It's something that their coach is confident they will do.

"I think they're down, but I don't think they're discouraged," Dacko said. "They want it so bad and I think they believe that they're capable of winning games. They're staying together and we need to come together as a group."

One thing's for sure, they're going to need to do just that to climb up the A-10 standings.

UM increases scoring

Matheson's breakout season paces Mass Attack's offense

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

With two of the Massachusetts hockey team's top scorers graduating after last season, there was much question entering this one regarding the Minutemen's ability to put the puck in the net. A number of players have heeded the call, including assistant captain Mark Matheson.

The senior's offensive output is a pleasant surprise to UMass coach Don Cahoon and the rest of the Mass Attack. He is the Minutemen's leading goal-scorer, notching 10 in 21 games.

Matheson also has five assists, placing him fourth on the team in points behind Cory Quirk, Chris Capraro and Chris Davis. The long layoff between the end of the first half of the season and the beginning of the second did little to deter Matheson's momentum.

He recorded a point in six of the seven games over the winter break. From Dec. 29 through Jan. 5 he posted a goal in three straight games against Ferris State, Alabama-Huntsville and Merrimack.

"Mark has obviously been one of the real bright lights here," Cahoon said during a Hockey East conference call. "I don't think people realize what a truly gifted athlete he is. He has great skating ability, good poise and real good puck skills.

"He's really valuable because of his versatility, and as you know we have used him a lot at center over the last year and a half, and he filled a void where there was a weakness."

Matheson was a defenseman for his first two and a half years in Amherst. It wasn't until partway through last season that Cahoon moved him to center. The switch was made because the Minutemen were very thin at the position.

He finished out last season at forward, and has played the majority of this season there. Much of Matheson's game revolved around defense until this season. In his first three years donning the maroon and white he tallied 25 total points.

This season he already surpassed his previous career-high in points (14) – a mark he set last season when he scored three goals coupled with 11 assists.

The difference a year makes

This time last season the Mass Attack was 9-15 overall and 6-11 in the conference. So far all is going according to plan during the current season with the Minutemen playing above .500. Their current league record stands at 8-6-1 and is good for a fifth-place tie with No. 6 Maine.

"We've had some good periods and had some struggles," Cahoon said in the Jan. 9 conference call. "We had two bad outings following a pretty good Ferris State game, so we are still trying to find ourselves."

UMass hit a mini-skid over the winter break, playing right at .500 for much of late December and into January. The Minutemen enter the Spring semester having gone 3-3-1 over winter break.

If the postseason started tomorrow UMass would be the sixth seed in the league. Maine holds the head-to-head tiebreaker – and face Vermont. The Catamounts are the only team to defeat the Minutemen on the Mullins Center rink.

Learning to share

As stated above, many of UMass' skaters are contributing to the offensive effort. Of the 24 skaters who have dressed for the Minutemen, 20 of them have notched points.

Eight players are in double figures for points – Quirk (19), Chris Capraro (19), Chris Davis (17), Matheson (15), P.J. Fenton (13), Will Ortiz (13), Kevin Jarman (11) and Matt Andersen (10). Last season, UMass ended with nine players tallying 10 points or more.

Quirk is the leader of the pack, recording 19 points this season. He began his sophomore campaign on a high note with 16 of those points coming during the season's first half. However, he struggled to open up the second half. Quirk was held scoreless in both the Minutemen's contests at the Dodge Holiday Classic as well as against Merrimack on Jan. 5.

But he's picked it up as of late. Quirk scored the Minutemen's first goal in their 3-0 shutout of UNH on Jan. 20. He also recorded assists against the Warriors (Jan. 6) and UMass-Lowell (Jan. 12).

Jon be nimble, Jon be Quick

Sophomore goaltender Jon Quick continued his stellar play over the winter break. He allowed 13 goals in the seven games (six starts) while not allowing more than two goals in six of those games.

He held a strong Ferris State squad to just one goal on Dec. 29 before losing in a shootout. Quick also allowed a lone goal to UML on Jan. 12. His play over this time period has helped him remain among the league leaders.

Quick currently sits in third place among league netminders with a .930 save percentage, while garnering fifth place with a 2.15 goals-against average. Those numbers also place him in the Top 10 nationally for both categories.

Captain needs a comeback

Oft-injured senior captain Matt Anderson continued his quiet season over the winter break. Anderson recorded two points over the seven winter games – a goal against Alabama-Huntsville and an assist in UMass' win over UML. Currently his totals check in at three goals and seven assists.

UMass Hockey

It was curious to see Anderson's name not under the "center" category on Jan. 19's lineup sheet. Cahoon moved the captain from his regular position in the center of the ice and shifted him to the wing, a move the coach says was not determined by Anderson's play.

"It was just a matter of dealing with some people over the last couple of weeks and playing against UNH," Cahoon said after UMass' 5-1 loss on Jan. 19. "[UNH's] lineup, their top two lines, are pretty top-heavy with scoring production. I thought I'd match the stronger players on my team with their stronger players."

But then the next night Anderson's name was nowhere to be found in the game against the Wildcats at the Mullins Center.

Since breaking onto the scene in Amherst some five years ago, an array of injuries and mediocre play has taken its toll on Anderson, but only on the ice. He is currently in his third season as the Minutemen's captain.

Senior Matt Anderson continued his offensive struggles through late December and into January. The captain recorded two points over winter break, scoring a goal against UAH with an assist against UMass Lowell.

Insight comes from all directions.
You bring something unique to the table, and at Ernst & Young you'll be encouraged to speak up and contribute. Because we know that bringing together people with different backgrounds and perspectives lets us deliver quality results for our clients. It's why we've created a work environment of mutual respect that promotes your personal and professional growth and success. So visit us on campus or at
FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2006
Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services
© 2007 Ernst & Young LLP
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Davis, Quirk leading UM's youth movement

KAREN WINOKUR/COLLEGIAN

Throughout the course of this season, UMass coach Don Cahoon has shuffled his lineup countless times. One constant has been the pairing of sophomores Chris Davis (above) and Cory Quirk (above right).

Cory Quirk (above) and Chris Davis (above left) have been at the top of UMass' scoring list all season long. Quirk leads the team with 19 points while Davis is third on the Minutemen with 17.

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over the past few years, the Massachusetts hockey team has been led by veterans and upperclassmen. Names like Marvin Degon and Stephen Werner — both seniors last year — topped the scoring lists.

Those players have graduated and moved on, leaving the Mass Attack without a real identity on offense leading into the 2006-07 season. In past years, UMass coach Don Cahoon says his teams have played "trap games," catching the other team in transition and beating goalies with great individual efforts.

And sure, this year's team can still do that, many of its best players made plays just like that this season. But this team has created a new identity for itself — a younger, flashier one.

Last year, the Minutemen scored 2.7 goals over 37 games (including playoffs). This year, they've already netted 59 goals, on pace for 90, and are being led by a pair of sophomores who appear to be starting something special inside the Mullins Center.

Second-year players Cory Quirk and Chris Davis have lit the lamp for nearly a third of the team's scores as two-thirds of the Maroon and White's top line.

Quirk and Davis burst onto the Hockey East scene individually last year as freshmen, sharing the team's Rookie of the Year award while rarely seeing ice time together. Cahoon put them on the same line to start this season, and they have been one of the few constants through a number of lineup shuffles.

"I think they needed each other," says Cahoon. "Davis played with Werner last year, who's moved on so he needed someone else to play with."

Davis finished his freshman campaign fifth on the team in scoring with 18 points and nine goals and an equal number of assists. Quirk finished eighth with 13 points on eight goals and five helpers.

Although UMass fans almost never saw them on the same line last season, the reason Cahoon wanted to see the puck sliding between the blades of their sticks is clear.

Their styles are very complementary, and the one thing they have in common is that un-teachable quality: speed.

"If you look at both of their abilities, they both really get around the rink," Cahoon says, remarking on how fast the duo plays the game.

"I like playing with [Quirk]," Davis says. "He's a fast player, as I am, and I like playing with fast players. I think that's the way the game should be played. Last year we didn't play too much together. We did a little bit, but in that time I recognized that he was a very small skater like me."

"We work well off of each other," says Quirk. "Chris is a little faster than me, but I like the way we play together."

Davis may be the faster skater, but Quirk has a skill set all his own. Quirk uses his quickness to beat defenders, while Davis is usually seen streaking up the side, burning defensemen on his way past the blue line.

"Cory Quirk uses small bursts and quickness to beat defenders in tight spaces," says Cahoon. "While Chris Davis is more of a straight-line speed player, and is just extremely fast going down the ice."

The changes that Quirk and Davis have helped create in this team's offense are apparent when you see them on the ice. The team is no longer restricted to trap goals.

The offense has become creative at times this season. Quirk and Davis, in particular, have given fans at the Mullins Center plenty of thrills. The give-and-go's, the breakaways and the impressive power-play goals have brought excitement to the team.

However, playmaking ability and skating faster than everyone else is not enough to rev up an offense. The chemistry that has developed between the two young skaters has been a big factor in their success.

"They're in the same class, so they'll be playing together for a long period of time," says Cahoon. "It's a read-and-react sport. Play is ongoing, so familiarity with the guys you're playing with is very important."

That familiarity has helped both players improve, and build on the success they had individually the previous season.

"We're very competitive," says Quirk. "We want to do well, and I think that's helped us get better."

Both athletes say they challenge each other on the ice to score more goals, win more games, and just keep up with each other through their speedy play.

"We've built off of each other," Davis says. "He's a fast player. He does the little things well. That's something I try to work on is doing all the little things well, and I think playing with [Quirk] has helped me."

With Quirk as the centerman, and Davis on the right wing, one of the biggest challenges for Cahoon is grouping the pair with a talented left-winger to complete the group.

Early on, Quirk and Davis played alongside senior Chris Capraro on the team's third line. More recently, Cahoon has made them the top line with junior P.J. Fenton.

"They haven't hit that sophomore slump, which is a good thing," says Fenton. "Davis' game is based on speed, while Cory is more of a playmaker, but they work really well together. Whoever is playing left wing with them is going to have a lot of fun."

With the Minutemen playing the best they have in three years, while in the middle of a heated Hockey East race, it's hard to remember that the team is being led offensively by a pair of sophomores, which leads one to think where this group could be in a few years.

"We try to concentrate on the present," says Davis. "We're in the middle of the pack in Hockey East, and we want to get out of there and move up."

"We're a very young team," Quirk adds. "When we're all juniors and seniors, we'll have that much more experience and be able to leave things on the ice."

For now, and in the immediate future, the Minutemen appear to be in good hands with Quirk and Davis streaking up and down the ice.

This word is way overpriced.
If you didn't buy your textbooks at Half.com, you paid too much. Half.com has all the textbooks you need like chemistry, astronomy and history for a lot less.
FOR A LIMITED TIME, SAVE AN ADDITIONAL $5 ON PURCHASES OF $50 OR MORE. SIMPLY USE THIS CODE: SAVEBIGNOW half.com
by ebay

Fenton improves on last year's 'struggles'

Junior is fifth on Minutemen's scoring chart with 13 points

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sometimes all a player needs is time. Sometimes when his coaches and his teammates are trying to help, all that player needs to do is help himself.

P.J. Fenton is a junior now and one of the Massachusetts hockey team's top scorers. However, after a breakout freshman season two years ago that had his coaches' mouths watering, many viewed Fenton's sophomore campaign as a disappointment.

UMass coach Don Cahoon was not one of those people.

Fenton resurrected his game this season after a statistically poor performance a year ago. He went from a 13-goal season as a freshman to just five as a sophomore. Although, he matched his assist totals with 12 in each of his first two seasons.

"I don't want to dwell on it too much," said Cahoon, "but what happened is P.J. had a great freshman year and scored 13 goals. He was really pressing early on [last season] and had a tough first half and struggled for a short time."

The point Cahoon stresses the most is that Fenton did not come into this season with a fresh outlook on his game. Cahoon saw the left winger recover his game in the second half of last season, even though the numbers didn't show it.

"In the second half [of last year] he played much better," Cahoon continued. "I know the numbers don't show that, but he was playing very good hockey over the second half of last season."

Now, this season, Fenton is back on pace with his first go-round in Amherst. He is fifth on the team with 13 points on seven goals and six assists through the first half of the 2006-07 campaign.

The winter break began quietly for Fenton as he failed to record a point in UMass' first four games of the second half. But he broke out of his mini-slump with a two-point performance (a goal and an assist) against UMass Lowell on Jan. 12.

"It's going pretty good for me so far," Fenton said. "Overall, I have more goals already this season than I did all of last season, so I'm pretty happy about that."

Cahoon said the biggest change in Fenton was simply his confidence and his awareness on the ice.

"He's comfortable in his own skates now," Cahoon said. "We can trust him defensively, we trust him on the penalty kill, and he's got a great game sense. He knows where he needs to be."

"I think I'm making more plays this year," Fenton said. "The plays weren't coming to me last year, so I wasn't getting as many opportunities to score points."

As far as who did what to turn the junior into an offensive force again, the stories are varied. Fenton credited his coaches and teammates for helping him out, but Cahoon said only Fenton himself knew what needed to be done.

"At the end of the day, coaches give insight into what they think everyone's doing and what they think [the players] can improve upon," Cahoon said. "But as a former player, I know that after everything you're told, you just have to go out there and do it yourself, and straighten yourself out."

And that's exactly what Fenton did over the second half of last season and into this one.

"There were a lot of people trying to help P.J. find his game," Cahoon said. "He took what everyone was saying, put it aside, and went out there and did it himself."

Nonetheless, Fenton knew he could not have done it completely on his own.

"Coach [Cahoon] has helped me a lot," Fenton said. "Not to mention the other coaches as well, Coach 'Q' [assistant coach Len Quesnelle] and Coach Red [assistant coach Red Gendron]. They help us all, not just me."

"This season has been a good year for him," said Cahoon, "and it might become a great year for him. Everyone around the league knows who he is."

York strips Boyle, Rooney of BC's captaincy

UNH offense powers Wildcats to first place in Hockey East

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As a junior last season, forward Brian Boyle was an offensive force for Boston College (12-6-1, 9-4-1 Hockey East). He scored 22 goals and 30 assists in 2005-06, making him one of the front-runners for the Hobey Baker Award. After the Eagles' loss in the national championship game, he decided to return to the Heights for his senior year.

But Boyle's offensive production is way down from last season. The senior only had seven goals and eight assists in the first half, and was a big reason why the Eagles stumbled to a 9-5-1 record out of the gate.

To make matters worse, Eagles coach Jerry York relieved Boyle of his duties as captain, unceremoniously removing the "C" from his jersey. Linemate Joe Rooney was also dismissed as one of the team's assistant captains.

"It was strictly an academic issue. Both Joe [Rooney] and Brian [Boyle] weren't going to classes to my liking," York said in a conference call on Jan. 9. "I always stress with our team, and our captains especially, that they have to be leaders both on the ice and off the ice. To be a leader, you have to show the academic effort."

York said he will revisit the issue in a month, but the coach also took immediate action to improve Boyle's on-ice performance. He made the decision to move the senior to left wing from the center position. He believes that moving Ben Ferriero to center will allow Boyle to play as more of a power forward, ultimately increasing the line's offensive output.

"We feel as though he needs to be a real force in the games," York said. "If he is not scoring he should be knocking people down and being a physical player. I think he is at his best when he is physical and, of course, when he is scoring goals.

"The other teams know exactly who he is and are working very hard on defense to stay on him, so that makes it even more difficult. But I think he is capable of doing a lot better."

So far the experiment has worked — the Eagles scored 15 goals in four games to begin the second half of the season, including eight from Boyle's top line. In fact, Ferriero was named Hockey East Player of the Week on Jan. 15. He had four goals in two games against Merrimack (3-16-2, 3-11 HEA) on Jan. 10 and 12, including a hat trick in the second contest.

LEAGUE'S BEST OFFENSE PREVAILS

Although a lot can happen between now and the beginning of March, all indications are that New Hampshire (17-3-1, 12-1 HEA) will finish as the top seed in Hockey East.

The Wildcats ride a six-game lead in the conference over Boston College and an unbeaten streak of 13 Hockey East matches going into a Jan. 19-20 home-and-home series with Massachusetts (10-7-5, 7-5-1 HEA). The Minutemen are responsible for UNH's only conference loss, a 3-2 contest on Oct. 26.

The Wildcats successfully passed their first test of the second half three weeks ago. New Hampshire earned two road victories over Vermont in a matchup between the conference's best offense and defense/goaltending. At the time, the Wildcats averaged 4.50 goals per game, while the Catamounts allowed an average of only 1.56 goals per game.

Hockey East

In the Friday night game on Jan. 5, forwards Trevor Smith and Brett Hemingway each scored twice en route to a 7-1 rout of the Catamounts.

The Wildcats chased Vermont goalie Joe Fallon from the game after the junior gave up three goals and made only one save. The performance was uncharacteristic of Fallon — he is statistically the league's best goalie.

The Catamounts fared better the following night, but still could not stop UNH's prolific offense. This time Fallon played the whole game and surrendered only two goals on 27 shots in the 2-1 loss.

Although Vermont lost both games, Fallon's mental reaction to his undesirable performance was not lost on Catamounts coach Kevin Sneddon.

"I think the key to our coaching decision on Friday night was to get him back in for the third period," Sneddon said. "More importantly, it was to see if Joe could rebound in the same game after having a really tough start and I thought he played really well in the third period.

"That really gave him confidence to come back the next night and have an outstanding performance. So I just think overall his team and mental toughness is better than it has been in the past."

BU SWEEPS MAINE

It is evident that so far is best [illegible] as unlucky. Boston University (10-4-6, 7-3-5 HEA) [illegible] sixth conference tie of the season with two road wins [illegible] Maine (14-5-2, 7-5-1 HEA) on Jan. 17 and 18.

"On different occasions, a good [illegible] our offensive players [illegible] their production [illegible] BU coach Jack Parker said. "We have been [illegible] number of one-goal games and we are very, very fortunate to be in the position we are in thanks to the great goaltending we've gotten [from John Curry]."

For those two games at least, the Terriers apparently solved their lack of offense. BU scored nine goals against a typically stingy Black Bear defense.

The Jan. 12 contest was perhaps one of the most bizarre in the league this season. BU had a 6-2 lead with 18 minutes left in regulation before surrendering three unanswered goals.

Defenseman Brian Strait's goal ended up being the game-winner, even though it gave BU a four-goal lead at the time.

Terrier Peter MacArthur earned a hat trick in the second period, before Josh Soares of Maine scored his third goal late in the final period.

The following evening, Curry posted his third shutout of the season in a 3-0 victory. He earned Hockey East Defensive Player of the Week honors for saving [illegible] shots in the two games. Northeastern (6-11-4, 1-9-4 HEA) snaps its best stretch of hockey since February of 2005. The Huskies are 4-2-0 in their last six games and [illegible] Dec. 1 to Jan. 12. Providence [illegible] Mass.-Lowell (5-15-5, 0-12-4 HEA) on Jan. 12 was the Friars' [illegible] 2-0-1 HEA. Its first win since Nov. 26 and first on the road. The 8-2 conference victory marked the team's second overtime win of the season and the second time it took the Rory Hawks to a fourth period.

Trevor Smith leads a potent New Hampshire offensive attack. In 23 games he has 15 goals and 17 assists to his credit.

After a stellar junior season last year, Brian Boyle has struggled to record points in 2006-07. He has nine goals and 13 assists this year.

There's no place like home

Mullins Center rink brings Mass Attack much success

Jon Pelland

As a senior [illegible] knows the [illegible] all [illegible] everything is [illegible] at home. Your mother's [illegible] your bed is a lot [illegible] comfortable than the [illegible] you have in [illegible] on a level way [illegible] at UMass.

The Massachusetts hockey team feels the same [illegible] playing at the Mullins Center. There's no secret the Maroon and White are a whole lot more comfortable playing on the [illegible] than anywhere else [illegible] J. Thom Lawler Arena, the home ice of the Merrimack Warriors.

Currently, UMass [illegible] a remarkable 9-1-1 record [illegible] playing in Amherst, [illegible] Minutemen are [illegible] the road (0-10-4 [illegible] record). Vermont is the only [illegible] able to win at the Mullins Center, [illegible] a 3-2 win over [illegible] Hampshire at the Whittemore Center [illegible] only one of the [illegible] to win a game to play in Hockey East [illegible] Bad Victor at Schneider Arena [illegible] Providence.

The win on the road [illegible] amazing the [illegible] Minutemen all around. [illegible] Will Ortiz shook off [illegible] of his skates to net [illegible] Mark Matheson goal and sophomore Chris Davis fourth on the entire Wildcats' D [illegible] the long self for another [illegible].

Then there's the [illegible] with Boston University at Agganis [illegible] was a battle of [illegible] offenses that was highlighted by superb goaltending by both [illegible] and John Curry. UMass probably should have won the game, but a point against the Terriers is almost as good.

These two examples [illegible] there is a glimmer of hope for the Mass Attack. It's known as the play on the road, the Minutemen just need to do it more consistently. It's disheartening to see them go toe-to-toe with Boston College at home, [illegible] a goose egg on the road [illegible] Merrimack.

One factor that [illegible] the skewed home and away record is the size of the ice rinks around Hockey East. Mullins Center boasts the second largest sheet in the conference, checking in at 200x95 feet. UMass' stellar play in Durham makes sense seeing as though Whittemore is the largest surface in the league at a whopping 200x100 feet.

That plays right into the Minutemen's style of play. They're a skating team, boasting numerous players that zoom up and down the ice with the help of good moves and lightning speed — Cory Davis, Cory Quirk and Ortiz.

Smaller rinks tend to have different kinds of games with [illegible] bunching up in certain areas of the ice. Schneider is a perfect example of this — the place is about the size of a cardboard box. From the press box the surface looks like it's a little larger than a standard issue basketball court. Although UMass won its [illegible] there this season, it was still a close game with a 3-2 final score.

UMass' home record is the fourth best in the nation and tops among Hockey East teams. But it's not going to be enough if the Minutemen continue to only win games at Mullins. Let's face it, they're not going to have home-ice advantage come playoff time — granted that means they must first make the playoffs.

Coach Don Cahoon's troops are in a fifth place tie with Maine, but are actually in sixth given the head-to-head tiebreaker the Black Bears hold. The teams the Minutemen are looking up at in the conference standings should give little confidence to a squad that plays so poorly on the road.

However, as long as they get a little help from some of the best hockey teams in the nation, there could be a slight chance for some upward mobility in the conference standings. Counting this past weekend's [illegible] against UMass Lowell and BU — this edition was put to bed on Thursday — the Minutemen have 12 games remaining in the regular season, all of which are league matchups.

The breakdown of those games goes as follows: Two games each against Lowell, Northeastern, Vermont, BU and Providence. A single games against Merrimack, Providence. But the [illegible] however, is that [illegible] games will be played [illegible] green roof on [illegible] Ave.

Five of those games [illegible] this columnist optimistic [illegible] UMass should easily [illegible] pose of the River Hawks and take what could be a close game with the surging Huskies.

Now that leaves five other games the Minutemen have good chances [illegible] will take [illegible] of their remaining games against the Terriers, defeat the Black Bears at least [illegible] in the season's final weekend. [illegible] reason behind these picks is [illegible] probability. The law of [illegible] says you can't take two [illegible] games from Jack Parker's boys [illegible] will suffice, trust me — and the Minutemen have a pretty good recent history with Maine when playing the Black Bears late in the season.

Maine started the season looking unbeatable (despite the fact that UMass hung right in there at Alfond Arena) but have since cooled off. Last season, a Minuteman team that struggled to light the lamp more so than this year's edition went up to Orono and managed to pull off a tie.

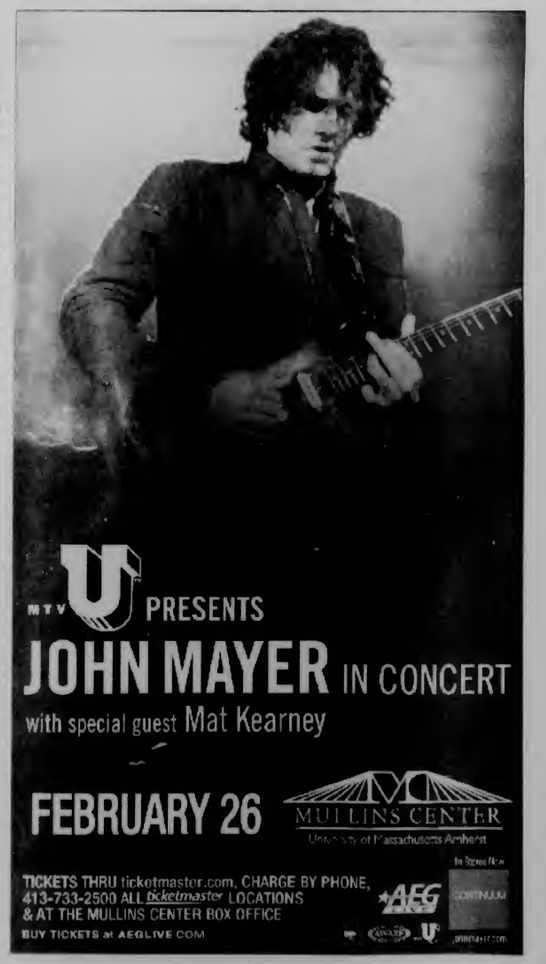
And who could forget Gabe Winer's heroics of 2003. Gabe the Babe stopped a heavy barrage of shots, 51 total on the weekend to be exact, to advance UMass to the conference quarterfinals. That was three years ago, but people still talk about it and with good reason.

To balance out the generous 10 points I'm handing the Minutemen in home wins, realism will help me decide the road games. Two points is all they'll get out of five remaining games away from Amherst. But that still gives them 10 points in 12 games, not a bad average.

That should put UMass in decent shape come playoff time, but in no way good enough to gain them home ice in the first round. But that begs the question: Can the Minutemen exercise their road demons?

Time to play the waiting game.

Jon Pelland is a Co-Sports Editor and a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu



MTV U PRESENTS
JOHN MAYER IN CONCERT with special guest Mat Kearney
FEBRUARY 26
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
TICKETS THRU ticketmaster.com, CHARGE BY PHONE, 413-733-2500 ALL ticketmaster LOCATIONS & AT THE MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE
BUY TICKETS at AEGLIVE.COM
AEG CONTINUUM

Not-so-free throws for UM

Poor percentage from the foul line could cost Minutemen

So what do we know about this year's Massachusetts men's basketball team at this point of the season? We know that it is one of the top scoring teams in the Atlantic 10. We know that it holds the best field goal percentage in the conference. And we know that it has at least two players that are guaranteed to show up every night.

You can be sure to see seniors Rashaun Freeman and Stephane Lasme bring their A-game night-in and night-out. But what you don't know about the Maroon and White may be the difference in an A-10 Tournament appearance and an NCAA Tournament appearance.

The Minutemen are the worst free-throw shooting team in the conference, shooting a dismal 61 percent from the charity stripe. And so far, free throws have been the biggest factor in UMass' A-10 outcomes.

With a 4-2 record heading into yesterday's battle at Charlotte, the Minutemen's two losses in league play came down to a difference in free throws. The first was against Xavier back on Jan. 18. The Musketeers hit 15-of-22 free throws, while UMass only got to the line four times, sinking two. That's a 13-point advantage by way of foul shots, eventually ending in an 83-77 loss.

The latest failure came at the hands of first place Rhode Island. The Rams – who lead the conference in three-point shooting with a percentage of 40 – went just 4-for-17 behind the arc in the game, but that didn't matter. The difference was made once again in the free-throw department.

URI hit 33-of-43 free throw attempts, as opposed to the 7-of-10 that UMass finished with. To have a game decided by a disparity of 26 points on foul shots doesn't sit well with any team, especially after a 75-72 loss to a conference rival.

Not only do the Minutemen have to get to the line more, they have to hit the shots when they get there. And coach Travis Ford has recently installed a system at practice that he thinks will work.

"He put this dot on everybody's sneakers to stay focused at the free throw line," Freeman said after his team shot 68 percent from the line in the win over George Washington. "It didn't help me in the first half, but it helped these guys."

Danny Picard

Freeman went 3-for-8 from the line that night, but his partner in crime – Lasme – was a solid 9-for-12 from the stripe.

"If you told me tonight that Lasme was going to be 9-of-12 from the free throw line, I probably would have told you that we were going to lose the game," Colonials coach Karl Hobbs said after his team did lose, 91-84, at the Mullins Center.

As of late, Ford has made his players shoot 100 free throws every night, trying to improve upon an area that could cost the team some games down the stretch.

"You have to hit 82 out of 100, and if you don't make it, you have to come back," Freeman said. "We think about that when a game's on the line."

If that doesn't work, maybe Ford can put a shocking device in the sneakers of every player. Can you imagine how much quicker they'd learn to hit free throws consistently?

OK, so that's just crazy talk on my part. But they do have to hit more free throws. Period.

Even though the combined number of foul shots in the two conference losses was 14, the Minutemen rank second in the A-10 at free throws attempted, so it's not like these guys aren't getting to the line.

It's not rocket science. It's a free throw. Of course, there are a lot of factors involved other than standing behind a line and shooting a ball through the twine. The crowd can be distracting on the road and with fans waving their arms and jumping up and down behind a transparent backboard, one's concentration can be rattled quite easily.

But 13-of-25 at home against Miami?! Unless crazy sign-guy decided to jump ship at the Mullins Center, those shots should be falling more than just 52 percent of the time. I'm not going to come out and say it's an easy shot to make, but it is called a "free" throw for a reason.

All I'm saying is, whether it's putting a dot on your players' sneakers for increased focus, or making them stay until they hit 82-of-100, those "free throws" as you'd call them, have to be made.

And if Ford wants to take a page out of Herb Brooks' book, he can even make them run suicides in a dark Mullins Center after it's closed down for the night. Who knows, maybe that's what they need. After all, it wouldn't be the first time a UMass player was charged with being out of shape.

"I accused him," Ford said after the game against GW. "I thought he had been getting slower, and when I go back and watch tape of games, I told him he looked heavy, and he didn't like that. But if he continues to play like he is, he can get a little heavy."

As Freeman was leaving the postgame press conference, he yelled into Ford: "Coach, do I still look fat?"

"No you look better tonight," Ford answered jokingly. "You lost a little weight tonight."

But I can assure you that the athletic shape of the team is not an issue, and it certainly has not been a factor in UMass' poor free-throw shooting. At this point, it's all about confidence. Without that, missed free throws will continue to cost the Minutemen big games, and the hype that surrounded this team just a few months ago, will end up being just that, hype.

Danny Picard is a Co-Sports Editor and a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

Xavier senior forward Justin Doellman (left) had a game-high 20 points in the Musketeers' 92–66 win over St. Bonaventure on Jan. 24. Xavier is tied for third place in the A-10 with Fordham and UMass.

Dukes down Eagles at Conte

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The game won't be remembered for being a classic Atlantic 10 matchup between two rivals that went down to the final buzzer. Instead, it will be remembered for being the game when the Duquesne Dukes' season ceased to be defined by having to overcome an offseason tragedy.

On Dec. 28th, the Dukes (5-10, 1-3 A-10) upset the Boston College Eagles, 98-93, in overtime at Chestnut Hill. The Eagles are only one season removed from nearly beating perennial powerhouse Duke in the ACC Championship game and then traveled to the Sweet 16 before bowing out to the Villanova Wildcats. Duquesne, on the other hand, is just one season removed from recording only three wins and has only five players on scholarship.

The Dukes had three players score 15 or more points in the upset win over an injured Boston College squad, including freshman standout Robert Mitchell's 20 points. Aaron Jackson and Scott Grote weren't far behind – each contributed 19 points in Duquesne's historic win. Duquesne overcame a triple-double posted by then-Eagles center Sean Williams, who was recently dismissed from the team due to a violation of team rules.

Mitchell's performance against a consistently nationally-ranked team should come as no surprise, either. He is leading all freshmen in points per game through Jan. 18, averaging 17.7 points a contest. Mitchell has also earned Rookie of the Week honors in the A-10 four times this season.

Duquesne may still be in rebuilding mode for some years to come, but its win over the Eagles should be a clear indicator that the Dukes – under first-year head coach Ron Everhart – are no longer an automatically penciled in as a loss every time they step on to the court.

Follow Lasme and the Minutemen

Not only are the UMass Minutemen sitting atop the A-10 standings (14-5, 4-1 A-10), but a few of their players, who are leading the revival of UMass basketball this season, are also sitting atop the leader board in other statistical categories.

Stephane Lasme is currently bringing the spirit of rebounder extraordinaire Bill Russell back to the state of Massachusetts, leading all A-10 players in rebounding. He averages just under 10 boards a contest. Lasme posted a season-high 16 rebounds against Yale on Dec. 28 and had 15 rebounds in the Minutemen's 91-84 win over the George Washington Colonials (12-4, 3-1 A-10) on Jan. 10. Lasme wasn't satisfied with just gobbling up rebounds in the win over the Colonials, however, posting a remarkable 11 blocks in the win and a season-high 23 points, good for his second triple-double this season.

Lasme's staggering numbers this year got some recognition from ESPN college basketball guru Dick Vitale, who named Lasme his player of the week on Jan. 16, after he averaged 22 points, 13 rebounds and 8.5 blocks.

UMass' Tiki Mayben leads the A-10 in assists per game (4.81). The freshman guard's season high in assists came in the opener against Dartmouth when he posted 11 helpers. Mayben also had nine assists against the Boston College Eagles in front of a sell-out crowd at the Mullins Center.

When UMass senior forward Rashuan Freeman goes to take a shot, one can count on him to light up the scoreboard more times than not. Freeman leads the league in field goal percentage (.649). Freeman hasn't disappointed in A-10 play, shooting 9-of-14 against the La Salle Explorers (7-9, 1-3 A-10), 9-of-12 against George Washington, and 9-of-13 against the Temple Owls.

And Some More Leaders

Unexpected offense has been Temple's Dionte Christmas' calling card all season. Christmas, who averaged just 3.5 points a contest last year as a freshman for the Owls (7-9, 1-3 A-10), is averaging 19.4 points a contest in his sophomore season. He had a career-high 29 points against Towson on Dec. 16 and recorded 15 points against the Duke Blue Devils.

Christmas is in a virtual lock for the lead in scoring with the Charlotte 49ers' De'Angelo Alexander, who is averaging 19.3 points a contest as a senior. Alexander had a season-high 27 points in a 75-70 win over the St. Josephs Hawks (10-6, 3-1 A-10) on Jan. 7. Alexander's efforts contributed to Charlotte's only A-10 win of the season.

In Need of a Hug

Homecoming often conjures memories of watching the star high school quarterback being crowned king with the prettiest girl in the school. That's not exactly what Kansas State head coach and former Cincinnati head coach Bob Huggins had in mind when he returned home to the state of Ohio to take on one of the elites in the A-10, the Xavier Musketeers (12-5, 2-1 A-10).

The Musketeers spoiled Huggins' homecoming, putting down the Wildcats, 76-66. Xavier's Stanley Burrell led all scorers with 23 points in the win. The win over Huggins' squad came a game after Xavier defeated a tough Illinois team, 65-59.

Hard to Figure Out

The Saint Louis Billikens (12-5, 2-2 A-10) have been one enormous enigma all season long. Observers of A-10 basketball took it as no surprise when the Billikens were no match for No. 2 North Carolina at Chapel Hill on Dec. 22, but St. Louis followed the 69-48 loss to the Tar Heels with back-to-back losses to two of the weaker teams in the A-10.

Despite shooting 50 percent versus the Bonnies of St. Bonaventure (4-12, 1-2 A-10), the Billikens were no match for Zarryon Fereti, who hit five 3-pointers in St. Bonaventure's lone A-10 win of the year. Fereti also happens to be lethal at the charity stripe, leading the A-10 in free-throw percentage, shooting over 91 percent from the line.

The Billikens also went down to Duquesne – the upset-specialists in the A-10 – 73-63 on Jan. 6, before pulling off a crucial A-10 win over the defending A-10 champions Xavier, 76-65. Sophomore guard Tommie Liddell led the Billikens with 21 points in their biggest win of the season thus far. Before the win over the Musketeers, the Billikens showed some defensive prowess when they limited the high-octane offense of the Rhode Island Rams (18-8, 3-1 A-10) to just 58 points.

It Pays to Take Charity

In a sports world which has made a permanent home for ESPN and its highlight-dominated view of the sports scene today, the importance of three-throw shooting often takes a back-seat, but not in the A-10, however, as some of the best players in the league also are known for taking care of business at the line. The aforementioned Dionte Christmas, who leads the league in scoring, is also second in free-throw percentage (.907) Dayton's Brian Roberts, who is third in scoring in the A-10, averaging 18.6 points a contest, is third in free-throw percentage (.888). George Washington's Carl Elliot, who was a member of the preseason All-Conference Second Team, is shooting 80 percent from the charity stripe this season.

Offense from an Unexpected Place

The Temple Owls have never been known for being a major threat on the offensive side of the ball, but at least this year they're finding some offense from players they never expected to put major numbers in the box score. Besides having the leading scorer in Christmas, the Owls have also been relying on senior Dion Dacons. Dacons, who had 110 points total in his first three years donning the Owl uniform, has carved himself a nice niche in the scoring department this year, contributing 7.2 points a game. Dacons had a career-high 14 points in a loss against Xavier Jan. 6 and had back-to-back 11-point outings against the Minutemen and the Billikens.

A-10 Basketball

DailyCollegian.com
sports@dailycollegian.com
IT'S YOUR GIG...RUN WITH IT!

learn more at www.newgradnursing.com
Every New Graduate nurse hired between now and June 30, 2007 receives an iPod® nano.
And if you think that's cool...just wait.

DARTMOUTH HITCHCOCK MEDICAL CENTER
New Hampshire's Only Academic Medical Center
Lebanon New Hampshire

NOW SHOWING
JAN. 26 - FEB. 1
amherst cinema
VOLVER
Academy Award Nominee Forest Whitaker Best Actor
THE LAST KING OF SCOTLAND
FRI 1:40-4:10-6:40-9:10
SAT & SUN 11:10-1:40-4:10-6:40-9:10
MON-THURS 3:00-5:30-8:00
Pan's Labyrinth
28 AMITY STREET
DOWNTOWN AMHERST
413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andlamo.cc

7		6	2		4
	5			3
	1		4	8
8	3			7	9
			7
1		6		5	2
		3	9		8
	6				2
3		2	5		1

ACROSS
1 Set sights
6 Savoir faire/ability
10 Necklace unit
14 Trap
15 Groom
16 Rod in a hot rod
17 Never but
19 Houseboy
20 Dinners last courses
21 ___ Python's Flying Circus
22 Before in a poem
23 Langley, VA org.
24 "The Matrix" star
26 Quarter pts.
27 Casual talker
30 Infants
33 Farm building
34 PC command
35 MP's quarry
36 Major artery
37 Wild guess
38 Rational
39 Funny fellows
40 Actress Davis
41 Scrutinizes
43 Derek and Dudley
44 Intersect
45 Individual
46 Pose questions
49 Tag
51 Like pencil marks
53 Came to roost
54 Sotheby's employee
56 Traffic diverter
57 Michaelson of "Gimme a Break!"
58 Pronounce
59 Those in favor
60 Joaquin or Penelope
61 Experiments

DOWN
1 Guarded comment
2 "Sanctum" author
3 Billiards shot
4 Memorable times
5 Sniffs out
6 Persona non ___ (fully unwelcome)
7 Polishes
8 Completely
9 Dove's aunt
10 Some noblewomen
11 Clear of blame
12 Scads
13 Put up resistance to 18 Writer Murdoch
21 Cambridge sch.
24 Links vehicles
25 Kournikova of tennis
26 Extols
27 Simpson and Mamma
28 Bayh or Hunter
29 Mo. McKinley
30 First or second
31 Not at home
32 Good dishes
33 Seethes
36 Piercing tools
40 Becomes extinguished
42 Major ISP
43 Birth
45 Slugger David
46 Aids in wrongdoing
47 Icy rain
48 Deborah and John
49 Bill of "Maude"
50 ___ verte
51 Neutral tone
52 Feed the kitty
54 Canine grp.
55 Fmr. Middle East alliance

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DELANO'S
TONIGHT: TEAM TRIVIA!
WEDNESDAY NIGHT: DJ/ KARAOKE WITH PAULIE V
PINOCCHIO'S FOOD SPECIALS DURING TRIVIA, MUNCHIES, PIZZA, AND MORE...
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"You know you're in love when you can't fall asleep because reality is finally better than your dreams."
— Dr. Seuss

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

DUDE! HAVE YOU EVER ATTENDED THE CAREER FAIR THEY HAVE EVERY YEAR?
CAREER FAIR? ARE YOU SERIOUS? ARE WE AT THE POINT IN LIFE WHERE WE SHOULD FINALLY FOCUS ON OUR FUTURE GOALS AND BECOME A PART OF FUNCTIONING SOCIETY BY ATTENDING CAREER FAIRS TO HELP DESIGN OUR ADULT LIVES?
NO. THEY ALWAYS HAVE FREE COOKIES.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

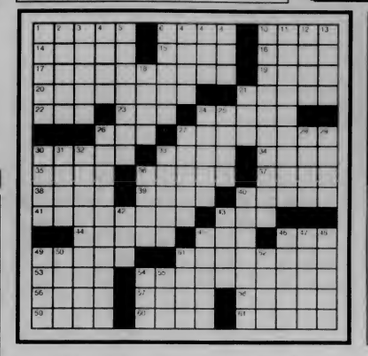
Look at me! I've got a fork on my head
Arr
I mean, "Hey!" That was my pirate ship!
I'm sorry, Carver I didn't know you were playing with it first
Where You Going?
Wherever you can fuss me

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

WHOA.
LATER...
YOU WANT US TO WHAT NOW?
COME WITH ME TO THE GYM. I CAN'T GO BACK THERE ALONE. EVERYONE IS HUGE!
UGH. CAN'T YOU JUST GIVE UP LIKE EVERYBODY ELSE? I MEAN IT'S ALMOST FEBRUARY.
YEAH, BE LIKE THAT GUY AND EMBRACE YOUR FLAWS
CARPE DIEM, BUCKETHEAD!

HARD KNOCKS By Louis Coppola

HI, UH, ANGIE IS IT? I'M BRIDGET, YOUR LANDLORD.
WE DIDN'T RECEIVE YOUR RENT ON MONDAY AND WANTED TO MAKE SURE YOU GET IT IN BEFORE THE END OF THE MONTH.
I HATE TO BE A STICKLER, BUT MONEY'S TIGHT.
ARE YOU WEARING REAL FUR?
GORGEOUS, RIGHT?! IT'S ENDANGERED!



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@gmail.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You will be discovered by a modeling agency at the mall next week.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Don't slam the door, your neighbors are sleeping.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
If you don't wear gloves today your fingers will all fall off.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You will be moved by a poem you read in a public rest room today.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Cover your mouth when you sneeze. No one wants your cooties.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
If someone invites you to a game of strip poker today, politely turn them down.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Get some baking soda the next time you're at the store.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You've been calling your coworker by the wrong name for the last month.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
The next time a telemarketer calls you, try to be a little nicer.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Don't bother watching the end of that movie.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Unless you aspire to discover a new species of mold, clean out your fridge.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Lay off the fast food for a few days. Eat a carrot.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SUCKS...LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat 11am-3am
Side-Bar DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
50 Tearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS | APARTMENT FOR RENT | EMPLOYMENT | SERVICES | TRAVEL | HOUSE FOR RENT

PLACE YOUR CLASSIFIED AD HERE!

A Collegian classified is a great way to advertise to the 5 college community.
Reach over 20,000 readers daily!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890
M - F 8:30 - 3:30

UM battles to the top

In three-way tie for third place with Fordham, Xavier respectively.

M. BASKETBALL from page C1

The comeback came up short, however, as UMass held on in a game that was dragged along with intentional fouls. The Minutemen had a 45-36 lead at the half, stemming from back-to-back 3-pointers by Brower and senior James Life to start the game. Brower carried UMass early, scoring eight of UMass' first 13 points.

Lasme became the 23rd player in NCAA history to record two triple-doubles in the same season, finishing with 23 points, 15 rebounds and 11 blocks.

"We knew that no matter how big a lead we had, we knew this was the type of team that could come back at any given time," Freeman said. "We were prepared for that. So when they went on that spurt, and they were only down one, we knew that was the type of game it was going to be, so it wasn't really sneaking up on us. We knew we had to stretch it out and play 40 minutes."

Of course, before A-10 play began the Minutemen played two of their biggest non-conference games of the year. They traveled to Louisville to take on Rick Pitino's Cardinals in the annual Billy Minardi Classic on the very night that classes ended for UMass students.

The result of the game was just as joyous to the Maroon and White. Freeman's 21 points led UMass to an impressive 72-68 victory over Louisville (14-6, 4-2 Big East), giving the team plenty of hope going into its next battle at Kentucky (15-4, 4-1 SEC).

Ford's team had a full eight days off in between these two games, and Tubby Smith's Wildcats took full advantage, defeating the Minutemen 82-68. Kentucky dominated most of the game, shooting 59 percent from the field and out-rebounding UMass 37-32. Life finished the game with a game-high 24 points and six 3-pointers.

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Junior forward Etienne Brower had eight points, five rebounds and two assists in UMass' win over George Washington. Six of his points came on 2-for-4 shooting from behind the 3-point arc.

Lasme makes presence felt nationwide

The country's top shot-blocker puts himself in good company

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

Having your name put in the same sentence as David Robinson, Shaquille O'Neal and Jason Kidd can't possibly be a bad thing. Massachusetts senior Stephane Lasme put himself in some pretty good company on Jan. 10, becoming the 23rd player in NCAA history to record two triple-doubles in the same season during UMass' 91-84 win over George Washington.

Lasme joins the likes of Robinson (Navy in 1986), O'Neal (LSU in 1990 and 1992) and Kidd (California in 1994) to perform the feat. The 6-foot-8 forward from Gabon, Africa finished the game with 23 points, 15 rebounds and 11 blocks. His other triple-double came in a 19-point, 10-rebound and 11-block performance against St. Francis on Nov. 22.

The Minutemen rely heavily on their two big men down low, and Lasme has answered the call this season with incredible numbers.

"I watch a lot of tape with coach Ford and he made me notice that I need to come into the game with higher energy and be more of a vocal leader," Lasme said after the win over the Colonials. "That's the type of thing that gets me going. I'm just trying to focus on not getting stupid fouls and playing with a higher level of energy."

During his career at UMass, Lasme's numbers have increased by the year, and his senior campaign has been no different. He is third on the team in scoring with 13.2 points per game, and has already surpassed his total number of rebounds from last year (195) with 199 in 2006-07, which sits at No. 1 in the Atlantic 10 at 10.2 boards per game.

While Lasme has done plenty of damage on the offensive side of the ball, his defense is what ranks him among the best in the nation. His seven blocked shots in last Wednesday's loss to Rhode Island made him the No. 1 shot blocker in the country with 105, just one more than Alabama A&M's Mickell Gladness.

Karl Hobbs was just one of the many coaches who witnessed Lasme dominate the low post.

"Oh boy, he took away so many layups," the George Washington coach said after losing to UMass earlier this month. "And that's what makes him a terrific player in this league. He changes games defensively alone. If we get 10 layups, normally we're going to convert six of them. But with him playing, we might convert two, and that's the difference in the game."

His ability to be a go-to guy takes a lot of the pressure off fellow senior Rashaun Freeman. Freeman leads UMass in scoring with 17.1 points per game and has been the face of the Minutemen since he was a freshman. But Lasme's progression as a player during his tenure in Amherst has made for one of the deadliest two-headed monsters in the conference.

"Stephane has really improved throughout these years, and he's going to keep on improving," Freeman said. "Everything at UMass was new to him and he did struggle at first, but when he was struggling, he worked extremely hard and it paid off. And now he continues to work hard, and he has the talent to go with it.

"He definitely helps me because the game plan used to be just pack it into Rashaun Freeman and you're going to win the game. I think that game plan is non-existent now. They're going to have to stop me and Steph to beat us."

Lasme's presence is being felt all over the nation. ESPN's Dick Vitale named him the National Player of the Week on Jan. 15 for his performances against George Washington and Temple. Lasme was also put on Vitale's 2006-07 All-Human Eraser Team, along with Ohio State's Greg Oden.

"When I think about it, I'm just happy to be where I'm at right now," Lasme said. "I'm happy that I can finally help my team win games. My freshman and sophomore year, [Rashaun] was the only big man that was able to score in the post. And now I can help him. I can allow him not to get the ball all the time."

UMass coach Travis Ford has made it clear that Lasme and Freeman are "the men on this basketball team." They are the workhorses down low that UMass feeds off of game in and game out. Without them, the Minutemen certainly wouldn't be one of the elite teams in the A-10, and they both know it.

"Me and Stephane played well, but we have to play this well for our team to be afloat," Freeman said after the win over George Washington. "And when Gary [Forbes] and Tiki [Mayben] and those guys start to bring their games up, then we're going to be the team that everybody thinks we can be. But me and Stephane have to play like this every game."

"What's amazing is that they're doing this and everyone knows that we're going to them, and these guys continue to figure out how to score," Ford said. "The biggest challenge for Stephane is consistency and getting ready mentally for every game. Sometimes I think I want it more for him than he does. I know his capabilities, and his whole career he has kind of taken this step-back approach."

This season, Lasme has done anything but, and Rashaun Freeman and the rest of the Minutemen couldn't be happier.

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Senior Stephane Lasme tied Marcus Camby's career shot-blocking record of 336 with seven in last Wednesday's loss to Rhode Island.

Minutemen destined to face Xavier again

Rob Greenfield

I hope that you enjoyed yourselves during your winter break. Maybe you made some money. Maybe you did nothing. Maybe you played some Xbox 360 like I did, and wasted countless hours of your life invested in something that makes absolutely no difference in the real world.

However you spent your free time, there are some things in the UMass sports world that you need to catch up on. The men's basketball team is five games into its conference season right now and will be seven games in by the time you read this column.

After their 101-87 victory over Duquesne on Jan. 21 at the Mullins Center — the only time in the history of the building that UMass scored over 100 points in a game — the Minutemen notched their fourth win in the conference in five games.

The one loss came on the road against the best team in the league and the outfit picked to win the Atlantic 10, the Xavier Musketeers. UMass lost that game by six and returned to the Mullins Center three days later to get back to its winning ways against the troubled Dukes.

A 4-1 start against conference opponents — sound familiar? After a win against the Temple Owls on Jan. 21 of 2006, the Minutemen were 4-1 against the Atlantic 10. Saint Joseph's, Fordham and Temple fell victim to the early UMass surge before the Minutemen lost their next three games and six out of their subsequent seven.

But we all remember the road troubles the Minutemen had last season. UMass was 3-13 away from the Mullins Center with a freshman point guard running a new offense for over 30 minutes per game.

This year's team proved that wearing the away jersey wasn't a problem when it went 7-1 in its first eight games away from home, including wins over Louisville, Oakland, Northeastern and Boston University games that might have been UL's last season.

The Minutemen beat the Cardinals at Freedom Hall in Louisville in front of some hostile southerners on Dec. 13 and were tied with No. 9 Pittsburgh with a few minutes left in the first half of the Colonial Classic.

Losses to Boston College at home and Kentucky (the Wildcats played out of their minds and shot 60-plus percent from 3-point land) and Xavier on the road revealed the Minutemen's inability to win the get-you-over-the-hump game as of now.

When Travis Ford scheduled the out-of-conference portion of this season, he put Kentucky, Louisville, Boston College and Pitt down on the UMass menu. Ford accepted Pitino's invitation to come to Louisville in honor of Pitino's late brother-in-law Billy Minardi, but Ford scheduled Kentucky and Pitt on his own.

Here's what he said on Sept. 6 of 2006 after UMass' schedule was released.

"It is a very, very tough schedule. Some people have said, 'I can't believe you're doing that. You guys are supposed to be good this year. You should try to make your schedule a bit easier so you get 27, 28 wins.'"

Ford was worried about his non-conference schedule, wondering if he "bit off a bit more than I could chew."

Well, the Minutemen went 1-3 against the Fierce Four and haven't suffered any permanent damage — a success, I guess. UMass' win came at Louisville against a weakened Cardinals team that had already lost to the Atlantic 10's Dayton Flyers, but the Minutemen held off a strong Cardinal charge in the second half for a win over Ford's mentor.

Five games into the conference schedule, it's still a jump ball for the Minutemen. They have an outside chance for the NCAA Tournament, and they didn't help their chances with a win against a big team.

A "W" over Pitt or Kentucky would have sat well with the tournament committee and given the Minutemen another avenue to the Round of 64.

But now it looks like an Atlantic 10 Tournament title is UMass' only path to the Promised Land. The Minutemen will battle conference foes the rest of the way in hopes of gaining a better seed in the postseason tournament, but all is in vain if the men in maroon can't string together some wins at the end of the long season.

Most likely, Xavier will block the Minutemen's way a couple of months from now. The Musketeers are loaded with talent and escaped the Minutemen's grasp with an 83-77 victory in their own building.

Those two teams will meet again, and depending on the structure of the bracket, it will probably be for the conference championship in Atlantic City in March.

The Musketeers went to the NCAA Tournament last year and disposed of the Minutemen in the first round of the conference tournament with a 75-66 win to send UMass packing for Amherst.

UMass might have a chance to shoot down the Musketeers with their own gunpowder somewhere down the line. Book me a front-row seat to that battle. I wouldn't want to miss the next chapter.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian Editor. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

A 100-point game and other milestones

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

While the Massachusetts men's basketball team played itself into a jam at the top of the Atlantic 10 Conference with a 4-2 in-conference record, the Minutemen have come up with a few potent notables along the way.

Senior co-captain Stephane Lasme was named Dick Vitale's National Player of the Week after his triple-double on Jan. 10 where he recorded 23 points, 15 rebounds and 11 blocks. Lasme is just the 23rd player in NCAA history to put up two triple-doubles in the same season. The other came against St. Francis on Nov. 22 when the big man notched 20 points, 10 rebounds and 11 blocks.

Al Skinner recorded the only other triple-double in UMass basketball history with 27 points, 18 rebounds and 10 assists in 1973.

Lasme is averaging 5.2 blocks per game (first in the nation) and 9.8 rebounds per game (10th). Both of those stats are first in the A-10, and Lasme has been everything that was expected of him and more this season. Ford is increasingly relying on his talented center on both sides of the floor, and he has made a concerted effort to get the ball to Lasme in the post.

Lasme notched his ninth double-double of the season against Duquesne on Jan. 21 with 14 points and 17 rebounds. Both Lasme and senior co-captain Rashaun Freeman have nine double-doubles on the year.

That alone distinguishes this season from the 2005-06 campaign, when Lasme was a liability on the offensive end.

Woes to wins

The Minutemen had extreme difficulty winning on the road last season. Chris Lowe was a young freshman then, and while Freeman, Lasme and Jeff Viggiano all had some experience, the guy with the ball is the one who really matters, and Lowe couldn't get the troops going away from home.

UMass finished 3-13 away from Amherst last season but pulled a 180 this year, beginning things with an 8-3 record and two wins at a neutral site — Northeastern and Oakland in the Colonial Classic in Pittsburgh.

The men's basketball team hasn't had this much success on the road in over five years. The last time UMass won eight games on the road was in the 2000-01 season. It finished with eight in that season, but this year's team is only 19 games in and will have more opportunities to beat that mark.

Shooter for Life

Senior guard James Life has been a consistent and reliable scoring threat for the Minutemen this season. He has scored 24 points twice — once at Kentucky and once against Duquesne at home, where he tied a career-high for 3-pointers made with six — and has shot a solid 42 percent from beyond the arc. Life shot just over 30 percent from 3-point land last season, and has significantly improved his shot selection this year.

Life is averaging 13.2 points per game behind Freeman (17 ppg) and Lasme (13.4 ppg).

Century Mark

UMass scored 101 points against Duquesne on Jan. 21 in the 14-point win. It was the first time UMass scored 100 points in the Mullins Center, which opened in 1994. The last time the Minutemen scored 100 points was against No. 1-ranked Arkansas in Springfield in 1994.

Atlantic 10 leaders

Lasme leads the Atlantic 10 in blocked shots and blocked shots per game, but there are several others who pace the conference in other categories. Freeman leads the league in field goal percentage at 63.3 (12th in the nation) and offensive rebounds per game with 4.32 per contest. Freeman ranks eighth in the A-10 in points per game with 17. He is also third in the league in rebounding, averaging 8.3 rebounds per game.

Life is third in the league in 3-pointers made per contest with 2.95, and he comes in ninth for 3-point field goal percentage at 42.4.

The Minutemen have improved offensively from a year ago, averaging 77.8 points per game thus far, tops in the A-10. That total is up over 10 points from last season, when UMass struggled to put the ball in the basket. A big part of the scoring improvement has been the addition of junior Gary Forbes, who is averaging 12.5 points per game and takes some of the opponent's defensive pressure off of Lasme and Freeman.

However, UMass ranks dead last in free-throw percentage and the stripe has plagued the team recently, especially in tight games down the stretch. The Minutemen dropped the Miami contest because of their inability to knock down some big free throws in the final minutes of the game.

The Minutemen are first in other categories, including fewest turnovers per game and assist-to-turnover ratio.

UMass Basketball

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore point guard Chris Lowe ranks fifth on UMass in scoring with six points per game. He has split time with Tiki Mayben this season.

MINUTEMEN WIN BIG ON THE ROAD | PAGE 10

GAME CREATES BUZZ ON THE WEB | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 33 LO: 17 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, JANUARY 30, 2007

Winter's cold can't stop UMass students

A UMass student braves the frigid temperatures and 10-mile-an-hour winds to attend her first day of the Spring semester Monday. Today's weather calls for a mix of clouds and sun, and a 50 percent chance of snow showers in the afternoon.

Red Cross creates Blood Buddies Program

New program aims to increase number of blood donations

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

Aimed at increasing the amount of blood donors in the Hampshire County area, the American Red Cross has launched their new Blood Buddies program.

The Red Cross, who will hold a blood drive from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. tomorrow at St. Bridgid's Church, 122 North Pleasant St, Amherst, is encouraging donors to bring a "buddy" with their donations.

All donors who bring a "buddy" will be entered into a raffle for the chance to win a special first aid gift basket complete with a Blood Buddy toy bear.

"The American Red Cross is based on the principle of Neighbor Helping," said David St. Onge, manager of Recruitment Operations for the American Red Cross' New England region. "We are delighted to partner with Hampshire County Chapter to introduce the Blood Buddies program and offer folks another way to support their communities."

Geared specifically for people who can not or prefer not to donate blood, the Blood Buddies program is similar to a walkathon. Non-blood donors can team up with a blood donor by, donating money, in that's person's name, or in the name of someone who receives blood. In addition, the American Red Cross is urging blood donors to sign up a non-blood donor in their family to become their Blood Buddy partner by donating money in the blood donor's name.

Shortages of blood have become a reoccurring problem within

See BLOOD on page 3

High-tech Army rehab center opens

Mary Robles, 7, stands with her father Sgt. Daniel Robles, during a Purple Heart ceremony at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, Sunday.

Military ups quality of rehabilitation

By Michelle Roberts
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO – Of the roughly 20,000 soldiers injured since the start of the Iraq war, more than 500 have lost a limb — many of them in roadside bombings.

Yesterday, a $50 million high-tech rehabilitation center opens that is designed to serve the growing number of soldiers who return from war as amputees or with severe burns.

The 60,000-square-foot Center for the Intrepid will allow the Army to move its rehabilitation program out of the Brooke Army Medical Center and into a separate facility.

"The Center for the Intrepid is going to let us keep advancing what we've been doing," said Maj. Stewart Campbell, the officer-in-charge of rehabilitation at Brooke.

At Brooke, amputees were being treated in offices and facilities carved out of the larger hospital. The new facility includes a rock-climbing wall, wave pool and a 360-degree virtual reality sphere to help soldiers recover their balance and other basic skills.

The center was officially dedicated at a ceremony Monday. Sens. John McCain (news, bio, voting record), R-Ariz., and Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., both 2008 presidential hopefuls, were scheduled to attend.

Brooke's amputee program started two years ago and has about 50 patients, but the new center will allow it to expand and offer more advanced rehabilitation, Campbell said.

Prior to the Iraq war, amputees were

See REHAB on page 3

UMass projects aim to reduce car crashes

Program to improve crash reports

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts safety research program (UMassSafe) announced the launch of two new projects aimed at reducing the frequency of car crashes through improving the gathering, organization and use of information about crashes, yesterday.

Through the rigorous examination of safety-related data – both traditional and nontraditional – the UMassSafe program is attempting to better understand crashes, driver behavior and

See PROJECT on page 3

A $350,000 grant given to UMassSafe from the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau and the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration allows the creation of two projects aimed at decreasing car accidents.

Gates promises Vista will wow PC buyers

Dancers scale the wall of a New York building to promote the launch of Vista operating system from Microsoft Monday.

Micosoft takes software to the next generation

By Jessica Mintzer
Associated Press

NEW YORK – Acrobatics, blaring music and plenty of hype accompanied Microsoft Corp.'s long-delayed debut of its new Windows Vista operating system.

Hours before the software went on sale in New York, dancers clad in Microsoft colors dangled from ropes high above street level and unfurled flags to form the red, green, blue and yellow Windows logo against a building wall. At a swank midtown eatery, speakers pumped out a hit from hip-hop hotshot Snoop Dogg before Steve Ballmer, Microsoft's chief executive officer, took to stage.

"Vista is the center, the launching point for the next generation of connected entertainment in the home," Ballmer said.

Vista was set to go on sale around the globe Tuesday, along with new versions of Microsoft Exchange e-mail software and the flagship Office business suite, which includes Word, Excel and PowerPoint. Several retailers had even scheduled midnight openings.

But unlike the recent launches of next-generation game machines like Sony Corp (NYSE:SNE - news)'s PlayStation 3, customers haven't been camping out for days.

"When I look at Windows Vista, I see a technology that is interesting, that is relevant, but to some extent is evolutionary," said Al Gillen, an analyst at the technology research group IDC. "I do not believe it will create a lot of motivation for people to rush out and get a new operating system."

In an interview, Microsoft chairman Bill Gates said the company actually wasn't pushing midnight sales events — after all, the software will be available as a download over the Web for the first time. Even that route will be relatively rarely taken — Ballmer acknowledged that, as in the past, most consumers will switch to Vista only when they buy new computers.

More than five years in the making, Vista was released for businesses Nov. 30, but the unveiling for consumers of the latest edition of Windows — which runs more than 90 percent of the world's PCs — only came Tuesday. Vista retails for $100 to $400, depending on the version and whether the user is upgrading from Windows XP

See VISTA on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 72

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherol Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolamitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR-SEPT. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BELIGERENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen

No Child Left Behind reforms get mixed reviews

By Nancy Zuckerbrod
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—Democrats and teachers' unions are criticizing the Bush administration for proposing to let school officials override collective bargaining agreements and state laws in an effort to reshape the No Child Left Behind law.

The recommendations are part of a plan that Education Secretary Margaret Spellings released Wednesday. It details changes the administration wants in the five-year-old education law, which is up for renewal this year.

The law seeks to ensure that all children can read and do math at grade level by 2014, requirements that have placed unprecedented demands on schools. They have had to increase testing, raise teacher quality and pay more attention to the achievements of minority children.

Spellings told reporters in a conference call that some proposals would meet resistance. But she said it was important to address the problems facing chronically failing schools; her department estimates there are about 1,800 such schools.

"How do we answer the question, 'What are we going to do for kids who are trapped in schools that continue to underperform?'" Spellings asked.

The goal is to free school administrators from parts of local contracts that govern teacher assignments. This is promoted as a way to get good teachers into troubled schools and help push out bad teachers.

Edward McElroy, president of the American Federation of Teachers, said the proposal does not make sense.

"To have a superintendent who is a party to the contract ... then have the authority to override it is silly beyond words," McElroy said.

He said trying to force experienced teachers into troubled schools would lead them to seek jobs elsewhere. "Getting people to go to a school can't be as a result of a coercive act," McElroy said.

A second proposed change would allow local officials to close failing schools and turn them into charter schools, regardless of any state limits on the number of charter schools. These are public schools that sometimes are run by private entities and usually are free of many of the regulations that govern traditional public schools.

The administration says the federal government has the right to include the charter school and contract language in a renewed No Child Left Behind law as strings attached to the billions of dollars in aid it provides to these schools.

Massachusetts Democratic Sen. Edward Kennedy (news, bio, voting record), chairman of the Senate committee overseeing education issues, said he was disappointed that the administration has proposed "circumventing state law."

Kennedy and union leaders also criticized a proposal that would give students in failing schools private school vouchers. Each scholarship would be worth an estimated $4,000.

"School vouchers divert scarce dollars from underfunded public schools and move us farther from achieving a great public school for every child," said Reg Weaver, president of the National Education Association, the largest teachers' union.

The top Republican on the House committee overseeing education indicated the measure would have GOP support.

"If we are truly serious about meeting the goals of No Child Left Behind, we must equip parents with every available option so their children can learn, succeed, and grow," said Rep. Howard "Buck" McKeon, R-Calif.

Some aspects of the administration's proposal won bipartisan praise.

Republicans and Democratic leaders back the administration's plan to stick with the law's 2014 reading and math goal, though some have said it is unrealistic.

A proposal to allow schools to consider how much students progress each year, not just whether they meet specific benchmarks, was applauded by all.

In addition, lawmakers appear willing to consider a proposal that would hold states accountable for students' science scores in addition to the math and reading assessments.

There also seems to be support for requiring states to create standards and tests linked to what students should know when they start college or go to work.

President Bush meets with members of Securing America's Future Energy (SAFE) at the White House in Washington Monday to discuss changes in his administration's education policy.

No new trial for 'caged kids' couple

By Joe Milicia
Associated Press

CLEVELAND—A judge on Monday declined to grant a new trial or acquittal for the couple convicted of child endangerment for keeping some of their 11 adopted special-needs children in cages.

Michael and Sharen Gravelle failed to show that the jury's verdicts were inconsistent, Huron County Common Pleas Judge Earl McGimpsey ruled.

The Gravelles, who were convicted last month on 11 of 24 counts against them, said they needed to keep some of the children in enclosed beds with alarms to protect them from their own dangerous behavior and stop them from wandering at night.

Attorney Ken Myers, who represents Sharen Gravelle, said the defense would appeal

The couple face one to five years in prison and a maximum fine of $10,000 for each felony count. Sentencing is scheduled for Feb. 14.

The Gravelle's children, who suffered from problems such as fetal alcohol syndrome and a disorder that involves eating nonfood items, ranged in age from one to 14 when authorities removed them in September 2005 from the Gravelles' home in Wakeman, about 60 miles west of Cleveland.

Man creates 'buzzed' baked goods

By Steve Hartsoe
Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C.—Dr. Robert Bohannon wants you in his world. It's fast, upbeat, jovial and driven by caffeine — lots of it.

But four to six cups of coffee a day aren't enough for Bohannon. And he believes others share his need for more options when it comes time to pursue that caffeine buzz.

So the molecular scientist who moonlights as a cafe owner developed a way to add caffeine to baked goods, one that eliminates the natural, bitter taste of caffeine.

"This gives people the opportunity if they want to have a glass of milk and want to have caffeine. It will get them going," Bohannon said.

The amount of caffeine in his creations can vary, but Bohannon can easily put 100 milligrams of caffeine — the equivalent of a 5-ounce cup of drip-brewed coffee — into the treats he plans to market under the "Buzz Donuts" and "Buzzed Bagels" names.

Bohannon, who owns Sips Coffee & Tea cafe in Durham, isn't selling the amped-up baked goods yet. He recently began seeking patents and shopping the products to companies including Krispy Kreme Doughnuts Inc., Dunkin' Donuts and Starbucks Corp. There's no word yet on whether the companies like the idea.

But with waistlines and anxiety already expanding across the nation, some observers already question whether it's wise to combine two key sources of these problems — caffeine and calories.

"I see nothing positive from this," said Barry Popkin, a nutrition scientist at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. "In many ways we're creating a super caffeine generation. They're undersleeping, they consume a lot of caffeine to stay awake but they don't understand there are health effects.

Popkin has studied the health effects of caffeine and says consuming more than 300 to 400 milligrams a day can lead to heart problems, among other negatives. A 12-ounce soda typically has 30 to 55 milligrams of caffeine.

Children and pregnant women could also be hurt by more access to caffeine, especially if it's added to unhealthy foods, Popkin said.

"We're seeing teens and young adults ending up in the emergency room because they're consuming Red Bull and some of these other energy drinks," he said.

An 8.5 ounce can of Red Bull contains 80 milligrams of caffeine.

Bohannon, 53 and a coffee drinker since he was 8 years old, says he's well aware of the risks but urges moderation.

"You don't want to overdo it on anything," he said, noting the positives that Popkin and others agree can result from caffeine, such as improved alertness.

He also sees a demand for more caffeine and says he has customers at his cafe who order eight shots of high-caffeine espresso at a time.

Bohannon said his idea for caffeine-enhanced baked goods began about six years ago.

"I was sitting with a glass of milk and a doughnut," he said. "I needed a little jolt in the morning."

So, he began trying to create baked goods that would provide his much-loved coffee buzz by way of food. His first attempts at adding raw caffeine to doughnuts fell way short.

He has since learned how to turn caffeine into small, flour-like particles, eliminating the bitterness and gritty texture. He also adds a vegetable oil-based coating.

Bohannon, who holds a degree in molecular biology from the University of Colorado at Boulder and a doctorate from Baylor College of Medicine, also runs Environostics Inc. in Durham. The small company makes ultra-sensitive tests that detect pregnancy, infectious diseases and other conditions.

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE
Most Images Only $6, $7 and $8
1000's of Choices
Incredible Selection
Where:
Student Union Ballroom
When:
Mon. Jan. 29 thru Fri. Feb. 2
Time:
9 A.M. - 4:30 P.M.
Sponsor:
WMUA 91.1 FM
WE ACCEPT THE "U" CARD
CHECK OUT OUR GREAT POSTERS AND PRICES!!
WWW.POSTERSALE.COM

Get A Room
at
Alpine Commons, Aspen Chase or Sugarloaf Estates Apartments!
1, 2, 3, and 4 Bedroom Apartments!
Move in now or reserve your home for Summer/Fall 2007. Take advantage of our early bird specials, guaranteed housing, washers & dryers in select homes, fitness center, pet friendly, and much more!
Call us today!!
1-866-301-1445
1-866-301-2808

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS!!
PLEASE PARK SMART.
Avoid ticketing and towing - please do not park in employee lots! The University community appreciates your parking cooperation.
Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots Monday through Friday between the hours of 7 am and 5 pm. Parking is prohibited at any time in tow zones, handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces, reserved spaces and lots which require 24-hour permits.
Parking meters are enforced for payment Monday through Friday between the hours of 9 am and 5 pm.
Please visit Parking Services' website at http://parking.umass.edu for further parking information.

McDonald's selects trans-fat-free oil

By Dave Carpenter
Associated Press

CHICAGO—McDonald's Corp. has finally selected a new trans-fat-free oil for cooking its famous french fries after years of testing, the fast-food chain said Monday.

While it has developed a healthier new oil, the company is still not saying when it will be used in all 13,700 U.S. restaurants. It already trails competitors in committing to a zero-trans fat oil.

Spokesman Walt Riker said the oil is currently in more than 1,200 U.S. restaurants after extensive testing, but declined to provide details on timing or locations.

"We can confirm that we've got the right oil," he said. "We're phasing it in."

The choice of a new oil comes as McDonald's and others face a July 1 deadline to begin complying with an ordinance passed by New York City last month making it the first U.S. city to ban all restaurants from using artificial trans fats.

McDonald's Corp., the world's largest fast-food chain, has developed a new, canola-based oil for their signature french fries. The company tested 18 varieties of oil in more than 50 blends during the last seven years.

Although the company has created the new oil, they'll need to study it more, as the company doesn't want it to alter the taste of their famous fries.

Oak Brook, Ill.-based McDonald's has said for months it would comply with such a ban, and said it would introduce any new oil nationwide rather than have a separate oil for its New York restaurants. But it had not confirmed that testing was complete.

Riker said the new oil is canola-based and includes corn and soy oils.

Addressing long-held concerns that changing the oil could jeopardize the popular taste of its fries, he said "We're very confident in our test and taste results. We're very confident in what we're hearing back from our customers."

The Chicago Tribune, which first reported McDonald's decision on a new oil Sunday, said the company has tested 18 varieties of oil in more than 50 blends during the last seven years.

McDonald's had been under pressure for moving more slowly than smaller rivals Wendy's International Inc. and Yum Brands Inc.'s KFC and Taco Bell to rid its oil of the artery-clogging trans fats.

A public health advocate who has criticized McDonald's fries as nutritionally "disastrous" applauded its move toward a new oil.

"So many people eat there that making this change can really provide a significant benefit to the public's health," said Michael Jacobson, executive director of the nonprofit Center for Science in the Public Interest. "It also reconfirms with the restaurant industry that trans fat is a real problem and now even the biggest chain is beginning to deal with it. Hopefully now the smaller chains and mom-and-pops will also get rid of it."

The $22 billion company was especially cautious after reneging within months on a September 2002 pledge to introduce a new oil, citing concerns about changing the taste of its fries.

"It's just taking a little bit of time because as we move forward we don't want to jeopardize the iconic nature of the french fry, which as you know is so very important to our brand," Chief Executive Jim Skinner told an investor conference in New York two months ago.

The company uses a healthier oil blend in some countries overseas but says regional differences in agricultural production require development of different blends.

McDonald's has not identified the test markets the latest oil was used in. Riker denied that Phoenix was among them, as the Tribune report said.

Shares in the company rose 35 cents to $43.28 in afternoon trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Army improves rehab

REHAB from page 1

generally given acute care by the military and then turned over the Department of Veterans Affairs, said retired Col. Rebecca Hooper, program manager for the Center for the Intrepid. But since 2003, the military has kept those patients and made rehabilitation part of its mission.

The center was funded by private donations to the Intrepid Foundation, a charity that has built dozens of houses to shelter families of wounded soldiers while they undergo treatment.

As part of the construction at Fort Sam Houston, two new houses have been added to two already there so that additional families could be housed near the center.

Staff Sgt. Jon Arnold-Garcia, who lost part of a leg in a grenade attack, got his first look at the rehab center on Sunday.

"This place is amazing, that the American people donated the money for this," said the 28-year-old from Sacramento, Calif.

Arnold-Garcia and other amputees have been eyeing the rock climbing wall, visible through the glass. They have also heard about the wave pool, in which they can use wake boards to strengthen their back and stomach muscles.

"It doesn't look like a hospital," Arnold-Garcia said, sitting in the center's cafe. "It's a place I can see myself getting up and being motivated instead of walking hospital hallways with doctors."

UMass project to train cops in data collecting related factors.

PROJECT from page 1

"Having good data on traffic crashes, and why and where they occur is the first step in reducing the number of crashes," said Robin Riessman, associate director of UMassSafe.

UMassSafe was recently awarded $350,000 in grants funded by the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau, the Commercial Vehicle Enforcement Section of the Massachusetts State Police and the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration.

After investigating a car crash, police officers are required to fill out accident report forms containing over 100 questions pertaining to the accident. These questions include various types of information, the location of the accident, what kind of injuries occurred, how many vehicles were involved in the accident and the make and model of the accident vehicles.

UMassSafe is hoping to increase the accuracy of these reports.

"We're not criticizing the reports police already do," said Riessman. "We're just trying to make the information filled out on those reports more accurate. When police arrive to an accident scene they have a lot of things to worry about; they have to care for any victims that may be injured, maintain the flow of traffic, they may be unable to make gathering information for the accident report their top priority."

Some of the problems associated with crash data collection include missing information on the severity of injuries and lots of variability in data on the location of crashes. These UMassSafe projects will assess such data quality issues and then develop potential solutions for the Commonwealth. One of the grant projects will narrow their focus to assessing the quality of data specific to crashes involving commercial vehicles.

"If the data shows that speeding is a problem in numerous accidents in one area the bureau may develop a speed campaign. If the data showed one region with an exorbitant amount of alcohol related accidents, then they may develop an alcohol awareness campaign," said Riessman.

The other UMassSafe project will aim to develop a pilot Web-based training program for police officers in hopes of assisting them in becoming better data collectors.

The program will teach officers how to correct common mistakes and the type of information they should focus on recording.

Command staff will learn how the information is used in highway safety efforts and how to promote accuracy in police reported crash reports. The rigorous examination of safety-related data will inform the police officer training project.

UMassSafe is a multidisplinary traffic safety research program housed in the UMass Transportation Center in the College of Engineering.

Microsoft introduces new software

VISTA from page 1

The Redmond, Wash.-based software maker contends that Vista is such a huge improvement over previous computing platforms that users inevitably say "Wow" when they see it.

Gates ticked off some examples, such as how Vista presents a slick 3-D graphical user interface and document icons that give at-a-glance previews. Gates said the next wow comes when people start using a system-wide search program that Microsoft's engineers built into both the operating system and new versions of Office.

Vista comes as changing dynamics of computing — notably the rise of open-source software and Web-based services that replicate what traditionally could be done only on a desktop computer — are threatening Microsoft's dominance in the industry.

But Gates contended that the operating system has a higher profile than ever before, as the PC has morphed from a souped-up typewriter to a networked entertainment center, personal media library and gateway to the Internet.

"There's so many areas in which we need innovation. Developers need a richer platform if we're going to get speech, voice, natural language, and more rich 3-D-type graphics into the user interface," Ballmer said. Plus, the technologies around the PC — chips, storage, high-definition DVD will all evolve, he said. "The operating system will need to evolve with them."

Over the weekend, Dell Inc. started taking orders for PCs with Vista. Kevin Rollins, Dell's chief executive, said the company's Web site saw a 20 percent jump in traffic, with "tens of thousands of copies" of Vista sold for delivery Tuesday or later.

In Tokyo, about 80 people lined up Monday night at the Bic Camera Department Store to become among the world's first consumers to own Vista. Celebrities and executives were on hand as a large-screen TV displayed a countdown to the midnight launch (10 a.m. EST).

For a Tuesday morning store celebration, DSG International PLC's flagship PC World store in central London hired costumed characters, including Sherlock Holmes for security and a movie star for multimedia.

Red Cross to hold blood drive

BLOOD from page 1

communities throughout the nation. According to the American Red Cross, someone in America requires a blood transfusion every two seconds. It is estimated that approximately 60 percent of Americans are eligible to donate blood, yet only five percent do so a given year.

Donors can download the donor form at www.redcrosshampshire.org. Copies of the Blood Buddies donation form are also available at all Hampshire County Red Cross blood drive sites.

The American Red Cross holds blood drives seven days a week in communities across the region.

To donate blood, individuals must be at least 17 years of age, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in general good health.

"This is just the beginning of the Blood Buddies program, we expect this to spread across the country," said Elyse Lichtenthal

The American Red Cross urges possible donors to call 1-800-GIVE-LIFE or visit www.newenglandblood.org for additional information and find out where they can donate blood.

Ultimate Fitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9 • For more information call 253-7571
Semester Special $175
Free unlimited Tanning!
first 100 to Join
Full Aerobics Program
Included with membership:
-Cardio Kickboxing
-Yoga, Pilates
-And Many More
-Juice Bar & Supplements
-Personal Training
-Core training
Over 20 pieces of cardio including...
-Treadmills
-Bikes
-Crosstrainers
-Free weight and circuit training equipment
No enrollment fee
now offering aerobics only memberships

Dine & Win a FANTASTIC Super Bowl Prize!
RAFFLE LCD TV
PARTY FOR 12-15 PEOPLE
Coke Cooler, 1 Case Soda, 1 Case UMass Bottled Water, Chicken Finger Platter, Fruit Platter and Dip
2nd Prize
PARTY FOR 12-15 PEOPLE
• 1 cs. Soda
• 1 cs. UMass Bottled Water
• Fruit Platter and Dip
3rd Prize
• Chicken Finger Platter (for 12-15 people)
Enter between January 29 and January 31 2007 at any UMass Dining Commons.
You must be on a meal plan to enter.
Drawing to be held Thursday, February 1 at 6:00 pm in each DC.
Compliments of: UMass Dining Services and Coca-Cola
YCMP
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
www.umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, JANUARY 30, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

World of War-cracked-out

Colin McDonald

World of Warcraft, also known to some as World of Warcrack, is easily one of the most addicting games I have ever played. The other day I found a command that showed exactly how long I had been playing: four days, nine hours and 31 minutes. I thought to myself "That's one-hundred hours down the drain," but then I realized this was just one of three characters.

World of Warcraft, Everquest and Diablo II stand as the super-giants of massively multiplayer online role-playing games (MMORPG). In these games, players build a character, completing quests and gaining valuable experience that further enhances their characters power. The premise is simple, but the amount of time spent attaining better equipment and completing quests can be downright unhealthy for some of the more "hardcore" gamers. Teamwork amongst players is vital, and the level of interactivity these games offer is astounding. Most players belong to "guilds" or teams of players that work together to complete goals and further their power.

If you're losing sleep at night because you can't decide whether to equip your Orc warrior with "Pendulum Axe" or "Witchfury", you might want to re-evaluate how you are appropriating your time.

In any regular sense, these guilds are like any sports team. These social demands in game create a further dependence on players gaming late into the night – very late into the night.

This gaming addiction has proven to be detrimental to many players, even fatal for others. Recently, a couple in Korea left home to spend a few hours at the local Internet cafe. Caught up in an intense dungeon raid, the parents left their child alone at home for several hours. They returned hours later to find their only child had suffocated. Criminal charges of negligence were brought up against them.

Arguably the most renowned case of gaming hysteria is the story of Shawn Woolley, who was found dead in his apartment after shooting himself with Everquest still running. His mother attributes his suicide to an event that took place in the game that pushed Woolley over the edge.

These are the most extreme cases of MMORPG addiction, but even the casual gamer can't help but notice the effects of extended play. Work is put aside, relationships fail, friendships fade and grades drop.

Those most affected are males between 18 and 24 years of age- a.k.a. the average college kid. You may think that you know them – the smelly, overweight kids – but let me tell you that today's gamer has changed. With easy access to MMORPGs, just about anybody can get caught up in the gaming craze. You've probably seen G4, the TV station dedicated entirely to gaming. Across the globe, video games have become a multi-billion dollar market. They are often credited with both, the most advanced computer language and processes, as well as the sloth of man.

Certain "Everquest Widows" have been pushing the games producer to include a warning about the game's potential addiction, but that's crazy. I don't buy a can of beans expecting to see a label, "Warning: do not eat beans excessively. Serious injury or death may occur." Putting a warning label on games is like putting a label on a TV or a book. It's entertainment, and if you can't handle it, don't do it.

Worried you're addicted? If you picked up this column to read simply because the title had something to do with online gaming, then you're on your way! Just kidding.

Anyway, the symptoms of "gaming addiction" have been studied by the Computer Addiction Services at Harvard University. Leading symptoms include: inability to stop the activity; neglect of family and friends; lying to family and employers about activities; problems with school or job; carpal tunnel syndrome; dry eyes; failure to attend to personal hygiene; sleep disturbances or changes in sleep patterns.

Some of these symptoms are a little generalized. As far as I'm concerned, if you're losing sleep at night because you can't decide whether to equip your Orc warrior with "Pendulum Axe" or "Witchfury," you might want to reevaluate how you are appropriating your time.

Are MMORPGs bad? No. In fact, they give people an opportunity to experiment in leadership roles and develop important time and economic management skills. However, too much of any one thing, is never good. It's fine to have a little fun beating up goat demons with your friends, but only as long as you realize that it's just a game. You've got the life of "student" to consider, not just "Og the Troll Shaman."

I think MMORPGs are fun – some people just don't have the will to put the game down. Certain players, for whatever reason, get into the game so much they can't withdraw themselves. Some people just need a friend to smack them upside the head and say, "We're going out tonight."

Trust me. I know.

It's alright to play the game, but don't let the game play you.

Colin McDonald is a Collegian columnist.

Control the kids in the DC

Kaitlyn Silva

If there's one thing the University of Massachusetts is good for, it's art. Whether it's our theatrical productions, exhibits or the odd modern art statue that everyone seems to avoid as they walk past the Fine Arts Center, we are surrounded by the arts.

Surely, no student could seriously complain about the wonderful arts that can be found on campus, right? Almost.

It's not exactly the arts that the students who get their lunch in the Franklin Dining Common have a problem with. It's the crowds that the arts draw in. They see their play or tour their exhibit, then make their way into our midst. After an obvious deal between the devil, Dining Services, and a few teachers, an unruly mass of pre-pubescent middle school students are allowed to invade Franklin on their field trips. The best part of it all is this: these middle school students somehow manage to hold trump over actual college students in the lunch line.

As if being both surrounded and deterred by these little rascals wasn't enough, they're also annoying us. They travel from table to table, but not to talk with each other.

The college-aged students for whom this campus was actually built are on a tight schedule, which the almighty Spire has chosen for us. If we're lucky enough to have time to eat lunch, we're likely to do so in the Dining Common closest to us. Those of us who choose to squeeze a meal into our tight schedule, we rush into Franklin with just enough time to eat and run off to our next class.

We suck it up and think, "Hey, it's Wednesday. At least I can grab a decent panini today." However, as we walk up the carpeted ramp, a fateful sound begins buzzing at our ears. It's annoyance in its purest form. It's a group of poorly supervised minors running and squealing around the Dining Common. We look to the usual panini server, who tells us with sympathetic eyes that this side of the DC will be closed off for at least a half-hour to serve middle school students. The hunger and the horror are indescribable.

What to do next? It's correct to say that we could settle for some fried chicken, stir fry, or macaroni and cheese made with nacho cheese, probably leftover from the nacho bar days before, but what if those foods just don't suit us? There's no time to reach another dining common or the Blue Wall. Even if we could settle for the food we don't usually eat, do we really want to eat while surrounded by these immature pests? Maybe a few of them would be fine, but whole classrooms? Can we beg our way into the grab n' go line instead?

Why is it that they're blocking off my lunch choice, again? They're on a field trip and they've got a whole day off from their schoolwork. We don't. Are they the ones paying over a thousand dollars a semester to eat the food? Surely, Dining Services has also squeezed the youngsters for every penny they can get, but it's still not nearly as much as we are forced to spend our first two years on campus.

As if being both surrounded and deterred by these little rascals wasn't enough, they're also annoying us. In cliques of five or six, these middle school students travel from table to table, but not to talk with each other. They're approaching college students. They ask a question or make a comment, wait for a response, then walk away in a fit of laughter.

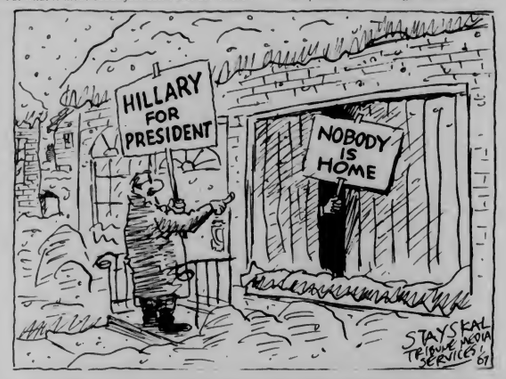
A group of girls approaches a boy with a nose ring. One young girl asks him what's wrong with his nose. He doesn't answer. Still, she and her friends walk away giggling. What did he (or any other student in the dining common) do to merit such a ridiculous disturbance? All of the college students in the area are just trying to eat their lunch in peace.

Meanwhile, four teachers sitting at a table in the center of the room are chatting away without a care in the world. They don't seem to mind the fact that their students are all over the place. Controlling all of the students is an impossible task, but they could at least attempt to control some.

Should younger students be allowed to enjoy all of the fine arts and entertainment that our school has produced? Of course. The programs are hailed for their excellence and if we can enjoy them, so can everybody else. Besides, going on a field trip is perhaps the only equivalent to skipping class that these students will have for years.

All we ask is that, for our sanity, just have them bring a bag lunch.

Kaitlyn Silva is a Collegian columnist.



A lampoon on language

Brad Leibowitz

Commonly, we walk around saying things every day which, when you stop to think about it, make no sense what so ever. Our language is full of sayings, euphuisms and idioms which contradict one another at every corner. From little sayings on the mind, to expressions expressing how many words can be found in a picture, to the inevitable temperature utterance, our mix of American-English diction at its base can cause you to go into the deep end (which isn't that far down) or find yourself amidst the clouds (which any pilot will tell you isn't far up).

A picture is worth a thousand words. Have you actually ever tried describing Da Vinci's "Mona Lisa" in a thousand words?

Sticks and stones may break my bones, but words will never hurt me. If this were true girls would never fight and nobody would ever talk behind their friends' backs. Contrary to the wisdom of the bumper sticker (which isn't that smart), the writing on the wall will, word for word, make you as crazy as a bat out of Hell.

Speaking of the devil's never-ending marshmallow roast, everyone is either hot as Hell or cold as Hell; someone's got to be losing ground here. Even more so, everyone always hopes that you fry in Hell or BJ suffer 'til Hell freezes over. Nonetheless, when you're roasting like a pig on a spit, for heaven's sake you'll be happy as all Hell to be there. On the flip side, when something good happens, you'll be the first one to thank the heavens or bless the gods.

But why is it, if something terrible happens (say it literally rains cats and dogs – you never see anyone blaming the invisible man in the sky? Maybe it's because in God we trust. But really, do we?

Take a second to think about it: trust implies some belief. True belief constitutes that we as believers have no need to question, ask or think about what the big guy is doing. If this is so, then for God's sake why do we pray?

Prayer is another form of a question, which in its base form dictates doubt in the belief of the all-knowing. If He knows and has a set plan for everything, then why should he change it just to accommodate your prayers? It wouldn't be much of a grand plan if you had the ability to change it, would it?

One more thing about prayer: praying on Sunday is egotistical. It's his day off, so let him rest.

A picture is worth a thousand words. Have you actually ever tried describing Da Vinci's, "Mona Lisa" in a thousand words? Next time you get a chance to view the painting, I guarantee one of the only things you're going think is, "wow, she fell from the ugly tree, hit every branch on the way down and then smashed into a rock."

Now, I don't know about you, but for the vast majority of art work, normally I have one of two reactions (barring, the Mona Lisa), the first of which, "wow, that's amazing," or the second being, "eh, nothing special." Art work is not worth a thousand words – at most, maybe a hundred.

Come to think about it, the only time I would have one thousand words to describe a situation is when it literally rains cats and dogs or when pigs fly. I often wonder if the person who created the saying, "when pigs fly" was jealous of the monkeys under the control of the wicked witch of the west. Seems to me, he was.

Frank Zappa once said, "The mind is like a parachute, it doesn't work unless it's open," and others say, "the mind is like a sponge, it soaks up everything it touches." This is just a thought floating across my head, but if the mind is so valuable why do we only give someone a penny for their thoughts? Why not all the gold in the world? It could be because Albert Einstein deserves the gold for truly thinking, while the rest of us deserve the penny because we are still praying to the immortal one to change his plan so we can win the lottery.

Which by the way, will never happen unless, you're as lucky as a four-leaf clover or a leprechaun. Come to think about it, a leprechaun who carries around a pot of gold which weighs more than him, got denied proper height, and lives on a rainbow has the luck of say, a leprechaun.

Lastly, girls are constantly told how drop-dead gorgeous they are. Seems to me if this were true, no one would ever hear it because the supposed teller, would be – you got it – dead.

But for now, send my love to your dearest (you may be asking what kind of love, so do I every time I hear it).

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ALUMNI PRAISE

I have been meaning to write you for quite some time and I would appreciate your passing this along to all that deserve the credit.

I am a graduate of UMass (1976) and now work at Smith College. It is such a pleasure to see the Daily Collegian stacked within your Daily Collegian boxes in front of John M. Greene Hall (Smith College's bus stop) as well as at the Northampton Post Office to name just two of your distribution locations. I realize that this takes effort and energy to accomplish every Monday through Friday, and I just want you to know how much I appreciate it.

Because of you I have had the opportunity to keep in touch with the University as well as take part in many of the activities and events that happen on campus. Thank you.

David Osepowicz
UMass Alumnus

POSTGAME RIOT

The aftermath of the post-game riot at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst is more likely than not to become the proverbial theater of the absurd, at the highest administrative levels, trickling down to sewer level management. The question as to why it happened would be answered as well as eunuchs answer questions about coitus, copulation, and engendering. Eunuchs can be very articulate about the ecstasy and euphoria of sex, but only in the abstract.

Flowing from this corollary is the thought that the eunuchs, or as a former police official called "The Witless," would be very articulate, gyrating, heaving and weaving, portending ejaculations and climaxes on the ontology and manifestation of the riots, but only in the abstract. The truth will escape them just as the pleasures of sex escapes a eunuch.

The riot happened because nobody, before and after, was minding the store. Nobody, before and after, was in charge. The so-called wonderful intellitves drafted to ensure civility at the University are nothing more than a collection of futile writing exercises, much like the erudition of eunuchs on the issues of procreation. The question to be posited is how can top echelon eunuchs, genuinely, hold lower level eunuchs accountable for the breakdown in discipline and good order?

The Dean of Students has never been held accountable. The campus Chief of Police has not been held accountable either. Leadership has not been shown by either of these administrators. The evidence of the absence of leadership and accountability is, patently, that the riot happened. Evidence of leadership and accountability would have been the effective prevention of the riot. The riot happened because the students, over time, were left to their own devices.

Psychologically, they felt no one was in charge, they were not being watched, consequently felt unaccountable, anonymous and predisposed to rioting. Humans are born with the progressively developing ability to sense and perceive the frailties of others, what is safe or unsafe, real, or pretentious. Students can penetrate the thin layer and the emptiness of those in leadership positions at the University.

The University needs to seriously reconsider the type of man and women hired into leadership positions. Don't hire a dean of students with the preposterous and arrogant assertion that she wrote her doctoral dissertation in two weeks. You cannot write a good undergraduate term paper in two weeks. A doctoral endeavor has several levels and each one is a process. Writing a doctoral dissertation is a delicate and deliberate vetting process that involves many other intricacies. You can write something in two weeks, but don't call it a doctoral dissertation.

The University doesn't really need to hire former Navy SEALS, former Army Rangers, or former Green Berets. But please, hire people who have been somewhere in life. Hire people who are nicely put together intellectually, physically, and emotionally.

Don't hire leaders who, intellectually, cannot punch their way out of a paper bag. This includes the faculty. Don't hire leaders who have not served their country. Paying taxes doesn't make you a good citizen, only a good taxpayer. You pay taxes or else you go to jail. Serving your country honorably, absent the draft, is something to behold. Don't hire leaders who would drop dead just on the thought of running a few meters, let alone actually doing it. Don't hire leaders who become intellectually exhausted deciphering the Socratic syllogism.

Hire leaders who deliver tangible and relevant results on a daily basis.

Dr. Juan Cruz, Ed.D.
Lt. Colonel, U.S. Army (Retired)
South Hadley, MA

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, JANUARY 30, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Game lets players start all over

'Second Life' creates second universe on the world wide web

"Second Life" is much like the video the game "The Sims," players are completely in control of the destiny of their character. Each player has the ability to buy and sell real internet products to other players, some players have even made profit from their products within the game.

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

"Second Life" is not your typical video game. "Second Life" is the chance to start your life all over again in a distant digital reality. This concept for a video game may remind some gamers of the video game "The Sims", but "Second Life" takes "The Sims" to the next level.

In "Second Life," players create a new identity called an Avatar. Once created, one can buy clothes with linden dollars, the currency of "Second Life", the linden dollar has no exact method of exchange to real American dollars. Clothes can also be found all over the game for free.

Similar to "The Sims", characters in the game can create houses and businesses. However unlike "The Sims", in "Second Life" the businesses can actually have potential to create profit for their owners. While the profits are small, they can be used to purchase a pay account. There are two different kinds of pay accounts, the first is additional basic. Additional basic costs a one time fee of $9.95. The other pay account is a premium account which costs $72 dollars a year. With the pay accounts, users are given a signing up bonus in linden dollars to pay for expenses in the game.

Players also have the ability to talk to one another while playing "Second Life". Walking around the faux reality, players can talk to anyone in the chat setting in two different tones. The regular tone makes it so the characters immediately around you can hear you, the second tone is a shout. When the character shouts

See SECOND LIFE on page 6

Hollywood movies starting to decline

By David Humphreys
Collegian Columnist

Winter break makes one realize a few things. First, not having a job is awesome. Second, sitting at home and doing nothing can get boring. Third, Hollywood is in its death throes and nobody's around to read its last rites. It seems movies these days, for the most part, have been sub par. While there are some exceptions (this year, most notably, The Departed, Little Miss Sunshine, Casino Royale, Borat, as well as a few others) nothing has really happened in recent years to help Hollywood out of the grave, to help it back up to where it once was.

What happened to the raw acting ability? Where are the Bogarts and Bergmans and Brandos of today? The answer, in one simple word, is editing. With today's editing processes, an actor no longer has to act well – they only have to look good. Check out The Lord of the Rings trilogy. While Peter Jackson did a great job directing the movie, the cast leaves the films with something to be desired. Special effects mask the acting and make it a visual monument, but what can be worse than Sean Astin, Viggo Mortensen, and Sean Bean all on the screen together? Not to mention Liv Tyler, who lowers the bar even more. Maybe the studio should have thought about putting another any other female lead instead of her (with the exception of J. Lo and Mariah Carey, of course).

The real problem may be money. As soon as actors, directors and producers start using their talent and influence solely for monetary gain, movies start to dive into the dirt. Good example: Gus Van Sant. In 1997, Van Sant directed one of the best dramas of all time, Good Will Hunting. The hit film won two Oscars (Best Actor in a Supporting Role for Robin Williams and Best Writing, Screenplay Written Directly for the Screen by Matt Damon and Ben Affleck) and was nominated for seven others (including a Best Director for Van Sant. He lost to James Cameron for Titanic.) Following Van Sant's enormous success in the movie business, he made what was quite possibly one of the most ill-conceived plans for any movie remake, ever. Its name was Psycho.

Having a remake of Psycho would be like having Steven Spielberg remake The Godfather. Although Spielberg is a phenomenal director, one of the best of all time, he could never make The Godfather comparable to that of Francis Ford Coppola's. That being said, Gus Van Sant is not one of the best directors of all time. Granted, he's no amateur, but he doesn't compare to the truly great directors of the movie business. In remaking Psycho, Van Sant tries to conquer Alfred "The Master of Suspense" Hitchcock. In so trying, Van Sant created a remake so despicable and utterly revolting that the only thing the DVD is good for is a drink coaster. Don't think it starts and ends with Van Sant. Hundreds of other directors are milking the industry of its money and credibility each day with no end in sight.

There is still a last glimmer of hope for the movie industry – Indie films. They give a hope for a new entertainment industry by bringing life to where it once was. Indies show Hollywood that those multi-million dollar movies about meaningless romance and absurd action are complete trash. Indies are more real, more down to earth, more about making a movie for its artistic value rather than its shock value.

Take away the gratuitous sex and violence from any given high-budget movie and roughly 95 percent of that movie is scrapped. Now take away the gratuitous sex

See HOLLYWOOD on page 6

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

Former Blur guitarist releases solo album with a punk pop twist

By David Humphreys
Collegian Columnist

With an inherent ability to convey meaning through the combination of words and instrumentation, Graham Coxon transcends the gap between the United State's music scene and the United Kingdom's. Although he has only charted in the U.K., Coxon has what it takes to be a successful, worldwide star. Coxon is absolutely and totally refreshing and his newest work, "Love Travels At Illegal Speeds" is an almost flawless gem which tends to go unrecognized in record store bargain bins.

Drawing heavily on the 70s and 80s punk scene, Graham Coxon melds the thick guitar sound of The Ramones, screaming solos and quick upstrokes of The Clash, and a singing voice that sounds as dirty as Sid Vicious all while melding them into his own unique sound. Any fan of old-school punk will immediately take to " ...Illegal Speeds" and recognize Coxon's inherent ability as a musician.

As a former guitarist of Blur, Coxon is no stranger to the music business. Perhaps it is this which truly defines him as a musician. By knowing how to put together the sounds he so beautifully makes, Coxon makes his music flow and bend to his will, creating the perfect atmosphere for each piece. Also, as an accomplished multi-instrumentalist, in the style of Thom Yorke and Beck, Coxon plays almost all instruments on " ...Illegal Speeds."

GRAHAM COXON

'LOVE TRAVELS AT ILLEGAL SPEEDS'

EMI

3.5/5

A main highlight on " ...Illegal Speeds" is Coxon's ability to craft a song. He uses raw emotion and seems to draw on himself to perfect his music. He loves what he does and makes us love his work as well. The problem with " ...Illegal Speeds" lies in the fact that it is truly hard to pick out any outstanding track on the album. All of the 13 songs are great in their own right and cannot be judged in comparison to the others. " ...Illegal Speeds" is phenomenally pieced together and expertly arranged.

Even though Coxon is a brilliant singer and songwriter, the album can, at times, sound a little more like a remake than it should. Although this is by no means a reflection on the entire album, pieces of various songs on " ...Illegal Speeds" are very similar to other more famous songs. At times, the resemblance can be uncanny. Like "Gimme Some Love."

While it is one of the catchiest songs on the album, the songs orchestration sounds like a blatant rip-off of The Sex Pistol's "Anarchy in the U.K." just with new lyrics. Immediately the question is raised of why Coxon couldn't be more subtle about his influences. Be that as it may, the duplicative nature of some songs do not detract greatly from the album itself, they only make it seem more amateurish than Coxon should be.

"Love Travels At Illegal Speeds," although not without flaws, is one of the best albums to be released in a while. Surprising is the fact that Coxon is relatively unknown outside of the U.K. while his music represents some of the best new rock out there.

Graham Coxon formerly of Blur has ditched his former band's sound and gone the pop-punk route with his latest album reminiscent of classic punk bands such as The Clash and Sex Pistols.

Of Montreal new disc is not for the average rock'n'roll fan

By Alex Butler
Collegian Staff

Last week marked the release of Kevin Barnes newest release with his band Of Montreal. "Hissing Fauna, Are You the Destroyer?"

The curiously named band was formed after a fleeting relationship Barnes once held in Montreal. The band members, stemming from Minneapolis and Cleveland, met in Athens, GA and under the direction of Barnes, released "Cherry Peel," their debut album in 1997.

The album follows Barnes' exceedingly eccentric psychedelic ideas and images. Though more of a dance-themed album, "Hissing Fauna..." still glows with the playful verses of past albums.

The LP's opening track, "Suffer for Fashion" is a telltale sign of where the album is heading. After a confusing wail (apparently from a baby) happy synth drums pick up and Barnes layers his voice to create a hip other-sounding beat.

"Heimdalsgate like Watergate Curse," the album's most notable single, discusses the bizarre ramblings of an acid-trip. An upbeat "I mean chemicals!" accompanies a simple, yet catchy melody you can't help but bob your head to.

OF MONTREAL

'HISSING FAUNA, ARE YOU THE DESTROYER?'

POLYVINYL RECORDS

4.8/5

However, it must be said that run-of-the-mill rock fans might want to pass on this disc. Though amazingly catchy, Of Montreal has a knack for acquiring a small, pretentious indie rock following. Lyrics like "Physics makes us all it's bitches," "I want the Beauties wasted," and "Eva, I'm sorry but you will never have fo me, you're just some faggy girl And I need a lover with Soulpower" illustrate this point perfectly. Plus, this music is almost entirely made with the aid of a computer. Barnes' quirky use of layering is no exception in this album, and though there are guitars aplenty, it's obvious there are few noises not complemented by electronics.

Though still eccentric and off-the-wall, the lyrics of "Hissing Fauna..." dip slightly and are more direct than ever. This statement may carry little water, however, when you consider past songs, featuring lyrics such as "Throw them all into a well if they cannot tell An Arto Parv feast of repetition from a Schoenberg 12 tone composition."

Songs shine brighter than others, as is the case with any album, but with Of Montreal, it is hardly noticeable. Winding songs such as "The Past is a Grotesque Animal" carry on for a bit too long, but with the creative dance beat in the background, it's easy to forgive.

Though many of the tracks use many of the same devices and techniques, the result is almost always different and poignant.

Fans of 1999's "The Gay Parade," might be disappointed, but devout followers of the band will clearly find the connection between "Hissing Fauna..." and Of Montreal's musical direction.

© KEISEY PATTISON RECORDS

Kevin Barnes may not only be of the one of the most unconventional frontman in rock, he also creates some of the best music heard today.

'Eragon' lacks book's potential

Despite the movie's stellar cast, the films acting falls short

By Christina Fong
Collegian Staff

Fire-breathing dragons and sword-swinging warriors would be more interesting in this movie if it was in the least bit good. The Lord of the Rings and Harry Potter references are understandable but no where near comparable. Those two movies ushered in a flow of fantasy action-adventure movies for the new generation. Some were good, like The Chronicles of Narnia, and some were bad, like Eragon.

Mystical creatures, magical wizards and talking animals have become all too familiar, meaning it now takes more to surprise and excite an audience. Of course, the world of gaming, both videos and cards alike, has created a large gathering that would most likely be satisfied with this movie. Walk into any game store and it's understandable to see where most of the inspiration for the movie came from. Only those engaged in that world of fantasy and children under 13-years-old would find this PG-rated movie remarkable.

The basic idea of "Eragon," originally spawned from the novel by Christopher Paolini, isn't all that bad. The movie starts out well with an intriguing introduction about a land where dragons and dragon riders once existed, although a lot of vital information was lost during the process of adapting the novel into film. Somehow the story snowballed into a movie filled with overdone acting, cheesy villains and questionable costumes under the direction of Stefen Fangmeier.

Being a villain takes more than the ominous characteristics of long nails, blood-shot eyes and black costumes to fill the role. None of the villains in this movie were scary or even believable as being truly evil – truly boring to watch.

Ed Speleers did a satisfactory job as the young hero Eragon, considering it was his first acting role. At times, it was difficult to determine whether it was his character's pride or his own acting that made him a bit annoying.

It was a surprise to see such seasoned actors as Jeremy Irons and John Malkovich in this complete debacle, but then again, they may have thought it would've turned into something epic like certain trilogies before it.

Irons gave a strong performance as Brom, one of the only dragon riders left to help guide young Eragon. Malkovich's performance was disappointing. It felt like the typical villain already seen in so many other movies before this. His henchman Durza played by Robert Carlyle was nothing special.

'ERAGON'

DIRECTED BY STEFEN FANGMIER

STARRING ED SPEELERS

C+

Djimon Hounsou didn't have much screen time so the only comment that can be made about him is that his costume was ridiculous, although the actor himself is much admired. Sienna Guillory who played Arya was probably the worst of them all because of her major overacting. Guillory wasn't believable playing the princess held captive under the powers of Durza.

Not even the fight scenes were mildly satisfying. The first confrontation between Eragon and Durza was laughable with Durza's tacky and childish display of power. The final climactic battle scene was, well, anti-climactic. There was no build-up to the clashing of the two opposing forces. The final fight between Eragon and Durza was a let down and not worth much discussion.

The only good aspect of the film was the special effects. It brought to life the fictional world of Alagaesia and Eragon's dragon Saphira, whose voice was done by Rachel Weisz. The movie took more effort in perfecting its special effects and CG images than anything else.

This movie had plenty of conflicts but failed to strongly illustrate and pull them together. Everything felt brief, considering the film was only 99 minutes long. Since most of the introduction of characters and background stories took place in this movie, maybe there will be more room for development in a sequel.

To put it simply, the movie wasn't all that good. Don't bother wasting a single dollar or a fraction of a second on "Eragon" unless curiosity is the drive to see why it's as bad as it is.

Orphaned farm boy Eragon (Ed Speleers) is chosen to be new Dragon Rider, after he comes across an dragon egg. Once hatched, Eragon and his dragon must fight King Galbatorix (John Malkovich) to save his people and their land from being taken over by the evil monarch.

Timeless industry starts to show its age and violence from any given Indie and the movie is totally unaffected. (Most) Indies, as with all great films, are based on the fact that there is no extra scene or bit of dialogue which can be deleted without taking away from the overall meaning and idea behind the film itself.

HOLLYWOOD from page 5

We, the people, are Hollywood's No. 1 consumer and all I ask is to just pause a minute before selecting your movie of choice. If you really want to see the newest Halloween or the crappy remake of a classic movie then by all means, go and see it. Just be warned, if you go and support it, Hollywood will make another one. It will take those precious budgeting dollars away from a better, thought out, more poignant movie for a campy, idiotic "thriller" or pointlessly dull comedy.

Ultimately, it is up to the spender to allocate Hollywood dollars and revive or destroy the entertainment industry. You decide what Hollywood produces, so start using a little thought before you throw down that $10 at the movie theater.

'Life' goes too far

SECOND LIFE from page 5

they can be heard from further away by more characters off in the distance. Or if they prefer they can talk privately one on one to another character in an instant message. Each avatar also has the ability to use a number of body gestures ranging from laughing to staring bored.

An interesting angle to the game is the characters have the ability to teleport from place to place since walking around would simply take hours to see all the different locations "Second Life" has to offer. Instead of running the characters also have the ability to fly around their locations as well. Flying is frequently used among the characters of "Second Life" to escape a slow loading area.

When the graphics do load, they are much better then the graphics of any other simulation game out there today. The graphics are a step up from "The Sims", but what really is outstanding is the graphics of the locations where the characters live and work. The location "Amsterdam" does not look anything like the real country, but the graphics are outstanding. Unfortunately, this area is one of the most popular of the game and the graphics lag to load at first, but once they load they are well worth the wait.

Areas such as "Amsterdam" have an age requirement to access. The requirement for "Amsterdam" is 18 plus for mature players. While anyone could simply lie to get into this area when they register, the area is sometimes shady with some creepy individuals in it. Sometimes the people playing are looking for an opportunity to earn money from cyber sex, but don't let this scare you away from the game. These people can simply be ignored. In other areas that are mature, they are only labeled that due to the fact there is online gambling and cuss words being said.

"Second Life" does have a teen version of the game for teengers only. Anyone who is not a teenager or does not obey the rules of the game in this version can face being banned from the game.

While the teenager version of the game was created in 2005, the adult version of "Second Life" has been around for nearly four years. Created by Philip Rosedale of Real Networks the game was originally named Linden World, named after the street in San Francisco where the company is from.

In December of 2006, Cnet.com reported that "Second Life" had two million people registered accounts. While some of these accounts are no longer used and others are repeat users, the number still continues to grow.

Overall "Second Life" is a much more exciting game then most simulation games. But, unfortunately unless you play for hours at a time nothing can really get accomplished.

Save $$ on Textbooks at the Jeffery Amherst College Store

Check out our website at www.jeffbooks.com to order books online!
All These Courses and More at Discounted Prices:

Accounting	221	Intro to Financial Accounting	HI-MGT	240-1	Hotel Operations
Accounting	311	Business Appl of Comp	HI-MGT	250-1-2	Food Service Management
Animal Sci	103	Intro to Animal Management	HI-MGT	260-1	Hospitality Pers. Management
Anthropology	102-A	Archeology & Prehistory	HI-MGT	320-1	Hospitality & Tourism Law
Art History	110	Survey: Renaissance-Modern Art	HI-MGT	355-1	Menu & Food Production MGT
Astronomy	100-1,2,3,4	Exploring the Universe	Human Dev.	270	Child Development
Astronomy	101-H	Exploring the Universe	Italian	120	Elementary Italian II
Astronomy	105	Weather & our Atmosphere	Italian	126	Intensive Elementary Italian
Astronomy	114	Stars & Galaxies	Kinesiology	100	Intro. to Exercise Science
Biochemistry	285	Cellular & Molecular Biology	Kinesiology	110	Human Performance & Nutrition
Biology	101-2	Intro to Biology	Kinesiology	360	Exercise Neuroscience
Biology	102	Intro to Animal Biology	Math	100	Basic Math Skills
Biology	283-1	General Genetics	Math	101	Precalculus/Algebra
Biology	285	Cellular & Molecular Biology	Math	102	Analytic Geometry
Biology	287	Intro to Ecology	Math	104	Alg/Analytic Geometry/Trig
CLE	121	Intro to CLE	Math	113	Math for Elem. School Teachers
CLE	270	CLE Systems Analysis	Math	127	Calc I Life/Soc Sci. I
Chemistry	112	General Chemistry II	Math	128	Applied Calculus
Chemistry	241	Int. Dental Integ. Chemistry	MGT	260	Introduction to Law
Chemistry	250	Organic Chemistry	Microbiology	160	Biology of Cancer and Aids
Chemistry	261	Organic Chemistry	Microbiology	170	General Microbiology
Chemistry	262	Organic Chemistry (Non-Majors)	Microbiology	350	Microbial Genetics
Chemistry	266	Organic Chemistry (Non-Majors)	Nutrition	130	Understanding Nutrition
Comp Sci	187	Physical Aspects of Data Structures	Philosophy	100	Intro to Philosophy
Comp Sci	311	Intro Algorithms	Philosophy	110	Intro to Logic
Comp Sci	320	Intro to Software Engineering	Physics	100	Conceptual Physics
Comm	118	Intro to Interpersonal Comm	Physics	114	Theory of Sound
Comm Dis	312	Intro to Speech Science	Physics	115	Physics of Music
Comm Dis	313	Hearing Science	Physics	151 & 152	Intro to Physics I & II
Comm Dis	401	Speech & Language Dev.	Physics	161	General Physics I
ECE	232-1	Human Dev. & Dis.	Physics	152-1 -2	General Physics II
Economics	104-A/B-D-I	Intro to Macroeconomics	Political Sc	101-A	American Politics
Economics	204-A/B	Intro to Microeconomics	Political Sc	111-A	Comparative Politics
Education	325	Intro to Special Education	Political Sci	121-A	World Politics
Eng. W. Prog	112	College Writing	Psychology	100-1 -2 -3	Intro to Psychology
FOMGT	301	Customer Service	Psychology	41 1	Methods of Inquiry in Psych.
FOMGT	304	Intl. Food Trends	Psychology	305-1	Educational Psychology
FOMGT	320	Ergonomics	Psychology	320	Learn & Think
French	230	Intermediate French	Psychology	330	Phys. Psychology
Geo Sciences	100	Global Environmental Change	Psychology	35	Behavioral Endocrinology
Geo Sciences	101-1	Earth	Psychology	350	Child Behavior & Dev.
Geo Sciences	102	Human Environment	Psychology	355	Adolescent Psychology
Geo Sciences	103-1	Intro to Meteorology	Sociology	106	Race, Gender & Class
History	115	Modern China	Spanish	120	Elementary Spanish II
HT-MGT	100-1	Intro to Hospitality & Tourism	Spanish	240	Intermediate Spanish II
HI-MGT	150-1	Food Preparation Methods	Spanish	246	Intermediate Intensive

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect Street, Amherst 253-3870
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop in downtown Amherst)

Everything everyone needs to know about TV and more

By Monica Gleberman
Collegian Columnist

They say New York is the city that never sleeps; well entertainment is what keeps everyone awake, because it was busier than ever over winter break. During UMass' month-off, several new shows debuted. One of them was called, "Dirt." It was co-produced by both Courtney Cox and David Arquette.

The first episode introduced us to a new character called, Lucy Spiller (Cox). Lucy is a cut-throat, independent, sassy tabloid journalist that heads two different magazines, and will do anything to get her story. She gets information from snitches, and it out to get the latest gossip on all the celebrities no matter who she hurts in the process.

However, it doesn't seem like it's going to grow into anything successful. Cox is refreshing and does a superb job of acting as this character, which is a far stretch from her more famous character of Monica from "Friends."

Coming back from a long hiatus is both "Grey's Anatomy" and "Desperate Housewives" on ABC. "Desperate Housewives" revealed that Kayla, Tom's previous child, might be more than Lynette bargained for. Alma Hodge decided to pay Orson and Bree a surprise visit revealing that she is in-fact alive, and Susan visited Mike in jail to tell him about the lawyer Ian got him, which in-turn makes Ian upset.

"Grey's Anatomy" opened with a comical look at Doctor McDreamy's relationship with Meredith, a continual silence between Burke and Cristina, and on-going medical problems with George's dad.

Other shows coming back to television are; "The Real Desperate Housewives of Orange County" on Bravo, "The Hills" on MTV, "Heroes" on CBS, "What About Brian" on ABC, "Wildfire" on ABC Family, and "Gilmore Girls" on the CW. These are among hundreds of shows coming to air this month. Now, onto the award shows.

The "People's Choice Awards" aired giving awards away to many celebrities including Johnny Depp, Ellen Degeneras, The cast of "Heroes" and Eva Longoria.

However, these awards are never as exciting because everyone that is a winner is contacted and therefore is in the audience. This gives away who is going to win and causes the rest of the night to be completely boring. The only reason to stay tuned is to hear the speeches that the winners have pre-planned. A nice surprise was hearing Robin Williams give a speech; it was both funny and intriguing.

Another award show aired, The Golden Globes. These awards acknowledge superb work in both movies and television. Some of the major winners include "Grey's Anatomy," "Dream Girls," "Helen Mirren," "Sacha Baron Cohen," and "Ugly Betty." Two of the best speeches of the night came from Forrest Whitaker and Cohen.

They seemed to have the opposite problem. Whitaker was so surprised that he won that he couldn't mutter a single word up there on the stage. It was one of the most endearing scenes. However, Cohen had no problem talking and discussing a particular scene between him and his 300 pound co-star, which was quite hilarious. Overall, it was a good night with the awards pretty much spread throughout all the actors and shows.

Here are some listings for some upcoming shows, courtesy of tvguide.com, HBO.com, Bravo and TheCW.com.

Tuesday Jan. 30

- "Gilmore Girls" on The CW at 8 p.m.
- "Dateline" NBC on NBC at 8 p.m.
- "American Idol" on FOX at 8 p.m.
- "Frontline" on PBS at 9 p.m.
- "House" on FOX at 9 p.m.

Wednesday Jan. 31

- "Bones" on FOX at 8 p.m.
- "Friday Night Lights" on NBC at 8 p.m.
- "Deal or No Deal" on NBC at 9 p.m.
- "One Tree Hill" on The CW at 9 p.m.
- "American Idol" on FOX at 9 p.m.

Thursday Feb. 1

- "Ugly Betty" on ABC at 8 p.m.
- "Til Death" on FOX at 8 p.m.
- My Name is Earl on NBC at 8 p.m.
- "The O.C." on FOX at 9 p.m.
- "Grey's Anatomy" on ABC at 9 p.m.
- "Scrubs" on NBC at 9 p.m.

Friday Feb. 2

- "The Hills" on MTV at 9 p.m.
- "Dance Life" on MTV at 9:30 p.m.
- "High Maintenance" on E! at 9:30 p.m.
- "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart on Comedy at 8 p.m.
- "The Apprentice" on CNBC at 9 p.m.

Saturday Feb. 3

- King Kong on HBO at 8 p.m.
- Fever Pitch on HBOS at 9 p.m.
- Bravo's Big Picture: Curtiss Way on Bravo at 8 p.m.
- The Real Housewives on Orange County on Bravo at 4 p.m.

Sunday Feb. 4

- "Law & Order" on Bravo at 8 p.m.
- "Extreme Makeover Home Edition" on ABC at 8 p.m.
- "Desperate Housewives" on ABC at 9 p.m.
- "Brothers & Sisters" on ABC at 10 p.m.
- "Reba" on The CW at 7 p.m.
- "7th Heaven" on The CW at 8 p.m.

Here's some of the latest Celebrity News, courtesy of "Oh Know They Didn't" online journal.

Britney Spears was turned down from performing at this year's Superbowl due to her recent partying antics, it has been reported. Since her split with second husband Kevin Federline the 25-year-old singer has been photographed on numerous occasions while out late at night with friends.

Cameron Diaz is said to be moving back home with her parents in an attempt to get over her ex, Justin Timberlake. The stunning actress shared a home with Justin, but following their recent split has decided to turn to her folks for some home comforts.

Nicole Kidman's husband Keith Urban has finished his three-month stint in rehab for alcohol abuse. The country singer will now begin a world tour to promote his latest album, his publicist has confirmed.

"Friends" fans will be happy to hear that the show's former co-stars Jennifer Arnniston and Courteney Cox Arquette are set for a "dirty" onscreen reunion this spring. Apparently the real-life pals are to star alongside one another in Courteney's new television drama "Dirt," in which she plays a ruthless tabloid editor, Lucy Spiller.

Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie have decided upon a base where they will settle. The glamorous pair will move to New Orleans with their three children, where Brad is currently filming his latest movie.

Heidi Range will really have a wedding day to remember if her boyfriend Dave Berry has anything to do with it. The television presenter plans to go all out for his nuptial celebrations.

Strong defense leads to win at Charlotte

DEFENSE from page 10

11 points and Alexander – who averages 18 per game and torched UMass with 12 points in the first half – finished with 13.

"Our defense in the second half I thought was the difference in the game," Ford said. "Our team showed a lot of resiliency."

The Minutemen's only slip up of the night might have been paying too much attention to Alexander and Goldwire. Charlotte forward E.J. Drayton took full advantage and tallied a well-earned 16 points and 13 rebounds against the big man duo of Stephane Lasme (who broke Marcus Camby's block record with three in the game) and Rashaun Freeman, who finished the game with 18 points and 11 boards.

But the real difference makers on Sunday were the UMass guards, who put the clamps on Alexander and Goldwire. Tiki Mayben, Chris Lowe, Ricky Harris and Gary Forbes all did their share to suffocate the free-flowing Charlotte offense and make the 49ers begin their half-court sets from well beyond the 3-point line.

Alexander had his way in the first half with 12 points but UMass held him to a free throw in the second. Goldwire didn't take his first 3-pointer until the two-minute mark of the second half with his team down five and running out of time.

Alexander was a non-factor down the stretch thanks to the tireless efforts of the Minuteman guards who made him work for every shot. Goldwire recently made a switch to the point guard position and wasn't his dynamic offensive self. He didn't take many shots and some of the ones he did take were forced.

Drayton provided the majority of Charlotte's offense – including a thunderous dunk in which he took off from beyond the paint – and took it to Lasme and Freeman on the interior.

This was the biggest team that UMass has faced this season, and holding the combination of a big front court and an elusive backcourt to just 61 points on the road is no small feat.

If the Minutemen can bring that defensive energy for every game, UMass would be a team to reckon with.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian Editor. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

After some waiting, Braun nets first goal

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

It may have been a long time coming, but he finally has one he can call his own. After a few close calls, the Massachusetts hockey team's Justin Braun notched the first goal of his collegiate career over the weekend.

Twice earlier this season the freshman thought he had lit his first lamp, only to have the score changed, and receive another assist instead. But Saturday night at the Mullins Center, Braun finally had his night against Boston University.

With the Minutemen already ahead 1-0 in the first period, the defenseman took a quick shot from just inside the blue line, beating Terrier goaltender John Curry glove-side for the two-goal advantage.

"It was a good wrister," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "He got it off the ice a little bit, and it had some eyes. I don't know if it was their defenseman that was screening or if one of our guys got a screen on the goalie, but it had some pace to it and a good release."

Just over a minute after drawing first blood on the power play, Cory Quirk received a pass from Chris Davis at the right faceoff circle and fed Braun in the high slot, where the Minneapolis native had an open look at the net.

"I just looked up, and no one was really in front," Braun said. "Guys were grinding the corner for a while so I just shot it out there and tried to get a whistle, but it ends up going in. Really a nothing shot, but the screen from the defenseman really helped it out."

That "nothing" shot was foreshadowed earlier this season by a number of lasers Braun snapped off that also hit the back of the net. Every one of those shots, however, ended up getting tipped or redirected, stealing Braun's thunder from him for at least another game.

One of those goals was actually credited to Braun originally, so for about an hour or so he thought he had broken the ice and gotten that first one out of the way.

In the team's first meeting with New Hampshire this season, Braun appeared to score the game-winner from the same spot on the ice during a third-period power play. After the game, however, the official score was changed and Kevin Jarman, who had tipped the puck in front of goaltender Kevin Regan, got credit for the goal.

It happened again in the UMass' only meeting so far against Northeastern. Braun's slap shot in the third (another game-winner) turned out to be tipped by Davis, though initially it was given to Braun.

Twenty-seven games into the season, Braun has gotten the proverbial monkey off his back, though he would tell you it's no big deal.

"It's exciting to get your first collegiate goal," he said. "It didn't really bother me that the other ones were getting tipped. As long as they go in, it doesn't matter how."

Looking back on the those near-misses, Braun said he was never disappointed about not getting his first goal then, as long as the point went up on the scoreboard.

"It really doesn't matter," he added. "I just keep shooting the puck, hopefully they get through, and eventually, they'll go in."

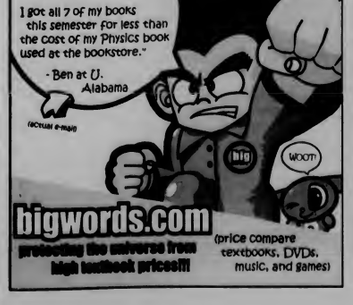
"They're always good when they go in," Cahoon said Saturday. "They don't ask how, they ask how many."

Still, Braun admitted, it's nice to have the first one in his pocket. And maybe, the next few might come a little easier.

"They're never easy, but maybe I'll pick my head up a little faster and get it through a little quicker. I'm a little more confident now," he said.

Jeremy Rice is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com.

WRITE FOR SPORTS!!
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



"I've used Bigwords.com since I was a freshman, and I love this site. I got all 7 of my books this semester for less than the cost of my Physics book used at the bookstore."
- Ben at U. Alabama
(actual e-mail)
big WOOT!
bigwords.com
protecting the universe from high textbook prices!!!
(price compare texebooks, DVDs, music, and games)

Minutemen survive scare

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

needed that win more than they did I think."

Lasme entered the game tied with Camby at 336 blocked shots and passed him with three blocks yesterday. He added 12 points and nine boards in the win, even though a little early foul trouble sat him down for much of the first half.

The Minutemen (15-6, 5-2 A-10) came out on the wrong side of an 11-3 run, and spent the majority of the game trying to catch the 49ers. UMass finally pulled itself back in the game and took the lead after a Lasme deuce gave the Minutemen a 35-34 lead just under three minutes into the second half.

From there it went back and forth. Charlotte (8-11, 2-5 A-10) answered the Minutemen's run with a 6-0 run of its own, mixed in with a high-flying jam from 49er big man E.J. Drayton, who slammed it home with the foul for a 38-35 Charlotte lead.

Drayton finished with a hard-earned 16 points and 13 rebounds against the dominating duo of Lasme – first in the nation in total blocks this season with 108 – Freeman, who leads the Minutemen in scoring with 17.1 points per game. Freeman finished with 18 points and 11 rebounds.

For UMass, it all started on the defensive end. Charlotte is notoriously lethal from 3-point land with two guards – junior Leemire Goldwire and senior D'Angelo Alexander – who can light up the scoreboard in a hurry.

Ford's main objective was to prevent the 49ers from taking 3's, and they held Charlotte to just 16 attempts from downtown, 13 below its season average. Alexander finished with 16 and Goldwire had 11 – both totals came up short of their season averages, a victory for the Minutemen's defense.

UMass took control of the game with a timely 8-0 run on a Chris Lowe 3-pointer with the Minutemen down 42-39. Lowe's trey tied the game at 42 before junior Etienne Brower hit a 3 and Freeman hit a nifty hook shot to push the lead to five.

The Minutemen held onto the lead until the 3:20 mark, when Drayton put in a layup to tie the game at 55. But junior Gary Forbes (13 points) took advantage of some slow-to-get-back 49ers and hit a layup with the foul with just under a minute to go. Forbes made the free throw for the 63-58 lead, and the Minutemen held on for the victory.

In the first half, the 49ers shot 4-for-8 from beyond the arc. In the second half, they went 2-for-8.

The Minutemen, usually solid from 3-point range, limped to a 31.3 percentage. UMass has had its struggles from the free-throw line lately, and it came back to hurt the Minutemen in losses to Miami and Rhode Island.

The percentage wasn't great yesterday (59.1) but the Minutemen knocked them down when the game was on the line, including a pair from Lowe with 2:17 seconds left that gave the Minutemen a four-point cushion.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian Editor. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

Mass Attack skates past River Hawks

HOCKEY from page 10

the score.

Chris Higgins broke away from the UMass defense and found himself one-on-one with Quick. He deked the puck from right to left to his back hand and tried to flip the puck into the net. Showing great athleticism, Quick recovered from the deke and stretched his left leg as far as he could to block the possible go-ahead score.

Kevin Jarman and the Minutemen got a chance of their own to try and get the win. The senior was awarded a penalty shot, the first for UMass this season, with 16 seconds remaining in regulation. Jarman was taken down in the crease while trying to get a shot off.

With the fans on their feet and both teams anxiously watching, Jarman skated in on Karson Gillespie from the goalie's left to right. Gillespie found himself in the tough position because BU coach Jack Parker pulled his starter, John Curry, after the Minutemen went up 3-0. When he was just above the crease, Jarman fired a straight shot that Gillespie easily kicked away with this right leg pad.

"It was a great play by Jarman to get in and create the situation," said Cahoon, regarding the play that led to the penalty shot. "He's had a hot hand as of late, he scored two last night. We felt that he was a guy who was, going to get the puck on the net."

The tie was the second of the season between the two teams. They skated to a 2-2 final at Aggams Arena back on Nov. 28. One more game remains to be played to see who will take the season series. That will also be played at the Mullins Center on Feb. 9.

UMass owned the first period of play, despite being outshot by the Terriers, 11-4, but two of those shots beat Curry for the early lead.

The first was a power-play score by Alex Berry, assisted by freshman Justin Braun. After taking the pass from the defensman, Berry skated into the offensive zone up the left boards. When he reached the middle of the left face off circle he unleashed a slap shot. It beat Curry on the far side and appeared to be tipped by a BU player.

Berry's fourth score of the season came just five minutes after the Minutemen had a goal wiped out because of a high stick infraction. Braun scored one of his own just over a minute later to double the Minutemen's lead. He took a feed from the low corner and one-timed it from just inside the blue line to beat Curry. It was the first goal of Braun's career with the Maroon and White.

But the Minutemen weren't done on the power play. Bryan Ewing was whistled for hooking at 3:54 of the second, putting UMass on the man-advantage for the third time in the game. The Minutemen converted the opportunity on a play that was very reminiscent of how they scored two power-play chances against BC during the Dec. 8 and 9 weekend.

Mark Matheson slid a puck from the point over to senior Chris Capraro, who was positioned at the top of the left faceoff circle. Capraro then sent the puck through the BU defense down to the right post where Cory Quirk was camped out. The sophomore then quickly one-timed the puck into the net giving Curry little chance to save it.

The score was UMass' third power-play conversion on the weekend. Capraro scored his sixth of the season on the power play the night before in Lowell.

"Not really," Braun said, when asked if the Minutemen were surprised by their 3-0 lead. "We were playing well in the first period."

BU owned the rest of the scoring. Schaeffer netted his first on the night at 8:47 of the second. He took the pass from John McCarthy and fired a shot on goal that beat Quick on his glove side.

The Terriers then came out rejuvenated for the final period of play. Higgins slashed the UMass lead down to a single goal just 32 seconds into the frame. Quick stopped a shot from Pete MacArthur, but had trouble gathering the rebound. Higgins crashed the net and poked the bouncing puck through Quick's five-hole.

Friday night's game at the Tsongas Arena saw 14 penalties between the two squads with three power-play goals being scored – one by UMass and two by UML. Tensions were high per usual when these two get together – there were five roughing penalties, two hitting after the whistle and two boarding calls. UMass freshman Martin Nolet received a game misconduct for his boarding infraction early in the third.

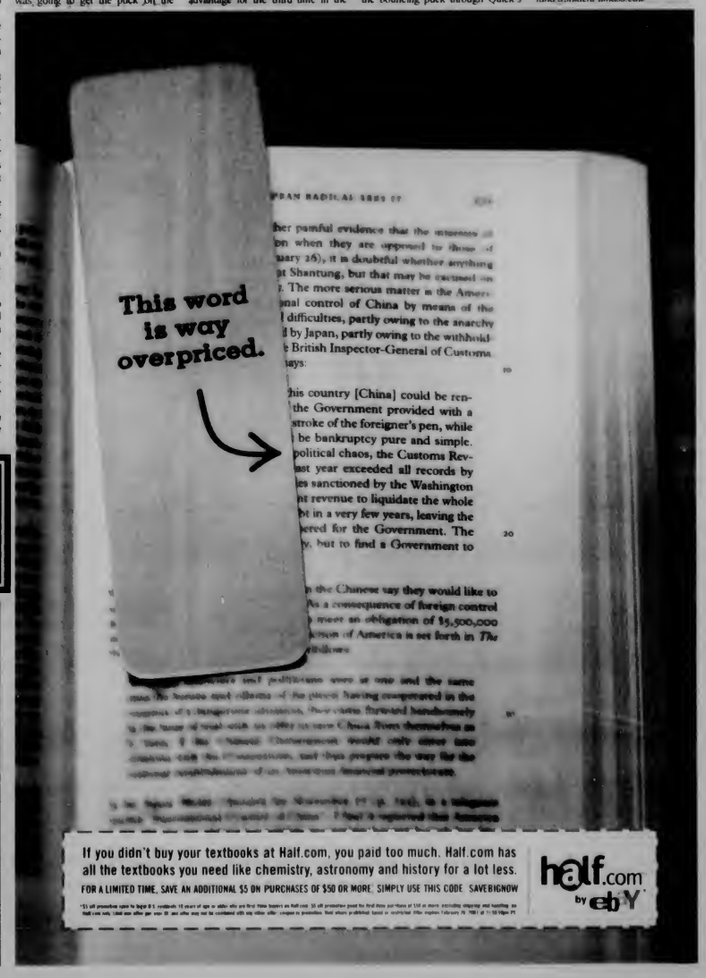
Play was tied 2-2 entering the final period, but that changed at 4:45. Ben Holmstrom converted the River Hawks' second power-play goal to take the one-score lead over the Minutemen.

But the Mass Attack took the lead for good at 11:44 with Kevin Jarman's second of the night, and first in a string of four straight UMass scores. Capraro's man-advantage was the second, coming just over three minute's after Jarman's.

Berry continued the Minutemen's onslaught with his first of the weekend, 25 seconds after Capraro scored. Berry scored after Fenton's breakaway attempt bounced off the boards right out front of the net.

Scoring concluded after UML coach Blaise McDonald pulled the goalie. The empty-net score went to Mike Kostka.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian Sports Editor. He can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu.



This word is way overpriced.
If you didn't buy your textbooks at Half.com, you paid too much. Half.com has all the textbooks you need like chemistry, astronomy and history for a lot less.
FOR A LIMITED TIME, SAVE AN ADDITIONAL $5 ON PURCHASES OF $50 OR MORE. SIMPLY USE THIS CODE: SAVEBIGNOW
half.com by eBAY

UMass gets back on track

W. BASKETBALL from page 10

eight boards, blocked a shot and recorded an assist.

"I wanted her to have more touches. We had to get her the ball more and we didn't give her the ball more when they were in the zone – that was our game plan," Backo said. "She shoots 50 percent from the floor and we didn't recognize getting the ball into her and creating future shots for the perimeter."

"We had a great first half," Mills said. "I felt like we secured the ball, did what we needed to do on offense, and coming into halftime we knew we had to make some adjustments and we do a better job on the boards.

"When we came out in the second half, we came out a little slow, not as much energy as in the first and they took it to us," she continued. "They came back and they put it right back down our throats. We weren't able to respond."

The loss ended a four-game home stretch and a two-game winning streak for UMass. Two days earlier, on Jan. 26, the Minutewomen had conquered the St. Louis Billikens (9-12, 1-6 A-10) by a score of 67-47.

The Maroon and White dominated the matchup, as four players achieved double-digits in the points column.

Rosanio had 20, co-captains Mills and Alisha Fatham both registered 12 and Iamara Fatham recorded 10.

The game before that was also a victory for the Minutewomen, as they squeaked by the La Salle Explorers (15-7, 3-4 A-10) and their first win since Jan. 3.

Rosanio (7 rebounds and an assist) and Mills (10 rebounds) were once again the team's leading scorers, each racking up 14 points.

Famara was right behind them with 12 points. The team's lone senior managed to surpass the two underclassmen with a game-high 12 boards.

The heroics of the day, however, were provided by the other half of the Fatham duo.

Alisha was fouled on a put-back attempt after an offensive rebound, sending her to the charity stripe with 2.1 seconds remaining in the 47-all regulation.

After depositing her first attempt, Fatham took a deep breath, collected her poise, and took aim for a second. It dropped through the net, sealing up an exciting 'W.'

The nail-biter victory was a good pick-me-up for the ladies, who had been reeling from a disheartening four-game losing streak. It was a winless mountain that had reached its peak four days earlier – against the Temple Owls (16-5, 6-0 A-10).

Mills was the biggest contributor to the Maroon and White's cause, bucketing 23 points, grabbing eight rebounds and blocking two Temple shots.

Iamara was the team's runner-up with 18 tallies, and four boards.

Tight games remain in the regular season – the first of which being a matchup against St. Joseph's on Friday. If they can regain the form they showed during the start of the schedule, Backo and her squad don't see any reason why they can't secure a good spot in this year's A-10 tournament.

Domenic Poli is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen hang with Boston College

SWIMMING from page 10

top four in the three-meter.

Seniors Melissa Pond and Mary Jenkins made their last home meet as seniors count, as they finished first in the three and one-meter dives, respectively.

Two other seniors, Vanessa Fleguel and Liz Lovejoy, won events. Fleguel finished first in the 200-yard backstroke, while Lovejoy earned a victory in the 500-yard freestyle.

Ultimately, the team had an opportunity to win the dual meet on the final, the 400-yard freestyle relay. But the team of freshman Elizabeth Walsh, junior Allison Volpe, freshman Kathryne Chalfkis, and Lovejoy could not overcome BC's top team. The time submitted by the Eagles, although about only one second faster than UMass, established a new pool record and sealed the victory for Boston College.

Even though the final result of the meet did not turn out the way UMass coach Bob Newcomb had hoped, he was definitely satisfied with his team's performance.

"This is the closest we've been to BC in years," Newcomb said. "I'm ecstatic with the way we swam. The attitude of the team was great and I'm really happy with what we did."

Michael King is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

UM battles inconsistency

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's ski teams had an up and down first month on the slopes. The men's squad started slow, but is now sprinting into February in first place, while the women's team has kept in the middle of the pack.

The Maroon and White's next event is the Brown/MIT Carnival this Friday and Saturday. The Brown slalom will be on Friday at Mt. Wachusett in Princeton, Mass. The MIT giant slalom is the next day at Loon Mountain in Lincoln, N.H.

The Minutemen are once again dominating the MacConnell division. After a fourth-place finish in the giant slalom and a third in the slalom at the season-opening UConn Carnival, the Maroon and White has taken four consecutive first place finishes, winning the Plymouth State and Colby Sawyer Carnivals.

On the women's side, Eliza Hawkins is leading the team, which is currently in 5th place overall out of 10 teams. The Minutewomen have stayed consistently in the middle of the standings, with their best showing coming on a pair of third-place finishes.

The UConn Carnival opened the season Jan. 15 at Cranmore Mountain in North Conway, N.H. The weekend began with the giant slalom on Friday, where the women finished ahead of the men for the only time so far this season.

The women's team finished in third on Friday – beating the men by one spot – and had the two top finishers on the day. Hawkins, the team's captain, kept last year's success going with the best overall time of the day. Teammate Emily Shilletto finished just behind Hawkins in second.

The men struggled on the day, without their leader, Rush Hawkins, who did not finish the race. Jason Small, coming off of an outstanding sophomore year, finished in second.

Saturday's slalom was a different story, however, as the women fell to sixth on the day and found themselves in fourth in the overall standings. The men came back strong, finishing in third place on Saturday behind third- and fourth-place finishes by Small and Hawkins, respectively.

Entering the Plymouth State Carnival on Jan. 20 and 21, both squads were fourth overall, but that was the weekend where the team's diverged. The men swept the weekend, winning both events and climbing to third in the standings. The women, however, finished fourth and third, but fell a spot to fifth.

Hawkins and Shilletto continued to carry the team. Hawkins finished first on Saturday, and Shilletto had a team-best third on Sunday.

For the men, Small continued to be the standout on the mountain with a pair of second-place finishes. Hawkins was right behind him in third on both days. The Minutemen had four skiers place in the Top 10, enough to give the team first place on both days.

The following weekend saw a continued split for the two squads at the Colby-St. Anslem's Carnival. The Minutemen swept the field again, while the women finished in sixth both days.

Rush Hawkins won his first event of the season at Saturday's slalom. Small came in fourth, and Ian Hohmester also finished in the Top 10 in ninth. All three finished in the Top 10 again in Sunday's giant slalom and were joined by sophomore Alex Zahoruiko, who finished tenth. The men held off a strong Boston College team by less than three seconds overall.

The women's team was once again held up by Hawkins and Shilletto, but has struggled to find a third skier to place in the Top 10, which has hurt their placing every week, and really showed in the last weekend.

Shilletto placed third on both days while, Hawkins earned fifth- and second-place finishes, yet the team still came away with in sixth at both events.

Jeremy Rice is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at sports@daily61.edu.

Final home meet for seniors

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

They spent four years swimming at Joseph R. Rogers Jr. Pool in Boyden Gym. Their daily toils go unnoticed by the student body at large, but they are more successful than nearly every other UMass athlete. They are the Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving class of 2007 and, as they constantly have, performed exceptionally well in their final home meet against the Boston College Eagles on Jan. 20.

UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb grew accustomed to losing to BC but in their final contest with the Eagles, the Minutewomen wouldn't go quietly.

The Maroon and White fell 153-147 to the Eagles. Newcomb didn't expect the women to come as close to victory as they did because BC has been far better than UMass is recent years. All of Newcomb's seniors impressed.

"My seniors were all great today," Newcomb said. "Melissa [Pond] and Mary [Jenkins] swept the diving. And Vanessa [Fleguel in the [200-yard] backstroke, that was a great swim. Liz Lovejoy was great in the [500-yard] backstroke as was Nicole LeBlanc in the 50 [freestyle]. And [LeBlanc] anchored that last relay, swimming about three seconds faster than she went last week, so she's coming along."

The Minutewomen are in great shape right now and the leadership of the seniors is one of the primary reasons for this. The team's freshmen have contributed very well this season and the class of 2007 has done a great job to offset the inevitable adjustment period for the freshman. The seniors provided insight into the proper training and preparation methods to avoid fatigue.

Another senior Newcomb was sure to mention was Meghan O'Connell. The captain swam in the 100-yard backstroke – finishing third and scoring a point for the Minutewomen team score.

The Minutemen also had their share of seniors swimming their last competitive laps at home. The group performed well as the Minutemen won all but one race and took first, second and third in a few cases. All of the UMass seniors had great performances, drawing praise from coach Russ Yarworth.

"[Evan [Swisher] and Jake [Hogue] have been great. Jake has the heart of a lion," Yarworth said. "Mike Cordes and Gordon Leonard have both been solid team guys. Greg Chartier, it was great to get him to come here for school and stay home as an Amherst kid. We've been able to get a lot of good Western Mass. kids. Mike Herald too, with everything he's been through [and] has been able to do here."

Swisher broke his own school record in the 200-yard backstroke His time of 1:48.56 was seven hundredths of a second faster than the previous mark of 1:48.63 – he posted the original mark at Boston University in November. Swisher hopes to recapture the conference championship in the 200-yard backstroke – he won the event as a freshman.

Another senior to record a victory was Hogue – the two-time captain won the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke. Hogue has had a great season and looks to compete for a conference championship in both breaststroke events.

Seniors Greg Chartier, Mike Herald and Gordon Leonard contributed to UMass' dominance as well.

Leonard was part of a 200-yard freestyle medley team that finished second, scoring four points for UMass. Leonard has been a part of one A-10 Championship medley team while at UMass – as a junior he swam for the conference-best 200-yard freestyle medley team. He has also won two bronze medals at the A-10 Championships in two events.

Herald's career is something of a miracle. After successful heart surgery in high school, he went on to a solid career at UMass.

Cordes finished second behind Hogue in the 100-yard breaststroke scoring four points for the Minutemen. Cordes also swam in the 100-yard butterfly for UMass – finishing sixth. Last season, he was a member of the Minutemen's 200-yard medley relay unit.

This class has been extremely productive in their time here, winning two A-10 Championships and are in position to capture a third. Yarworth always does a good job bringing in new talent but replacing six A-10 Champions will certainly be no easy task.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

THE HARP

413-548-6900 163 Sunderland Rd. N. Amherst

The Top Ten Reasons to go to The Harp

1. No one will pick a fight with you...or your boyfriend.
2. Where red-headed sluts and sugar daddies come together.
3. Giant Deck & Pavilion: at our bar, if you're outside it's cuz' you WANNA be.
4. The best live bands & NEVER a cover charge.
5. Super draft beer selection - We got 'Gansett!
6. Our kitchen is bitchin' (Open 7 days a week til' midnight!)
7. Trivia Night! Trivia Night! Trivia Night! (Every Tuesday!)
8. Use our FREE Wireless internet: Homework munchies & beer, what could be better? (OCMP accepted)
9. The place to chill, talk, and NEVER wait in line.
10. Visit the hottest staff at the coolest bar.

* By Liz and Becky. disclaimer by Management.

"Come Party Like You're Irish!"

www.theharp.net

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™

(39 years of service – and counting!)

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM

(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT — AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

Your life will NEVER be the same!

••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Spring Semester 2007 — Recruitment Nights

You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!

6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)

Campus Center Ball Room • Feb. 5 (Mon) • Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 6 (Tues) • Feb. 7 (Wed)

•Assignment notification EMAIL thurs. Feb 8th at Boltwood table CC Concourse

••Telephone inquiries: YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!

Volunteer, while earning credit!

Visit www.mspp.edu/school or call 617-327-6777 x210

The Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology offers a comprehensive graduate program in School Psychology, leading to a master's degree and certificate of advanced graduate study, in an intimate and supportive learning environment. This innovative program integrates coursework with expertly supervised fieldwork to ensure that graduates enter the field with practical knowledge and confidence. The curriculum emphasizes the clinical skills schools need and value: counseling, system interventions, psychodiagnostics, and consultation.

"One of the top ten hot professions" (U.S. News and World Report)

Applications are still being accepted for Sept. 2007

MSPP

Next Open House is Feb. 6, 2007, 6:00-8:30 pm. RSVP to admissions@mspp.edu or call toll free 888-664-6777 x210.

For details, visit www.mspp.edu.

Seven O's

♦KARAOKE♦ EVERY WEDNESDAY

♦OPEN MIC♦ EVERY THURSDAY

LIVE BAND: SATURDAY ♦FEBRUARY 3, 2007♦ SHUT UP & DANCE

STUDENT BAND WANTED

ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788

3 PM TO 1 AM M-F 1PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN NEXT TO CLIFTSIDE APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

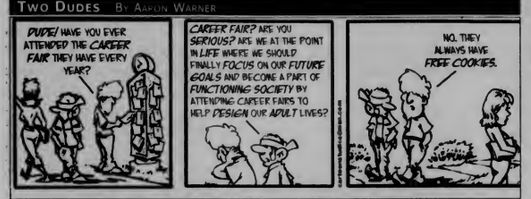
			5		3
		1				3
8	3
		3	9		5	7
7	6
		4	7		1	2
1	9

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'm sick of following my dreams. I'm just going to ask them where they are going and hook up with them later."

-Mitch Hedburg

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner



DUDE! HAVE YOU EVER ATTENDED THE CAREER FAIR? THEY HAVE EVERY YEAR!
CAREER FAIR? ARE YOU SERIOUS? WE'RE AT THE POINT IN LIFE WHERE WE SHOULD FINALLY FOCUS ON OUR FUTURE GOALS AND BECOME A PART OF FUNCTIONING SOCIETY BY ATTENDING CAREER FAIRS TO HELP DESIGN OUR ADULT LIVES?
NO, THEY ALWAYS HAVE FREE COOKIES.

WOMBAT By Neil Brake

SO WHAT MOVIE SHOULD WE SEE?
HEY GUYS, LET'S SEE THE CRIME FIGHTING MONK MOVIE! IT'S BASED ON THE COMIC BOOK!
NEW RULE, NEIL ISN'T ALLOWED TO PICK WHAT MOVIE WE SEE

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

Having a rough day?
Ultimately, you bring unhappiness upon yourself by thinking yourself
Think about friends Think about me
Think about how much I want a robot servant
For the last time — I won't be your robot servant!!

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

FREE COMPLIMENTARY DONUTS? SOME ONE ENROLLED ME IN THE "DONUT OF THE MONTH" CLUB. LOOK AT THIS, GABBY. FREE DONUTS!
I WOULDN'T EAT THOSE, ROOMIE.
DAVID SAID SOMETHING ABOUT ME AND DAVE COMING UP WITH AN "AWESOME PRANK." WHO KNOWS WHAT THEY HAVE PLANNED.
DUDE! CHECK IT OUT! SOMEONE THREW AWAY A BOX OF DONUTS.
SWEET, DUDE!

ACROSS
1 Hot tubs
5 Parthenon honoree
11 Ms. Thurman
14 Is unable to 15 Type of network
16 Collar
17 Old Norse inscription
18 Motorcycle maker
19 Fade out
20 Commonplace
22 Still straight
24 Washington port
29 Smeltery piles
30 Rip into
31 "Nova" network
32 Thomas of clocks
35 Wiiickers!
36 Missouri river
39 Seraglio
41 __ as directed
42 Homer's epic
43 Rub out
44 Moist, sticky earth
46 Pipe turns
47 Penguins' org
48 Bringer of news
50 Cancun cash
52 Medical examiner's task
56 Half a round trip
58 Postpone for later action
59 GOP gathering
60 Camel kin
65 Spiral shape
66 Slash
67 Spring from cover
68 Automaker Ferrari
69 Towel word
70 Underhanded
71 Dramatist O'Casey

DOWN
1 Use elbow grease
2 VCR button
3 Declare invalid
4 Get raves for a bit part
5 Indefinite amount
6 Brawed drink
7 Hive noise
8 Bullpen stat
9 Habakkuk preceder
10 King or Alda
11 Afloat
12 Bangor's state
13 Encourages in wrongdoing
21 Be untruthful
23 Winter Olympics events
25 Find fault constantly
26 Marx brother
27 Bothers
28 Basically
31 Food from taro
32 That lady
33 Hearing organ
34 Cuts across
37 Guy's sweetie
38 Wynn and Wood
40 Blanc or Allen
45 Edible tuber
49 Parking area
50 Veranda
51 Boredom
52 Bridge support
53 Steak choice
54 "Pygmalion" character
55 Honeydew, e.g.
57 Swiss chain
61 Copy
62 Extinct bird
63 Guillermo's cousin
64 Swiss pan

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP

SPECIALS!

Honey Brown, Molson

$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher

TONIGHT: • Trivia Night

WED: • Open Mic Night (all are welcome)

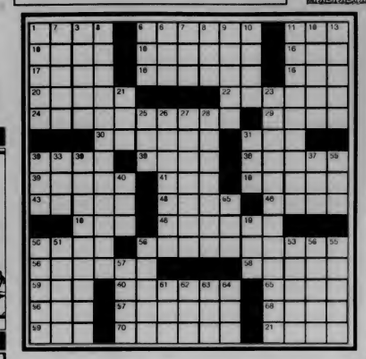
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week

Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the River 2005 & 2006 Valley Advocate Readers Poll

OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted

163 Sunderland Rd. • N. Amherst Just north of the apartments

413-548-6900 www.theharp.net



Submit your comics!

Submit your classifieds!

(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your room would be vastly improved by the presence of a gecko.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You are not the only one wishing that Coolio would make a comeback.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Did you know that there are a bunch of chimpanzees hidden on campus?

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Three days without changing your socks is certainly not acceptable.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You will drop your keys in a puddle. There will be sorrow and anguish.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Eat fewer coldcuts! The smell is starting to seep through your pores.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Remember, it isn't stealing as long as its for a good cause.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Remember to wear your gloves so your hands don't turn black and fall off.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Your day will be filled with images of pretty rainbows and dancing mules.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Pickles can be a healthy and rewarding snack.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You and I both know that Batman would whoop Spiderman in a fair fight.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
On this day you will realize the many uses of dental floss.

In the name of all that is holy... WRITE A COMIC AND SUBMIT IT! Or just rip some random doodles out of your roomate's notebook, that works too.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

EMPLOYMENT

Chicago Pizza. Drivers Wanted pay $7.00 per hour plus tips. Weekends required. Cashiers pay $8.50 per hour. Weekends required. Apply in person 150 Fearing St. Amherst 549-6073

Campus Representative Job Earn $200/4 hours of work Distributing Door Hangers in dorms If interested email: joerivard@collegemarketplace.com

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Become a summer orientation counselor and make a difference in the lives of over 4000 new students. Additional information and applications can be found at www.umass.edu/newstudent/contact/studentjobs/counselor The application deadline is February 16, 2007

Work Online at Home 23 people needed immediately.Earn PT/FT income. Apply FREE online and get started! 800-807-5176 www.wahusa.com Enter Ad Code 9053

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/ day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

SUMMER CAMP COUNSELOR ON CAMPUS INTERVEIWS FOR PREMIER GIRLS CAMP IN THE BERKSHIRES
Positions available for talented, energetic and spirited students who love working with kids. Live in a bunk and teach on of the following activities: All Team Sports, Individual Sports such as tennis & Golf, Waterfront &

EMPLOYMENT

Pool Activities, Art, Dance, Theater, Gymnastics, Newspaper, Rocketry, Radio and more. Great Salaries, room, board and travel. Camp runs Jun16th – August 11th. Apply online now! www.campdanbee.com for further information: 1-800-392-3752, ginger@campdanbee.com Interviewers will be on campus Thursday February 15th, at the "Summer, Co-Op and Internship Fair" in the Lincoln Campus Center, from 10am-3pm.

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV testing 548-9992

Tutoring, Risk Free Trial $15 per hour. Customized programs in Math & Science. Highest Quality! 866-993-2263 ext.51 www.tutorowl.com

ROOM FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 5 minutes from UMass. Looking for roommate(s) for Winter and/or Spring. Washer, Dryer, Parking. vwright@student.umass.edu (413) 461-1039

Room in puffton for rent. Puffton largest room, priv. bath $475 a month. Call if interested. (914) 374-7172

ROOM FOR RENT

Roommate wanted for 2 bedrrom in Montague Center, heat, hot water and cable included, washer and dryer, first and last $400/month. 413-531-8879

Submit your classified advertising online at www.dailycollegian.com.

Or stop by the Collegian offices in the Campus Center basement.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, JANUARY 30, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass unravels Charlotte's web

MICHAEL FIGUEIREDO/COLLEGIAN

Senior Rashaun Freeman recorded his 41st career double-double with a game-high 18 points and 11 rebounds in Sunday's 66-61 win over Atlantic 10 rival Charlotte. The Minutemen return to the Mullins Center to take on Richmond Saturday at noon.

Lasme sets UMass shot-blocking record

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

CHARLOTTE, N.C. – When Massachusetts senior captain Stephane Lasme came to the United States from Gabon, Africa, he couldn't speak a word of English.

UMass 66
Charlotte 61

Now, in his last season as a Minuteman, he is an NBA prospect and the career blocked shots leader in UMass history after passing Denver Nuggets forward Marcus Camby on Sunday with three blocks against Charlotte.

"I wasn't thinking about [the blocks record] when I came to UMass," Lasme said. "But it's great to break it. It's a great feeling."

"When I got to UMass, [Lasme] really wasn't on the radar a whole lot," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "We told him, 'You don't realize how good you are, Stephane. You have no idea.'"

The Minutemen defeated Charlotte, 66-61, Sunday afternoon in an Atlantic 10 battle where bodies hit the floor as much as basketballs and Lasme and Rashaun Freeman, for once, didn't look like the biggest guys on the floor.

"We really, really, really needed that win," Lasme said. "We

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

Shutdown defense shows up on road

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

CHARLOTTE, N.C. – Wins on the road are hard enough to come by in the Atlantic 10. There are few gimmies and most of the time it is a battle to gain just the slightest edge in the standings.

On Sunday, the Massachusetts men's basketball team made another push towards the top of the conference with a hard-nosed, 66-61 victory over the Charlotte 49ers on the road.

The Minutemen featured a phase of their game that doesn't come out too often: lock-down defense.

UMass had a bulky amount of offensive weapons to deal with on Sunday. The 49ers don't have the best record this season, but there is no shortage of talent and, as UMass coach Travis Ford puts it, they could explode at any minute.

"I didn't want to play with fire," Ford said.

So UMass doused the flame before it could spread, and limited the 49er guns to just 16 3-point attempts, 13 below their per-game average.

Senior D'Angelo Alexander and junior Leemire Goldwire comprise the Charlotte backcourt and both guards finished below their points per game average. Goldwire, who went a slim 2-for-8 from the field, finished with

See DEFENSE on page 7

Weekend of tough games

Mass Attack battles UML, blows big lead against BU

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

What a weekend for the Massachusetts hockey team. After taking a hard-fought contest from UMass Lowell, 6-3, the Minutemen returned home Saturday night for a game in which they led No. 8 Boston University for much of the game but had to settle for a 3-3 tie.

UMass 3
BU 3

The Mass Attack travels to Conte Forum on Friday in the rubber match of the season series against Boston College. On Saturday night UMass takes on the River Hawks for the third time in three weeks. The Minutemen will be looking for the season sweep over their sister school.

UMass 6
UML 3

UMass led the Terriers 3-0 with a period and a half of hockey to play on Saturday, BU then reeled off three unanswered goals to force overtime where neither team generated much offense. The Terriers had three shots to UMass' two.

Kevin Schaeffer's second goal of the night tied the score at three apiece with just under 15 minutes to play in the third. It was scored on one of the oddest plays in hockey.

Needing a line change, Schaeffer dumped the puck into the zone from the left boards at the red line. UMass goaltender Jon Quick skated out to play the puck as it slid into the left faceoff circle. But the puck ricocheted off Quick's stick, sending it sliding directly into his own net.

UMass coach Don Cahoon commented after the game that it was freak play during a very different kind of game.

"From our perspective that was a bizarre game, an absolutely bizarre game," he said afterwards. "What started off very well for us completely got out of sync and out of control."

The tying score was a blemish on an otherwise brilliant performance from the sophomore netminder. Quick kept the Minutemen in the lead for much of the game, making a number of tough saves. His best on the night came shortly after he accidentally tied

See HOCKEY on page 7

KAREN WINKLER/COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Chris Capraro leads UMass in points on the season. He has 22 on six goals and 16 assists in 20 games this year.

Minutewomen back on winning track

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

It wasn't the way anyone would want to start off his or her spring academic session.

While the vast majority of University of Massachusetts students were busy moving back into their dorms, the Massachusetts women's basketball team (12-10, 2-5 A-10) capped off the winter recess with a frustrating 67-60 loss to the Charlotte 49ers (15-7, 6-1 A-10) on Sunday.

Charlotte 67
UMass 60

The Maroon and White let a 31-24 halftime lead slip through its fingers and UMass coach Marnie Dacko was not at all pleased about it.

"I'm disappointed. I thought we played very intense basketball in the first half," she said. "We were up by 11 in the second half and we didn't make good decisions on offense and we couldn't stop [Traci] Ray [18 points] defensively – she kept moving without the ball and finding a way to score.

"We took bad shots at the end of the game and we have to be able to take better shots," Dacko continued. "We missed a ton of layups and I think we gave up some layups that I don't think hurt us, per se, but we didn't managed the ball well."

One of the few bright spots Dacko found in an otherwise frustrating afternoon was the performance of Pam Rosanio, the game's leading scorer. The junior forward tallied 24 points, going 8-for-16 from the field (1-for-5 from three-point range) and sinking 7-of-9 free throws. She also managed to snatch seven total rebounds in her 34 minutes of action.

UMass 67
St. Louis 47

"She's been playing very well the past couple games," Dacko said. "We had to get the ball in more to Kate [Mills], but it's nice that Pam steps up and I'd like other people to step up as well."

UMass 49
La Salle 47

Mills was, in fact, the team's second-leading scorer, finishing the contest with 16 points. Number 41 drained 7-of-10 shots from the floor and went a perfect 2-for-2 from the charity stripe. She also pulled down

See W. BASKETBALL on page 8

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Junior captain Alisha Tatham ranks fourth on UMass in scoring with six points per game. She also averages three rebounds per contest.

Practice beginning to pay off for UM

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

The results of countless hours spent training this year are beginning to show for the Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving teams. Both squads swam well in a home meet with Boston College on Jan. 20 and against Binghamton and Colgate a week later in Hamilton, N.Y.

The men swam to victory against all three opponents, crushing Boston College 199-92, Binghamton 186-114 and Colgate 234-66. The women were narrowly edged by the Eagles, 153-147. However, they earned a split in the second meet with a 235-66 victory over Binghamton, but were defeated 183-117 by Colgate.

The Maroon and White face Atlantic 10 rival Fordham in an away dual meet on Feb. 3. This will be the final tune-up for the swimmers before the Atlantic 10 Championships, Feb. 21-24.

Competing on the campus of Colgate University on Jan. 27, seven different Minutemen earned first place finishes against Binghamton and the host institution.

It was also a big day for the team's freshmen. Tim Smith won the 500-yard freestyle finishing ahead of three teammates.

Juan Moliere, another freshman, bested sophomore Nate Hromage in the 50-yard freestyle by only eight tenths of a second to win the race. On the women's side the team compensated for struggles in the water with a complete domination of the diving event. The team took the top four spots in the one- and three-meter dives, with sophomore Karen Lpperco winning both.

The dual meet with Boston College was also Senior Day and the team's final home meet of the year.

One senior, Ivan Swisher, set a new school and pool record in the 200-yard backstroke with a time of 1:48.56. He broke his own record, a mark he set in November of this season.

"His performance was spectacular," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said. "He's on another plane this year. He's very confident now and you might see some special stuff from him at the end of the year.

Though one year away from becoming a senior, diver R.J. Rappe established a school record of his own on the three-meter board. His score of 352.88 is nearly 29 points greater than the previous highest mark that stood for 17 seasons.

Rappe swept the men's diving competition with a victory on the one-meter board. He also won both events at the Colgate meet.

Senior Jake Hogue won two events in the 100 and 200-yard breaststroke, as well as freshman Juan Moliere in the 50 and 100-yard freestyle.

Much of the Minutemen's team success at the meet can be attributed to their fast start. The team took first, second and third place in all of the first eight events. In all, the Minutemen only failed to win three of the 16 races.

The women's team also established a good start, with a 24-12 lead after the first two races. However, the Minutewomen failed to maintain their lead by losing the next three events.

The UMass divers dominated the boards again, taking the top three spots in the one-meter and the

See SWIMMING on page 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 31 LO: 18 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31, 2007

FREEMAN, LASME LEAD UM | PAGE 12

O.A.R. OPENS UP ON TOUR | PAGE 6

Catching some Zzz's

UMass nappers have grown fond of campus couches

By Cara Grannemann and Eden Unver
Collegian Staff

Maybe you've seen them, laughed at them, or even been one of them. They are one of those many awkwardly positioned students laying facedown on a Campus Center couch. Only breaking to refuel in the most convenient place – risking sleep-talking or exposing a hairy ankle – these students are tired from their studies. These students are the epitome of hard workers.

As convenient as it is, many ask why these students wouldn't just return to their own room and sleep in privacy? Somewhere where there is no real risk of anyone stealing your shoes or catching you sucking your thumb?

Rather than seeing baby-faced freshmen and sophomores laying in the fetal position on the couches of the Campus Center concourse, you're more likely to see upperclassmen or grad-students.

Many nappers said they live either too far away from their classes, or off-campus, making the best colored couches look more like friendly futons.

While these cat naps may appear innocent, they are a serious matter, according to Harvard Neurology professor Dr. Carlos Blanco-Centurion.

"Short naps, less than 30 minutes, taken during the afternoon are a good way to cope with excessive daytime sleepiness in young people coping [with the] occasional previous night

See SLEEPING on page 3

SUSAN TRIGGS/COLLEGIAN

UMass "nappers" take a load off on the couches inside the basement of the Campus Center, yesterday. A passer-by is unlikely to find an open seat on the couches in the basement, these seats are normally occupied by students acquiring some much needed shut-eye.

High School set to expand alcohol testing

AP

Nearly half of all U.S. high school students admit to recently drinking alcohol, according to a government study released yesterday.

By David Porter
Associated Press

PEQUANNOCK, N.J. – Some teenagers who drink over the weekend could be in big trouble come Monday morning: A New Jersey school district plans to institute random urine tests capable of detecting whether alcohol was consumed up to 80 hours earlier.

Pequannock Township High, with about 800 students, said it will begin administering the tests next Monday.

"This is a major issue for America," School Superintendent Larrie Reynolds said Tuesday. "There are more kids that die each year in alcohol-related traffic deaths than there are soldiers who have died in Iraq. The numbers are staggering."

At least one other New Jersey high school, in Middletown, employs the EIG test, which screens for ethyl glucuronide, a substance produced by the body when it metabolizes alcohol.

Pequannock teenagers who participate in sports or other extracurricular activities, or drive to school, are already tested for illegal drugs, under a 2005 program prompted by the heroin overdose of a student.

Students who test positive for alcohol will not be kicked off teams or barred from extracurricular activities. Instead they will receive counseling and their parents will be notified, Reynolds said.

"That's going to give our kids riding in the back seat of someone's car a very powerful reason to say no," he said.

Drug tests, similarly, can detect drug use that occurred days earlier.

UMass' North Pole

Defect in apartment's thermostats

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

A manufacturer's defect with the programmable thermostats installed in the North Residential Area apartments has left residents without the ability to control the temperature of their rooms since arriving back on campus, and may take up to three months to resolve.

On Sunday, residents of the North Residential Area received an e-mail from Housing Services informing them of a problem with the thermostat system which had been discovered during the winter break. The e-mail also advised students in apartments without heat to contact either their Apartment Living Advisor or the North Area office.

The company which installed the thermostats in the North Apartments, Johnson Controls Incorporated, confirmed that the problem was a manufacturer's defect, according to the e-mail.

Due to a defect in thermostats inside North Residential Area apartments, residents have been unable to control the temperature of their rooms.

"It may be as long as three months to fix," said Jim Hunt, Communications Manager for Facilities and Campus Planning. "[Johnson Controls] is trying to troubleshoot what would be best and most cost effective, and most importantly, work. Hopefully it will be sooner."

The North Area apartments were opened for the first time to students in September. The University spent $92.9 million to build the four apartment-style buildings.

Johnson Controls is looking at a variety of options to solve the thermostat problem, from replacing all of the devices with a completely different model or replacing component parts of the original model, according to Hunt.

Residents of room C in the North Apartments were directed by Housing Services in the mass e-mail to keep windows closed and vents open to provide heat for the other bedrooms in each apartment. According to Hunt the heat throughout all of the buildings has been set to 72 degrees. Housing Services set the thermostat controls to that constant temperature until the defective devices could be fixed.

"It's still not enough," said Gus Alcantara, a junior and communications major who lives in North. "I'm

See NORTH on page 3

Senators sound off against war with Iran

By Anne Gearan
Associated Press

Republican and Democratic senators warned Tuesday against a drift toward war with an emboldened Iran and suggested the Bush administration was missing a chance to engage its longtime adversary in potentially helpful talks over next-door Iraq.

"What I think many of us are concerned about is that we stumble into active hostilities with Iran without having aggressively pursued diplomatic approaches, without the American people understanding exactly what's taking place," Sen. Barack Obama (news, bio, voting record), D-Ill., told John Negroponte, who is in line to become the nation's No. 2 diplomat as Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice's deputy.

Obama, a candidate for president in 2008, warned during the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing that senators of both parties will demand "clarity and transparency in terms of U.S. policy so that we don't repeat some of the mistakes that have been made in the past," a reference to the faulty intelligence underlying the U.S. invasion of Iraq.

Sen. Chuck Hagel (news, bio, voting record), R-Neb., a possible presidential candidate, asked Negroponte if he thinks the United States is edging toward a military confrontation with Tehran. In response, Negroponte repeated President Bush's oft-stated preference for diplomacy, although he later added, "We don't rule out other possibilities."

Separately, the Navy admiral poised to lead American forces in the Middle East said Iran wants to limit America's influence in the region.

"They have not been helpful in Iraq," Adm. William Fallon told the Senate Armed Services Committee. "It seems to me that in the region, as they grow

See WAR on page 3

Free goodies available online for students

By Crystalee Webb
The Daily Universe (BYU)

(U-WIRE) PROVO, Utah— "Free" is a word many college students love, and many Web sites fill that love with complimentary samples for those who like the idea of getting something for nothing.

In a Google search for "free samples," more than 78 million options for product sampling appear. These sites provide samples of name-brand shampoos, laundry detergents, makeup, medicines, snack foods, deodorant, toothpaste, paper products and more. Scoring free samples requires only a few minutes to fill out a name and address, an appealing idea to students.

"I'm always up for free stuff, and if people are going to give it to me, I'll take it with no complaints," said Mike Griggs, an advertising major from Brigham Young University.

Other students may feel more cautious about product sampling through online sources.

"Maybe I'm just skeptical, but people have a tendency to lie about things online. I know people who ordered things online, and never ended out getting them," said Esther Young, a freshman at BYU.

Web sites, like StartSampling.com, have been providing consumers with free new products since March 1999.

Larry Burns, president and CEO of Start Sampling Inc., has been in the industry for more than two decades.

"Start Sampling is legitimate in the sense that we work with some of the biggest brands on the planet and help them connect with consumers that want to try new products," Burns said. For the skeptics who say "there's no such thing as free," Burns agrees.

"To tell you the truth, they are right," Burns said. "It's free in the sense that you are not having to spend money, but there is a value exchange. You have to answer some questions, spend some time to fill it (the information) out, but you don't have to pay for it. The manufacturer is paying for it, and they want to target certain people."

To boost their sales, companies use samples to make customers aware of new products and hopefully adopt the brand, Burns said.

Douglas R. McKinlay, an advertising professor in the department of communications at BYU, said sampling is a method of reaching potential customers.

"Sampling is just one marketing tactic. The first piece of candy is free … and then you want more," McKinlay said. "They're probably just gathering data. They want to know more than you want to tell them, and you give up information for free stuff. Bad things happen to good people in the wrong database."

Although many freebie Web site options are legitimate and hassle-free, samplers should beware that some offers are sketchy and should read the small print and privacy policy on Web sites.

"Always check the privacy policy and the terms and conditions for any offers that you're signing up for," Burns said. "It's a lot of legalese, but be cautious that the company that you're signing up for is legit. If you look at the bottom of that initial screen offer and there's a disclaimer that indicates that the company in no way is involved with the brand, that should be a warning … some (companies) use well-known brands to engage your attention."

Burns said his Web site is one of the exceptions in the industry.

"In the world of Start Sampling, we're not doing that to you. (We want to) educate the consumer. If the brand is not associated with the company offering it, then beware. If you're on the site of the manufacturer themselves, it is a legitimate offer," Burns said.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 73

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPY EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sidney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FINANCED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Remains of village found near Stonehenge

Shrine reveals Stonehenge hidden secret

WASHINGTON (AP)—A village of small houses that may have sheltered the builders of the mysterious Stonehenge – or people attending festivals there – has been found by archaeologists studying the stone circle in England. Eight of the houses, with central hearths, have been excavated, and there may be as many as 25 of them, Mike Parker Pearson said Tuesday at a briefing organized by the National Geographic Society.

The ancient houses are at a site known as Durrington Walls, about two miles from Stonehenge. It is also the location of a wooden version of the stone circle.

The village was carbon dated to about 2600 B.C., about the same time Stonehenge was built. The Great Pyramid in Egypt was built at about the same time, said Parker Pearson of Sheffield University.

Julian Thomas of Manchester University noted that both Stonehenge and Durrington Walls have avenues connecting them to the Avon River, indicating a pattern of movement between the sites.

"Clearly, this is a place that was of enormous importance," he said of the new find.

The researchers speculated that Durrington Walls was a place for the living and Stonehenge – where cremated remains have been found – was a cemetery and memorial.

The wooden houses at the new site were square and about 14 feet along each side. They were almost identical to stone houses built at about the same time in the Orkney Islands off the coast of Scotland, Parker Pearson said.

He said there were indications of bed frames along the side walls and of a dresser or storage unit of some sort on the wall opposite the door.

Stone tools, animal bones, arrowheads and other artifacts were uncovered in the village. Remains of pigs indicated they were about nine months old when killed, which would mark a midwinter festival.

Stonehenge was oriented to face the midsummer sunrise and midwinter sunset, while the wooden circle at Durrington Walls faced the midwinter sunrise and midsummer sunset.

Two of the houses, found by Thomas, were separate from the others and may have been the dwellings of community leaders or perhaps were cult houses used for religious rituals. Those sites lacked the debris and household trash that was common in the other homes, he noted.

Durrington appears "very much a place of the living," Parker Pearson said. In contrast, no one ever lived at the stone circle at Stonehenge, which was the largest cemetery in Britain of its time. Stonehenge is thought to contain 250 cremations.

Archaeologist trenches reveal clay floors of Neolithic houses at Durrington Walls, once occupied by the builders of Stonehenge.

Python swallows 11 dogs

KUALA LUMPUR (AP)—Guard dogs protecting a fruit orchard in Malaysia have met their match – a 7.1-metre-long (23-ft-long) python that swallowed at least 11 hounds before it was finally discovered by villagers.

"I was shocked to see such a huge python," orchard-keeper Ali Yusof told the New Straits Times in an article published beneath a picture of the captured snake, which was almost long enough to span the width of a tennis court and as thick as a tree trunk.

Villagers did not harm the snake, which was tied to a tree then handed to wildlife officials, the paper said on Friday.

—Associated Press

Villagers hold a python in Kampung Pagoh, Johor.

Chicago Bears helmet breaks on lion statue

BY DON BABWIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

An effort to honor the NFC Champion Chicago Bears hit a snag Tuesday morning when a huge football helmet broke as it was being placed on one of the lion statues that stands guard outside the Art Institute of Chicago.

It seems the frigid weather, often referred to as Bears weather in Chicago, may have been to blame.

"They're made of Fiberglas and (one) broke," said Art Institute spokesman Chai Lee.

Some theorize the broken helmet had nothing to do with the weather at all.

"I think the lions got swelled heads since we won," joked Gary Heitz, project manager for Chicago Scenic Studios Inc., the company that made the helmets.

Heitz said workers took the helmets back to their workshop, where they will be enlarged and refinished in time to place them on the lions on Wednesday.

As for the lions, they're accustomed to such attention. During the holidays, they're adorned with wreaths, and when the White Sox went to the World Series in 2005, they were fitted with helmets.

Global warming heats up Senate

BY STEPHANIE GRIFFITH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON—US lawmakers called for an end to American complacency over global warming as the new Democratic-controlled Congress weighed measures to reduce greenhouse gases.

After years of relegating climate change to the bottom of the legislative agenda, Democrats who wrested control of the House and the Senate from the Republicans in November elections, have vowed to make it a priority.

At a hearing of the Senate Environment Committee, Democratic Senator Hillary Clinton said after years of delay, global warming was "an issue whose time has come."

"If we look at where we are ... we are not making progress. In fact, emissions are still going up," she said.

"I'm hoping that we can get beyond the usual rhetoric and try to find some common ground," said Clinton, who currently leads the field of Democratic contenders for her party's 2008 presidential nomination.

The stepped-up concern came amid mounting calls for the United Nations to organize a world summit on climate change, and as a draft UN report concluded that global warming will unleash bouts of extreme heat, drought and rainfall and make typhoons and hurricanes more violent by 2100.

At the Senate hearing Tuesday, there was similar alarm.

"December in Minnesota felt more like October," said Democratic Senator Amy Klobuchar (news, bio, voting record). "Our ice fishing seasons are shorter and our skiers and snowmobilers haven't seen much snow."

"Global warming is an issue that strikes us close to home. The stakes are as high as they get," she said.

President George W. Bush during his State of the Union speech last week unveiled a new energy initiative, but environmentalists were unimpressed, saying the United States needed to adopt policies capping emissions of greenhouse gases blamed for global warming.

Senator Barbara Boxer (news, bio, voting record), the liberal Democratic new chairwoman of the environment committee, has vowed to hold a series of hearings on global warming in the coming weeks, and introduced a bill to raise energy efficiency standards for thousands of federal buildings.

A second bill she will soon introduce would step up development of cellulosic ethanol derived from agricultural waste, grass and other plants – as an alternative to gasoline.

Boxer said America has a long way to go to catch up with much of the rest of the world in tackling climate change.

"Maybe we're the last ones to get on board here, but I think we're going to do it," she said.

Independent US Senator Joe Lieberman reintroduced a bill that would cap greenhouse gas emissions of the electric, industrial, transportation and commercial sectors at year 2004 levels by 2012, and would thereafter gradually lower the cap.

"Our bill uses the power of the free market to promote the rapid and widespread deployment of advanced technologies and practices for reducing greenhouse gases," he said.

"I believe the politics of global warming have changed and that a new consensus is emerging," said Lieberman.

US Senator Barack Obama (news, bio, voting record) said he is drafting a bill that would focus on improving fuel efficiency standards in the US car industry.

In addition to the economic and environmental benefits, conserving fossil fuel, Obama said, "gives us additional leverage in the Middle East, and can potentially go a long way in terms of reducing some of our military obligations around the world."

"It's inexcusable for a country of our wealth and ingenuity and power not to be leaders," said the Illinois Democrat, who is just days away from what pundits believe will be a formal declaration later this month of his plan to run for the White House.

"We abdicated responsibility ... We were laggards on this issue," said Obama.

"This gives us an opportunity to show the world that we are prepared to work with them in a constructive, positive, but aggressive way," he said.

According to the UN draft report, there is now a 90-percent probability that man-made greenhouse gases have driven up Earth's surface temperature over the past half century.

Eleven of the last 12 years rank among the warmest years for which there are reliable records, according to the draft, which is being discussed line by line at the four-day meeting of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) in Paris.

Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-NY, speaks to Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-CA, chairwoman of the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, before a hearing entitled "Senators' Perspectives on Global Warming," yesterday.

University Health Services
Mental Health Groups, Spring 2007

Pre-registration is required for all groups. To register, or for more information, call 545-2337 or come to Mental Health Services, 125 Hills North, Monday – Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m.

KEEPING IT REAL
Mondays, 3:30 – 5 p.m.
A co-ed undergraduate group focusing on self-exploration and skill-building for positive relationships.

GIRLS JUST WANNA HAVE FUN
Tuesdays, 4 – 5:15 p.m.
An exploration of women and substance use.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Wednesdays, 5:30 – 7 p.m.
Mindfulness is a way of paying attention with intention, in the moment and without judgment. With regular practice, MBSR has the potential to lower stress, anxiety and depression, promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness and enhance the immune system.

RELATIONSHIP GROUP FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS
Thursdays, 3:45 – 5 p.m.
Explore personal relationships, work, studies and other issues in this group for graduate men and women concerned about interpersonal connections.

GAY AND BI MEN'S SUPPORT GROUP
Day and time to be announced
Offering male students a safe place to discuss issues of sexuality, identity development, relationships, isolation, depression, family concerns, coming out, intimacy and more.

Group fees are deducted from the Student Health Fee, Student Health Insurance Plan, GIC or Health New England plan, subject to plan limitations and co-pays.

Naps may have unhealthy effects of restricted sleep or bad sleep," said Blanco-Centurion.

SLEEPING from page 1

According to Blanco-Centurion, a night of restricted or bad sleep is one with six hours or less per night. Naps, Blanco-Centurion says, can also be used as a "preventative means to cope when a prolonged waking is expected to happen (prophylactic napping). So a student may take a two hour nap prior to a long night of studying."

In a pinch, Blanco-Centurion said naps can be a great option to resting up before or after a night of missed sleep, however, they are unhealthy as a regular diet of sleep deprivation.

"Two weeks of sleep restriction produces the same deterioration in cognitive performance than two nights of total sleep deprivation," said Blanco-Centurion. "Sleep deprivation produces the same kind of disinhibitory behavior as alcohol does."

They didn't tell you that in BASICS.

"When brain serotonin levels are low, animals and humans display more aggressive behaviors as well as eat more," said Blanco-Centurion

Who knew that achieving a perfect eight hours could possibly forgive students for a weekend of beirut?

According to Blanco-Centurion's research, young adults are the ones who have the greatest amount of sleep deprivation, averaging about 6.7 hours on weekdays, and 7.4 on weekends. So what to do during those four-plus years of fatigued captivity on the bottom-floor of DuBois?

Many students looking for an extra boost of alertness turn to energy drinks like Red Bull, which is distributed throughout campus. Blanco-Centurion contends there are other, more natural, ways to gain an extra boost.

"[The] brain has its natural ways to boost alertness. Motivation, attention, physical activity, even hunger all lead to neurons to keep responding," said Blanco-Centurion.

Thus, the best way to study for a test might be a little elbow grease as opposed to turning to an energy drink which according to Blanco-Centurion, is a drug.

"First, caffeine, as other psychoactive drugs, produces tolerance. As a result, people increase caffeine intake in order to get even," said Blanco-Centurion, also describing the coinciding caffeine withdrawal, which includes, "headache, fatigue, decreased energy, decreased alertness, depressed mood, difficulty concentrating, irritability, and foggy mind."

Perhaps college students do not take sleep as seriously as they should.

"Sleepiness should be considered as a drive in the same way as hunger or thirst," said Blanco-Centurion. "Hence, sleepiness builds up during the daytime even though people do nothing [about it]."

Given all the facts, 30 minutes of pillow time on that lumpy, cranberry couch, which looks strikingly like an extra-long twin bed, may not be a bad idea after all.

Cara Grandermeen and Eden Univer can be reached at cgrandmeen@student.umass.edu and euniver@student.umass.edu.

Australian sells own life on Internet

(AP)– A 24-year-old Australian surfer who sold his life, including baggage from a painful break-up, on eBay says he is still not quite sure why he did it.

Nicael Holt sold his name, phone number and all his possessions, including clothes, CDs, a surfboard, a laptop, a wonky pushbike, childhood photos and a "nice lamp" given to him by an ex-girlfriend, on the internet auction site.

The successful applicant bid 7,500 Australian dollars (5,790 US) last week to become Holt, right down to spending Christmas with his parents and inheriting "some tension with a former ex from a painful break-up."

The identity of the eBay auction winner is known only as "ridderstrade."

Holt, a philosophy student from the southern coastal city of Wollongong who has set up a Web site to explain his actions and ask for donations to charity, said he was unable to explain why he sold his life.

"I'm still racking my brain to come up with the answer or any answer as to why I did this?" He wrote.

Motivating factors were boredom and intrigue as to what constitutes a life and what made him who he was.

He added he was "hoping to make a point that the amount and type of things that are for sale in this world is insane and wasteful."

In his sales pitch, Holt said the winner would be entitled to a four-week training course on how to be him including lessons on how to surf, climb, skateboard, fire twirl and do handstands – as well as two months of on-call support afterward.

He also promised to introduce the winner to all his friends and potential lovers, including eight people he had been flirting with.

"Lifestyle is very social. It includes a lot of going out," he noted on his eBay advert.

"Friends will treat you exactly as they have treated me. This includes friends who take me surfing, running, climbing and cook for me. All of these features will be transferred over to the winning applicant."

His legal identity, passport, qualifications and future inheritance were not for sale.

Holt's new Web site has raised only a modest 100 dollars for charity.

"In the spirit of this, there are people in the world who are dispossessed and actually have nothing," he writes on the nicael.com website.

"So I would like to make a contribution to these people by donating to a charity."

Associated Press

School costs repel students from first choice

BY MICHELLE GUTKNECHT
THE DAILY VIDETTE (ILLINOIS STATE U.)

NORMAL, Ill.—An annual national survey conducted by the University of California at Los Angeles reveals smaller percentages of college freshmen are attending their first choice schools, and even those accepted to their first choice are instead settling for their second or third choices.

The survey that yielded these results is The Freshman Survey, which has been administered by the Cooperative Institutional Research Program at UCLA for the last 40 years.

This year 271,441 freshmen at 393 colleges across the nation were involved in the survey. While students were asked a variety of questions about high school life and college decisions, a major point of interest revealed by the survey results dealt with deciding factors that determine what school a student chooses to attend.

John H. Pryor, director of the Cooperative Institutional Research Program and survey's lead author, said that the survey found that 67.3 percent of students polled were attending their first choice school, which is the second lowest percentage since researchers included this question on the survey in the mid-1970s.

The survey also found that, among those students attending their second choice schools, 48.9 percent had been accepted by their first choice school, but decided not to attend.

According to Pryor, a significant reason for the decline in attendance of first choice schools is the cost.

"What the results of the survey seem to be telling us is that financial issues is the main reason that students accepted to their first choice schools choose not to attend," Pryor said.

Charles A. Boudreau, director of Financial Aid, said students and parents not being entirely well informed about the full cost of their university or college of choice may be a contributing factor to this troublesome issue of finances.

"I try and emphasize to parents to go to the school's Web site early on and do research on overall cost, financial aid eligibility and scholarship opportunities."

"Then you can assess if the price of the school is workable for your family financially," Boudreau said.

Molly Arnold, director of Admissions, said that ISU probably loses students interested in coming here to other schools because of the extensive endowments that many smaller private schools have to entice students that are meeting their university needs.

However, she also noted that because of ISU's quality and affordability, it is a great package deal for students looking for the type of learning environment ISU provides.

"If we benefit from students coming here because we were more affordable than their first choice, I'm okay with that as long as the student who attends is comfortable with their decision to come to ISU."

"I really want our students to be happy with their decision, because if they're happy then they do well, and if they do well and enjoy themselves then they will tell others about their great experience at ISU, and there's a positive trickle down effect," Arnold said.

North residents in deep freeze cold at night and in the morning it's freezing, especially if you take a shower before class."

NORTH from page 1

Alacantara said the thermometer would read "error" when he attempted to adjust it. Alacantara said that the lack of heat had been an inconvenience for him since arriving back on campus for the spring semester, leaving his apartment cold and forcing him to wear extra layers.

Fixing the defective thermostats is in the best interest of the University as the controls in the thermostats, which kept the temperature within a set range, saved money, said Hunt. The University was working closely with Johnson Controls to solve the problem as soon as possible, he said.

Residents of North C apartment complained that not only had the programmable thermostats malfunctioned, but the air coming out of the vents was below 72 degrees.

"The vents are working, but they blow cold air," said Jessica Smith, a junior marketing major. The problem had been ongoing since moving back into her apartment, she said.

Hunt said he had not heard of any reports that the vents were only blowing cold air in any of the North Residential Area buildings.

"A complaint like that might not get to me, it might go to housing," he said. "It is my understanding that the mean temperature throughout all of the buildings was set at 72 degrees."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian was unable to reach Housing Services for comment.

According to Hunt, there had been suspicions from the beginning that the thermostats were not working properly, but because the outside temperature had not dropped significantly they were unable to properly diagnose the problem.

Senators warn against Iran war their military capabilities, we're going to have to pay close attention to what they do and what they may bring to the table."

WAR from page 1

The Bush administration has increased rhetorical, diplomatic, military and economic pressure on Iran over the past few months, in response to Iran's alleged deadly help for extremists fighting U.S. troops in Iraq and the long-running dispute over Iran's nuclear program.

Bush said Tuesday the United States "will deal with it" if Iran escalates military action inside Iraq and endangers American forces. But, in an interview with ABC News, Bush emphasized this talk signals no intention of invading Iran itself.

A day earlier, the president acknowledged skepticism concerning U.S. intelligence about Iran, because Washington was wrong in accusing Iraq of harboring weapons of mass destruction before the U.S.-led invasion in 2003. "I'm like a lot of Americans that say, 'Well, if it wasn't right in Iraq, how do you know it's right in Iran,'" the president said.

Washington accuses Iran of arming and training Shiite Muslim extremists in Iraq. U.S. troops have responded by arresting Iranian diplomats in Iraq, and the White House has said Bush signed an order allowing U.S. troops to kill or capture Iranians inside Iraq.

The United States also accuses Iran of secretly developing atomic weapons – an allegation Tehran denies. Iran's refusal to suspend uranium enrichment lead the U.N. Security Council to impose limited economic sanctions.

Senators including Hagel, George Voinovich (news, bio, voting record), R-Ohio, and Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., sounded frustrated with the administration's decision not to engage Iran and fellow outcast Syria in efforts to reduce sectarian violence in Iraq.

Dine & Win a FANTASTIC
Super Bowl Prize!
RAFFLE LCD TV
PARTY FOR 12-15 PEOPLE
Coke Cooler, 1 Case Soda,
1 Case UMass Bottled Water,
Chicken Finger Platter, Fruit Platter and Dip
2nd Prize
PARTY FOR 12-15 PEOPLE
• 1 cs. Soda
• 1 cs. UMass Bottled Water
• Fruit Platter and Dip
3rd Prize
• Chicken Finger Platter (for 12-15 people)
Enter between January 29 and January 31 2007 at any UMass Dining Commons.
You must be on a meal plan to enter.
Drawing to be held Thursday, February 1 at 6:00 pm in each DC.
Compliments of UMass Dining Services and Coca-Cola
YCMP
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Coca-Cola
www.umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The war at home

It may be a woman's right, but that does not necessarily mean that it is right.

Ben Duffy

A friend of mine is expecting. Just seven weeks pregnant, she visited her doctor and witnessed the heartbeat of her unborn child.

The child growing inside of her is a human being. Unfortunately, the law doesn't see it that way. The law sees her child as a blob of flesh unworthy of human rights and basic protections under the law. The law is wrong.

I'm struggling to understand a world that can justify such a situation, but I can't do it. All I can say is that our species hasn't progressed much since the time when we considered African slaves to be something less than human. We think we have learned some lessons from that time, but apparently we haven't.

In the struggle to recognize the unborn as a human being, pro-lifers find themselves in combat with members of the Left, a group of people who pride themselves on the moral high ground that they believe they possess. They care about the spotted owl, the ozone layer and the illegal immigrants who cross our borders every day. They say that they care about the American soldiers who have died in Iraq. They say that they're the champions of the little guy, the downtrodden and the disenfranchised. They're pro-gay rights, pro-women's rights, pro-workers' rights and pro-third world. But they don't give a damn about the weakest people of all, the people who can't speak for themselves, much less defend themselves.

They mark every 500th death of American soldiers in Iraq, but they don't care about the 500th dead child in our own country. For the record, 3081 American soldiers have lost their lives in Iraq. As a veteran of Operation Iraqi Freedom, I understand the tragedy of every one of their deaths. But if we want to put that in perspective, we should compare it to a figure of 48,589,993, the number of unborn children legally killed since Roe v. Wade. The body count in the American war against the unborn has claimed 15,770 times more victims than the total number of Americans dead since the beginning of the war in Iraq, with no end in sight. What's our exit strategy?

They mark every 500th death of American soldiers in Iraq, but they don't care about the 500th dead child in our own country.

To put that number in perspective, 48 million is 1,79 times greater than the population of Iraq. Even if we killed every human being in Iraq, we still wouldn't have killed as many people as we have killed in our abortion mills. Forty-eight million is 97 times the population of Wyoming, 12 times the population of Puerto Rico, 11.8 times the population of Ireland, 5.9 times the population of New York City and 1.29 times the population of California, our most populous state.

What's it going to take to make us change our course? In my estimation, the only roadblock we face to the protection of the unborn is the resistance of so-called liberals and Leftists. We need a new strategy to win them over. If the shocking body count won't change their minds, what will?

We need to learn to speak the language of the liberal before we can even aspire to crack through the fortified walls that shield the brains of the obstinately "pro-choice." If only they considered the issue of abortion to be as important as fair trade, Head start or saving the life of Stanley "Tookie" Williams, convicted murderer and founder of the violent "Crips" gang.

I'll just throw out a few ideas. First, we could say that abortion is contributing to global warming. After all, we routinely burn the bodies of the unborn under the label of "medical waste" at incinerators across the country. Do they actually produce greenhouse gasses? I don't know, but I do know that the Left would pay attention if they did. That should be the new slogan – "abortion is melting the Arctic." Oh, the horror. Sea levels are rising and polar bears are losing weight. Save the environment, act now to stop baby incineration.

Or maybe we could tell them that Halliburton is a major provider of abortions. Yes, the VP's former company is making a buck, and wherever Dick is prowling around, there must be a scandal afoot. In reality, abortion is a lucrative industry, but Halliburton is not involved, just Planned Parenthood and their ilk. These organizations are every bit as immoral as any defense contractor or oil company.

Unfortunately, I think the only tactic that might work would be to convince the other side that they're aborting their own voters. Actually, abortion "disproportionately targets" minorities and the poor, (to borrow a phrase from the Left). Liberals and Leftists are aborting themselves out of existence, and they need to act now to avoid certain doom in future elections. I think this may be the most effective approach.

For the rest of us who are simply shocked by the staggering statistics of legal murder, we have another choice. We can vote pro-life. Unfortunately, I think others might need some additional motivation in order to get them to act against the greatest evil of our time.

Ben Duffy is a Collegian columnist

From a faculty affiliate

Iraq shows UMass the way

Bite DeGuano

UMass has recently had trouble controlling its students and dorms. The Iraq War offers valuable lessons on the way forward.

On a university, as in Iraq, the first priority is security. Discussion of "hearts and minds" has a public relations purpose, but the key is establishing power and control; from that all else will follow, and until that is done nothing else can succeed. Laws must be enforced, and wherever there is resistance, there should be a massive show of force. Loose resistance groupings – whether the Mahdi Army or fraternity brothers – need to be crushed and displaced.

The way to show our power, at UMass as in Iraq, is periodic patrols. These demonstrate to the populace that our power is everywhere, that the populace has no autonomous space in which they can operate and make their own independent decisions. Harsh penalties will teach people not to resist, to always conform to our will. UMass has made major strides through its dramatic increase in drug arrests – in a mere two months, more than three times the level of the entire year three years ago, so on course for more than a tenfold increase. These arrests, combined with the national drug policy of cutting off all student aid, should show students (especially, of course, less affluent students) the danger of ever violating even the silliest of our rules. As yet, I would not advise the use of Abu Graib tactics, but dorm-to-dorm raids, like house-to-house raids in Iraq, are a good way to bring students to our side. Forget about winning people's hearts and minds. We don't want them to like us, or to be co-equals working with us; rather we need them to fear us.

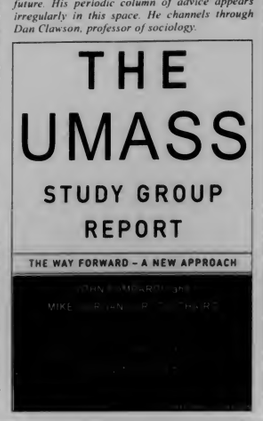
This is not incompatible with holding elections. Periodic elections – whether for Student Governments or for Parliament – serve a purpose. At certain times the governments we let our subjects elect can take the heat for us. All significant decisions, of course, should continue to be made by the occupying power (whether the U.S. army or the vice chancellor), at least until such time as we can put in place democratically-elected subleaders who will do exactly what we want.

This process necessarily takes a long time. In Iraq, as at UMass, we still have some distance to go, but with firm leadership at the top, and a refusal to ever admit error, we will persevere. Neither UMass student police interns, nor the Iraqi army-police, are yet prepared to operate independently of our own force. For our Iraq policy, some groups – a large majority of voters, the Iraq Study Group of washed out insiders, increasing numbers of members of Congress – are calling for a new direction. The right response to that, of course, is to double-down on the "force will cure all" bet. Despite 345 video cameras and a vastly more aggressive police presence, UMass students have rioted in response to a sports contest. Clearly UMass needs to learn from President Bush and to respond by doubling-down on its "more police" approach. My advice to Brother Mike is to use a velvet glove, but put it in a 9 iron.

The way to show our power, at UMass as in Iraq, is periodic patrols.

The next chance to implement this is the Super Bowl. I say: Why wait until after there is trouble? Let's establish Guantanamo in Amherst: mass preventive detention. It would be a sign of weakness to provide students space (the Cage, the Mullins Center) to party and celebrate, to attempt to work with students to give them a way to have innocent fun. Much better to prepare for a massive lockdown following the game. If we need to arrest thousands, so be it.

Bite DeGuano is Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs at UMosh, the cyber-university of the future. His periodic column of advice appears irregularly in this space. He channels through Dan Clawson, professor of sociology.



What you can do

Nick Milano

Campaign posters were everywhere around Massachusetts in the months leading up to Election Day as candidates worked to sway voters. Of the signs, the most striking was Deval Patrick's blue and white posters which simply stated, "Together We Can."

As a point of comparison, I cannot even remember the color Kerry Healey used for her signs. Patrick's campaign promises and speeches concentrated on strengthening the belief Massachusetts can and will do better with a group effort. His positive and hopeful message carried him from a no-name in the political field to the State House. The electorate is excited to see him deliver on promises of a state government not hijacked by Beacon Hill political operatives, but in the hands of the people. A month into his governorship, it appears Patrick is going to do all he can to get the people involved in contributing to our state, most significantly through the creation of the Commonwealth Corps.

Patrick got right to work. On the first Monday after his inauguration, he announced the creation of this corps of volunteers. A major new program, the Commonwealth Corps' goal is to encourage citizens to dedicate a year to working for a "nonprofit group, civic initiative or public entity." While the idea for a volunteer program is not new, (for nearly a decade, Senator Marc Pacheco of Taunton had been pushing for it), it took Patrick's election for anyone to make it a reality. The Corps will start out modestly with about 250 people in its first year, but the governor hopes it will grow annually and reach about 1,000 workers within five years.

Volunteers will try their hand at working to assist others where help is most necessary. A program like this is desperately needed not only to help struggling neighborhoods, but to introduce a new generation to the rewards of working in the public sector. The current generation seems to be immune to the political winds that are sweeping the country, and would prefer doing nothing to standing up and taking a stand.

Unlike the Vietnam War demonstrations that greatly influenced Washington, there have been significantly less social movements in protest of the Iraq War led by the younger generation, despite widespread anti-war sentiment. We, the next generation, do not vote, meaning we neither care about the direction our country is headed nor do we have any political power.

A program like this is desperately needed... to introduce a new generation to the rewards of working in the public sector.

Our democracy requires people to be proactive for it to work. It needs people to vote and partake in the political debate. Our country needs people to commit to being public servants like teachers, police officers and civil servants. Our country needs people to work for non-profits like Habitat for Humanity and Partners in Health. Perhaps with the ascension of energetic and inspirational politicians like Patrick, Barack Obama and John Edwards, people will be drawn back to these jobs. Patrick is already working to make this happen with the Commonwealth Corps.

The Corps is an ambitious project designed to emulate President John F. Kennedy's Peace Corps and President Clinton's AmeriCorps on a smaller and more localized scale. The Peace Corps is still thriving today and has sent more than 182,000 Americans to countries around the world. Established in the spirit of, "ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country," the Peace Corps reintroduced young people to the idea of service for their country. AmeriCorps, a federal volunteer program, was created in 1993 and over 400,000 Americans have volunteered to better their communities, help struggling families and mentor troubled youth.

The Corps will take a few years and a few mistakes for it to achieve its goals, but we must stand by it. There is a fear the volunteers may be doing work people are already paid to do, thus causing those people to lose their jobs – an outcome that must be avoided. There is also the question of money. Patrick has recently warned the state the budget is running a deficit and changes will have to be made.

Will there be enough money to not only fund this program, but also pay for health insurance of the volunteers as required by Massachusetts law? Patrick estimates the program will cost $3 million -surely not too high a price to get people, as the official press statement read, to "reinvest in their communities and civic lives."

Nationally, Massachusetts is at the forefront in the battle for personal rights. We are in the only state guaranteeing marriage rights to every citizen. We are in the only state with legislation promising healthcare for all. We are in a state whose minimum wage will be nearly three dollars higher than the federal minimum on Jan. 1, 2008.

Now we are in a state where the government is ensuring its future by bringing bright young minds to work in the non-profit groups whose work changes people lives and the public sector where decisions are made to alter the state's future. We should be most proud.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist.

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Deval Patrick, shown speaking at UMass last semester, has recently unveiled the Commonwealth Corps.

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT AND GET PRINTED YOURSELF! (350 WORD LIMIT)

Send letters to:
editorial@dailycollegian.com

'You' and the changing media

Melissa Garber

For well over half a century, Readers Digest has been a revered American media institution. Yet, in recent years its readership has dwindled and its namesake magazine has lacked coveted youth appeal. Right now, a private equity firm (BBC News) is set to purchase the company, which is estimated to be worth 1.6 billion dollars.

YouTube.com, a wildly popular haven for video clips submitted by the sites audience, is just a few months shy of its second birthday. With a reported 100 million downloads a day, it is speculated to be the most popular site on the web. Google, the search engine tycoon, is set to buy YouTube.com for 1.6 billion dollars as well.

Ten years ago it would have been inconceivable for a Web site whose features include a segment called "the evolution of dance" and old Nickelodeon repeats to be on the same playing field as the company with the largest magazine circulation.

"We don't own the news anymore," Richard Sambrook, director of the BBC World Service, explained at a conference on citizen journalism. "This is a fundamental realignment of the relationship between large media companies and the public."

YouTube.com is representative of the publics' desire to participate in the media. According to Technorati.com, a site devoted to tracking blogs, there are 57 million blogs on the Internet and 100,000 more being created every day.

Citizen journalism is dominating the media. Newspaper and magazine circulation is rapidly declining, while online media is seeing a sharp increase in readership (stateofthemedia.org). Walter Cronkite can no longer declare, "That's the way it is," because journalists are no longer defining the news.

Bloggers though, are not subject to editors and fact checkers like the mainstream media is. In a speech given at UMass last semester, Sreenath Sreenivasan, the Dean of Students at the Columbia Graduate School of Journalism, lamented, "We're in the kind of atmosphere where when I see something on the news I say, 'according to the 'New York Times.'"

However, with frauds like Jason Blair, Stephen Glass and Janet Cooke being able to slip through the cracks of the country's most prominent newspapers, it has become difficult for the public to know who to trust. According to a survey by the Pew Research Center, there are no media outlets that stand out as most reliable.

With citizen journalism the reader becomes the editor, deciding what to read and consequently what the news of the day is. Readers are no longer tied down to what the mainstream media decides is news.

In 2002, Philip Seib reported in his book, "Going Live," that, "with the individual news consumer having greater choice about what information he or she wants, journalists' role in judging what news the public needs may change."

Not only has the journalists' role changed, it is nearing extinction. The rapid onslaught of citizen journalism has all but knocked the traditional mainstream media to its knees. Consumers are not looking for what journalists consider news; they are focusing on what they consider news.

With citizen journalism the reader becomes the editor, deciding what to read and consequently what the news of the day is.

"Today it is possible to engage in a certain amount of force-feeding," Seib sensually noted nearly five years ago. Now though, news organizations are growing dependent on what their audience wants. The three major networks, NBC, ABC and CBS have all conformed to what Sreenivasan has coined, "the changing media landscape."

"A lot of times as journalists we have ideas what we think is the most important. Then you get on the sites and you see, 'Oh, this is what people are really most interested in. This is the water-cooler stuff.'" Dave Toplikar, the online editor of LJWorld.com explained in an article by the "Chicago Tribunes.'"

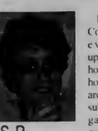
The media is recognizing that the public will go elsewhere if they want to force feed the same information down everyone's throat. But, the mainstream media, try as they might, cannot fully achieve the level of public discourse that blogs can. Although every news outlet has its own Web site, and interactive features to try to connect with viewers, the concept of journalists choosing what the news is doesn't work anymore. The public, who once were just listeners, are now the editors of their own version of the day's news.

"The means of dissemination have changed," Bob Steele, senior faculty member at the Poynter Institute, explains, "and what is really significant, of course, is that anybody can own the printing press."

The media can no longer depend on the news itself to sell. Journalists now have to become figureheads, relying on their reputation and the loyalty of their viewers, in order to continue to attract and retain an audience that is beginning to divert its attention elsewhere.

Melissa Garber is a Collegian columnist.

A seemingly bleak future



S.P. Sullivan

It's inevitable. College students everywhere, upon returning home for the holiday season, are inescapably subjected to the garden-variety questions from long-lost friends and relatives.

"Where are you going again?"

"What are your career plans?"

"What's your major?"

Unfortunately for journalism majors, that last one also comes standard with a few biting follow-up questions. I myself was asked by a coworker when I returned to my job at the local supermarket if I planned on "being one of those lefty journalists." Likewise, I was asked at a family function if I planned on working for Fox News. This, of course, was all in the spirit of awkward reunion small talk, but it does make one wonder, why is it assumed that journalism majors, upon graduation, will commit the deadliest of journalistic trespasses: partisanship?

The Spanish-American War was blamed largely on the yellow journalism of William Randolph Hearst and his New York Journal.

Why is it assumed that nascent journalists will "pick a side?" I haven't heard of too many pre-med students being asked if they plan on committing malpractice. Architecture majors aren't asked if they intend to design substandard housing. We are in college to learn how to perform the duties of our prospective careers the right way, aren't we? It isn't just assumed that college students aspire to fail.

The issue, then, must be demonstrative of problems in the field itself. Partisanship, the journalistic equivalent of malpractice, has grown increasingly more common over the past few years, especially with the increasing popularity of political talk shows. Opinionated talking heads like Bill O'Reilly and Rush Limbaugh (who preaches to a choir of 14.5 million-plus) have replaced actual news anchors, and media outlets have strayed from content-based news for the action-packed world of "news-entertainment."

The biased, or "yellow" journalism that is borne of the "news-entertainment" era isn't a new thing, however. Long before the Tucker Carlson's of today were attending college journalism classes, the United States found itself at war with Spain. The Spanish-American War was blamed largely on the yellow journalism of William Randolph Hearst and his New York Journal. Partisanship has existed just as long as the truth has. But not until the advent of cable news and the Nielson rating system, was the practice of yellow journalism brought to a science.

The blame for all this biased writing cannot be entirely vested in the media, either. As Newsweek columnist Robert J. Samuelson said in a June 2006 article, "We journalists think we define news, and from day to day, we do. Over the longer run, that's less true. All news organizations must satisfy their audiences. If they don't, they go out of business." If ratings are any indication of what the people want, then the people have spoken; they want partisanship.

So, no matter how hard journalism professors may hammer the importance of objectivity into the heads of our nation's journalists-to-be, once reporting the news becomes their bread and butter, neutrality falls victim to the bottom line. UMass architecture and design students aren't aspiring to design death traps because real-world architects don't; they wouldn't make any money if they did. Likewise, doctors who commit malpractice are, more often then not, sued by their patients for large sums of money. However, in the field of journalism nowadays, partisanship sells. The Bill O'Reilly's and Al Franken's of the field are rewarded, not for their journalistic integrity, but for their ability to get attention.

Aspiring journalists, the journalism and communications majors at UMass and across the country, then, have a very powerful stigma to overcome if they are ever to achieve the kind of journalistic integrity and devotion to the truth that drew them to the field in the first place. The field of journalism has been without its Bob Woodward's and Carl Bernstein's for too long. The media has never been at a shortage of heroes. The problem today, though, is that its villains seem to be the ones making all the dough.

It's common knowledge that journalism – unlike engineering or accounting – is not the best major for those looking to make a killing fresh out of college. And it may be true that hackery and bending to the whims of one's readership or viewership (or sponsorship, for that matter) is the best way to make it to the top. But if the field is going to survive long enough for us journalism students to make any money at it, we have to be the generation that performs a reality check. In an age where everything from fossil fuels to bottled water has become a commodity, the truth is becoming a finite resource. And even as an Ed/Op columnist, I don't want to see the editorial section take over the rest of the paper.

So I say to all my fellow journalism students, buck up. Partisanship might sell, but the truth will set us free.

S P Sullivan is a Collegian columnist

The liberals and the liars

Chris Eckel

If you haven't seen the particularly hilarious "Colbert Report" featuring Bill O' Reilly as a guest, then you need to get on the Internet and have a look. Colbert treated this personal blowhard for President Bush like his own personal punching bag; continually outfoxing O'Reilly intellectually and making him into a hack. During the interview, O'Reilly looked like Shawn Merriman during the Patriots' game: enraged that he was completely impotent.

Now this is not a joke about using steroids and becoming impotent, and if it was, the joke is not directed at O' Reilly: one look at his figure and it's obvious he is not on the juice. Furthermore, this is not a critique of the fact that, in modern-day America, a satirist seems more politically qualified than many actual politicians and nearly all political commentators. However, what is important to take from that interview is the number of times O'Reilly made allusions to the liberal media, and how they are running and ruining the country. This is a tired refrain and, unfortunately, at least some American people are beginning to believe it.

The problem is that those who speak the belief that the media are biased to the left, and those who buy into that belief, are objectively wrong. Now, when it comes to the current Republican administration, wrong may be right: see Iraq, excessive tax cuts for the super-rich, and a refusal to ratify the Kyoto Protocol, for instance. However, as convincingly as they have lied about those issues to the American people, it is fairly clear that they should not be allowed to continue with the ruse of the liberal media.

Consider the words of noted media critic Robert McChesney, who writes that, "The truth is, of course, that there is no liberal bias in the media…Analysts with Fairness & Accuracy in Reporting, and scholars at dozens of journalism schools have confirmed this…in study after study." So, if liberal bias is statistically a myth, then why do Bush and his cronies continue to blatantly lie to the American people?

They lie because it allows them to get away with whatever they want. Daniel Hellinger, a scholar who analyzes how politics and the media intersect, believes Bush and his propagandist mouthpieces portray the media as liberal as "part of their strategy to tar liberalism and tame the independence of journalists." With one strategic masterstroke, neo-conservatives have managed to gain a form of control over journalists, and make liberalism look like the creation of a few cranks.

They attempt to stress the idea that conservative politicians more closely identify with the American public than do self-indulgent journalists.

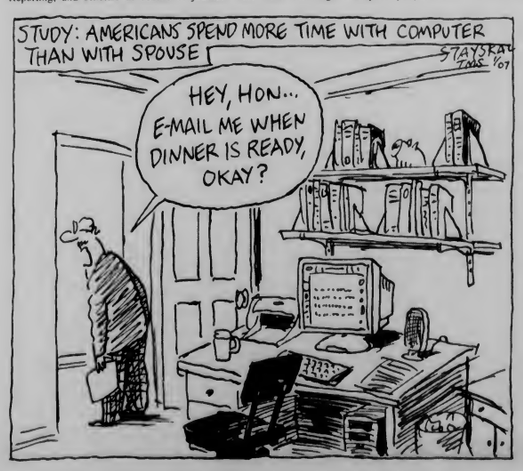
Furthermore, they attempt to connect liberalism with elitism, and attempt to stress the idea that conservative politicians more closely identify with the American public than do self-indulgent journalists. I am, in a loose sense of the word, a journalist. George W. Bush is, in a very loose sense of the word, a democratically elected politician. Allow me to indulge for a moment; let us compare Bush and myself, and you, my reader, can decide to which of us you feel may a deeper sense of connection. I attend a public university, mainly because my parents are hard working, underpaid people. Bush attended an elite private university, mostly because his parents are politically and socially connected. I have operated a fantasy baseball team. George Bush owned a professional baseball team. On a good weekend, I manage to get over to the Spirit Haus and buy myself a six-pack. It is widely reported that a good night at Yale for Bush required a twelve-pack and an eight-ball. I am a member of a labor union; Bush is a member of the Order of Skull and Bones.

Quite clearly, there are a few differences between an average member of the media and an average member of government. So, draw your own conclusions, people – do you feel a closer connection to this journalist and his wacky liberal colleagues, or to Bush and his fellow politicians, a group who enjoy playing "Risk," the classic board game of global domination, but using real people?

If you associate with me, then I would hope that you would get out there and begin to challenge the liberal media myth. It is crucial that the media be an independent source of analysis, rather than a group that is forced to kowtow to politicians due to pressure exerted by a series of lies. In labeling the media "liberal," the conservative faction is succeeding in forcing them to go to preposterous lengths to prove otherwise, which usually means they come down on the more conservative side of things.

As such, they cannot report in an independent and unbiased manner. This leads to the dissolution of an informed citizenry, which is a crucial component for true democracy. Without it, democracy is transformed into an oligarchy, and unless you own a baseball team or belong to a secret elitist organization, you do not get to participate, and unlike Colbert's shtick, that's no laughing matter.

Chris Eckel is a Collegian columnist



LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ACCESS TO PLAN B: A PUBLIC HEALTH PERSPECTIVE

A recent Daily Collegian article (Catholics debate use of morning-after pill, Thursday December 7, 2006) fails to take into account the public health impact of the "morning after pill."

Emergency contraceptive pills (ECPs or "morning after" pills), are a concentrated dose of ordinary birth-control pills that reduce a woman's chance of becoming pregnant by up to 89 percent when taken within five days (120 hours) of unprotected sex. ECPs do not cause abortion; rather they prevent pregnancy by inhibiting ovulation, fertilization or implantation before a pregnancy occurs.

ECPs are an important tool in the efforts to reduce unintended pregnancy and the need for abortion. ECPs may be used when other contraceptive methods fail or are not used, including when women are sexually assaulted.

Reducing unintended pregnancies benefits women's and children's health, as unintended pregnancy has serious health consequences for both the mother and child. For example, children of unplanned pregnancies are at an increased risk for low birth weight, dying before reaching their first birthday, being abused and receiving insufficient resources to ensure healthy development. Women facing unplanned pregnancies are less likely to receive prenatal care and have a higher risk of adverse maternal and fetal outcomes.

Although ECP methods are not a substitute for ongoing contraceptive use and do not protect against the transmission of sexually transmitted diseases, they can reduce unintended pregnancy and the need for abortion – if women know the medication is available, how it works, have access to it and can take it within the appropriate time frame. In fact, Planned Parenthood Federation of America estimates that ECP use was responsible for a 43 percent reduction in the number of abortions performed between 1994 and 2000.

According to a June 23, 2006 Wall Street Journal Online/Harris Interactive Health-Care Poll of a diverse cross section of 2,689 adults, 81 percent of Americans (including 81 percent of Catholics and 75 percent of born-again Christians) say providing people with access to birth control is a good way to reduce the need for abortion. Sixty-two percent of Americans oppose allowing pharmacists to refuse to fill women's prescriptions for birth control. Fifty-eight percent of Americans (including a majority of Catholics) think the "morning-after" pill should be available in all pharmacies.

ECPs have been available for more than 25 years and are safe, effective and simple to use. ECPs are not associated with any serious or harmful side effects. For women 18 and older, ECPs are available over the counter at local pharmacies and at Planned Parenthood clinics (1-800-230-PLAN). Women under 18 can obtain ECPs by prescription. In addition, ECPs are available at UMass University Health Services through urgent care and at the UHS pharmacy.

Additional information on emergency contraception can be found the UHS website (http://www.umass.edu/uhs/health/topicsatoz/ec/) and through Planned Parenthood (www.plannedparenthood.org).

Center for Research and Education in Women's Health
Christine Rogers, PhD, Member
Elizabeth Bertone-Johnson, ScD, Asst. Director
Lisa Chasan-Taber, ScD, Director

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

O.A.R. opens up on tour

A conversation with guitarist Richard On

BY CORY BRINE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The band O.A.R. (Of A Revolution) started as a four person high school band in Rockville, Md. Upon graduation, the band members all moved on to Ohio State University where they met a fifth band member, a saxophone player, who provided the band with a very unique sound. Since 2000, the band has played 125-150 shows a year all over the country. O.A.R. came to Amherst in November 2005 on their fall tour. They started their winter tour in 2006 with a sold out show at Madison Square Garden featuring Matisyahu. This winter, the band will be playing eight shows, including one at the Madison Square Garden.

UMass student Cory Brine talks with O.A.R. (Of A Revolution) guitarist Richard On weeks before their sold out concert at Madison Square Garden.

CORY BRINE: You, Marc, Chris and Benj all played together for years throughout your childhood, and after graduating high school you all went to Ohio State where you met Jerry. Did you guys decide to go to college together based on the hope that the band would stay together, or did you all just end up there?

RICHARD ON: Benj was a year younger than the rest of us. I went to school around Rockville when we grew up and Marc and Chris went to Ohio State first and they had the vision first to go to one of the biggest schools in the country and keep the band going there. But I wasn't sure what I wanted to do yet and Benj was still back in high school. Marc and Chris kept calling me and trying to get me up to Ohio State to get the band back together; so, after a semester I transferred and then we were just waiting on Benj, and he got in. So, I guess we were planning on staying together in the long run, but it just worked out that we were all going to be there at the same time.

CB: Anyone can clearly see that your sound has changed dramatically over the years. For the past year and a half you have been playing with Michael Paris on the keys. What went into the decision of adding a sixth band member to play keys, and do you see O.A.R. in the future with someone on the keyboard?

RO: We played with guest keyboard members here and there, and I think one of the first keyboard players that we played with was Gabe Dixon and he came out on the road with us and the more and more he played with us, we realized that there was a hole that the keyboards filled. Gabe was just doing his own thing, but we just realized that we needed to fill this hole that was missing in our music. So, we had auditions from people who came highly recommended and Michael Paris was one of those people and it turned out great.

Of a Revolution started as a band of four playing together in high school, but as their sound has evolved so has their membership. They added a fifth member in college and a sixth in the more recent past.

CB: People often have a hard time narrowing down a genre for your band. Some people call your style "frat rock" or alternative and even a bit reggae. How would you describe your music genre?

RO: There was a term that was given to us in an article in our high school newspaper back in 1996 and it was a genre that he made up that really fit what we did, and he called it "Island Vibe-Roots Rock" and it really covered all bases of what our band did. We weren't playing reggae music and don't plan on playing reggae music, but we have our own style and spin on reggae sound that has some sort of an island vibe that is really up beat that you can really bob your head to and dance to. But at the same time, who doesn't like to rock? And there is also a folk aspect as far as the story telling aspect that Marc does in his lyrics. And to this day, this imaginary genre still kind of fits exactly what we've been doing.

CB: In the past, you guys have covered just about everything from Bob Marley to the Allman Brothers to Led Zeppelin. Talking to a lot of fans and friends, a lot of people would like to see you cover Dave Matthews Band in concert. I know you guys have a history with Dave and his band, but is there a reason why you have never covered them in concert?

RO: We have a 10 year rule. We try to really play classics. Not that Dave Matthews isn't great, he's talented and his songs are

See O.A.R. on page 7

When the time comes to break up

BY JASMINE MONTEIRO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The only thing harder than getting into a relationship is getting out of one. It's easy for us to make reasons and excuses for why we're with somebody. This is why it's getting equally difficult for us to realize that those reasons and excuses aren't really substantial, especially when it's still a relatively new relationship. If you find yourself defending your relationship more often than not, you might want to ask yourself, "why?" Who are you really trying to convince?

It's our natural instinct to not want to hurt someone we care about. This is why many people will avoid new relationship problems in hopes that they will subside. However, the fact of the matter is, the more you avoid a problem, the more it develops into something worse. To ensure that this doesn't happen to your relationship, make sure to tackle these problems and deal with them accordingly.

Some issues are less serious than others but in order to have a successful relationship you should be aware of the effects these issues have on you as an individual. These are examples of some seemingly minor issues that may have a major impact on the outcome of your relationship.

Someone who is younger or older than you – when you're in college you're at a point in life where age can be a significant factor. While it may not be a legal problem anymore, it may be a personal one. Someone younger than you may have less experience than you'd prefer, not everyone likes to be a teacher, and someone older than you may feel that way about you. This is why it's important for you to understand each other's romantic past in order to know if this is something you are ready for.

Another common problem is when couples have different moral standards. This doesn't mean that you have to like the same things as someone; but you should know what you are or are not willing to tolerate. If you're someone who likes to go out and party all the time and your partner is against it, you could have a problem. It's possible to make some adjustments, but if you're not willing to change your ways and they're not willing to change their opinions, you could end up hitting a wall.

Sexual satisfaction – no one likes to believe that sex can play such a prominent role in a relationship, but we all have to accept the fact that it does. If you're not on the same page with your partner sexually, it may eventually put a burden on your relationship. If your partner wants to wait before getting physical and you do not, why waste their time and yours? If you're ready to do things that they're not, you need to ask

See BREAKING UP on page 7

New truck game not very exciting

BY ALEX SILBER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

"Excite Truck" is an exciting first foray into the racing genre on the revolutionary Nintendo Wii featuring intense action while battling your opponents through the forests and mountains at exhilarating speeds. Well, at least it is for the first fifteen or so minutes, before you figure out that Excite Truck is more of a concept car than production model.

With the Nintendo Wii's revolutionary new controller, what was once a laughable concept seen in poorly directed movies (most kids playing games in the movies moved the controllers like it made a difference) can now become a reality. To drive the various unlockable vehicles in Excite Truck you hold the wiimote on its side, using the buttons for acceleration and brake, and steer by tilting the controller to the left or right. Players can now virtually drive a vehicle and actually feel like they are doing so, without needing to buy an expensive steering wheel accessory.

That being said, Excite Truck doesn't take the physics of driving seriously, being more of an unrealistic arcade racer than a driving simulator. However, the game is still the first racing title to be released on the Wii and its failures are clearly visible. While driving with the wiimote may be fun for a while, it can become really aggravating to continuously crash into trees, rocks or miss jumps altogether because of poor driving control.

This isn't necessarily a good thing when the key element of the level progression of Excite Truck revolves around driving with style — you get points for tricky driving like dodging trees and literally jumping through various hoops in the levels. Not being able to accurately steer the vehicles is a very big letdown and if Nintendo wants the Wii to be an everyman system, it should address the difficulty of control in its games. While the steering takes getting used to, after a few attempts at the first couple of tracks you should be able to get the hang of it and have a fairly easy driving experience.

The various settings in Excite Truck leaves you feeling like you really have been on an exciting off-road adventure, bringing you from Mexico to Fiji, from Canada to Scotland, and China to Finland as well as a few other locales. The developers really didn't disappoint when it came to bringing you all over the world for racing, so you feel that you're actually somewhere new when you race.

The levels themselves are fairly simple which is good, because after a few laps or so, the player to feels confident to try out some tricks like drifting or driving between the trees, in order to get points and unlock other events and cars. It does begin to feel a bit systematic after you've been to Mexico a few times, and done a few jumps, but it is a good variety.

The graphics in Excite Truck aren't the greatest In the world, but they aren't that bad either – at least initially. The lighting, models and weather effects are all pretty good when comparing with last generation game graphics, but the damage modeling is like a Ford Pinto – terrible. When you hit a tree or a rock, which is quite often, the car looks like a Tonka truck when it hits a pillow in mIdair. It seems the developers tried to implement some effects in for the crashes, but it really isn't enough given that the fantastic Burnout games featured better crash effects (and the first game in that series came out in 2002.)

The biggest problem with this game is the soundtrack. The soundtrack can be best described as a synthesizer redux of a bad southern rock band deep fried in awful. There really isn't that much else to say about it. If you like southern rock no matter what, this may be for you but the rest of us may have to settle

See TRUCK on page 7

Iñárritu's latest film almost up to snuff

BY KATE BAUER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Babel director Alejandro González Iñárritu's multi-country-spanning tale stars Brad Pitt as Richard, an American on vacation with his wife Susan (Cate Blanchett) in Morocco. Richard and Susan have escaped from their comfortable lifestyle in sunny California to bury their depressed thoughts and feelings in Morocco's bleak and empty deserts, and try to overcome their sorrows at having lost one of their children.

Amelia (Adriana Barazza), a Mexican immigrant working as a nanny in San Diego, spends her days taking care of Richard and Susan's two remaining children. Unable to find someone to watch the children while she attends her son's wedding in Mexico, Amelia decides to bring the children along with her and crosses the border into Mexico.

Simultaneously, the story of Chieko (Rinko Kikuchi), a deaf and sexually-charged teenage girl growing up in a thriving metropolis of Japan, still reels from her mother's death and her inability to communicate with her father (Koji Yakusho).

The fourth story in the film surrounds two young Shepard boys in a Moroccan desert who set off a series of unfortunate events while target shooting with a rifle trying to scare off coyotes. One day while practicing atop a mountain, the boys pick out a bus in the distance, trying to see how far the rifle can shoot. As it turns out, their aim is far too good.

Director Iñárritu and writer Guillermo Arriaga have now completed a three-part series of films that, along with Babel, include Amores Perros and 21 Grams. Focusing on the human emotion complex, Iñárritu and Arriaga's work has consisted of including a mix of cross-cultural and ethnical societies to bring connection and understanding that, while we may share different skin colors or lifestyles, we also share the same emotions especially pain.

While on a bus tour through a Moroccan dessert, Susan is unexpectedly shot by an unknown assailant, and Richard is forced to bring Susan to a remote village to seek help. The incident creates worldwide attention as efforts are made to catch the believed-to-be-terrorists. As the stories of Richard and Susan and the other characters are unraveled, Cinematographer Rodrigo Prieto's kaleidoscopic images transcend a connection between the characters, both small and big, until we see that all of these people share the same emotional complexity: pain. Whether left alone and lost in a noisy and crowded dance hall or frightened and scared in some foreign and empty land, all of these characters suffer in some way. So let's just say it's not a happy movie.

And isn't it a pretty one, either. Iñárritu's style is not to beautify what you are seeing, but to show you a reality. Morocco is not a rich land full of green mountains or streaming rivers, but is a rather dank and dirty place. The empty lands, the buildings, even people's clothes are filthy and woebegone. Mexico too, is lined with dusty streets and even dustier cars.

Though Japan can be seen as more colorful and artistic to watch than Mexico or Morocco, it serves only as a barrage of

See BABEL on page 7

'Babel' stars an international cast including Cate Blanchett of Australia, Rinko Kikuchi of Japan, and Gael García Bernal of Mexico.

Fat–free sound on new album

O.A.R. from page 6

great, but it is basically that we try to play stuff that has really stood the test of time. And his songs are doing just that, but we think that in the long run that is just how we judge it.

CB: You guys make it possible to download old versions of your songs and listen to how they have changed over the years. Can you describe the process that the band goes through when changing a song from the first version to the final version that is released on a record?

RO: I guess I'll just look at the last record that we did, "Stories of a Stranger," we wanted to make a record that didn't have any fat on it. When making it, we questioned every measure of each song because we wanted to get right to the point and make the song as good as it can be. Granted the last tune on the CD, "52-50," is a song that we just couldn't chop that up because it is so fun to play and all of those parts that really help the song as a whole. A lot of these songs come from jams and come from messing around on stage because we always tape our sound checks. Even if you listen to some of the early versions of "Love and Memories," you may not be able to tell that it is the actual song. But the overall process is a matter of figuring out what a song needs and what a song doesn't need. When you're jamming at the time, it is sort of spontaneous, but when you are recording something that needs to withstand the test of time that people can hear over and over again you have to figure out what is best for the song.

CB: If you could perform a song in concert with anyone, who would it be?

RO: Wow, I would love to play "Sunday Bloody Sunday" with U2. That would be pretty amazing.

CB: Does the band prefer to perform in small venues (such as acoustic shows where you can talk to your audience directly), medium size shows like you played in Amherst in 2005, or much larger ones like Madison Square Garden that is coming up in a few weeks?

RO: It really depends on the venue. Back in the early days we would play so many acoustic shows because it was before Benj had even graduated to school. We told everybody that we have this band and we had these CDs but no one believed us because they never saw us play live. So we were like, okay we have to do something, so we started playing acoustically. When Benj finally got into school, we put everything together and started playing the whole thing. But there are pros and cons about all of the shows. While playing at MSG is an amazing experience in itself, you kind of lose the intimate feeling that you have in a smaller setting. But at the same time, you can really cater to a larger group of people. On the other hand, when you play a small acoustic show, you can't get as many people in but there is definitely the intimacy part of the show. So there are really pros and cons to each venue and show.

The band O.A.R. has recently added a sixth member, keyboardist Michael Paris, to fill out their sound.

Richard On has been playing guitar for Of A Revolution since high school. The band's latest album was "Stories of a Stranger" last year.

CB: As a band in college, did you guys lead the typical college life, or did you spend most of your weekend nights promoting the band and having concerts?

RO: It was kind of a combination of all of that. We were students full time and that was obviously a priority, but on top of that we were touring. We would schedule our classes every semester so that we wouldn't have classes on Fridays. So after classes on Thursdays, we would hit the road and have concerts in the region and Midwest area. So we would play a show Thursday night, play a show Friday night, as well as Saturday night and Sunday night and somehow make it to class on Monday. So basically, we would be on tour full time as well as go to class full time. And I guess we would party pretty hard full time, too. Sure it was hard to balance everything, but somehow we got it done.

CB: You guys play an average of 125-150 concerts a year. Don't you ever get tired of being on the road and does Marc's voice ever act up after playing shows four nights in a row?

RO: Marc has really got his voice down to a science and he knows the exercises and warm-ups that he has to do before each show. But compared to how many shows we used to play, this is nothing. We used to play about 250 shows a year and would be out on the road for about two months straight with no days off and no days to go home. And back then we did put in our time and we could do that because we were young, but now a lot of the guys have families and we love being home. So, 125 shows in a year? It's nothing!

CB: The band has eight shows scheduled before playing at Madison Square Garden. Is there a reason you didn't make MSG your first show on the winter tour? Do you plan on using these shows to warm up and try new things before the big night?

RO: That's exactly it. It's not that the shows before the Garden are going to suffer, but if you want to see a band and see them play well, you shouldn't watch them at the beginning of the tour. With all of the holiday stuff in December, it was hard to get everyone together to rehearse, but these shows are definitely warm-ups leading up to MSG to get all of the kinks out and put on a great show on the 27th.

CB: Now that your first show of the new tour is only weeks away, have you guys gotten together yet to begin practicing again and try ing out some new songs?

RO: In the time that we've had off, we have spent a lot of it writing and demoing some new stuff. We are making a record sometime in the near future and we are just putting down ideas and seeing where we are at as far as new songs. This Saturday is when we start our pre-production and that will go for about five days until the tour starts.

CB: Do you anticipate your next album to be a live album from an upcoming concert or a studio album?

RO: As far as live albums we are not sure, but we are definitely making a studio record this year.

CB: O.A.R. fans can relate to a lot of your songs because they are about life and situations that we all go through. I know you guys sometimes get emotional when you play "About Mr. Brown" and "Patient\," for your friend Michael, are these the most meaningful songs for you?

RO: A lot of times we get song requests through e-mails and letters based on terrible situations where friends have died from drunk driving accidents or other terrible events. As those come in, certain songs have become meaningful in that people are requesting these songs as a way of honoring their friends. When we play one of these songs as a request for one of their friends and you look at the crowd you automatically know who was friends with the person and you see the look in their eyes and that becomes really meaningful for all of us. The songs that we have dedicated to Michael are more of a positive remembrance for him. It is meaningful in the sense that we are playing it for him.

CB: Last September, you guys played in Central Park for the Save Darfur benefit concert. Dispatch just announced a comeback concert at Madison Square Garden on July 14 where all proceeds from the event would go to fighting disease, famine and social injustice in Zimbabwe. Are you guys Dispatch fans and would you join them for this worthy cause if they asked you to?

RO: I really respect those guys and they were in the trenches like we were back in the day and we did do a couple of shows with them. Unfortunately they broke up. They were a great band with great songs, but I am sure that we would be open to do anything with them, but it is just a matter of scheduling as we kind of have our summer planned. But, I wish them the best and they're awesome.

CB: Had you not succeeded as a band, what would be your dream job?

RO: I really don't know what I would be doing had we not had success. I left school early for the band – well three of us did as Marc and Chris graduated. But I really have no idea what I would be doing. I think I would probably try to start another band.

CB: Do you have any advice for college bands and how to reach success?

RO: I think it is really important for a band not to shoot for the record deal. I think it is important for a band to build a touring fan base. And I think the longevity of a band is directly related to how big their touring fan base is. If you look at any band that has really lasted a long time like U2 or Pearl Jam or the Chili Peppers, their touring fan base is what keeps them going. The record business is so shaky and you really do not know what is going to happen. Thank God we have touring to fall back on. So, if you build a fan base, it will all come along with it.

CB: Is this what deterred the band from joining a record label for so long?

RO: Everyone dreams of having a record deal and that is definitely something that we were considering. But we recorded for about 2 years by 5 different labels before we decided to sign. But we held off because we saw that we were making progress doing it ourselves. We wanted to see how far we could take it before hitting the plateau. It got to the point where we took it very far, but there were opportunities that we wanted that were very hard to get for an independent band. Touring wise, I think we took it further than a lot of bands that take touring support from their record label. So that really was never an issue for us. But I think we realized after the fact that touring and building that foundation was very important for us because you look back and see a lot of bands that fell apart after making one hit on the radio and then they are gone because their next record sucks and they cannot support themselves because they do not have a touring fan base.

Time to break up

BREAKING UP from page 6

yourself if you're willing to respect those decisions for as long as you need to, not until you don't feel like it anymore.

There are many different reasons why we may not be compatible with somebody. And when you're in a new relationship it's difficult to decide whether or not it's worth working out, or letting go. Just be aware of the situations you're dealing with and be honest with yourself as well as your significant other. They may not seem like major problems but they could potentially be if you give them room to blossom. If you find yourself continuously making excuses for your relationship, it may be time to break it off. There's no need to compromise your happiness.

Truck doesn't deliver

"Excite Truck" is an interesting first try for the new Nintendo game system Wii even it it falls a bit flat.

TRUCK from page 6

for turning the music off. The music isn't the only issue in the sound department, however, as the sound effects for the vehicles seem muddled and weak. It is almost as if the developers recorded the sounds of several different remote control cars and amplified the sound up to 11. It just sounds weak, when it should be loud and fierce. It's Excite Truck, not Excite Trike.

Overall Excite Truck is a decent first try at a racing game using the capabilities of the Nintendo Wii. If you're looking for a game that shows off what the system can do gameplay wise this is it. You may not have the replay ability of Gran Tourismo, but Excite Truck can keep you going for a while assuming you like to unlock every vehicle and earn top points in each race.

Film poses questions

BABEL from page 6

advertisement boards and bright lights. And if Iñárritu were to change the reality that is his backdrop for this story, then he would do nothing more than diminish its effectiveness.

Young Chieko just wants to be loved and feel a connection to someone. It is through a stranger that she tries to change that. Susan and Richard want some kind of redemption, and Susan's injury helps to bring them closer together. Amelia struggles to juggle both her old family in Mexico and the new one she has created in America. The two young Moroccan boys fight and argue just as brothers do, but deep down do not realize the importance of a brotherhood and therefore of a family until it is too late.

The film's title, Babel, refers to a passage in the Bible of a tower of the same name constructed by God. As Pitt in an interview stated, the tower is "where God gave everyone different tongues the frustration of communication and the failure where people couldn't talk to each other." Chieko and the young Moroccan boys struggle to communicate within their own worlds, while Amelia, Richard and Susan struggle to communicate within worlds different from their own.

BABEL

DIRECTED BY ALEJANDRO GONZÁLEZ IÑÁRRITU

B+

Perhaps Iñárritu is trying to translate to the audience through this film that today there is a lack of connection in this world. With the state that the world is in now, maybe he is trying to say that what we need more than ever is connection, not disconnection.

However you may translate Babel, it stands out as a dark and well-crafted piece that should cause any audience member to question why we have certain feelings and outlooks on those different from ourselves.

actual e-mail
dear Uber-BOT:
A true dream miracle. In a world of speed and chaos, UBER-BOT brings some very real peace. Thanks for your efforts, which save me time, and money.
-Rhett at UCLA
bigwords.com

5 DAYS ONLY!
Tuesday, January 30 through Saturday, February 3
INDOOR SIDEWALK SALE
Winter Clearance
upto 80% off
Dansko, Eileen Fisher, Earth, Free People, Keen, Comfy, Steve Madden, Willow, Born, Gerties, Rieker, Isda & Co., Converse Huge markdowns! Lots of fun! Hurry in!
ZANNA
www.zanna.com

UM faces tough road

M. BASKETBALL from page 12

were the envy of every Atlantic 10 team. This year, there probably is going to be one spot for the A-10 in the NCAA Tournament, so whoever wins the conference tournament is in the money.

The Musketeers have the best shot at it, and the Minutemen will have to go through them if they want to make the NCAA Tournament.

TOUGH ROAD AHEAD

With a quick look at UMass' schedule, you would think that the toughest stretch is in the rearview mirror. But nothing is for sure when you get into the A-10's conference schedule, especially when a team has to go on the road.

UMass' two conference losses came at Rhode Island and at Xavier. The Xavier loss was a little more expected, but no one anticipated URI's emergence at the top of the conference.

So, having already played George Washington, Xavier and Rhode Island once, the Minutemen have already been through a tough conference schedule. Now, URI comes to Amherst on Feb. 8 and the Minutemen then travel to Temple, Fordham and Dayton for a three-game road trip.

Dayton is always a tough place to play simply because of the home crowd, which packs the home court with 12,422 fans per game – 23rd in the nation last season for average attendance.

Fordham and Temple, while not the cream of the crop in the conference this season, will be tough tests on the road. Saint Louis and center Ian Vouyoukas are still on the schedule and will give UMass fits at the Mullins Center on Feb. 24 . . . UMass equaled its win total from last season on Jan. 13 with a win over Temple, and passed that mark just over a week later with a win against Duquesne on Jan. 21 . . .

Sophomore guard Chris Lowe played 26 minutes in the Charlotte game on Sunday, while freshman guard Tiki Mayben played just 14. Mayben began the season in the starting lineup and split time with Lowe for the first leg of the season . . . Lasme took just four shots against Charlotte Sunday and made all four . . . freshman guard Ricky Harris shot five 3-pointers against Charlotte and made just one . . . Charlotte's E.J. Drayton, Leemire Goldwire and De'Angelo Alexander all played over 32 minutes against the Minutemen.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian Editor. He can be reached at rgreenfi@student.umass.edu.

Freshman point guard Tiki Mayben was splitting time with Chris Lowe, but only played 14 minutes in Sunday's game against Charlotte. He leads the Minutemen in assists with 92 on the year.

Senior forward Kevin Jarman could not convert on a penalty shot in the third period of Saturday night's 3-3 tie to No. 8 Boston University. He has 13 points on seven goals and six assists.

Mass Attack returns to Top 20

HOCKEY from page 12

goal against Boston University on Saturday night is a good example of this. The Mass Attack passed the puck around until Chris Capraro saw a seam to feed Quirk for the one-time goal.

Speaking of Capraro, he finds himself near the top of the league charts in terms of power-play points and goals. He's tied for fifth in the conference with 10 points on three goals and seven assists. The three scores put him at 10th with a host of other players – including teammates Kevin Jarman and Matheson.

BACK IN THE SADDLE AGAIN

The Minutemen put themselves back in the USCHO.com/CSTV Top 20 this week. Their three out of a possible four conference points earned last weekend was good enough to place them at No. 19.

UMass is the only team in the Top 20 this week to have been unranked last week. The Minutemen currently sit in fifth place – one point above No. 9 Maine in the conference standings.

FAMILY FEUD

There's always a heated battle when sister institutions UMass and UMass Lowell meet on the ice. Take last season's Feb. 4 meeting between the two at Tsongas Arena in Lowell. A bench clearing brawl took place in front of the Minutemen's net when UMass goalie Gabe Winer shoved UML's Elias Godoy. The netminder felt the River Hawk got too close.

When the referees sorted everything out there were a total of 128 penalty minutes assessed for the fight on 21 penalties. Godoy and Winer were handed game disqualifications, making them ineligible for their teams' next contest.

Although nothing that drastic occurred in Lowell on Friday, play was still heated between the teams.

"Pretty intense" was the phrase Cahoon used to describe the rivalry. "[UML head coach] Blaise [MacDonald] is a competitive guy and he gets his team well prepared for games like this. Both teams don't want to concede anything. We're both trying to climb up ladder and it makes it all the more difficult."

LIGHTING THE LAMP

Five Minutemen have already either tied or surpassed their career-high in goals this season. They are: Alex Berry (four), Jarman (seven), Matheson (11) and Cory Quirk (10).

"We have some pretty good balance this year, scoring-wise," Cahoon said after UMass' 3-3 tie with BU on Saturday. "Alex is starting to chip in with goals. Will Ortiz has a few goals. Mark Matheson is probably the biggest surprise because he's been converted from a defenseman to a forward."

Matheson's numbers have seen the biggest spike this season. He set his previous career high of three last year. Right now his 11 tallies lead the Minutemen.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian Sports Editor. He can be reached at jpelland a student.umass.edu

Thoughts from winter break

From Celtics to Woods, this sportswriter lets it all out

A lot of weird stuff happened in sports over the winter break. Like Terrell Owens comparing Bill Parcells to his grandmother. So here are some observations from the ridiculously long vacation (that probably screwed a lot of kids out of summer internships) when I was trying not to think about school:

- First and foremost, let me get this off of my chest. I am a tremendous fan of basketball in the form it was meant to be played. I coach basketball at the high school level and I have a great appreciation for those who play it the right way. The Boston Celtics do not play it the right way. They have lost 11 in a row and don't seem to care one bit. After you've lost that fifth or sixth in a row, doesn't the need to preserve your dignity kick in and get you a W? Not with this team I guess. They are coasting along without a care in the world. You know why? Guaranteed contracts. But that's another conversation altogether. Here's the point: The Boston Celtics are one of the worst franchises in modern sports. From Wyc Grousbeck – the ridiculous, immature, meddling owner – all the way down to the players, who have the audacity to say that they are improving after having lost 11 straight games, the Celtics are a hollow shell of what they once were. Now they're a traveling humiliation, taking the Boston jerseys all around the country for other teams to stomp on. And all of this game presentation stuff is getting out of control. Do you like those dancers? If you do, go to a ballet. It seems like the one thing that's being lost out there is the quality of the actual game, but forget about that. It's not important, right?
- Ramirez, Ortiz, Helton . . . that would've been fun.
- Can someone just take a bat and take Barry Bonds' leg out or something? It would be a travesty to the sporting world if he broke the home run record. Just take out his knee before the season starts. Go ahead.
- Roger Federer and Tiger Woods are pretty good, huh? Woods just won his seventh straight PGA Tour event. He is the only golfer in history to judge his performance in tournaments by wins and losses. Most put their worth on their placement in the field. Not Woods. To him, if you're not first, you're last the words of another wise man.
- Hockey took one more step towards being wiped off the face of the planet last week. The hockey All-Star game drew worse ratings than Top Chef and the Andy Griffith Show, which aired at the same time. I'd say it's time that hockey went back to Canada. Stop taking up air time and go home.
- The Sox finally signed J.D. Drew for $70 million over five years. Either Theo knows something that we don't or he's off his rocker. My bet is on the latter.
- Trot Nixon is no longer a Red Sox. Trot was everything you wanted in a ballplayer and did everything that was asked of him – except hit left handed pitching. I hope the Indians are wise enough to sit him down against lefties. If so, he'll be around .300 barring injury. If not, watch out Mendoza line.
- The Colts and the Bears are in the Super Bowl, but who cares? I think everyone around here was done with football when Brady threw it to the other team to end the season. I still think the Pats did a great job of getting that far. Alexander, Mickens, Baker . . . yeah, those guys were in their secondary with the game on the line. They did well to get to the AFC Championship. Now I hope Peyton Manning loses so we can bury all of this talk about a comparison to Brady. They aren't in the same league, folks. But I'm preaching to the converted here.
- Tony Dungy is coaching in the Super Bowl and I'm happy for him, as I'm sure most of you are. He's the consummate professional from all accounts and no one should have to endure what he went through with the death of his son last season. As much as I don't want Manning to have his day in the sun, my hope is that Dungy does well and overrides everything. Here's to a victory for the Colts and for the Dungy family.
- And I could write a whole column (and probably will at some point) about how the NBA is an embarrassment to basketball and to professional sports. But I'll just settle for this: cut the teams down from 30 to 20 to undo the dilution of the talent pool, and get rid of guaranteed contracts. By taking away the only thing that these guys value – money – you'll give them something to play for, because winning isn't much of a motivator. Right now, you could put a bunch of brooms out there and they would play better defense.
- Will UMass men's basketball make the NCAA Tournament? It's as big a question mark as it was a month ago.

Rob Greenfield is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at managingeditor a dailycollegian.com

Save $$ on Textbooks at the Jeffery Amherst College Store

Check out our website at www. jeffbooks.com to order books online!

All These Courses and More at Discounted Prices:

Accounting	221	Intro to Financial Accounting	HI-MGT	240	Hotel Operations
Accounting	311	Business Appl of Comp	HI-MGT	250-1,2	Food Service Management
Animal Sci	103	Intro to Animal Management	HI-MGT	260-1	Hospitality Pers Management
Anthropology	102-A	Archeology & Prehistory	HI-MGT	330-1	Hospitality & Tourism Law
Art History	110	Survey: Renaissance-Modern Art	HI-MGT	358-1	Menu & Food Production MGT
Astronomy	100-1,2,3,4	Exploring the Universe	Human Dev	270	Child Development
Astronomy	101-H	Exploring the Universe	Italian	101	Elementary Italian II
Astronomy	105	Weather & our Atmosphere	Italian	376	Intensive Elementary Italian
Astronomy	114	Stars & Galaxies	Kinesiology	100	Intro to Exercise Science
Biochemistry	285	Cellular & Molecular Biology	Kinesiology	101	Human Performance & Nutrition
Biology	101-2	Intro to Biology	Kinesiology	260	Exercise Neuroscience
Biology	102	Intro to Animal Biology	Math	100	Basic Math Skills
Biology	285-1	General Genetics	Math	111	Precalculus Algebra
Biology	285	Cellular & Molecular Biology	Math	132	Analytic Geometry
Biology	78	Intro to Ecology	Math	131	Alg Analytic Geometry Trig
CH		Intro to CH	Math	113	Math for Elem. School Teachers
CH	270	CH Systems Analysis	Math	127	Calc. Life Soc Sci. I
Chemistry	12	General Chemistry II	Math	128	Applied Calculus
Chemistry	241	Int Descr Inorg Chemistry	MGT	260	Introduction to Law
Chemistry	381	Organic Chemistry	Microbiology	101	Biology of Cancer and Aids
Chemistry	331	Organic Chemistry	Microbiology	310	General Microbiology
Chemistry	262	Organic Chemistry (Non Majors)	Microbiology	311	Microbial Genetics
Chemistry	266	Organic Chemistry (Chem Majors)	Nutrition	270	Understanding Nutrition
Comp Sci	187	Programming with Data Structures	Philosophy	100	Intro to Philosophy
Comp Sci	311	Intro to Algorithms	Philosophy	110	Intro to Logic
Comp Sci	320	Intro to Software Engineering	Physics	100	Conceptual Physics
Comm	108	Intro to Interpersonal Comm	Physics	114	Theory of Sound
Comm Dis	105	Intro to Speech Science	Physics	115	Physics of Music
Comm Dis	107	Intro to Audiology	Physics	131 & 132	Intro to Physics I & II
Comm Dis	301	Speech & Language Dev	Physics	151	General Physics I
ECE	324-1	Hardware Org. & Des	Physics	152-1,2	General Physics II
Economics	104-A,B,D,E	Intro to Macroeconomics	Political Sci	101-A	American Politics
Economics	204-A,B	Interm. Macroeconomics	Political Sci	111-A	Comparative Politics
Education	170	Intro to Special Education	Political Sci	121-A	World Politics
Eng. & Prog	112	College Writing	Psychology	100-1,2,3	Intro. to Psychology
FOMGT	301	Corporate Finance	Psychology	241-1	Methods of Inquiry in Psych.
FOMGT	304	Info Tech Finance	Psychology	305-1	Educational Psychology
FOMGT	370	Investments	Psychology	320	Learn & Think
French	230	Intermediate French	Psychology	330	Phys. Psychology
Geo Science	100	Global Environmental Change	Psychology	335	Behavioral Endocrinology
Geo Science	111-1	Earth	Psychology	350	Child Behavior & Dev.
Geo Science	105	Human Landscape	Psychology	360	Adolescent Psychology
Geo Science	141	Intro to Oceanography	Psychology	366	Race, Gender & Class
History	101	Modern China	Spanish	120	Elementary Spanish II
HI-MGT	100-1	Intro to Hospitality & Tourism	Spanish	310	Intermediate Spanish II
HI-MGT	210-1	Food Preparation Management	Spanish	346	Intermediate Intensive

Jeffery Amherst College Store

26 South Prospect Street, Amherst 253-3870

(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop in downtown Amherst)

UMass still in hunt for postseason berth

W. BASKETBALL from page 12

she has posted a 13-of-48 (27 percent) mark.

STRENGTH OF SCHEDULE

In their five conference losses this season, all of them coming inside the last three weeks, the Minutewomen have faced opponents with a .600 combined winning percentage. Throw away their overtime loss to Rhode Island, and that percentage jumps to .694.

The Maroon and White have posted an 0-3 record on the road for conference games, losing to nationally ranked George Washington University, Richmond, and Rhode Island away from Amherst. Its two conference wins have been at the expense of Charlotte and LaSalle, both victories coming at the Mullins Center. Looking ahead, three of the Minutewomen's remaining seven opponents have posted winning records, with the combined lot posting a 61-84 record.

CONFERENCE CONUNDRUM

Resting with the bottom dwellers of the A-10 conference, ahead of only Fordham and Saint Louis, the Minutewomen are still in line to enter tournament play. With 12 of 14 conference teams seeing postseason action, simply attending the show is nothing to hang a hat on. With a 12-10 overall record, the Minutewomen have more wins on the season than five teams above them in the conference standings. Their five conference losses have been by a combined 6.4 points.

NOTES . . .

Junior guard Pam Rosanio received the Dinn Brothers/UMass Athlete of the Week for Jan. 29-Feb. 2. Rosanio put up 19.3 points per game and 7.7 rebounds per game during two wins and a loss in conference play, highlighted by tying her career high of 24 points in a loss against Charlotte on Sunday . . . Marnie Ducko has posted a 22-42 conference record in her tenure at UMass . . . The Minutewomen bench has shot 27 percent (19-71) during conference play this season.

Josh Friedman is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at jmfriedm@student.umass.edu.

Junior guard Pam Rosanio was named the Dinn Bros./UMass Athlete of the Week on Monday. She averaged 19.3 points per game and 7.7 rebounds per game last week as the Minutewomen went 2-1 in that span. Rosanio is third on the team in scoring with 12.3 points per contest.

Poor shooting haunts UM down stretch

'Big three' need more help if Minutewomen want to win

Eli Rosensewaike

If you take Sportscenter anchor Rece Davis' advice, in order to be an effective outside shooter you need to "see the three to be the three." If that's the case, the Massachusetts women's basketball team has gone blind.

Make no mistake about it though, the 2006-07 version of the Minutewomen have been markedly better than their previous counterparts. This team was able to accomplish a great deal in the first month of the season.

UMass won each of its first five contests – and that is even more impressive when you consider that only one of them came at home. You have to search all the way back to 1988-89 to find the last women's basketball team to start the season 5-0.

The Maroon and White seemed to prove that it was no fluke by capturing four of its next six contests. The 9-2 start established by UMass coach Marnie Dacko and her new bunch was a bright surprise, and got its fans excited for a possible trip to March Madness.

Change of plans. The Minutewomen have dropped eight of their last 11 games, including a streak of five straight defeats – bringing their current record to 12-10. While that mark is nothing to scoff at, it can't be considered anything but a disappointment after the start they had to the season.

Making matters worse, the losses that have piled up have come at a bad time – conference play. UMass stands at 2-5 in the Atlantic 10, which ranks them third to last in the 14-team conference. Luckily for the Minutewomen, all but two of the teams will play on in the conference tournament for the chance at an automatic bid into the NCAA Tournament.

Fordham and Saint Louis currently rank below UMass in the conference, but if the Minutewomen aren't careful – and don't start winning some games – one of those teams may creep up.

The Minutewomen won games at the outset this season for a variety of reasons. Perhaps the biggest reason was that UMass simply shot the ball better than their foes. For the season, UMass has shot the ball at a 44.1 percent clip, as opposed to 38.4 percent their opponents have shot.

In conference play, the Maroon and White has struggled mightily from the field – and especially from three-point territory. It's connected on just 18 of its 83 shots from the perimeter (21.7 percent) in conference play – as opposed to the 33 percent it was shooting before A-10 play began.

A pressing issue with the coaching staff has always been getting to the foul line, and their ability to do so was rewarded to begin the season. It's been a different story as of late and it appears as though the players are going away from that game plan. In non-conference play, UMass averaged 21 attempted free throws per game, but that number has shrunk to just 13 in A-10 tilts.

Instead of settling for the jumpers that they're not hitting, they need to be trying to pound the ball inside to get to the charity stripe more frequently. An even better reason to do so, would be to play to the strength of your own team – which is unquestionably the inside play of Kate Mills and Tamara Tatham.

The Minutewomen have essentially been carried all year long by Mills, Tatham and Pam Rosanio, but that can only work for so long. When things were going well, role players such as Kim Benton, Stefanie Gerardot and Whitney McDonald were contributing and doing the little things to help the team win. That's simply not happening anymore.

The "big three" are being asked to do too much. In conference play, the trio has accounted for over 75 percent of the team's entire offense. In seven league games, the team averages 56 points per night – but only 7.5 of those points come from the bench.

The bench is primarily made up of four players in Dacko's rotation – Gerardot, McDonald, Sakera Young and Diatiema Hill – and if they expect to start winning again, their play needs to improve exponentially.

The bench has connected on just 19 of their 71 shot attempts in the seven conference games – good (or bad) for a dismal 26.8 shooting percentage. When they're on the floor, the players off the bench are not only missing their shots, but also standing around and watching the "big three" try to lead the entire team to victory.

When you commit four shot-clock violations in one game – as UMass did against George Washington – something is wrong on the court. The cohesion as a unit is simply not there anymore, and that's a testament to both poor point guard play and a lack of leadership on the floor.

Despite the recent shortcomings, the hustle out on the court is evident. Rosanio can always be found flying around, gathering every loose ball that comes her way – no matter the cost to her body. You can see how much each minute of every game means to Mills, as she does everything she can for UMass to come out on top.

But when you combine the frequent turnovers and sub-par bench play with the poor shooting, you have a recipe for disaster.

This team has a lot of talent, and it still has time to salvage a season that looked very promising. If they can get back to playing fundamental basketball – while also shooting the ball better – UMass will have an opportunity to parlay the regular season into bigger things.

A lot of the remainder of the season rests on the right arm of freshman point guard Kim Benton. She was a catalyst for the Minutewomen to start off the season with her surprisingly strong play. It often appeared that she could do no wrong from beyond the arc, as she knocked down 30 of her 76 three-point shots in non-conference play.

Sharp-shooters are a streaky bunch, but the recent cold-streak by Benton – she's just 5-for-33 from downtown in league play – has everyone surprised. Perhaps re-inserting Young into the starting lineup will take some of the pressure off of Benton, and her shooting percentages will rise.

Dacko refuses to write off the rest of this season, and with good reason. The team has problems, yes, but they can shoot themselves out of some of them.

Eli Rosensweaike is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at erosensw a student.umass.edu

Junior Whitney McDonald scored two points in 13 minutes during the Minutewomen's 67-60 loss to Charlotte on Sunday.

This word is way overpriced.
If you didn't buy your textbooks at Half.com, you paid too much. Half.com has all the textbooks you need like chemistry, astronomy and history for a lot less.
FOR A LIMITED TIME, SAVE AN ADDITIONAL $5 ON PURCHASES OF $50 OR MORE. SIMPLY USE THIS CODE: SAVEBIGNOW
half.com by eBay

Minutewomen take 10th place

TRACK from page 12

team will head out to Kingston, R.I. this Friday to compete in the Rhode Island Mega Meet.

Fifth-year senior James Godhino was one of the Minutemen making some noise in Boston, taking first place in the 500-meter dash, finishing with a time of 1:05.07. Godhino's efforts have earned the Sandwich, Mass. native a spot in the IC4A Indoor Track and Field Championship to be held in early March.

But the track wasn't the only place where the Minutemen were ascending to the top of the leader board. Sophomore Steve Gerome took first place in the long-jump competition (22 feet 7 inches) and the aforementioned Hoagland wasn't too far behind, finishing with a leap of 22 feet, 4.5 inches.

Just six days prior to the men's solid outing in Boston, Hoagland broke the all-time UMass record held in the indoor long jump competition with a jump of 23 feet, 10.25 inches. Ken Adamson had previously held that record with a leap of 23 feet, 8.75 inches. Hoagland's historic leap secures him a spot in the IC4A Indoor Track and Field Championship.

"Erik had an extensive athletic background in soccer, however, he had been away from track for a few years," O'Brien said. "He was athletically 'fit' when he arrived at UMass. I thought he would break the record during the championship phase of this indoor season."

"I was definitely surprised when I had found out that I had broken the record," Hoagland said. "At the meets the scores are announced in meters, so the coach gave me a conversion book to convert my score from meters to feet.

"The coaches train us to peak at the right time, right around the Atlantic 10 Championships, so it's great that I'm doing well right now," Hoagland added.

But Hoagland wasn't satisfied with just breaking a 31-year-old record, punctuating his record-setting day by taking the top seed in both the 55-meter dash (6.55 seconds) and the triple jump (45 feet, 1.75 inches) in New Hampshire.

First place finishes didn't come from just Hoagland though. Sophomore Kevin Ianetta showed that he could make an impact in the hurdles during last year's outdoor season and the impact has already translated well into the indoor season, taking first place in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 8.22 seconds. Godhino placed first in the high jump (6 feet, 3.25 inches), while the 4x400-meter relay also took home a first place finish.

"In general I was impressed by the competitiveness of the entire team," O'Brien said. "We knew the teams we were facing had 2-3 more weeks experience already, however, everyone had great confidence going into the meets."

The women's team made it known in Boston it was a team showing steady improvement, with multiple athletes posting season best times despite the 10th place showing at the event.

Sophomore Dionise Miranda had the best time for the Minutewomen in the 500-meter dash with a time of 26.74 seconds, good for 10th place. Holly Heinricher, who has been a steady contributor for the Minutewomen all season, finished in 11th place with a time of 26.94 seconds.

Seasonal bests were also put out by freshman runners Nicole Serapilia, Jennifer Curtain and Michelle Finley in the 500-meter dash.

The Minutewomen were well-represented in the field events as well, with freshman shot-putter Lisa Wilson having a season-best throw of 35 feet, 3 inches.

Heinricher would also find success in the New Hampshire Tri-Meet, grabbing the top spot in the long jump with a leap of 16 feet, 11.25 inches, and currently holds the long-jump lead for UMass.

A trio of Minutewomen in New Hampshire came close to locking up first place finishes, but would have to settle for runner-up instead, including freshman Molly Chapin in the pole vault, junior Christina Derosa in the 1500-meter run and freshman Stephanie Mattar in the 800-meter.

Kevin Dooley is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at kdooley@student.umass.edu

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior high-jumper Katelyn O'Toole placed 15th at the Atlantic 10 Championship last season, clearing 5 feet, 1 inch.

CHRISTIANNE MEZZA/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Katelyn Orlando will be playing for the second coach in her UMass career. She played under Patty Shea the past two seasons.

Sowry takes over for Shea at Garber any regression in her sophomore season.

FIELD HOCKEY from page 12

Sowry coached Amy Tran on the U.S. National Team, who is considered by many to be the best goalkeeper in the world. Tran won the Goalkeeper of the Tournament Award at the 2006 World Cup of Field Hockey in Madrid.

The backfield also looks good heading into next season. All-Atlantic 10 defender Erin O'Brien spearheads the talented group of defenders. Last season's team struggled in the neutral zone, often leading to quality scoring chances for the opposition. A more mature group of Minutewomen should amend this and improve heading into next season.

Offensively, Sowry hopes to instill the confidence and knowledge into her players that is necessary to become a productive offensive team.

"Taking calculated risks up front and being able to make their own mistakes is something that I think is important," Sowry said. "They need to have the freedom to make smart decisions on the field to make things happen."

Sowry is inheriting a team that possesses talent in all aspects of the game as most of last year's squad is returning – only Gina Sanders, Kwylan Jaggassar and Paula Verma are leaving due to graduation. Freshman Ann DeSanctis has also left the program – transferring to conference rival Richmond.

"[Ann transferring] wasn't really to do with hockey," Sowry said. "It had more to do with the school. It was too big and not really a good fit for her."

The deliberate approach that McCutcheon had to take in interviewing candidates set the program back in recruiting for next season. But if Sowry is truly the best person for the job, then the Minutewomen, as currently comprised, have more than enough talent to compete in 2007 and beyond. She remained optimistic, however.

"For this year, we're a little bit late in the recruiting game," Sowry admitted. "We're looking at a couple USA players to commit and we might have to look internationally for this year. I would like a balance of in-state, out-of-state and international players that fit our team and will be here for the full four years."

Joe Meloni is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Gators remain No. 1 team in nation

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the third straight week, the Florida Gators hold the No. 1 ranking according to the Associated Press Top 25 poll. The Gators received 45 first-place votes while the red-hot Wisconsin Badgers (21-1) are on their heels receiving 24 votes.

The Badgers have won 17 straight games and hold a one-game lead over Ohio State in the Big Ten Conference.

Top 25 Basketball

Player of the Year candidate Alando Tucker leads the team in scoring with 19.6 points and close to five rebounds per game. Tucker has been known to rise to the occasion in big games. Against top 25 teams this season that include Ohio State and Pittsburgh, Tucker is averaging 25.6 points.

On Sunday, Wisconsin defeated Iowa (11-10) 57-46. Tucker led all scorers with 27 points. Badger junior center Brian Butch showed his long range by hitting 3-of-6 from three-point territory. He also controlled the boards on both sides of the ball, grabbing a season-high 14 rebounds.

DEEP FIVE

The Florida Gators continue their quest to make it back-to-back NCAA Championships. The Gators have won 12 straight games with their last win over Auburn (13-9) 91-66.

Florida (19-2) is getting ready for SEC Conference play. This week the Gators will face Vanderbilt (15-6), which it defeated twice last season.

Florida has one of the best starting lineups in college basketball. The other top teams in the country – Ohio State, Wisconsin, North Carolina and UCLA – have big-time players and scorers. The Gators have only one player that averages more than 13 points per game, guard Taurean Green. However, unlike those teams with one high scoring player, the Gators have five players that have scored 20 or more points at least once this season.

On any given night Green, junior forward Joakim Noah, junior forward Al Horford, guard junior Corey Brewer and senior guard Lee Humphrey can score 20 points.

BETTER THAN ADVERTISED

The North Carolina Tar Heels finished off an impressive week on the road. The third ranked Tar Heels went on the road to Wake Forest and took care of business against the struggling Demon Deacons 88-60.

The Tar Heels took their momentum into Arizona and made a bold statement, winning 92-64. The Tar Heels played without sophomore guard Bobby Frasor (he missed his fourth straight game with a foot injury). They were also without their second leading scorer and rebounder in freshman forward Brandan Wright. Still, the Tar Heels managed to have six players score in double figures with guard Ty Lawson leading the way (18 points and eight assists). For Arizona, it was head coach Lute Olson's worst-career home loss.

The No. 19 ranked Wildcats needed this game to solidify their shot at making the tournament. The schedule doesn't get any easier for Arizona; it will host No. 19 Washington State on Thursday and still have No. 9 Oregon, No. 5 UCLA and Stanford down the road.

THE OTHER TEAM IN TEXAS

With all the media coverage about star freshman forward Kevin Durant and Texas Tech coach Bobby Knight becoming the all-time leader in wins, the Texas A&M Aggies are lost in the shuffle. The Aggies have been ranked as high as No. 6 in the nation. The Aggies (17-3) are currently ranked No. 10 in the nation. They are led by senior guard Acie Law, who is averaging 16 points and five rebounds per game.

The Aggies hosted Oklahoma (11-8) who they had not beaten in their last 14 contests. Law scored 12 of his 18 points in the last four minutes of the game to give them the win, 70-61. Senior center Antanas Kavaliauskas helped in the effort with a game-high 20 points and grabbed six rebounds.

KANSAS TAKES CARE OF BIG 12 OPPONENTS

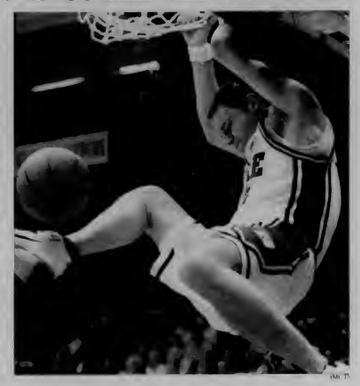
Nebraska (12-8) fans sold out the arena and dressed in all red, hoping for an upset, but most of the fans had good reason to leave at halftime. Kansas used a 27-0 first-half run to defeat Big 12 opponent Nebraska 76-56. The Jayhawks led 43-16 in the first half. Nebraska only managed five field goals in the first 20 minutes.

Sophomore guard Brandon Rush led all scorers with 20 points. Nebraska's leading scorer, junior center Aleks Marie, only scored nine points, well below his 17 points per game average.

ACC ADMITS TO CLOCK MISMANAGEMENT

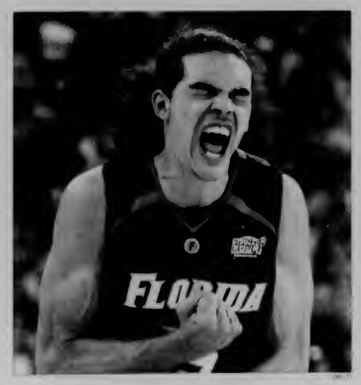
After the controversial game between Duke and Clemson, the Atlantic Coast Conference admits that it made a mistake with the amount of time that should have been on the clock. Duke defeated Clemson 68-66 when the referees placed 4.4 seconds back on the clock. That enabled Duke freshman guard Jon Scheyer to dribble up the court and make a pass inside for a last second layup by sophomore forward David McClure.

Steve Games is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu



JMC '71

Duke sophomore Josh McRoberts is second on the team in scoring with 13 points per game. He also leads in rebounds with 8.1 boards per game.



The No. 1 Florida Gators' Joakim Noah was named to the Wooden Award watch list this week. He is one of only 30 players on the list.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

CANCUN, ACAPULCO, NEGRIL, MOBAY, NASSAU, S. PADRE, FLORIDA, CRUISES, AND MORE!
Join the Party!!!
SPRINGBREAK.COM
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
STS Flight Finder™
Save Hundreds on Spring Break Packages!!!
Search airfares to Mexico and the Caribbean and save up to $300 per person. Best Deals Guaranteed!
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
(39 years of service - and counting)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2007 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Ball Room • Feb. 5 (Mon) • Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 6 (Tues) • Feb. 7 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs Feb 8th at Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU, for a friend: must go, tap the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

CALL FOR DELIVERY (413) 256-4110
PINNOCCHIOS on the go
WRAPS PIZZAS DESSERTS CALZONES SALADS PASTAS APPETIZERS SUBS
CALZONE SPECIAL 2 CALZONES FOR $8.99
CHEESE PIZZA SPECIAL 2 LG. CHEESE PIZZAS FOR $12.99

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

						4
		1	8	5	2
	9			3	5	1
		2	8		3
7	1					2 5
		6		7	9
	4	1	3			9
		9	2	5	1
8

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The more he cast away the more he had."

-John Bunyan

WOMBAT BY NEIL BRYER

WOW, JOHN CHECK OUT ALL THESE DVD S' AND ONLY 5 BUCKS EACH!
"PUSS IN BOOTS"?
A CHRISTOPHER WALKEN CLASSIC
I DEFY YOU TO FIND ONE GOOD MOVIE IN THIS LOT
OHHH. GIGI!
WHY ARE WE STILL FRIENDS?

HARD KNOCKS BY LOUIS COPPELA

HARD KNOCKS
WHAT DID YOU JUST SAY, ANGIE? WHY ARE YOU SAYING I HAVE TO MAKE SOME MONEY??
I HAVE TO BE HONEST HERE. I DON'T THINK YOU'D ASK KNOW FOR RENT MONEY.
YOU HAD NO PROBLEM SHELLING OUT YOUR OWN CASH, SO HE COULD BUY SOME SPECIAL, EXPENSIVE SHAMPOO!
I HAD HEAD LICE.
STOP TELLING US THAT!

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

This book is all about owls
That book full of LIES
This isn't how owls work
No Owls work against hate
All owls, or just ONE owl?
Is he still watching?

THE FAMILY MONSTER BY JOSH SHALEK

A clump of cacti!
They didn't grow that way; they were put there
When the mall was built the contractors dug up the plants on this lot
It's illegal to kill a cactus outright
Bunching them together will kill most of them, after a while Cacti grew thorns. So they'd be left alone

ACROSS
1 Sail to rest
6 Pop, to some
10 Eyes, in poems
14 Dutch cheese
15 Skater's leap
16 Combustible material
17 Bar legally
18 Italian city
19 Hamburg wife
20 Siberian plain
22 Extinct reptile
24 "Love Me ___"
26 Lash marks
27 Radar gun's target
30 Emulate Perry White
32 Tailless amphibian
33 Dairy farm sound
35 Type of kick
39 November winners
40 Handing out gratuities
42 Loco
43 Quit working
45 Musical syllable
46 See socially
47 Speech impediment
49 Footstool
51 Domain
54 Hard hits
56 Pretentious people
58 Exclude
62 Math subj.
63 Filthy percent
65 Separate portion
66 Actor Morales
67 Between ports
68 Gain knowledge
69 Take ten
70 New Jersey live
71 Blundered

DOWN
1 Gets older
2 Found partner?
3 Pipe sealant
4 Took into the family
5 Barked like a peke
6 Tree ilud
7 Rust, for example
8 Craving
9 Arkin of Hollywood
10 Counteracts
11 Rustic
12 Humdinger
13 Disparaging remarks
21 Foes
23 In debt
25 Kind of kick
27 Slammer or clink
28 Johnnycake
29 Sunrise direction
31 Contributed
34 Choose
36 Mosque prayer leader
37 Computer lodger
38 Garden of earthly delights
40 Light haircuts
41 Fe
44 Unlawful 46 File
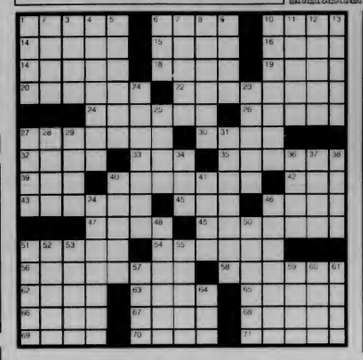
48 Magic word
50 Three-bagger
51 Competitive runner
52 Obliterate
53 Mythical weightlifter
55 Map dot
57 Comparison word
59 Teddy
60 Feed measure
61 Tear apart
64 Notes of scales

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURS: • Rudy Brown
SAT. • hi8tus
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar
East of the River 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate Readers Poll
OCMF & All Credit Cards accepted
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
I know it's hard to be a human, but think of what life is like for a slug.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Jack Dawson lives only in your memory.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Eggplant parmesan is in your future.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Today is definitely the day to skip class.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Make an effort to be less grumpy, JERK!

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
If you use the word "heinous" today, good things are bound to happen.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Do not attempt to cut corners if your depth perception is subpar.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
If a capricorn proposes to you today, say no but offer heavy petting instead.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
It's time to switch shampoos. The oil is starting to build up and it looks funky.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You will have a productive day involving a raucous dance party and string cheese.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Everyone knows that toaster ovens are far superior to regular toasters.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Find a virgo and propose to them. NOW!

Submit your comics at:
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

EMPLOYMENT

Chicago Pizza. Drivers Wanted pay $7.00 per hour plus tips. Weekends required. Cashiers pay $8.50 per hour. Weekends required. Apply in person 150 Fearing St. Amherst 549-6073

Bartending $300/ day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/ hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Become a summer orientation counselor and make a difference in the lives of over 4000 new students. Additional information and applications can be found at www.umass.edu/newstudent/contact/studentjobs/counselor The application deadline is February 16, 2007

EMPLOYMENT

Moving: Local Moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Campus Representative Job Earn $200/4 hours of work Distributing Door Hangers in dorms If interested email: joerivard@collegemarketplace.com

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV testing 548-9992

SERVICES

Tutoring, Risk Free Trial $15 per hour. Customized programs in Math & Science. Highest Quality! 866-993-2263 ext.51 www.tutorowl.com

ROOM FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 5 minutes from UMass. Looking for roommate(s) for Winter and/or Spring. Washer, Dryer, Parking. vwright@student.umass.edu (413) 461-1039

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Senior James Life had three points in Sunday's 66-61 win over Charlotte. He ranks third on the team in scoring with 13 points per game and shoots 43 percent from three-point range.

Easier said than done

Shutting down Lasme and Freeman is no simple task

BY ROB GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts men's basketball coach Travis Ford loves his big men, captains Stephane Lasme and Rashaun Freeman. Ford believes that anyone who knows his team knows that the offensive game plan is to go inside. Most teams do know that stopping the inside game means stopping UMass – to actually do it is another thing altogether.

Lasme and Freeman have been a two-man wrecking crew for the bulk of the 2006-07 season. Lasme just passed Marcus Camby on the all-time blocks list at UMass. With three blocks against Charlotte on Sunday, Lasme moved his total to 339, three more than Camby, who reached the 336 mark in just three years before leaving for the pros after the 1995 season.

Freeman has been equally impressive this season and has not disappointed as the senior leader and returning top scorer. Freeman has led the team in scoring in 12 out of the Minutemen's 21 games. He has scored 20 points or more in nine games this season, and leads the team in scoring average with 17.1 points per game.

UMass Basketball

Ford, in the post-game press conference in Charlotte, said that Lasme used to play the Robin to Freeman's Batman. While the reference might have been appropriate last season, Lasme has certainly stepped into his own light this year as a game-changing defensive presence. Lasme has also developed his offensive game to a more-than-adequate level.

In the 2005-06 season, Lasme averaged 10.5 points per game and that average is up to 13.1 this year. Lasme led UMass in scoring at No. 4 Pittsburgh with 17 points, and had a triple-double against St. Francis two games later, leading the Minutemen with 19 points.

X-MEN

The Xavier Musketeers have been a point of frustration for the Minutemen. Last season, after beating the Musketeers, 65-56, in the last regular season game of the year for both teams, UMass lost to Xavier in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament in Cincinnati.

Xavier, of course, went on the win the conference tournament and make an appearance in the biggest basketball tournament on the planet: The Musketeers got to play Gonzaga in the first round and

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

Special teams lead UMass' surge in '07

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

All season long UMass coach Don Cahoon has stressed that special teams are vital to the Minutemen's success. He must have spent a lot of time around football coach Don Brown this fall, who always preached "quality in all three phases."

Cahoon is doing something right because the Minutemen are converting power plays at an improved pace while killing penalties with their usual success.

But the power play is definitely the more notable of the two. Last season UMass (12-8-4, 9-6-2 Hockey East) was dismal on the man advantage. At points in 2006-07, the Minutemen played better five-on-five than five-on-four. And questions surrounded the team entering this season as Marvin Degon's replacement at the point – along with his eight power-play tallies.

Seniors Mark Matheson and Mike Kostka have answered those questions definitively. Each possesses the experience and poise to lead Cahoon's two power-play units. Matheson leads the first unit while Kostka has the second.

UMass Hockey

UMass currently converts the power play at a 16.1 percent clip, good for third in Hockey East. Maine's 25.5 percent and New Hampshire's 18.8 percent are the only numbers better than the Minutemen's. They drop one spot to fourth with a 14.9 percent mark in conference contests.

Last year the Mass Attack ended the season with 28 goals in 167 power play attempts. That percentage of 16.8 is better than their current mark, but consider the fact that the Minutemen have had far fewer chances this season (118).

Cahoon says no one thing can be attributed to his team's success, just a lot of little things.

"The guys have worked real hard on little nuances like moving the puck and creating some seams and taking what the other team gives us," he said. "Usually when you do those things and string some passes together you end up with good shots. I'm just pleased with the way these kids have bought into it."

Cory Quirk's man-advantage

See HOCKEY on page 8

KARIN WINDER/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore forward Cory Quirk had a goal and an assist, and a team-high four shots in Saturday night's 3-3 draw with No. 8 BU. He is second on the team in scoring with 21 points.

UM struggles in new year

BY J.M. FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After tearing out of the gate, the Minutewomen (12-10, 2-5 Atlantic-10) have stumbled mightily in the new year. UMass heads on the road this weekend, looking to capture its first conference road victory of the season at Saint Joseph's. The matchup begins a season-ending stretch of seven conference games between Feb. 2 and Feb. 25. After opening the season with the most wins in school history (9) before Jan. 1, the Minutewomen have dropped 8 of 11 games in the new year.

PAYING THE PRICE

While there is no one player, or one aspect of the game that stands out as a glaring weakness for the Minutewomen this season, a constant through their struggles has been points off of turnovers. In its six losses of the calendar year, opponents have tallied 127 points off turnovers to UMass' 74. The differential of 53 points more than covers the combined margin of defeat in those six losses, which amounts to 42 points.

UMass Basketball

STRUGGLES FROM THE POINT

Freshman point guard Kim Benton has wrestled the starting reigns from her counterpart sophomore Sakera Young because she forces the defense to respect the perimeter, creating openings inside for senior Tamara Tatham and junior forward Kate Mills.

Benton's game, like other deep shooters, is a streaky one. The losses this season have shown that, as Benton goes, so do the Minutewomen. In the team's wins this season, Benton has shot 22-of-55 (40 percent) from downtown. In its losses,

See W. BASKETBALL on page 9

Former U.S. National Team coach Justine Sowry has been named the replacement for former UMass field hockey coach Patty Shea.

McCutcheon gives Sowry keys to Garber

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In his time at UMass, Athletic Director John McCutcheon has made some great additions to UMass Athletics. The hirings of head football coach Don Brown and head men's basketball coach Travis Ford are at the top of this list. Another hiring McCutcheon hopes to add to this list is that of Justine Sowry – the sixth field hockey coach in UMass history.

Sowry comes to UMass after a three-year spell as assistant head coach of the United States National Team. The native Australian has also spent time as an assistant coach in the collegiate ranks – first at Louisville from 1998-2002, then at Stanford in 2003.

Her playing career was equally impressive – she spent eight years as a goalkeeper for the Australian National Team.

"I played on the Australian [National] Field Hockey Team from 1993-2001," Sowry said. "Through the era, we were No. 1 in the world during that entire time. I participated in the 1994 and 1998 World Cup where we won gold medals. I've played in 128 internationals."

At Louisville, she was the assistant head coach under UMass alumna Pam Bustin for six seasons. Prior to the duo's arrival in Louisville, the Cardinals suffered a 34-game losing streak which included a winless 1997 season (0-17).

Under Bustin, Sowry grew as a coach. Her years in field hockey provided her with all the knowledge necessary to coach, but working with Bustin showed her how to relay the knowledge to the players effectively.

"I knew at some point that I wanted to go back into collegiate coaching but I didn't realize it was going to be this quick," Sowry said. "It was a big decision to leave USA field hockey with the upcoming Olympics. But over the years, I've been developing my own ideas and philosophies and I've always wanted to head up my own program."

The relationship Sowry developed with Bustin painted a great picture of the UMass field hockey program in her head. So when McCutcheon first contacted her, just before Christmas, she knew that UMass was the right place and it was the right time for her to make the leap.

"There were a few other assistant positions open but a head coaching position at this school with its history and tradition was something that I wanted to take a serious look at," Sowry said.

"I don't know a lot about Northeast hockey but my mentor in coaching is Pam Bustin and I heard a lot through her about the history and tradition. And I know Pam Hixon who coached here for a long time (1978-1993, 1996) and she was the USA coach," she added. "So I know a lot of former player and I heard a lot about the program from them and how successful it has been over the years."

The dismissal of Patty Shea at the end of last season marked a nadir for UMass field hockey and left an already declining program without a direction. Sowry hopes to restore the field hockey program to national prominence – UMass has made 19 NCAA Tournament appearances, the fourth most of any Division I Institution.

"I think I have to be realistic," Sowry said. "I hope to be competitive in the first year and competitive in the conference. But I expect our athletes to be fitter than they've been and work harder. I have high expectations in terms of a work ethic because it is something that you can control. But I have to stay realistic about next year."

Sowry hopes to build the team around strong goaltending and a deep unit in the backfield. In this regard, the current make-up of the team fits the style she hopes to institute perfectly.

Sarah Williams had an outstanding freshman year in net for the Maroon and White. The tutelage of a former Australian National Field Hockey Team goaltender should expedite the growth process of another young goaltender – and should prevent

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 10

Minutemen take 14th place

Hoagland breaks school record at Reebok Boston Indoor Games

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts indoor track and field teams may have a long-awaited new track facility to debut this upcoming spring, but until then the men's team will have to settle for a new record-holder courtesy of senior Erik Hoagland, while the women's team has displayed a stable of young athletes who provided an early hint of its potential last week.

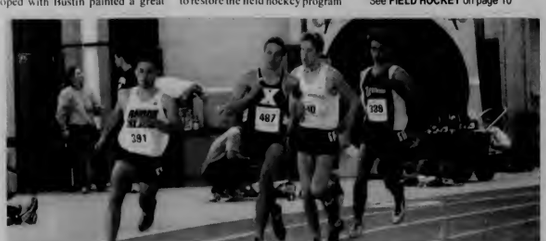
Coach Ken O'Brien's squad took fourth place out of 13 teams at the Reebok Boston Indoor Games hosted by Northeastern University on Jan. 26. The Minutemen didn't have as much luck up north at the New Hampshire Tri-Meet, finishing in last place out of three teams on Jan. 20.

"We start our indoor season later than other schools so I anticipated we would be behind our opponents on the 17th and the 20th," O'Brien said. "With the fourth-place finish, it shows we're narrowing the gap. We do need substantial improvements in the events we are strong in because we do have some event weaknesses."

Meanwhile, the Minutewomen with UMass coach Julie LaFreniere at the helm didn't have the same amount of success at the same two events, taking the 10th spot out of the 13 teams competing in Boston and finished last out of three teams at the UNH Tri-Meet.

Both the men's and women's

See TRACK on page 10



COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Nils Fischer (right) placed 13th at last year's New England Championships held on Feb. 25, checking in with a time of 4:16.88. He also led the cross country team this fall.

FEBRUARY

TEMPLE OFFENSE THRIVES | PAGE 12

'ANGELS' SHOWCASES STYLE | PAGE 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 35 LO: 25 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2006

UMass and Amherst police merge

Police departments to share jurisdiction over UMass campus

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

During Monday's meeting of the Amherst Select Board, officials from the University of Massachusetts-Amherst Police, UMass Police and Amherst town government voted to adopt a more "evolutionary" model of police work to coincide with the jurisdiction merge between the Amherst Police and the UMass force.

Currently, the UMass police and the Amherst police departments are separate entities. The two forces have always had a mutual aid agreement, but the new agreement gives each department jurisdiction in the other's territory. This change allows for any member of either the force to react to incidents that may arise throughout the entire town.

So whether on Massachusetts Avenue or North Pleasant Street, Mutual Aid Agreement makes the location of a crime in Amherst irrelevant to police.

"[The agreement] removes a hurdle to taking police action, and in turn, we hope it will make both our communities safer," said Patrick Archbald, Deputy Chief of UMass police. "All stakeholders were motivated in this effort by making safer communities and doing so in the most economically feasible way. The 'MAA,' made perfect sense for everyone."

Amherst Town Manager Laurence Shaffer said the new agreement makes sense.

"The town has limited resources to meet its public safety needs," said Shaffer. "Collaboration between the similar departments within a community that we share makes sound, strategic sense to the town."

Prior to the aid agreement, protocol called for police officers

See POLICE on page 4

UMass and Amherst police worked together to deal with the Dec. 15, 2006 riots in the Southwest residential area following UMass football's 28-17 Division I Championship loss against Appalachian State in Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Vice Chancellor's mass e-mail condemns students' rioting

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over a month has passed since Michael Gargano received word that 2,000 of his University of Massachusetts students were rioting, breaking windows, lighting fires, and attacking riot police in the Southwest campus.

Yesterday, in a campus-wide email addressed to every student, the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs spoke out against the students' actions.

"Last semester, on the night of December 15, approximately 2,000 students congregated in the Southwest Area Mall following the UMass Amherst NCAA football game against Appalachian State. When the riot was over, the damage totaled in the tens of thousands of dollars. Some students were arrested that night, with many more arrests made over the following weeks. While the monetary damage of that night was substantial, the damage done to the reputation of UMass Amherst was perhaps even greater," wrote Gargano.

News of the riot has traveled across the nation and into the headlines of prominent news organizations such as Sports Illustrated and ABC News.

Gargano maintained that riots prescence in the national media has damaged the University far more than just a few broken windows.

"The unfortunate, but unavoidable, truth is that when UMass Amherst students are arrested for behavior that is destructive to people and property, the public tends to associate every student at the University with such reckless acts," read the email, which was co-authored by Charlena Seymour, Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs. "While windows were broken and other damage occurred, the real cost of the riot was the compromised value of each student's degree. Every student suffers, whether it's a senior seeking a job or others looking for summer work and internships. Our reputation has been sullied not only with employers but also with elected officials, alumni, parents and donors."

The District Attorney's office has identified approximately 70 names of students face potential prosecution.

To date, the University has expelled five students, suspended 16,

See RIOTS on page 4

Funds raised for NoHo charity

Southwest South area aims to raise $10,000 for Grace House

BY ANNA DOLIANITIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Southwest South residential area at the University of Massachusetts has raised $4,772.95 to date towards its $10,000 goal to donate to Grace House of Northampton, an intensive substance abuse rehabilitation program for addicted women and their children.

"We wanted to do a fundraiser to give our students the opportunity to have an impact on the local community, but we weren't sure who was the most in need," said Erica Piedade, the Assistant Resident Director of Grance Hall.

The SWS area chooses a different fundraiser each year and elected this year's cause upon finding out that the state, Grace House's primary source of funding, would be providing $30,000 less this year, which would prevent the organization from paying for adequate childcare.

"It is important for the women at Grace House to have their children with them. The children are impacted too," said Piedade.

The women referred to the program are about to lose custody of their children, and the center helps women during the early phases of recovery and assists in caring for minor children, according to Jean Ahlstrand MacKimmie, Area Director of Southwest South.

"The center focuses on behaviors contributing to why the women started using drugs in the first place how they started and maintained their use," said Piedade.

The women at Grace House are provided with healthcare which they often weren't receiving before arriving at the center, as well as personal counseling and group therapy, according to Piedade. The women are aided in completing their General Equivalency Diploma, or GED degrees, if they did not graduate high school and receive job skill training to prepare them to enter the workforce upon leaving Grace House.

The center offers a 12-step program to help the women overcome their addictions and also provides parenting sessions to ensure that the women are able to take care of their children, said Piedade.

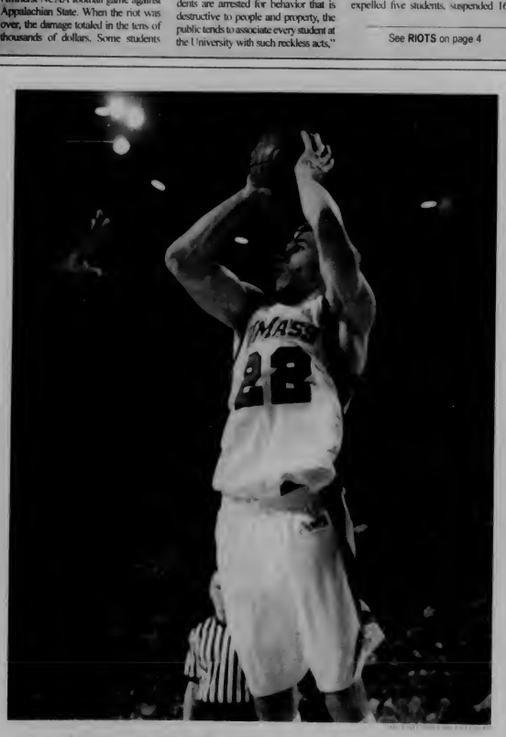
The children are screened for effects of mental health and violence.

"Any kind of project like this builds strong staff teamwork at the area-level as well as the cluster-level, bringing staff together towards a common goal," said Ahlstrand MacKimmie. "It raises student awareness, particularly to those who went to meetings and spoke to others about the topic."

The area had a common goal of $10,000, which they broke down by cluster, with each cluster having a goal of $1,500.

"We worked with the philosophy

See FUNDRAISER on page 4



Transfer Etienne Brower is shooting 39 percent from behind the three-point line since returning from an ankle injury. He and the Minutemen face Richmond this Saturday at the Mullins Center.

Nine packages planted around Boston in failed marketing ploy

BY KEN MAGUIRE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Nine blinking electronic devices planted at bridges and other spots in Boston threw a scare into the city Wednesday in what turned out to be a marketing campaign for a late-night cable cartoon. At least one of the devices depicts a character giving the finger.

Highways, bridges and a section of the Charles River were shut down and bomb squads were sent in before authorities declared the devices were harmless.

"It's a hoax and it's not funny," said Gov. Deval Patrick.

Turner Broadcasting, parent company of Cartoon Network, said the devices were part of a promotion for the TV show "Aqua Teen Hunger Force."

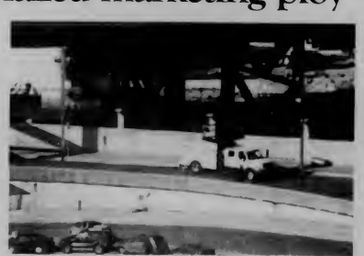
"The packages in question are magnetic lights that pose no danger," Turner said in a statement. It said the devices have been in place for two to three weeks in 10 cities: Boston, New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Atlanta, Seattle, Portland, Ore., Austin, Texas, San Francisco and Philadelphia.

" We regret that they were mistakenly thought to pose any danger," the company said.

Police said only that they were investigating where the device came from. The Department of Homeland Security said there are no credible reports of other devices being found elsewhere in the country.

An angry Mayor Thomas Menino said a stiff penalty will be pursued against whoever was responsible for the devices.

"It's about keeping a city on edge



Turner Broadcasting left 9 suspicious packages around Boston as part of a promotion for the TV show "Aqua Teen Hunger Force."

It's about public safety," he said.

Authorities said some of the objects looked like circuit boards or had wires hanging from them.

The first device was found at a subway and bus station underneath Interstate 93, forcing the shutdown of the station and the highway.

Later, police said four calls, all around 1 p.m., reported devices at the Boston University Bridge and the Longfellow Bridge, both of which span the Charles River, at a Boston street corner and at the Tufts-New England Medical Center.

The package near the Boston University bridge was found attached to a structure beneath the span, authorities said.

Subway service across the Longfellow Bridge between Boston and Cambridge was briefly suspended, and Storrow Drive was closed as well.

Wanda Higgins, a 47-year-old Weymouth resident and a nurse at Massachusetts General Hospital, heard about the threat as she watched television news coverage while preparing to leave work at 4 p.m.

Messages seeking additional comment from the Atlanta-based Cartoon Network were left with several publicists.

"Aqua Teen Hunger Force" is a cartoon with a cultish following that airs as part of the Adult Swim late-night block of programs for adults on the Cartoon Network. A feature length film based on the show is slated for release March 23.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 55

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jameson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Nicole Boonjakuakul

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Binge eating declared nation's most prevalent eating disorder

A recent survey found that 3.5 percent of women and 2 percent of men suffer from binge eating.

By Jesse Harlan Alderman
Associated Press

BOSTON — Frequent and unrestrained binge eating is the country's most common eating disorder, far outpacing the better-known weight control diseases anorexia and bulimia, according to a national survey conducted by researchers at Harvard University Medical School.

Psychiatric researchers at Harvard and the university-affiliated McLean Psychiatric Hospital in Belmont, Mass., have billed the study as the first national census of eating disorders. The results were published Thursday in the medical journal Biological Psychiatry.

The survey found that 3.5 percent of women and 2 percent of men suffer from binge eating, which the study defined as bouts of uncontrolled eating, well past the point of being full, that occur at least twice a week.

The doctors diagnosed fewer than 1 percent of women and .3 percent of men with anorexia, a disorder where an exaggerated fear of weight gain causes under-eating and malnourishment. The study determined that 1.5 percent of women and .5 percent of men had bulimia, an eating disease characterized by the "binge-purge" syndrome of overeating followed by vomiting.

Dr. Harrison Pope, an author of the study and the director of McLean's Biological Psychiatry Laboratory, said binge eaters face severe risk of obesity and related diseases like diabetes, heart disease, stroke and certain cancers.

A binge eater, for instance, might eat a full dinner, then eat a quart of ice cream for dessert, followed by a bag of chips, without being able to stop, Pope said.

"It's a little bit analogous to something you hear from an alcoholic, when they might say, 'Well, I wanted to have one drink,' and they've had 12 drinks and they're passed out on the floor," he said in a conference call with reporters. "Even though they feel full, even though they feel disgusting and guilty, they can't stop."

The researchers hope the results will convince editors of the American Psychiatric Association's "Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders," the chief directory of psychiatric diagnoses, to include binge eating in the next edition.

Binge eating is classified as a "provisional disorder" in the most recent manual, last published in 1994, because few scholars had studied its symptoms and effects, said Dr. James I. Hudson, the survey's lead author and a professor of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School.

"These results argue that binge eating is common. It's more common than both the other eating disorders combined and it's strongly associated with obesity," he said. "Taken together these findings suggest that this is an eating disorder and should be treated as such."

Hudson said the research team interviewed more than 9,000 people nationwide from 2001 to 2003, quizzing participants on their eating habits and psychological backgrounds. The study probably underestimates the actual population suffering from eating disorders because respondents are often ashamed to acknowledge their abnormal eating habits, he said.

The survey also found people struggle longer with binge eating — symptoms persist for an average of 8.1 years compared to 1.7 years for anorexic patients, who are often young and may recover as they mature. Bulimics suffer without cure for an average of 8.3 years, according to the study.

Private schools have more leeway in student searches

By Denise LaVoie
Associated Press

BOSTON — Students who attend private schools do not have the same protections against unreasonable searches as students who attend public schools, the state's highest court said Wednesday in a ruling some legal analysts said could lead to arbitrary searches of backpacks or lockers.

The Supreme Judicial Court drew a distinction between public school officials and private school officials in the case of three Catholic school students who were arrested after drugs and alcohol were found in their hotel room during a school ski trip.

The court said that public school officials are agents of the state and therefore subject to the rule against unreasonable searches contained in the Fourth Amendment. But the court said the same protections don't apply in private schools.

"Fourth Amendment protection does not apply to searches conducted by persons who are not state agents," the court ruled in a unanimous, 7-0, decision.

Justice Roderick Ireland, in a concurring opinion, urged private schools to develop search policies to guard against abuses.

"Allowing private school officials to search students based on hunches or whims that may be rooted solely in personal prejudices potentially could lead to abuses where students are targeted unfairly and suffer serious legal consequences as a result," Ireland wrote.

David Frank, a former state prosecutor, said the SJC has held in previous rulings that school officials have a right to make sure that schools are free from drugs or guns, but has held that public school officials — because they are agents of the state — must still abide by the Fourth Amendment protection against unreasonable search and seizure.

In its ruling Wednesday, the SJC "is clearly drawing a line in the sand that the legal analysis for searches done in private schools is going to be very different," Frank said.

The case involved three students at Bishop Stang High School — a North Dartmouth school operated by the Roman Catholic Diocese of Fall River — who went on a school-sponsored ski trip to the Berkshires in March 2003.

When school officials learned some students had been in their hotel room unsupervised, two chaperones and the school principal searched the room and found alcohol and lighters. Two clay pipes were found in a search of trash that had been removed from the room.

The boys were ordered to empty their pockets by school officials. One boy, Caleb Tripp, handed over marijuana and a clay pipe, and another boy, Jeffrey Rogers, turned over a small container of marijuana.

State police were called, and each boy was charged with possession of marijuana and cocaine, and being a minor in possession of alcohol.

Lawyers for the boys argued that the search of their room by school officials was prohibited by the Fourth Amendment and the Massachusetts Declaration of Rights, which guarantees similar protections from unreasonable searches and seizures. They said school officials did not have reasonable suspicion to believe there was contraband in the room before they searched.

A lower court judge agreed and suppressed the evidence. State prosecutors appealed, and the SJC pulled the case from the state Appeals Court to decide on its own.

Tripp's attorney, Mark Miliotis, said he was disappointed in the ruling because it appears to give private school officials no restrictions on when they can conduct searches of students and their belongings.

Iraq stops flights to Syria during new security planning

By Qassim Abdul-Zahra
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq indefinitely halted all flights to and from Syria and closed a border crossing with Iran as the government prepares for a new security crackdown aimed at crushing violence in the capital and surrounding regions, a member of parliament and an airport official said Wednesday.

The airport official said flights to and from Syria would be canceled for at least two weeks and that service had been interrupted on Tuesday. The official spoke on condition of anonymity, because he was not authorized to reveal the information.

Hassan al-Sunneid, a legislator and member of the parliament Defense and Security Committee, said the move "was in preparation for the security plan. The state will decide when the flights will resume."

The actions were seen as a signal to both countries not to interfere in Iraq's affairs as U.S. and Iraqi forces prepare for the major crackdown on armed groups in the capital.

Syria is believed to be harboring former Baath party officials who support the Sunni insurgency and has been accused of allowing foreign fighters to slip across its border with Iraq. And U.S. officials have complained that Iran smuggles weapons to Shiite extremists who have killed Americans and provides Shiite militia with training and support.

Syrian authorities on Wednesday denied reports arising elsewhere that it had halted Iraqi Airways flights but said it would bar landings by Iraqi airliners lacking safety requirements or those arriving without advance permission.

The official Syrian news agency, SANA, said the measure was agreed to last week by the Iraqi Civil Aviation Authority after Syrian technical teams found that some Iraqi planes did not meet safety codes, or that they entered Syrian airspace without notice or permission from Syrian authorities.

Iraqi Airways is now the only airline linking the Syrian and Iraqi capitals.

The U.N. says about one million Iraqis have fled to Syria, which has become the refuge of choice because of its relaxed entry regulations for Arabs, the relatively low cost of living and availability of schools and health care.

Al-Sunneid refused to confirm reports that Syrian border crossings also would be closed, saying only that "more decisions would be taken."

He said the Sheeb border crossing with Iran "also was closed in preparation for the [security] plan."

Iraq said last week that closures of Iranian crossings involved the border checkpoints at Sheeb, in Maysan province, and the Shalamjan border checkpoint in Basra province. Authorities in Baghdad said the two crossings had been shut down ahead of the Ashoura festivities, the Shiite ceremony in which tens of thousands of pilgrims — many from Iran — descend the Shiite holy city of Karbala. The festival reached its climax Tuesday.

Iranian television said Sunday that Iran had closed several border crossings with Iraq ahead of Ashoura, citing a decision by the government in Tehran. It said the crossings were closed to "contain the large number of pilgrims" bound for Karbala without "legal documents."

Meanwhile, car bombs struck mostly Shiite targets in Baghdad on Wednesday, and the bodies of three Sunni professors and a student were found days after they were seized while leaving their campus in a Shiite part of the city.

At least 43 people were reported killed across Iraq, including a U.S. soldier.

Maamoun Abdel-Hadi said he was standing with a friend near his car when a mortar shell fell on the predominantly Sunni neighborhood of Azamiyah in northern Baghdad. The area was hit by nine mortar shells that damaged houses, shops and streets, killing six people and wounding 20, police and hospital officials said.

See FLIGHTS on page 4

90 Gatehouse Rd. (At Echo Hill)
Amherst • 256-6446
Off Rte. 9, two miles east of Amherst College
OPEN 6AM-10AM MON-FRI
8AM-9PM SAT & SUN

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

★Swimming ★Tennis
★Basketball ★Fitness

COMPETITIVE BASKETBALL GAMES w/JERRY Mon/Thurs 6-8pm
OVER 30 FREE CLASSES WEEKLY

HAMPFIT.COM
for Rates & Info

Join Now
Winter Special
$188/ 15 Weeks
Student Rate
EFT available

LOAD. USE. RELOAD.
EASTHAMPTON • HADLEY • NORTHAMPTON
HAVE IT YOUR WAY WITH BIG SAVINGS
FREE WHOPPER SANDWICH
99¢ ORIGINAL CHICKEN SANDWICH
FREE BK DOUBLE STACKER
FREE WHOPPER SANDWICH
99¢ CHEESEAPPLICIOUS
FREE MEDIUM BK JOE COFFEE
99¢ 9 PIECE BK CHICKEN FRIES
FREE BK DOUBLE STACKER

UltimateFitness
THE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER
Located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9 • For more information call 253-7571
Semester Special $175
Free unlimited Tanning!
first 100 to Join
Full Aerobics Program
Included with membership:
-Cardio Kickboxing
-Yoga, Pilates
-And Many More
-Juice Bar & Supplements
-Personal Training
-Core training
Over 20 pieces of cardio including...
-Treadmills
-Bikes
-Crosstrainers
-Free weight and circuit training equipment
No enrollment fee
now offering aerobics only memberships

Birth control pill effectiveness causes stir

By Trevor Davis
Oregon Daily Emerald (U. Oregon)

EUGENE, Ore. — A recent wire news service report, labeled as misleading by a Food and Drug Administration official, warned that newer birth control pills appear to be less effective at preventing pregnancy than those approved decades ago. But the story wasn't enough to sway student opinion on the pill.

"How can they be less effective after 40 years?" University of Oregon senior Jordan Cruccholia questioned.

University freshman Kaitlin Pacheco said that she didn't hear about the news.

"Why would it not be as effective?" she wondered.

University senior Sophie Kamesar said she wouldn't trust any initial reports warning that newer birth control pills aren't as effective as older pills.

"There would have to be a complete study," she said.

An Associated Press story published last week reported that newer contraceptives could have twice the failure rate than previous products. The article, which quoted FDA meeting briefing documents, charged that birth control pills approved in the 1960s allowed less than one pregnancy when taken by 100 women for at least a year, while recently government-approved pills allow more than two pregnancies for every 100 women.

The FDA released a statement on its Web site saying the article created misperceptions.

FDA spokesman Mitchell Weitzman said the data presented in the story is inconclusive. He said the data is misleading because newer pills are safer. Newer birth control pills release lower doses of hormones that stop ovulation.

"The new generation of hormonal contraceptives are very highly effective," he said.

University Health Center Director Tom Ryan called the initial report misconstrued. He said there's a chance the first generation of oral contraceptives were more effective, but they contained high levels of estrogen and progestin, which caused side effects, as well as higher risks of serious complications.

"As a result, pills have been developed containing much lower doses of hormone," Ryan said in an e-mail.

He said it's possible the effectiveness of perfect use – taking the pill at the same time every day and not being affected by other medications or health problems – might be slightly lower compared to older, high-dose pills.

Ryan assured that the newer pills are "highly effective contraceptives while greatly decreasing side effects and risks for users."

Newer birth control pills are better than 99 percent effective with perfect use, said Jolene Siemsen, a nurse practitioner at the University Health Center.

Ryan said that perfect use rates don't always mirror real-life situations.

"Few of us can be consistently perfect," Ryan said. "The 'actual use' effectiveness for oral contraceptives is about 95 percent, as compared to perfect use effectiveness rates over 99 percent."

Siemsen said the original news report didn't concern her and that she is confident in the effectiveness of the pills.

"Someone can always add condoms to assure they're adequately protected," Siemsen said. She added that there might be concerns on the effectiveness of the pill in terms of body size.

Most birth control companies test pills on average-weight women, so the effects on overweight and underweight women are unknown.

Effectiveness also depends on the user's habits, Siemsen said.

"You need to take the pills appropriately," she said. Siemsen added that users should take the pill everyday at the same time.

Siemsen said that the news report didn't increase student concerns about the birth control pill at the Health Center.

"There weren't any new or different concerns," Siemsen said. "People are always interested in how effective the pill is versus a condom or another contraceptive method, though."

At its meeting this month, FDA officials discussed clinical trial designs to include a broad range of users, according to an FDA statement.

"The whole point of the meeting was really to say, 'going forward, what should clinical trials look like?'" Weitzman said.

The FDA wants to investigate how well studies have documented real-world use of new birth control pills, which is less consistent than in clinical studies, Weitzman said. that country's leading method of contraception, according to a recent Centers study.

The Food and Drug Administration released a statement defending the effectiveness of newer birth control pills.

Plot to behead Muslim soldier uncovered

By Rob Harris
Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, England — Police foiled a major kidnapping plot, the first of its kind in Britain, with the arrests Wednesday of nine terror suspects who reportedly planned to torture and behead a British Muslim soldier and broadcast the killing on the Internet.

The alleged plot, said by British media to mirror the brutal executions of foreign hostages in Iraq, was in its final stages and uncovered during a six-month surveillance operation by anti-terror officers in this city of more than 1 million in the heart of England.

The arrests came in a pre-dawn raid on homes and businesses in several Birmingham neighborhoods, which were mostly Pakistani.

"The threat from terrorism remains very real," said Assistant Chief Constable David Shaw, who would not confirm reports from the British Broadcasting Corp. and other media outlets that the intended victim was an army soldier to be killed in an "Iraqi-style" execution and broadcast on the Internet.

Britain has been at the heart of several thwarted alleged terror plots, including a scheme by a British Muslim to blow up the New York Stock Exchange and other landmarks, and a plan by Muslim extremists to use liquid explosives to blow up as many as 10 flights between the United States and Britain.

But the Birmingham kidnapping plot raised fears that a new type of terrorism has reached Britain, one which uses individual victims to send a message through kidnappings and publicized beheadings. Although the motive in the new plot was not disclosed, the announcement coincides with other indications that young British Muslims are becoming increasingly angry over this country's involvement in the American-led wars in Afghanistan and

See KIDNAPPING on page 4

Assistant Chief Constable, David Shaw.

Experts analyze pros and cons of organic foods

By Alison Harman
Technician (N.C. State)

RALEIGH, N.C. — The scientific community remains unable to answer the abundance of questions that challenge the organic food market. It is also unable to prove many of the assertions organic defenders encourage.

A common misconception about organic foods is they have an innate healthiness that supersedes the nutritional values of conventionally grown food. However, organic foods are considered healthier not because of qualities they have, but because of qualities they lack – specifically pesticides, artificial ingredients and trans fats, according to the National Organic Program.

Proponents of an organic diet, such as Valentina Daly, a senior in criminology at North Carolina State University, assert that organics are healthier, more environmentally friendly and have a greater sustainability than conventional crops.

"To me, organic foods taste better since they are grown naturally and the preservatives used to maintain them are naturally grown. This means that (the preservatives) can be easily washed off," Daly said.

The Mouth Revolution, which can be found at www.mouthrevolution.com, is a short film produced by Annie's Homegrown and Free Range Studios. It exemplifies the main points of an organic diet. Its "Declaration of Indigestion" demands food eaten must be free of pesticides, artificial ingredients, genetic modifications and trans fats.

"By eating foods naturally grown, as opposed to genetically engineered or with toxic pesticides, our bodies will process natural-based foods, as it is supposed to," Daly said.

Bob Patterson, a professor of crop science at N.C. State, spent much of his childhood on a farm. Prior to 1950, pesticides were used sparingly, if at all. Since then, its use has increased 50-fold.

"We used organic farming without it being called that," Patterson said.

Though chemically based pesticides have been introduced to farmers' crops only recently, the last 40 years have raised a concern that many farmers are using pesticides in excess, according to the Rachel Carson Council, Inc.

"There are two dangers of using certain pesticides. One, it is possible that parts of the living world can be adversely affected that we are not aware of. And two, with the heavy continual use of certain pesticides, we are causing genetic alterations to occur more frequently in both animals and plants," Patterson said.

Many organic proponents, including Patterson, claim organic crops are more sustainable than conventionally grown crops. This means the crop has the capability to produce the same yield year after year.

However, much of the scientific community continues to disagree regarding whether chemicals and pesticides negatively affect the environment and regarding whether one crop is more sustainable than the other. People cannot assume growing foods using one method is more correct than another.

DDT, which is used in regions of South Africa and in many areas of Asia, is an effective defense against malaria – a virus that is widespread throughout the regions because of an abundance of malaria-carrying mosquitoes.

However, its use has brought up innumerable health issues, though none of the human health risks has been scientifically proven. The biological magnification of DDT within animals is believed to have caused harmful mutations within fish-eating birds, Patterson said.

It is imperative to stop the spread of malaria throughout the countries that are prone to the virus, though "there must be alternatives that are just as effective at killing malaria-carrying mosquitoes," Patterson said.

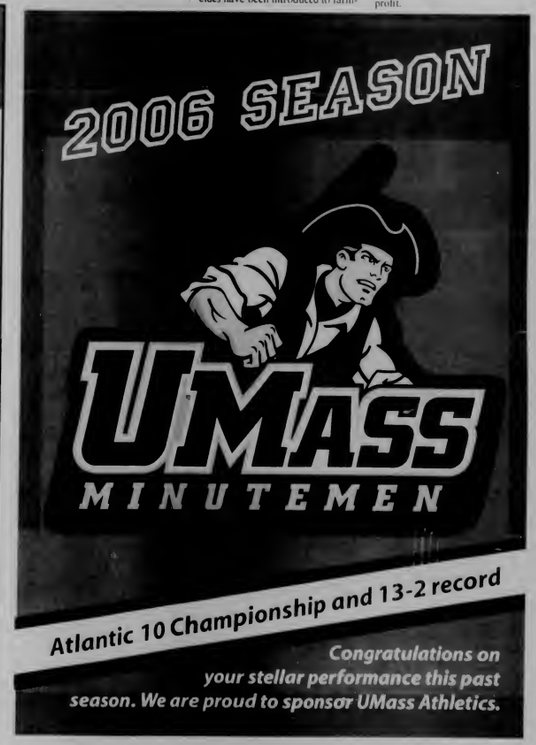
The innate qualities organic foods have proven to be their weaknesses.

Because some farmers apply organic fertilizer manure directly onto the crops, instead of tilling it into the soil, there is a greater chance of the crops being infected with bacteria and, possibly, a dangerous strand of E. coli called 0157:H7 profit.

Save $$ on Textbooks at the Jeffery Amherst College Store
Check out our website at www.jeffbooks.com to order books online!
All These Courses and More at Discounted Prices:

Accounting	221	Intro. to Financial Accounting	HT-MGT	240-1	Hotel Operations
Accounting	311	Business Appl. of Comp	HT-MGT	250-1 -2	Food Service Management
Animal Sci.	103	Intro. to Animal Management	HT-MGT	260-1	Hospitality Pers. Management
Anthropology	102-A	Archeology & Prehistory	HT-MGT	320-1	Hospitality & Tourism Law
Art History	110	Survey: Renaissance-Modern Art	HT-MGT	355-1	Menu & Food Production MGT
Astronomy	100-1 -2 -3 -4	Exploring the Universe	Human Dev.	270	Child Development
Astronomy	101-H	Exploring the Universe	Italian	120	Elementary Italian II
Astronomy	105	Weather & our Atmosphere	Italian	126	Intensive Elementary Italian
Astronomy	114	Stars & Galexies	Kinesiology	100	Intro. to Exercise Science
Biochemistry	285	Cellular & Molegular Biology	Kinesiology	110	Human Performance & Nutrition
Biology	101-2	Intro. to Biology	Kinesiology	560	Exercise Neuroscience
Biology	102	Intro. to Animal Biology	Math	100	Basic Math Skills
Biology	283-1	General Genetics	Math	101	Precalculus Algebra
Biology	285	Cellular & Molecular Biology	Math	102	Analytic Geometry
Biology	287	Intro. to Ecology	Math	104	Alg Analytic Geometry Trig
CEE	121	Intro. to CEE	Math	113	Math for Elem School Teachers
CEE	270	CEE Systems Analysis	Math	127	Calc I Life Soc Sci I
Chemistry	112	General Chemistry II	Math	128	Applied Calculus
Chemistry	241	Int. Descr. Inorg. Chemistry	MGT	260	Introduction to Law
Chemistry	250	Organic Chemistry	Microbiology	160	Biology of Cancer and Aids
Chemistry	261	Organic Chemistry	Microbiology	310	General Microbiology
Chemistry	262	Organic Chemistry (Non-Majors)	Microbiology	330	Microbial Genetics
Chemistry	266	Organic Chemistry (Chem. Majors)	Nutrition	130	Understanding Nutrition
Comp. Sci	187	Programming with Data Structures	Philosophy	100	Intro to Philosophy
Comp. Sci	311	Intro. to Algorithms	Philosophy	110	Intro. to Logic
Comp. Sci	320	Intro. to Software Engineering	Physics	100	Conceptual Physics
Comm	118	Intro. to Interpersonal Comm	Physics	114	Theory of Sound
Comm. Dis	312	Intro. to Speech Science	Physics	115	Physics of Music
Comm. Dis.	313	Intro. to Audiology	Physics	131 & 132	Intro to Physics I & II
Comm. Dis	401	Speech & Language Dev.	Physics	151	General Physics I
ECE	232-1	Hardware Org. & Dev.	Physics	152-1 -2	General Physics II
Economics	104-A-B-D-E	Intro. to Macroeconomics	Political Sci.	101-A	American Politics
Economics	204-A -B	Interm. Microeconomics Theory	Political Sci	111-A	Comparative Politics
Education	325	Intro. to Special Education	Political Sci.	121-A	World Politics
Eng. W. Prog.	112	College Writing	Psychology	100-1 -2 -3	Intro to Psychology
FOMGT	301	Corporate Finance	Psychology	241-1	Methods of Inquiry in Psych.
FOMGT	304	Info. Tech. Finance	Psychology	305-1	Educational Psychology
FOMGT	320	Investments	Psychology	320	Learn & Think
French	230	Intermediate French	Psychology	330	Phys. Psychology
Geo Sciences	100	Global Environmental Change	Psychology	335	Behavioral Endocrinology
Geo Sciences	101-1	Earth	Psychology	350	Child Behavior & Dev.
Geo Sciences	102	Human Landscape	Psychology	355	Adolescent Psychology
Geo Sciences	103-1	Intro. to Oceanography	Sociology	106	Race, Gender & Class
History	115	Modern China	Spanish	120	Elementary Spanish II
HT-MGT	100-1	Intro. to Hospitality & Tourism	Spanish	240	Intermediate Spanish II
HT-MGT	150-1	Food Preperation Management	Spanish	246	Intermediate Intensive

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect Street, Amherst 253-3870
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop in downtown Amherst)



2006 SEASON
UMASS
MINUTEMEN
Atlantic 10 Championship and 13-2 record
Congratulations on your stellar performance this past season. We are proud to sponsor UMass Athletics.

Go UMass!
From your award winning UMass Dining Services
UMass Concessions
Dining Services UMass

Iraq halts flights for 2 weeks

FLIGHTS from page 2

"We fell on the ground. I saw four wounded persons lying on the ground and screaming for help. We put them in the car and rushed them to the hospital," Abdel-Hadi said. "We are peaceful people who have nothing to do with any militias or armed groups. What is the guilt of innocent children, women and men who were walking in the street?"

Jamal Ahmed mournfully examined his Mitsubishi car that had been burned in the attack.

"Repairing my car will cost me a fortune, yet I thank God because I am safe and unhurt," he said.

The mortar attack struck about 2 p.m., hours after car bombs hit Shiite targets elsewhere in the capital in what has become a common pattern in the violence plaguing Baghdad.

One car bomb targeted an area near a market in central Baghdad where people can catch minibuses to predominantly Shiite neighborhoods, including the Sadr City slum. Four people were killed and 12 were wounded, police said.

Another car packed with explosives blew up in the religiously mixed neighborhood of Maamoun in western Baghdad at about the same time, killing two civilians and wounding three others, police said.

A car bomb also struck a predominantly Shiite area in eastern Baghdad after the driver parked near a currency exchange office, then walked away, killing two people and wounding 10, police said.

The shop's owner said the attacker came in to ask permission to park the car and exchange some money.

"A seemingly normal person parked this car and told us that he would not be long," said the owner, who identified himself as Abu Talal. "When that person disappeared for more than 20 minutes, we tried to call the police but the car exploded."

Shop owners often insist that motorists get permission before parking their cars due to the frequent car bombings in the capital.

Insurgents have launched several bombings in the capital in recent weeks as they seek to maximize the number of people killed before U.S. and Iraqi troops launch a neighborhood-by-neighborhood sweep of the capital. Iraqi authorities have promised to crack down on Sunni insurgents as well as Shiite militia violence that has spiraled since the Feb. 22, 2006, bombing of a Shiite shrine in Samarra.

Students hold area fundraiser

FUNDRAISER from page 1

that if we set a high goal, even if we don't reach it, we'll raise a higher amount of money," said Ahlstrand MacKimmie.

At the SWS area level, the Residence Directors and Assistant Residence Directors distributed bulletin boards to Resident Assistants, and brought Grace House director Cathy Bennett and a program graduate to give presentations in residence halls three different times during the semester, said Ahlstrand MacKimmie.

Residence Hall clusters coordinated their own fundraisers, including penny wars between buildings, bake sales, tag sales, auctioning off RAs for "coffee dates."

"RAs in Washington sent letters home with residents over Thanksgiving break, asking their families for donations," said Ahlstrand.

The Paterson/MacKimmie cluster is the only one to reach its goal of $1,500 so far, with John Quincy Adams close behind, having raised just over $1,000.

Piedade said that the initiative had two goals: "to increase awareness and educate everyone at the issue at hand, and also to provide students with an opportunity to give back to the community that they're a part of."

She acknowledges that some students hold judgmental attitudes about the cause chosen, however, she urges these students to look at the situation from an economic perspective.

"Once these women are off of alcohol and drugs, they become taxpayers," said Piedade. "It is important for students to know about these behaviors. Alcohol and other addiction doesn't discriminate – people think they will never be addicted."

The fundraising initiative, which began in November, is expected to run through late February/early March, with a silent auction to include the entire community.

The fundraiser was a success thus far, said Ahlstrand MacKimmie, and she hopes it will have continued success.

Piedade looked ahead toward next year's area fundraiser, and said, "I wouldn't be surprised if next year Southwest South did something to help local schools. Community service is so critical and important. Like the cliche goes, 'work locally, but think globally,'" she said.

The News section wants YOU to become a correspondent

Man sues for tooth chipped on cookie

A salesman who chipped a tooth on a cookie while visiting a customer is entitled to compensation for his dental work after a court ruled it a work-related injury.

The Swedish Supreme Administrative Court ruled in favor of a claim by Calle Montell for state compensation, saying the injury was work-related because it occurred while he was on the job.

"I'm very happy," Montell, 50, said Wednesday. "Everyone who is out on a job can have a snack knowing that they are covered by occupational safety laws."

The Jan. 18 ruling ended a legal battle that began on Oct. 31, 2002, when Montell bit into a cookie offered by a customer and cracked his tooth on a cherry pit.

The local social insurance office denied him state compensation for the $570 it cost to repair the damage, rejecting his claim that the injury was work-related.

– Associated Press

Britain exposes torture plan

KIDNAPPING from page 3

Iraq, and the U.S. detention camp in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

The four British Muslims who attacked London's transit system in Europe's first suicide bombings had expressed rage over Britain's role in the wars. Their attack at rush hour on July 7, 2005 killed 52 people.

In the past year, the object of that anger has spilled over to th, 330 Muslims who serve in the 180,000-strong British armed forces.

The potential victim of the latest plot was reportedly a British Muslim soldier who was under police protection, British media reported, though the Defense Ministry would not confirm this.

Britain's first Muslim soldier to be killed in Afghanistan last year was from Birmingham, where the death prompted militant Islamist Web sites to denounce Cpl. Jabron Hashmi, 24, as a traitor. One site – that of extremist British sect al-Ghurabaa – posted an image of the soldier surrounded by flames.

His brother Zeeshan Hashmi, who left the British Army in September 2005, was alerted to the arrests by concerned officials at the Ministry of Defense.

"I'm extremely proud of my role in the British army and my brother's sacrifice," Hashmi said. "My brother didn't just go as a soldier but as a human wanting to help other humans in a region where they were suffering. It had nothing to do with politics."

"What's more worrying is the negative publicity this will generate about British Muslims," Hashmi said. "Nothing is proven, but the accused people only represent a small element of the Muslim community who are completely opposed to the core values of Islam which is a peaceful doctrine."

Non-Muslim servicemen are also being targeted..

Gargano speaks out

RIOTS from page 1

and removal five from housing.

Gargano urged students to take an active role in preventing future disruptions.

"It is this type of inexcusable behavior that degrades the reputation of this campus, and therefore, by direct extension, compromises the value of your University degree. Each of you must hold your student colleagues responsible and accountable for any behavior which undermines your academic and personal accomplishments," wrote Gargano.

The university is taking steps to be extra cautious of any disturbance that may occur after the Super Bowl on Sunday.

"We anticipate that any gatherings related to Super Bowl 2007 will be low-key in nature. Given the winter temperatures, however, we are taking every precaution to ensure the comfort of all students," wrote Gargano. "Should a large gathering make it difficult for you to enter your residence hall, the Curry Hicks Cage will be open at the end of the Super Bowl game, providing a warm waiting space."

The UMass campus is familiar with student riots. In October 2004, after the Boston Red Sox completed a sweep of the St. Louis Cardinals, winning their first World Series since 1918, nearly 3,000 students rioted inside the Southwest campus leading to the arrest of over 30 students.

"We write this letter knowing that the vast majority of UMass Amherst students do not participate in, nor approve of, this type of destructive behavior. Indeed, many students came forward to help our police department identify students participating in the destruction of December 15, and we thank them for their assistance," wrote Gargano.

Campus and Amherst police reach agreement on merger who were in different jurisdictions around UMass and Amherst to call the other department for prior approval. Both forces agree that the town and University have had a long history of cooperation.

POLICE from page 1

While this agreement comes in the wake of the Dec. 15 riot, which resulted in 11 arrests, officials do not view this as a reaction to that event.

"[The] agreement is simply an expansion of a Mutual Aid Agreement that has been in place for years," Aid Shaffer.

Archbald contends that the similarity of each department's responsibilities and the fact that a large population of students live off campus makes the increased flexibility especially valuable.

"The recent energy behind this was more about the Amherst neighborhood issues regarding the edge of campus this past fall," said Archbald, who added that the continued complaints of public drunkenness and public urination provided motivation for the agreement.

Addressing questions regarding the agreement and past rioting, Archbald said that because the University police have requested the aid of Amherst Police for years during these incidents, the contention that the resolution was a result of the rioting doesn't make sense.

"It was not prompted by the Southwest incident in the fall; although, that incident may serve as an example of why having this agreement will help with such, 'worst case scenarios,'" said Select Board member Robert Kusner added.

"The new agreement represents a natural step forward in a long and cooperative relationship with the University," said Shaffer. "The town's goal is not to 'crack down' on crime or to 'assuage the minds of worried parents.' We are simply looking to a natural ally and friend to assist us in an area where we have needs."

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu.

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
(39 years of service ...and counting!)
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2007 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Ball Room • Feb. 5 (Mon) • Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 6 (Tues) • Feb. 7 (Wed)
• Assignment notification ONLY: Thurs. Feb. 8th @ Boltwood table (C Concourse
• Telephone inquiries: YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
Aerobics · Mixed
Free wts · Martial Arts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0060 90 AMHERST

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date: 2/1/07 – 2/4/07
not responsible for typographical errors
Beer
Beck's 24 pk loose btl $15.99
Sierra Nevada Pale Ale 12 pk btl $ 11.99
Bluemoon Belgian Ale ... pk btl $ ...
St. Paul Girl ... pk btl $ ...
Bud Bud Light Bud Select ... pk can $18.99
Red Hook Ales ... pk btl $ 11.99
Warsteiner ... pk btl $ ...
Molson Ice & Canadian ... pk $ ...
Keystone light 30 pk can $12.99
Sol Cerveza 12 pk btl $10.99
Killians Irish Red 12 pk btl $9.99
Busch Light 30 pk btl $9.99
Liquor
Crown Royal Canadian Whisky 750ml $22.99
Hennessy VSOP Cognac 750ml $38.99
Grand Marnier Cordon Rouge 750 ml $29.99
Hennessy VS Cognac 750 ml $26.99
Johnnie Walker Black Scotch 750 ml $29.99
Tanqueray Gin 750 ml $18.99
Godiva Liqueurs 750 ml $18.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $12.99
Captain Morgan Parrot Bay Flavored Rums 750 ml $12.99
Passion fruit, mango, coconut
Smirnoff 80 Vodka 750 ml $11.99
Smirnoff Flavored Vodka 750 ml $11.99
Lime, cranberry, vanilla
Wine
Annual January Wine Sale Now in Progress!
SAVE UP TO 30% OFF!
Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm, Sunday 12pm - 11pm

LIQUORS 44
Smirnoff 80° 1.75 liter $19.99
Smirnoff $20.99
Patrón Silver $25.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum $25.99
Tattoo 750 mls $13.99
Jose Cuervo Citrico Orange & Tropical 750 mls $17.99
Tanqueray GIN $29.99
Crown Royal $20.99
Kahlúa 750 mls $14.99
Baileys Original Chocolate Mint & Caramel 750 mls $19.99
Belvedere Vodka $24.99
Hennessy $26.99
DOMESTIC KEGS 1/2 Bbls 1/4 Bbls
Bud $68.99 $45.99
Bud Light $68.99 $45.99
Coors Light $68.99
Miller Lite $68.99
Keystone Light $47.99
Pabst Blue Ribbon $48.99
Natural light/Ice $44.99
Busch Light $47.99
AT THE HADLEY LOCATION 450 Russell St. #9 • Campus Plaza 413-253-9344
Visit us at our other locations: NORTHAMPTON • 238 King St. HOLYOKE • 44 Lincoln St.
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS
DON'T DRINK & DRIVE

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." – Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MEND-ing a cause

Kevin Dooley

I happened to stumble upon the network news one not-so-chilly night during winter break. Reportedly, I've come across something extinct, which has not been seen by anyone since Katie Couric made her earth-shattering and awe-inspiring debut on CBS.

As I was watching "ABC Nightly News" one night, it was reported that there are a few problems going on in the continent you heard a lot about when you were in elementary school. That's right, Africa – Nigeria to be more precise.

Now what many, including myself, were under the impression of was that Iraq was the bloodline supplying the almighty United States with its oil to run the modern showcase of power it displays on a regular basis. Iraq, however, provides very little of our oil compared to Nigeria. It actually ranks as the fifth highest oil exporter to the United States. In fact, according to an article in February's edition of National Geographic Magazine, oil accounts for 95 percent of the country's export earnings and 80 percent of its total revenue.

As a result of its vast oil reserves, Nigeria should be swimming in a sea of black gold, yet it's not. It's the case in too many nations where corrupt governments make deals with foreign nations to ensure the affordability of its natural resources, while ensuring the majority of the native population toils in despair and engage in a daily heavyweight fight in order survive.

But here's the alarming situation in Nigeria. The now-labeled terrorist organization Movement for the Emancipation for the Niger Delta (MEND) is leading the cause against Western oil companies coming into the Niger Delta to make ungodly profits off oil. In fact, these men from MEND are inexcusably threatening to burn foreign oil workers alive in an effort to thwart the attempts of Western powers gaining an even greater influence over their own corrupt governments.

Now what is MEND so upset about? Nothing really, except countless villages having no electricity, no clean water, no medicine, no schools. Basically, millions of citizens are living without the necessities for a modern, functioning nation.

Are we going to get out and stop cooperating with corrupt governments supportive of Western powers? Of course not. The lust of officials in corralling them all up like animals.

It's time that the people we send packing to Washington actually start working a five-day week and that they start holding these governments responsible for their people having to live a life not even an animal would choose to endure. But that wouldn't benefit the people making the money off exploiting natives of impoverished countries, so you can probably scratch that plan.

When all is said and done, maybe we truly need to reach the point where oil goes for $120 a barrel and six dollars a gallon, as some people knowledgeable of the business are predicting if conflict breaks out in Nigeria and parts of the Middle East. Maybe then we will begin to accelerate our investment into wind and solar energy, which has shown some promising results in fixing our energy identity crisis.

Nigeria isn't the only example of a country with exuberant amounts of natural resources and national wealth, yet the majority of its inhabitants are scrounging for their next meal.

For sure, alternative sources of energy are in their infancy when it comes to making their debut as an item which is mass consumed, but why not investigate even further than we already have in its potential since I think we're all for continuing our normal lifestyle and not returning to a localized one?

However, with oil companies, politicians, corrupt and foreign capitalists still at the knees of oil reserves to fund their power and influence around the globe, that day won't present itself for some time to come. To be honest, there are a lot of people to blame for this tragic example of what human beings will do for power and what they will do when pushed to the limit of frustration, pain and suffering.

For many, there doesn't seem to be a workable solution in sight, but I'm hoping that one day humans will have evolved from this deplorable state. I know the people of Nigeria are right with me.

Kevin Dooley is a Collegian Columnist

Our United States of...

Jackie Hai

When I went home for winter break last month, I drove my mother up the wall with a new language habit I got from school. No, it wasn't dropping the F-bomb. It was the compulsive use of the word "whatever" in every situation imaginable.

"What do you want for dinner?" – "Oh, I dunno. Whatever."

"You're going out without a coat? It's raining!" – "Whatever, I'll be fine."

"Pick up after yourself; you're making a mess." – "All right, whatever."

"Stop saying whatever! Do you know how stupid you sound?" – "Fine!…whatever." (Okay, I might have made that last response up.)

Anyway, she had a point; I did sound pretty ridiculous. And what's more, I didn't even notice it until it was pointed out to me. Where did this habit come from? Then I remembered the ubiquity of "whatever" back at school, among friends, classmates and coworkers.

How are we supposed to beat problems like rising fees and exorbitant textbook prices, ignore them to death?

Get a bad grade on a pop quiz? Whatever, that class sucks. Can't cope with workplace drama? Whatever, just forget it. Confused about something but can't be bothered to figure it out? Eh, whatevs. Someone acts rudely toward you? Whatever. What a policy is unfair? Whatever, man, this place is whack.

We sound like an extended version of Liam Lynch's popular song, "United States of Whatever." There's just one problem with that: I'm pretty sure Lynch meant to write satire, not the anthem of our generation.

"Whatever" is the new "like," only its implications are worse.

When we were kids in middle school, "like" was our trusty fallback word. It was what we used when we didn't know what to say, so we needed to, like, buy some time to come up with an approximation. Though teachers and parents thought it was the dumbest thing ever, "like" really turned out to nothing more harmful than training wheels. Most of us have outgrown this habit as we matured, became more confident in ourselves and got better at saying what we mean.

Somewhere along the line, saying "whatever" came into fashion. At face value, it makes the speaker sound easy-going and laid back. But when overused, "whatever" projects a certain attitude about life, an attitude that says, at best, "I don't have an opinion and don't feel like forming one," and at worst, "I don't care if something is going wrong, because it's beyond my control, and I'm helpless to change it."

"Whatever" is a shield from criticism, a buffer from disappointment and a refuge for the downtrodden, built with layers of affected indifference. No wonder we like to use it so much.

A word of warning, however. This topic came up when I was talking with a small business owner recently, and she told me that she would think twice about hiring someone who unconsciously spouted off 'whatever's' during a job interview.

"It comes off sounding like you're irresponsible and unwilling to accept critiques or make improvements," she said. "Really, sometimes we worry when we look at your generation and see that it has become cool to be apathetic."

Typical generation-gap misunderstanding, or legitimate concern? You be the judge. Then again, could it be that we're just learning from the old guys in charge? It sure seems that way at times.

Minimum wage workers can't survive on their earnings? Whatever, we need to protect corporate interests so we can get re-elected. Oil sources won't last forever? Whatever, it is too costly to switch from an oil dependent economy. The rest of the world hates our arrogant, swaggering foreign policy? Whatever, we're big and they're not.

Although our esteemed national leaders don't quite say it in so many words – they'd be ripped to shreds if they actually did – their actions exude that underlying "whatever" attitude all the time.

But there's a simple difference between them and us: they can afford to be apathetic about certain things, and we can't. When you're on top, lack of caring can get you ahead (at least until voters finally wake up and put you in your place, like what happened last November). When you're a college student struggling to get by, lack of caring is just an open invitation to have your rights trampled over. How are we supposed to beat problems like rising fees and exorbitant textbook prices; ignore them to death?

If language is a reflection of patterns of thought, then "whatever" is the language of the powerless and passive. Surely, as a generation, we can do better than that. So here's my New Year's challenge to those of us who have let whatever-ness creep into our daily lives: let's kick the habit and show the world that we're capable of much more than sitting on our heels.

Jackie Hai is a Collegian columnist.

Working toward our dreams

Debra Capellari

Recently I was asked a question that I can't seem to get out of my head. As active participants in the world around us, what do we deserve in return? It seems like it's such an easy question, something that we've all thought about, whether it be concerning our future endeavors after our stints at this University or what grade we think we should have received on that paper. When talking about what we may or may not deserve, it seems the trend is that people usually believe that they deserve more than what they already have.

It's typically human to believe that we deserve everything we can imagine for ourselves. Whatever you envision, whether it is a fancy car, a beautiful house, the perfect spouse or your dream job, somewhere in your stream of consciousness you believe that you deserve all of those things. And no one blames you for wanting the best things that you can get for yourself – don't you deserve to be comfortable?

Can we blame the media for our belief that we deserve all things imaginable? Wealth, comfort and fame are blatantly broadcast in our faces daily. What can be expected of us, but to lust after what we see on television? We witness the female antics of famous 20-somethings, the mediocre movies of star actors and actresses, and the elaborate, lavish houses in Hollywood hills that are occupied by those with their names in lights in the.

How about quoting the American Dream, maintaining that, as a citizen of this fine country, you have a given right to acquire anything you deem fit to acquire. After all, doesn't the American Dream imply that one can have anything he/she imagines for themselves? Isn't that the reason why it is so sought after? The illustrious American Dream has been ingrained in us since we were young. We deserve it; a piece of the proverbial American pie. It's time to get ours.

But we live in the real world where nearly none of us will ever live in the glitz and glamour of Hollywood's hills, where dreams come true seemingly without effort.

And the American Dream? Well, it's just that – a dream. One that can come true, yes, but not one that happens without some hard work. Yes, ladies and gentleman, that brings us back to the question at hand: what do we deserve? There seems to be some disillusionment among us, that we simply deserve anything we can imagine. I'm afraid to report that that's just not the case.

There seems to be some disillusionment among us, that we simply deserve anything we can imagine. I'm afraid to report that that's just not the case.

While our examples of the starlets of Hollywood and the illustrious American Dream seem to happen without effort, here in the real world, life takes effort. This brings us to the answer to our predicament. What do we deserve? We only deserve what we work for. Thoughts of fame and fortune, or the American dream coming true are only thoughts. The way to make the thoughts into a reality is to work hard for it. Nobody's saying it can't happen to you, but the bare truth is that it won't happen to you if you don't work hard for it.

So what do you do? Match how much you want for yourself with how hard you're willing to work to get what you want. If you want fame and fortune, be prepared to be working some long hours. If you're satisfied without the fame and fortune, set another goal for yourself. Do you want to be partner in the company by the time you're 35? Start now; it's never too early to start working toward what you imagine for yourself.

So, in amendment to our usual answer to the question: what do we deserve? We deserve everything we can imagine working for. You are directly responsible for the things you do and don't achieve.

If your achievements bring you happiness, this can only mean that you are directly responsible for your own happiness. Go out and make it for yourself.

Debra Capellari is a Collegian columnist

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

SOMETHING YOU DON'T LIKE? SOMETHNG STRIKE A NERVE?

TELL US WHAT'S ON YOUR MIND. YOUR OPINION MATTERS TO US.

GET HEARD BY YOUR PEERS. MAKE YOUR VOICE COUNT.

(550 WORD LIMIT)

Send an e-mail to: collegianeditorial@yahoo.com.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ON ABORTION

As a woman and a self-identified "liberal," one of the most important issues to me is the right to choose. Thanks to our forefathers who guaranteed our rights to privacy within the Bill of Rights, Roe v. Wade was ruled with the message that a woman's body and her reproductive rights were her private property, and consequently she can choose what she wants to do with it. There are plenty of laws surrounding patients' rights and the right to refuse care. So in what sense does an abortion, a medical treatment, deserve to be taken away?

And as open-minded as I would like to be towards alternate or opposing views to mine, I would appreciate the insult to my dignity as a woman to be from someone with a more credible view than Mr. Duffy on such a topic, like perhaps a woman who is pro-life. Granted, I feel men can have whatever opinion towards abortion as they would like, but in the end, it will always be a woman's decision.

Until law-makers and the Conservative Right can promise that every woman who is raped and left pregnant with her attacker's child will be given a suitable father for her child; until every man who has sex with a woman is required by law to stay and provide love and support for their child, just in case they conceive; until every child who is put up for adoption is guaranteed a loving family to raise him or her; until sex education becomes focused on contraceptives instead of the Right Wing, "morality"-based, abstinence-only policy; no man (or law-making body) should have the right to tell me that I cannot choose for myself and my child. Nor should he make a fool of himself by using the stereotypes of our country's polar ideologies to unsuccessfully support his ignorant, spoon-fed opinions.

Next time, let a woman deal with a woman's issue.

Alyssa Baglieri
UMass Student

DC DISSERTATION

This letter is in response to Kaitlyn Silva's article, "Control the Kids in the DC." The article suggests that the author has either never been a middle-school student, or has simply forgotten what it's like to be one. It just amazes that the author can be so critical of kids acting their own age.

The author writes, "As if being both surrounded and deterred by these little rascals weren't enough, they're also annoying us." I helped teach middle school students my senior year of high school, and their immaturity is something you have to rise above. It's only the nature of the age group. I think it's very welcoming that the University allows middle and high school students to eat lunch in the DC. A college, especially a public institution such as this, should be accommodating to its surrounding community. We feed some hungry kids out on their field trip, maybe saving their mothers some trouble (and trust me, the annoyingness Miss Silva discusses, is something parents deal with a whole lot more than the author does).

Were they letting murderers into the dining hall, I'd feel less safe than if I was around some noisy 13-year-olds with acne and hormones. It's the beginning of the semester, and I am just astounded that there is nothing more pressing to worry about.

The article reads "The hunger and horror are indescribable." This excerpt could have just as easily been taken from an article written on New Orleans following Katrina. Instead, it's someone dealing with limited choices and the noise of youth at lunchtime.

The idea of college is to prepare you for the real world. You may work with children, or try to avoid them as much as possible, but you will inevitably deal with them in public places as they hack their way through the process of growing up. Maturity only comes with time. It's important that we never forget how we once were.

Maybe it ruins your lunch for a day. All you can do is rise above it, act like an adult and eat a big dinner.

Michael Wilbwerth
UMass Student

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Angels' to showcase stylistic bliss

Amherst College musical hosts Five College cast

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Beginning tonight, the Amherst College music department will present the Broadway hit City of Angels at 8 p.m. at the Buckley Recital Hall in the Arms Music Center on the Amherst College campus. The "Film Noir" style musical comedy, which is considered to have artistic depth and a strong ethical message, will also run on Friday and Saturday of this week.

The "Film Noir" style of Angels refers to the cinematic term describing the low-key, black and white lighting of dramatic crime fiction films of Hollywood's depression-era. Hollywood's "Film Noir" era is said to have stretched from the 1940s to the 1950s, and commonly included filmic plots about private-eye detective stories. Similarly, half of Angels is set in the '40s, and features a hardboiled detective named Stone, who is hot on the trail of an absent heiress. However, the private eye's story makes up but half of the production's entire plot.

The other side of the Angels story follows Stine, a frazzled novelist who is adapting Stone, his creation, into a Hollywood screenplay. Stine's story is set in the present day, and features a more brightly-lit set décor, while Humphrey Bogart-type character, Stone, has a story set in the '40s with low lighting and black and white costuming – an "old movie" essence. Both stories are told simultaneously, in real time.

CITY OF ANGELS

AMHERST COLLEGE

FEB. 1 – FEB. 3

8 P.M.

The show is considered by critics and theater connoisseurs to be a visual feast, ricocheting between two glitzy worlds of excitement and intrigue.

Of the roughly 19 Angels cast members, roughly half are UMass Amherst students, along with some students from Smith College. Angels is part of an annual Interterm tradition at Amherst College, with past performances of Candide (2006), La Cage aux Folles (2005) and A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum (2004).

Director of Instrumental Music at Amherst College, Mark Lane Swanson said, "I want to choose shows that are an education." Swanson, who was the originator of the annual Interterm tradition, also said he hopes that the production of Angels will "hit a strong chord with college students," due to the show's focus on preserving creative integrity.

"A lot of Amherst kids are very strong writers," said Swanson. "The message of this show is about maintaining yourself in a commercial environment."

Angels was written by legendary Broadway composer, Cy Coleman and Larry Gelb, writer of hit TV series M*A*S*H, with lyrics by David Zippel. The original Broadway production ran between 1989 and 1992, showcasing a whopping total of 878 performances. Angels

See ANGELS on page 7

Here, students in the Amherst College Music Department's production of 'City of Angels' pose in a Film Noir style gangster shoot-out.

'Queen' meets royal reception on big screen

BY KATE BAUER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Helen Mirren is amazing. If she were American, I'd be proud to say she came from my country. Around for certainly longer than she may care to admit, the English native is only now receiving the international attention she deserves. And it's all thanks to a little film called The Queen.

THE QUEEN

DIRECTED BY STEPHEN FREARS

STARRING HELEN MIRREN

B+

In a tour de force performance Helen Mirren breathes life into 'The Queen,' a movie about the royal family's handling of the death of Princess Diana.

In reality there is little we know about the Queen of England's personality or her family's. Constantly bombarded by the press, the royal family has been reduced to nothing more than tabloid pictures of people living lifestyles we could only dream of. The Queen offers a glimpse into the very reserved and somewhat cold Windsor family.

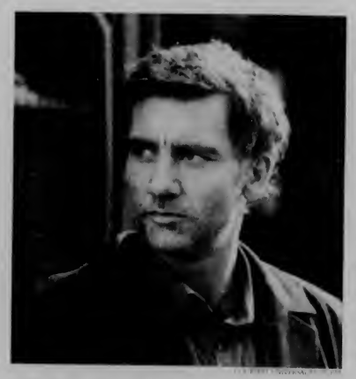
Prince Alfred, the Queen's husband, is a hard and arrogant, if not stubborn man who, upon hearing that Diana's name is in the papers again, angrily asks "What's she done now?" Charles, weak and nimble looking, comes off as somewhat of an idiot, his primary concern saving his own neck rather than protecting his family's.

Even the Queen Mother is nothing more than a descending old funny-buddy like that group of old women from "Head Over Hills." But it is Mirren's fantastic performance that breaths life into not only Queen Elizabeth II but her family as well; she's like the final piece of a puzzle, she's the glue. Helen Mirren plays Her Royal Highness with such fervor and splendor that you forget for a second that she is actually playing a character, not a real person in front of a camera.

The film, set during the week after Princess Diana's death in Paris, finds the Queen struggling to adjust in a world very different

See QUEEN on page 8

Mirren's Queen Elizabeth II is not the cold statue she may appear to be, but a reserved, elegant woman who deserves a little sympathy.



Clive Owen plays Theo, a man plagued by alcoholism and despair who has lost his only child and his relationship with Julianne Moore's character.

'Children of Men' delivers on promise

BY KATE BAUER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As he did with Harry Potter and The Prisoner of Azkaban, director Alfonso Cuarón has excelled at delivering stories to an audience, making you feel like what you are seeing on the screen truly exists. But with a film like Children of Men, that can be a chilling thought.

To put it bluntly, this is a downer of a film. Set only a few decades into the future, the world has been turned upside down into a war-torn and devastated place, and England remains the only intact and civilized country—at least to some degree. Women in the world are now unable to bear children, therefore literally putting a stop to life. And with the recent death of the youngest person on record, the world falls even further into despair.

People blame each other, the government, and even the environment for women's inability to conceive. God is no longer worshiped but protested against in the streets, and illegal immigrants are herded out of the country like, well, sheep.

Loosely based on the mystery novel of the same name by P.D. James, this story follows Theo (Clive Owen), a former peace activist who spends his days drowned in a bottle of booze, bantering back and forth with his hippie-like friend Jasper (Michael Caine), a strawberry pot-smoking pacifist who constantly tries to debate with Theo why there are no children. Other critics have referred to the film as a Blade Runner for the new generation, and you can certainly see the similarities—a society so bleak and dark that it feels like the end of the world. And unlike George Orwell's 1984 or the movie V for Vendetta, there seems to be no hope left, no

See CHILDREN on page 8

The last hope for a sterile world Kee, played by British newcomer Claire Hope Ashitey, is a young pregnant woman trying to escape the government.

'Pursuit' barely worthy

Smith film heartwarming, but tries too hard

BY KATE BAUER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Will Smith just has one of those faces. He can make you laugh, pay attention to his wise words or root for him when he fights a bad guy. But he's also got one of those faces that can gather the emotion to bring an audience to tears, or at least a sniffle. Watching him sitting in a chair trying not to burst into tears is enough to want to make you shed one.

So if you sit down to watch Smith in his newest flick, The Pursuit of Happyness, remember that we're used to seeing him play an action hero or comedian, and that it'll take a little getting used to seeing him portray a desperate dad.

Happyness, set in 1981 during America's bad economic times in San Francisco is about a man and his son – a man who will do whatever he can to ensure that his son is cared for and knows who his father is. Since Chris Gardner (Smith) didn't meet his dad until he was 28, he wants to ensure, and dutifully reminds the audience, that he wants his children to know who their father is.

'Based on a true story/ Inspired by true events' are those two simple phrases that informs an audience this is going to be a tale about someone who has beat the odds, who showed they could make something of themselves. Though Smith may give one heck of a performance, this film ultimately falls into the category of "another one of those movies based on real people." It is an overused and tired-out topic.

What really makes this film not worth the $8 at the theatre is the pace. The slow-moving plot ruins the sympathy needed to be acquired from an audience. Just over two hours long, the film contains too much extra material that has no place in the film, such as Gardner's daily routine. So instead of crying when you see Gardner forced to spend a night in a locked train station bathroom with his son, you're too busy trying to stay focused on what's going on the screen.

Like in some of his past films, Smith comes to save the day with his modest and moving performance. It's thanks to him the film stays on its feet. A wonderful performance by his real life son Jaden, who plays Gardner's son Christopher, provides the cute factor.

The title's misspelling of "happyness" refers to the word written on the wall outside of Christopher's preschool. The misspelling represents the bottom of the barrel, undereducated life Chris has been forced to give his son because he can't afford to give him anything better.

In the beginning of the film, Gardner's voiceover asks what it takes to achieve happiness, and it is that which serves as the plot of the film, as Gardner's reason for taking an unpaid internship at Dean Witter in hopes of becoming a stockbroker is to provide his son with a better life. Chris is good at numbers, and he figures the internship is a good shot at actually getting somewhere farther then living in a moldy apartment and wearing the same blue suit every day.

The internship, if he succeeds in the end, would mean a job and a paycheck. But until then, Chris is left with no income except his freelance career as a salesman, stuck with selling bone-density scanners (whose packaging resembles that of the first portable computers), which aren't exactly flying off the shelves. Chris is then forced to move from his crummy apartment to an even crummier hotel room before living at shelters.

Smith's performance at best would be called modest, something new and surprising from such a strong personality. His silent, mounting fury or wide-eyed happiness is enchanting and enthralling to watch. If this film is at all worth seeing in the theatre, then it's to see this superb actor, who just seems to be getting better with age.

Living in a homeless shelter with his confused and frustrated son, Will Smith's Chris Gardner still spends each day in a suit and tie at the investment firm Dean Witter.

Father and son duo Will and Jaden Smith show genuine affection in the touching movie 'Pursuit of Happyness,' directed by Gabriele Muccino.

'Angels' set to fly away tonight with Five College student cast won six Tony Awards, including Best Musical in 1990, and still receives critical praise as what the New York Times calls "a tough period satire with stylistic perfection."

ANGELS from page 6

Amherst's production of Angels took a meager three weeks of rehearsal, which Swanson considers to be startlingly impressive, especially considering that professional productions take between six and eight weeks.

"This show is a wonderful opportunity to showcase the incredible talent and commitment of students in the area," said Swanson.

The Interterm program works closely with the UMass Theater Guild, and intentionally avoids putting on productions that has been done by the Guild. When selecting each show, program coordinators try to choose vehicles which are both well-written classics of the genre of Broadway musical, but are not always the first musicals that come to mind. Other considerations are that it teaches about a particular musical style, and delivers a message.

In the production of La Cage aux Folles (The Bird Cage), the social message was about diversity. In the case of Candide, based on Voltaire, the message was toleration of political descent, as the music was written around the McCarthy era.

The Five College student cast is directed by A. Scott Parry, and as in past years, features the Amherst College Orchestra in the "pit." The Amherst College Department of Music and the Association of Amherst Students fund the production.

The production's coordinators anticipate a robust turn out, and recommend reservations, which are available at city-of-angels@amherst.edu. General admission tickets are $12, $7 and $4, but the show is free to all Amherst College students.

Morgan-ann Rousseau is the Arts and Living editor and can be reached at Collegianarts@gmail.com.

Interesting in getting published?

Write for Arts and Living!

Email collegianarts@gmail.com

whosyourpadre.com

CANCUN, ACAPULCO, NEGRIL, MOBAY, NASSAU, PADRE, FLORIDA, CRUISES, AND MORE!

Join the Party!!!

SPRING BREAK

STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES

STS Flight Finder™

Save Hundreds on Spring Break Packages!!!

Search airfares to Mexico and the Caribbean and save up to $300 per person. Best Deals Guaranteed!

1.800.648.4849

www.ststravel.com

Student Special

4 MONTHS $149

· Aerobics · Mixed Martial Arts
· Free wts

www.amherstathletic.com

AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 80 AMHERST

SKYPLEX

SPRINGFIELD'S HOTTEST NIGHTCLUB

3 CLUBS & 3 DJ'S ALL UNDER ONE ROOF!!!

"LA & NYC NIGHTLIFE COMES TO SPRINGFIELD"

Thursday - 18+ College Night "Hot Body Contest"

Friday - 18+ "Underground Electronic Dance Party" Downstairs "Top 40" Upstairs

Saturday - 21+ "Party VIP Style"

WANTED: HIP YOUNG PROMOTERS/HOSTS • Earn $$$$

Calling all DJ's

Do you do campus and house parties? Looking for a chance to work at the HOTTEST Nightclub? Here's your chance to become a Club DJ! Signup online at www.info.skyplex.us

18+ $2.00 off admission before midnight with this ad

21+ FREE admission before midnight with this ad

code:umass

10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA 413-827-9000

WHERE IMAGINATION MEETS INNOVATION

UMass Amherst Fine Arts Center Series Spring 2007

Cirque Éloize

Tuesday and Wednesday, February 6 & 7 at 7:30 PM

The circus numbers, both on the ground and in the air, promise heart-stopping panache accompanied by an awesome mix of all things magical. On our stage, not only rain will fall; surprises will pour down as well.

Concert Hall Sponsored by El Dalleo, Family Fun, WRNX 100.9FM, Bank of America

DBR & THE MISSION

Thursday, February 15 at 7:30 PM

Seamlessly blending funk, rock, hip-hop and classical music, DBR & THE MISSION is a revolutionary blend of an amplified string quartet, DJ keyboards, bass, drums and lap tops. DBR is a classical-urban ambassador for the iPod generation.

Bowker Auditorium Sponsored by The River, Advocate, Juster Pope Frazier Architects. Funded in part by the Expeditions program of the New England Foundation for the Arts

Natalie MacMaster

Wednesday, February 28 at 7:30 PM

Natalie MacMaster is one of Canada's biggest stars and a fiddling, singing, and step-dancing fireball on stage. She never fails to bring down the house.

Concert Hall Sponsored by Recorder, Kidspeace, The River

TICKETS ARE ON SALE NOW!

TICKETS ARE ONLY $57 $10 $15 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS

UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER www.fineartscenter.com

CALL 545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS WWW.FINEARTSCENTER.COM

'Shepherd' fair at beginning

By Kate Bauer
Collegian Staff

If you really think about it, there is not much known about the secret governmental agency, the Central Intelligence Agency, or the CIA. Sure, there have been rumors and accusations about the organization's involvement in historical U.S. events, but is there any real proof as to what the CIA has accomplished, or dissuaded, over its history?

The film, The Good Shepherd, Robert De Niro's first directing gig since A Bronx Tale, follows American Edward Wilson (Matt Damon) through the covert foundings of the CIA, set from World War II to the beginning of the space race.

Everything is seen through Wilson's eyes, from the start of his career in England to Germany to the Dominican Republic. Using a very lyrical dialogue, filled with 'sayings' and 'one-liners,' Eric Roth's script is smart, almost too smart for its own good. The film, which goes for almost three hours, is slow-paced, enough so that if you're not paying close attention, or even staying awake, you'll miss the real story. This film isn't just about the CIA's startup, but about a man's never-ending pursuit to protect his country, no matter the consequences he may face.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD

DIRECTED BY ROBERT DE NIRO

STARRING MATT DAMON

B+

A former Skull and Bones Society member Matt Damon's Edward Wilson is recruited to help found the predecessor to the CIA.

Wilson is known in his circle of colleagues and acquaintances as the man made of stone. He rarely reveals his emotions, only allowing a flicker of feelings to ever cross his face and it's this attitude that makes him the perfect kind of counterintelligence operative. He is literally a living machine. Never shown to either sleep or eat. Wilson is so quiet and reserved, he's not only a machine, but a living statue. If this guy were a poker player, he'd be an ace at the poker face.

The film also boasts a strong supporting cast, including De Niro himself. Alec Baldwin plays Sam Murach, an FBI agent who recruits Wilson, and John Turturro is Wilson's right-hand man Ray Brocco. They all give strong, if not entirely needed, material to the film. Billy Crudup steps in as the English counterpart (who can't pull off an English accent) to Damon's American agent, Michael Gambon (Dumbledore from the last two Harry Potter films) is Dr. Fredericks, a Yale professor who gives Wilson his only warning: "Get out while you still can, while you still have a soul," only to have his own obscure and sociable lifestyle cost him his life.

Cold, emotionless and monotone, Damon's portrayal is one of those performances that sneak up on you. What's so great about a guy who never cries, yells or even remotely acts like a living human being? Well, it's exactly that which makes his performance so great. His stoicism is so absorbing that you're captivated enough to want him to express some kind of emotion, hoping there actually might be some kind of human behind those cold blue eyes.

But while Wilson may be the perfect agent, his personality and lifestyle affect all those around him. One night at a Skull and Bones dinner, another secret organization he was inducted into while he was a student at Yale, Wilson meets Clover (Angelina Jolie), a slightly smutty and pompous girl who has been brought up into a privileged lifestyle and thinks she can have any man she chooses. She pursues Wilson, and therefore brings about her downfall.

As the film progresses Clover changes from a young vivacious girl to a miserable and frustrated married woman. Though Angelina certainly is no longer young enough to pull off a young carefree woman, her transformation into a despaired woman who has lost her chance at a happy life is effective and provides an interesting counter to Wilson's lack of personality.

If a man like Wilson is willing to sacrifice his life for God and country, does that make him someone to admire? The film certainly offers no answers to that question, and by the last frame of the film, as Wilson walks through the corridors of the CIA's headquarters, stoop-shouldered and aged, the film almost asks if you would feel sympathy for a man who has given up his life and happiness for a country that never returned him the favor.

Angelina Jolie plays a depressed housewife who loses touch with her husband as he becomes increasingly more isolated by his career.

'Children of Men' delivers new view

CHILDREN from page 6

possible way out of this hell. That is until Julian, Theo's ex-lover and mother of his dead child, turns up to ask Theo for a favor. Julian must transport a young refugee girl named Kee to England's border, and she needs Theo's help.

Reluctantly Theo agrees to aid Julian in her plight, and in doing so, becomes swept up with the anarchistic activists the Fishes, a group of rag-tag citizens led by Julian, during their dangerous journey to deliver Kee. They need to bring the girl to a secret renegade society known only as The Human Project who will hopefully be able to protect her from the government.

Exactly why Kee needs such protection is made apparent when she reveals to Theo that she is pregnant—the first pregnant woman in 18 years. Realizing now how important Kee's safety is, Theo sets off to help her reach England's coast and meet the mysterious Human Project.

This film is not something that can be easily swallowed. And yet this film is a true piece of outstanding filmmaking. With a script delivered by its actors directly and to the point, Cuaron excels at making viewers feel as if they were sitting right next to Theo enjoying a joint with Jasper, or walking through a deserted preschool.

Cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezki and Cuaron use hand-held cameras to follow Theo through the entire film as he makes his journey with Kee. And it's hard not to take your eyes off of Owen's rugged appearance and conflicting emotions as he tries to deal with new events thrown his way. By the end of the film you have seen him transform into a true believer that the world has a chance of continuing on.

Sometimes the film leans more towards the theatrical than cinematic; sometimes what is happening is too overbearing on the screen. Yet, that is Cuaron's style and gift. As hard, brutal and unyielding as "Children of Men" may be, Cuaron's story and work overall focuses on the lives of people and their emotional struggles.

CHILDREN OF MEN

DIRECTED BY ALFONSO CUARON

STARRING CLIVE OWEN

A+

In his 2001 film, Y Tu Mama Tambien, Cuaron focused on the struggles of growing up. In the third Harry Potter, it was about how we deal with and handle our emotions. Because of Cuaron's work, the Prisoner of Azkaban has been the best reviewed movie of the Harry Potter series. I would consider Children of Men to be his best work to date, and there is promise that his work will continue to grow.

Mirren rules 'Queen' with star performance from the one in which she grew up in. Coming to rule right during the height of World War II, the Queen was brought up to not wear her heart on her sleeve, and it is this action that showed her strength and resilience during the war. But now the world has changed. Following Diana's death (which was displayed using both archival and recreated images) the Queen informs her staff and the Prime Minister that no family member will speak openly about the ex-princess's death. And yet this action is precisely what she should not do, as is made evident through the passing week, as tabloids and news stations flash negative and denoting messages about the royal family's behavior. The newly elected Prime Minister Tony Blair (Michael Sheen) tries to persuade the Queen, first subtly, and then more forcefully, that she must make some statement to the people, only to be reminded by the Queen's staff that this is how she is, there is no use trying to change her.

QUEEN from page 6

Mirren portrays Elizabeth in the most appropriate and effective way: as a queen. Every gesture, handshake, look or move is refinement and elegance, a woman straight-backed and proud to display her family's long history.

Though we may find the Queen's actions (or lack thereof) inapt, Mirren nevertheless manages to make them, and the Queen's feelings, true and justifiable. Mirren's grace and dexterity are nothing short of amazing. And yet the Queen has her faults.

Just when we think she is nothing more than a hardnosed ruler with emotion to match a marble statue, we see that she actually does feel, and suffer. Sitting in bed watching the news, Elizabeth takes a hand to her chin, concerned that the people of England are angered that no one from the royal family has come forward to speak about the late Princess of Wales.

Sitting on a riverbank on the Windsor estate, Elizabeth allows herself a few tears, and the simple act creates nothing short of sympathy from the audience for a woman in her position. Not only has she lost a daughter in law, but now faces the possibility that her country will shun her because of her inactions.

The film, elegantly directed by Stephen Frears, gives an open and simplistic look into a lifestyle that is rapidly "falling out of style." In the opening scenes of The Queen, Blair, on his way to meet the Queen, is reminded fervently on how he must act in the presence of Her Royal Highness, to which Blair's wife Cherie smirks and roles her eyes.

Though many like Cherie may consider the Queen to be "emotionally retarded," when she and Blair enter to first meet the queen you can see the awe in their eyes at meeting such an elegant and respected lady. And what a heck of a lady she is. To put it bluntly, this woman rules a country. And it makes perfect sense that Mirren rules as the Queen in this film.

PREMIER MASSACHUSETTS NIGHT CLUB
ARE YOU INTERESTED IN DANCING?
Earn $$$$ for school or fun
Wanted:
Bartenders
Shotgirls
Entertainers
Big $$$ Potential
Learn average $400 a night
No Experience Necessary
Flexible hours
Positions open immediately
Call for more details!
Anthony's Strip Club
(413)246-0299

UMass YOGA
In Boyden 10
Spring 2007
(Monday, February 5 - May 15)
FREE Intro Classes
Mon-Thur Jan. 29 - Feb. 1
Mon/Wed
2:00-3:15 pm Power Yoga
3:30-4:45 pm Yoga Basics
Tues/Thurs
1:00-2:15 pm Yoga Basics
2:30-3:45 pm Intermediate
4:00-5:15 pm Yoga Basics
Early Bird Special!
1 class per week -$80 Only $65!
2 classes per week $150 $120!
For more info or to register
Campus Recreation ▪ Boyden 215
413-545-0022 ▪ umassyoga.com

A-10 teams struggle in league schedule

W. BASKETBALL from page 12

last week. Head coach Dawn Staley received the Henry P. Iba Citizenship Award, given by the Rotary Club of Tulsa. The award is named in honor of a former Oklahoma State coach Henry Iba. Past winners include Drew Bledsoe and Rebecca Lobo.

THE CREAM RISES TO THE TOP

When the teams of the A-10 ended the non-conference portions of their schedule, many of the weaker teams in the conference had records that raised a few eyebrows.

Massachusetts (12-10, 2-5 A-10) feasted on weaker opponents like Vermont and New Hampshire. But when it came time for the Minutewomen to take on tougher conference opponents, they performed poorly – getting off to a 2-5 start in the A-10.

La Salle (15-7, 3-4 A-10), led by the duo of Carlene Hightower and Crista Ricketts, posted a 12-3 record before conference play began. Ricketts and Hightower have won A-10 Player of the Week Award a combined five times. The high-scoring duo hasn't slowed, but poor bench performance hurt the Explorers in their four conference losses.

George Washington (18-2, 7-0 A-10) and Temple were chosen as the class of the conference at the beginning of the season and this prediction is certainly coming to fruition.

The defending champion Owls are 6-0 in the league and are in good shape for the rest of the season. Their most difficult contest of the season lies in its final contest. They travel to the nation's capital for a showdown with the No. 11 George Washington Colonials.

The Colonials are 7-0 in conference and are considered to be far better than most teams in the A-10. The matchup between the Colonials and the Owls should decide the regular season A-10 Championship.

THE HIGHS AND THE LOWS

GW is in the midst of an 11-game winning streak, which began on Dec. 12 when it defeated Liberty. In their seven games in the A-10, the Colonials have averaged 66.2 points per game.

Their only losses have come to No. 4 Maryland, the defending National Champion Terrapins were atop the pools at that point in time, and No. 3 Tennessee. The Volunteers are a traditional powerhouse – the Lady Vols occupied the No. 6 spot in the rankings when they defeated GW.

The Colonials put their streak on the line next against Richmond on Feb. 3 – three of GW's next five games are on the road before closing the regular season out with home games with St. Joe's and the potential first place-second-place matchup with Temple.

The Fordham Rams (2-19, 0-7 A-10) are not in the midst of a win streak, but have amassed a rather dubious streak of their own.

They have dropped 13 games in a row, with their last victory coming on Dec. 7 at home against Yale. The smallest margin of defeat suffered by the Rams is the 10-point loss to Richmond in their last contest.

The Rams look for their first win in the A-10 on Friday when they travel to Kingston, R.I., for a game with Rhode Island (5-16, 3-4 A-10).

49ERS GOLDEN IN 21 STRAIGHT AT HOME

The Charlotte 49ers (15-7, 6-1 A-10) own the nation's fifth-longest home winning streak – it sits at 21. Their last home loss came on Dec. 18, 2005 to Old Dominion.

Charlotte is in 11-0 this season at Halton Arena. The 49ers' next home game is against Fordham, so the streak should continue. But Charlotte faces two tough opponents after that with GW in town on Feb. 15 and Temple on the 18th.

The 49ers are 4-7 on the road and have four road games in their remaining seven overall. Good teams are those that can consistently get wins on the road and Charlotte will need to do this if they're to make any noise in the conference tournament and beyond.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Mitchell, Green hog award

M. BASKETBALL from page 12

Culkin's visitors in "Home Alone."

The powerhouses of the A-10 have combined for just one home loss this season. The Musketeers and the Colonials collide with one another on Feb. 10 – game which, in all likelihood, will be decided by a few points and may also determine who receives the top seed in the A-10 Tournament. That's good news for George Washington, which hosts the Musketeers in one of the marquee A-10 matchups of the year.

In fact, the Colonials (15-4, 6-1 A-10) are riding a 24-game winning streak at home after taking out the Saint Joseph's Hawks, 74-65, and are outscoring their A-10 opponents by an average margin of 12 points in those affairs. George Washington's success doesn't change on the road either. The Colonials lone A-10 road loss this season came to UMass at the Mullins Center.

Up north in Ohio, Xavier welcomed its one-millionth fan to the Cintas Center, according to the official Atlantic 10 website. Those fans may have played a role in Xavier's success at home the past six seasons. The Musketeers are 9-1 at home this season and are undefeated at home versus A-10 teams. Xavier's only home loss of the season came to Bucknell. Xavier has had a tough time on the road this season, currently standing at 3-5, but has split its away games preceding the Musketeers' matchup at Duquesne Wednesday night.

Fordham currently boasts the best road winning percentage in the A-10 with three wins against LaSalle, Duquesne and Richmond. Fordham's only road blemish in the A-10 this season came to George Washington, 70-59. The Colonials will have the chance to tie Fordham's three conference road wins when they travel to Dayton (13-7, 3-4 A-10) to take on Brian Roberts and the Flyers Wednesday night.

AWARD HOGGERS

Discrimination, that is, of the good kind, characterizes the Rookie of the Week award in the A-10 this season. Duquesne's Robert Mitchell and LaSalle's Rodney Green have collected the award four and three times, respectively. Mitchell is the league's most recent recipient, while Green last won the award on Jan. 21.

The A-10 had no choice but to recognize Mitchell's efforts in Duquesne's victories over the Dayton Flyers on Jan. 24 and Temple three days later. He averaged 17 points and shot 48 percent from the field in Duquesne's two wins over A-10 foes.

The Explorers may not be ready to compete for a serious run in the A-10 postseason with a 9-12 overall record and just a 2-5 record in conference play, but that has not stopped Green from showing glimpses of what he will bring to the table for the next few years at La Salle. Green has contributed over 13 points a contest, bested only by his companion in the backcourt, Darnell Harris, who is averaging 15 points a ballgame. Harris had a season-high 32 points in a win over Pennsylvania on Jan. 18 and had his highest point total against an A-10 opponent in an 87-73 loss to the St. Bonaventure Bonnies.

Saint Louis Billikens sophomore guard Kevin Lisch joined Christmas in collecting A-10 Co-Player of the Week honors on Jan. 28. The A-10 took notice after Lisch dropped a career-high 28 points in a 76-63 win over the Charlotte 49ers (8-11, 2-5 A-10) on Jan. 25. Jimmy Baron has been a consistent threat from beyond the arc all season long and has been one of the key figures in the Rhode Island Rams' (13-9, 6-2 A-10) resurgent season. In fact, Baron is having better luck downtown than he has from inside the arc this season. Despite shooting a healthy 48 percent from the field, Baron is shooting a staggering 50 percent from behind the 3-point line. The Rams' guard's recent downtown outburst came against the Colonials when he shot 5-for-10 from 3-point range in a losing effort, 82-78. The game marked the fifth time this season that Baron made five 3-pointers in a game and he is now ranked third in the nation in 3-point field-goal percentage.

Justin Doellman and Xavier are currently in fifth place in the Atlantic 10 with a 5-3 conference record. Doellman is averaging 13 points per game for the Musketeers, good for first on the team.

Kevin Dudley is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at kdudley@student.umass.edu

CSTV Atlantic A10 SHOOTOUT 2007
PONTIAC SmartEdge by GMAC
Coca-Cola UMass SPALDING The Daily Collegian wmua COMPETE FOR A CHANCE TO WIN A TRIP TO ATLANTIC CITY FOR A SHOT AT $10,000
— PLUS OTHER GREAT PRIZES! —
EVERY PARTICIPANT GETS A T-SHIRT, FREE FOOD & A GOODIE BAG
Open to men, women, and co-ed teams of two. Single participants can enter & get matched upon site to form teams.
UMass MINUTEMEN
February 2, 4:30PM
The Cage
Visit a10shootout.com for event registration & more details

UMass answers coaches' challenge and fellow senior, Mary Jenkins won.

SWIMMING from page 12

Fatigue no match for UMass

The Minutemen and Minutewomen knew that the training schedules created by Yarworth and UMass women's swimming coach Bob Newcomb at the beginning of the season would be grueling.

But the Maroon and White appear to be up to the challenge. Almost weekly the coaches report that their squads had their best training sessions of the season, which bodes well for their fate at A-10 Championships.

"Tuesday afternoon was one of the best workouts we've had all year," Yarworth said. "I really threw a quality challenging workout at them, and their response was great attitude-wise and even better performance-wise. Three weeks out from championships, you want to start seeing that speed coming together."

Both the men and women have one final meet this weekend before the resting period prior to A-10 Championships and are confident that the high level of training they maintained throughout the season will propel them to success in Buffalo, N.Y.

"I like where we are right now. We're 21 days out as of [Wednesday]," Newcomb said. "Now, it's all about letting them rest and we'll all rest in different ways over the next three weeks but everybody's going to be ready to swim really fast when we get to Buffalo."

Joe Melton is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at jmelton@student.umass.edu

Senior Greg Chartier placed first in the 200-yard butterfly during UMass' meet against Colgate and Binghamton on Jan. 27. The Minutemen also came in first place as a team. They have two meets before the Atlantic 10 Championships, which are being held in Buffalo, N.Y.

Parker, York face in historic showdown dependability of senior forward Jason Tejchma.

HOCKEY EAST from page 12

"Tejchma's had a very solid year," MacDonald said. "He does a very good job killing penalties for us. I don't look at him as a prolific goal scorer, but he's had to lead us in that area. He really is a great leader by example in how he conducts himself both on and off the ice. He's a great role model for our younger guys."

The co-captain leads the River Hawks in scoring this season with nine goals and nine assists. However, those numbers are only tied for twenty-fifth best individually in the conference.

Consequently, UML has the second worst offense in the league, scoring 1.89 goals per game on average.

Goaltender Tyler Sims and Providence College have found it difficult to replicate their success from last season. They currently sit in eighth place.

Although MacDonald brought in several promising freshmen on defense, especially Nick Schaus, Jeremy Dehner and Barry Goers, UMass Lowell has the worst goals-against average in Hockey East (3.44).

The River Hawks' situation at goaltender is representative of the rest of the team. After two-year starter Peter Vetri decided to leave the program, MacDonald has used the tandem of freshman Carter Hutton and sophomore Vinny Monaco in net.

"They've played well and then had some tough moments as well," MacDonald said. "What I do know is that our team really enjoys playing in front of them. They have great work ethic and they communicate very well with their defense in the defensive zone. I'm very optimistic that the experience they're getting this year will pay dividends down the road."

The season is not over by any stretch of the imagination – UML needs only six points to eclipse Providence for the last spot in the Hockey East Tournament. But the River Hawks would certainly need to win the HEA Championship in order to qualify for the sixteen-team NCAA tournament.

Unless the River Hawks turn things around in a hurry, fans will only be able to take solace in the fact that the future should be better than the present.

"People who have been around our program and see us play every game, say it's probably as fast, quick and skilled as we've had since I've been here," MacDonald said. "It's a tough league to cut your teeth with such a young team. They've done very well. They come early, they stay late. The future is extremely exciting for them."

MacDonald and the River Hawks will have a chance to improve their situation with away games at No. 7 Boston University (13-5-7, 10-4-6 HEA) and No. 19 Massachusetts (12-8-4, 9-6-2 HEA) this weekend.

Another Decline

In the style and grace of UMass Lowell, or lack there of, Providence College (6-17-1, 5-11-1 HEA) has plummeted in the standings compared to last year's success.

The Friars finished with a 14-10-3 conference record in 2005-06, good enough for fifth place in the league. They began the first half 8-2-1 in Hockey East and were tied with Boston College for first place at the midseason break.

But the team clearly benefited from a relatively easy early schedule. Consequently, the team's second half performance suffered and is more indicative of this year. PC stumbled to the finish with a 6-8-2 record in conference play. The substandard play culminated in a two-game series sweep at the hands of New Hampshire in the first round of the Hockey East Tournament.

Even though Providence lost some offensive talent to graduation, including leading scorer Jorry Gadja, the goal production of its returning forwards is significantly down from last season.

Senior Colin McDonald had 29 points in 2005-06, but has only 11 this season. Similarly, junior Jon Rheault is far from matching his 16 goal and 14 assist production from last year, with 12 points.

In fact, perplexed coach Tim Army has not been able to figure out his team's woes in the offensive zone.

"We just haven't been able to finish off the plays this season," Army said. "I think it gets to a point where you've got players really gripping their sticks a little too tight and pressing out there, and that's something that we're trying to address. It's much better for an offensive player to be relaxed with the puck and to have some fun with it out there [and] that breeds success and a lot more confidence with the puck."

One bright spot in Providence's play this season is the penalty kill. The special-teams unit ranks first in power-play goals allowed, having only surrendered eight in 76 situations.

This weekend, the Friars will try to increase their goal production with two games at No. 14 Vermont (14-8-4, 9-4-3 HEA).

Boston University coach Jack Parker (above) and Boston College coach Jerry York became the first pair of 750-win coaches to face one another.

Legendary Coaches

Last week's games between Boston University and No. 13 Boston College marked the first time that two coaches with 750 wins faced each other. Of course, the two coaches are Jack Parker of BU and Jerry York of BC.

Although both individuals coach at their alma maters, Parker has the distinction of earning all of his wins at one school. He guided his teams to national championships in 1978 and 1995 and 21 NCAA Tournament appearances.

"[My 750th career win] was also the 1,300th win in Boston University history, so I was shocked to realize that I have more than half of the wins," Parker said. "Longevity is really the key to any milestone like that. I've been fortunate to be coaching at a school with a great hockey history for a long time. In addition to longevity, it also has a lot to do with great assistant coaches and getting great players."

One bright spot in Providence's play this season is the penalty kill. The special-teams unit ranks first in power-play goals allowed, having only surrendered eight in 76 situations.

This weekend, the Friars will try to increase their goal production with two games at No. 14 Vermont (14-8-4, 9-4-3 HEA).

York, on the other hand, coached at Clarkson and Bowling Green before returning home to BC. He won a national championship at Bowling Green in 1984 and another with the Eagles in 2001, seven years after taking over the program. Although York reached the milestone first, he has an extra year of coaching experience than Parker.

"I think it's terrific," York said. "Our longevity for us to stay in the game this long, and hopefully, we have contributed at our institutions, and more importantly to college hockey."

Beanpot

The 2007 edition of college hockey's most famous tournament begins on Monday with two games at the TD Banknorth Garden in Boston. BU plays Northeastern in the 5 p.m. game, while BC and Harvard face off at 8 p.m. Both games will be televised on NESN.

The Terriers have far and away the most tournament victories with 27. In fact, that number is more than twice as many as the school with the next highest amount of wins, BC with 13. BU is also the defending champion, having defeated the Eagles, 3-2, in last year's final ... UNH is ranked No. 1 in the USCHO.com/CSTV Poll for the first time since 2003 ... Northeastern's 6-1 win over Maine (16-7-2, 9-7-1 HEA) on Friday night was the first win for the Huskies at Alfond Arena since November of 1998 ... The conference named Merrimack senior goaltender Jim Healey its Player of the Week. He saved 77 of 79 shots in a pair of 1-1 ties at Vermont this past weekend.

Michael King is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Tired of the Dorms?

IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE

Lincoln Real Estate

25 N. Pleasant St.
253-7879
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Now accepting applications for June 2006

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
Aerobics · Mixed
Free wts · Martial Arts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 90 AMHERST

Stay Tan 'til the End of School!
BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
Spring Special! Tan from NOW until Memorial Day for $99
65 University Drive • ph 549-HOTT

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441
Mexican Beer Sale! Tecate, Sol', Dos Equis $9.99 12 pk bots Take Your Choice!
Harpoon (All Flavors) Mendocino Ted Tail Ale Spaten Lager Your Choice $10.99 12/pk bots
All Beers Plus Deposit
Giant Wine Sale! Save 10-50% on many wines Additional 10% off 6 bottles or more, including ones already marked down!
Popov Premium Vodka $9.99 1.75 Liter, 80 Proof

OPEN WEDNESDAY, VALENTINE'S DAY 5PM–10PM
Goten OF JAPAN STEAKHOUSE
FAMOUS FOR CAPTIVATING CUISINE PREPARED AT YOUR TABLE
RT. 116, SUNDERLAND 413-665-3628

Attention First-Year Students:
Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, March 12th. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website,
www.umass.edu/uhs
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

Seven O's
♦KARAOKE♦ EVERY WEDNESDAY
♦OPEN MIC♦ EVERY THURSDAY
LIVE BAND: SATURDAY ♦FEBRUARY 3, 2007♦ SHUT UP & DANCE
PLEASE JOIN US ON THURSDAY'S ♦ROCK, PAPER & SCISSORS♦ ♦TOURNAMENT♦ FEBRUARY 8, 2007
WIN THE BIG PRIZE: "GO TO LAS VEGAS!"
STUDENT BAND WANTED
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F 1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN NEXT TO CUTTING EDGE APTS

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		4	1	6
						4	9
					5	8		4
3	6						2	7
8		5	6
	2	8
				2	1	7
	5	6	9		7

Quote of the Day

"Doing the Bull Dance, feeling the flow. Working it, working it."

-Kevin Nealon "Happy Gilmore"

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

UHOA.
LATER...
YOU WANT US 2 TO WHAT NOW?
COME WITH ME TO THE GYM. I CAN'T GO BACK THERE ALONE. EVERYONE IS MUGGY.
UGH. CAN'T YOU JUST GIVE UP LIKE EVERYBODY ELSE? I MEAN IT'S ALMOST FEBRUARY.
YEAH, BE LIKE THAT GUY AND EMBRACE YOUR FLAWS.
CARPE DIEM, BUCKETHEAD.

Wombat By Neil Bryer

SO HOW DID YOU TWO MEET?
WE WORK AT THE STORE TOGETHER
YEAH, WE BOTH ANSWERED A CALL FOR HELP IN THE LINGERIE DEPARTMENT AND IT WAS LOVE AT FIRST SITE
OH SURE. WHEN YOU HELP A LADY IN THE LINGERIE DEPARTMENT IT'S PART OF YOUR "JOB"! BUT WHEN I DO IT, I'M SOME KIND OF PERVERT!

A College Girl Named Joe By Aaron Warner

THE BEST THING ABOUT GOING AWAY TO COLLEGE IS FINALLY DOING THINGS ON MY OWN!
SINCE NO ONE'S HERE TO TELL ME WHAT TO DO, I CAN PARTY ALL THE TIME, STAY OUT ALL NIGHT, AND GO HIT ALL THE BARS!
SO WHAT DO YOU WANT TO DO TONIGHT?
NOTHING.

Welcome To Falling Rock Park By Josh Shalek

Hi Ernesto
You have a piece of fuzz on your head, Ernesto
Oh yeah? Well you've got an ugly face and you're stupid
The difference is, I can remove the fuzz
Thank You, Mr Churchill

The Sonny & Cher of the Animal Kingdom: www.joshsholek.com kid_shoy@joshsholek.com

ACROSS
1 The 4 Seasons singer Frankie
6 Exploded
10 Former SNL rivet
14 Biblical patriarch
15 Stout's Wolfe
16 Mrs. Dithers of "Blondie"
17 Designer Clark
18 Know-nothing
20 Set the stage for
22 Least cooked
23 Faberge item
24 Vex
26 Wiesbaden's state
27 Grammy
29 Bay window
31 Instigates litigation
32 Keeps busy
34 Touched down
36 L.A. summer hrs.
37 Confederate
39 Incite
41 One NCO
44 Salty drop
46 Marie's milieu
50 Scarlett's estate
52 Great Mountains
54 Display muscle
55 Arkin and King
57 Rouen's river
59 Picnic spoiler
60 Root for salads
62 Edible rockfish
64 Rogel's book
66 Available buyer
67 Asian country
68 Good fortune
69 Occurrence of note
70 Best or Ferber
71 Spacious boats
72 Landlord's revenue

DOWN
1 Tempestuous
2 Alrican javelin
3 Pasta dish
4 Deposited
5 Frost over
6 Go between
7 Guiltansl Andres
8 European eagle
9 Access indication
10 Alarms
11 Arises
12 Hog-tied
13 Most extensive
19 Cheerleader's cheer
21 "The Court"
25 Morays or congers
28 Candler of Coca-Cola
30 Mouth the words
33 Most remote, briefly
35 Egyptian boy king
38 Thanksgiving veggies
40 Brit. flyboys
41 Frighten
42 Knight of the Round Table
43 Exploit
45 Sears, & Company
47 Delame
48 Not severe
49 Coerces
51 Jones of "Family Affair"
53 Small gazebos
56 9-digit ID org.
58 Food consumer
61 ... Hoop
63 Stalactite site
65 Play about mech. men

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

the Moan and Dove
Come to our annual fck Valentine's day party.
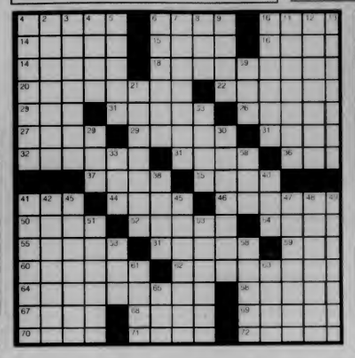
no couples allowed.
...Love is for wussies.
themoanandadove.com
460 West St. • Rte 116 Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You should probably check if your fly is down.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
If you must get a tattoo, make sure it is of all three original members of Hanson.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Try freezing your favorite candy bar. It will be infinitely more delicious.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
If you dress up like a pirate while you illegally download music it makes it ok.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Definitely sport some long-johns, it's mad nippy outside.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Remember, too much text messaging will give you carpal tunnel syndrome.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Yes, you really are that good looking.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You will fall down a flight of stairs. People will laugh at your misfortune.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You will be compelled to pile Jello onto your plate at the DC then suck it up.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Try to find your old Lisa Frank Pencil box with dolphins jumping over a rainbow.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Do not buy any of your textbooks for this semester, I'm sure it will work well.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't use your Ipod at all today. It needs a rest.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES... LIKE NO OTHER!
NOW OPEN FOR LUNCH!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat: 11am-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apartment for Rent

Center of town, 1,2,3 Bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Childcare

After school Childcare. Seek responsible, patient and playful babysitters for beautiful 10year old girl with mild Cerebal palsy. $11.00 per hour. We are in North Amherst, 4 miles from UMass. 253-0779. highpoint@comcast.net

Employment

Chicago Pizza. Drivers Wanted pay $7.00 per hour plus tips. Weekends required. Cashiers pay $8.50 per hour. Weekends required. Apply in person 150 Fearing St. Amherst 549-6073

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Become a summer orientation counselor and make a difference in the lives of over 4000 new students. Additional information and applications can be found at www.umass.edu/newstudent/contact/student-jobs/counselor The application deadline is February 16, 2007

Employment

Moving: Local Moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Campus Representative Job Earn $200/4 hours of work Distributing Door Hangers in dorms If interested email: joeriverard@collegemarketplace.com

Cape Cod Summer Near Hyannis. $150/week. 508-428-3456 CapePhotoArt@aol.com

Entertainment

The Pushkin Emerging Artists Showcase Saturday Feb. 3rd 7pm Featuring Cold Duck Complex & DJ Henry C. Downtown Greenfield 4 Federal St. www.thepushkin.com B.Y.O.B

Services

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Services

Tutoring, Risk Free Trial $15 per hour. Customized programs in Math & Science. Highest Quality! 866-993-2263 ext.51 www.tutorowl.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Employment

5 Bedroom House 5 minutes from UMass. Looking for roommate(s) for Winter and/or Spring. Washer, Dryer, Parking. vwright@student.umass.edu (413) 461-1039

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Moliere finds success with UMass

Senior Pond turns in strong showing in final home meet

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts freshman swimmer Juan Moliere came to Amherst as an experienced swimmer, but was still very raw. His talent and feel for the water were undeniable, but men's swimming coach Russ Yarworth knew that with a little work, Moliere could morph that talent into success.

Moliere has been one of the Minutemen's best freestyle sprinters all season, and those at the Atlantic 10 finally took notice. He earned A-10 Swimming Rookie of the Week honors – announced on Jan. 29.

"Juan's training background was a little limited, not to say anything negative about his club, but stepping up to Division 1 swimming was a real shock to him at first," Yarworth said. "But he's persevered and is starting to get it together. He's pretty much leading the way as our premier sprinter."

UMass Swimming

At the Minutemen's tri-meet with Binghamton and Colgate, Moliere won the 50-yard freestyle and swam the anchor leg of the first-place 200-yard freestyle relay team. He also took third in the 100-yard freestyle event and swam the lead leg for the second-place 400-yard freestyle relay team.

With the A-10 Championships looming, Yarworth feels like Moliere is primed for a huge breakout.

"We're hoping he's going to be a finalist in the 50-[yard] and the 100-[yard] free," Yarworth said.

POND IS PERFECT IN SWAN SONG

In the final home meet of her career, UMass senior diver Melissa Pond had one of the best performances in Massachusetts women's diving history.

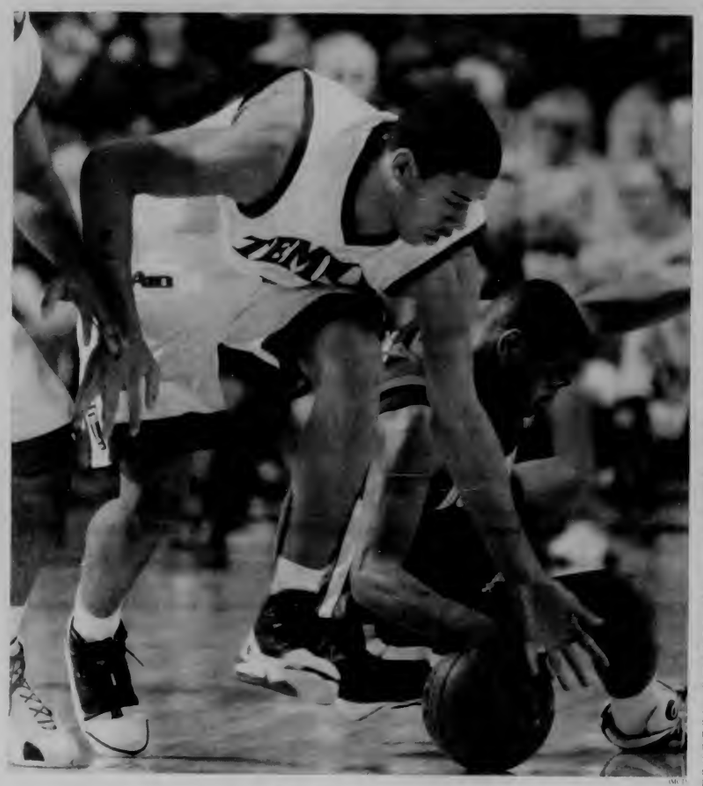
Pond tallied a career-best 279.49 points in winning the three-meter event – that is the third best point total scored by a Minutewomen diver in program history. The A-10 named her its Swimming Performer of the Week for her showing in the Jan. 20 meet against Boston College.

"It's a great honor for somebody that's worked really hard," UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb said. "She's very deserving of the recognition by the conference."

Pond's performance made her eligible for the NCAA Zone A Regional Meet when the UMass swimming and diving season comes to an end.

She also finished fourth in the one-meter competition, which teammate

See SWIMMING on page 10



Temple's Mark Tyndale (left) fights for a loose ball in a game against Duquesne. The Owls have stumbled out of the gate in Atlantic 10 play with a 3-7 record. They have also lost eight of their last 10 games dating back to Dec. 30.

Christmas paces Temple's offense

A-10 teams dominant on home courts

By Kevin Dooley
Collegian Staff

It's been a season full of surprises for Temple (7-12, 1-5 Atlantic 10) head coach Fran Dunphy. Unfortunately for the Owl faithful, those surprises haven't all been the kind you embrace with open arms.

On the one hand, the Owls have been first-hand witnesses to Dionte Christmas' breakout season. The junior shooting guard has unleashed a daily dose of nightmares for opposing defenses this season, leading the league in scoring, averaging 20 points a game entering last night's action.

Christmas is making the most of his shots as well, shooting just below 50 percent for the season and is currently nationally ranked 12th in scoring average. In fact, Temple has been an unlikely offensive threat all season, ranking third in the A-10 in scoring with 77 points a contest.

On the other end of the court, Temple's defense has been anything but a daydream. The once stingy and reliant defense under head coach John Cheney has been close to non-existent in A-10 play this season. The Owls are surrendering an average of 84 points a game against their A-10 foes through six conference games, leaving Temple with a miserable 1-5 record in the A-10.

It is also ranked dead last in the A-10 in scoring defense. For the season, Temple is allowing opponents to shoot over 50 percent from the field. Last season, the Owls held A-10 foes to just 60 points a night through six conference games. The Fordham Rams (12-7, 5-2 A-10) rank first in points allowed this season, holding opponents to 60 points a contest.

Temple's most recent loss and most shameful defensive display as well, came against the Duquesne Dukes (7-11, 3-4 A-10). It surrendered 96 points while managing to put up 92 themselves. The Owls allowed the Dukes to drop just 52 points in their tilt last season.

In its game with rival UMass (15-6, 5-2 A-10), Temple gave up over 80 points to the Minutemen. It's usually a defensive struggle when the two teams share the same court. In Temple's first meeting with the Minutemen last season, UMass had only 60 points, but were able to limit the Owls to 34 points. The tables turned later that season when the Owls held UMass to a meager 47 points.

But the aforementioned Christmas has made sure the Owls' season doesn't go without at least a few bright spots to compensate for all the disappointment bestowed upon the Philadelphia fan base. He earned A-10 Co-Player of the Week honors on Jan. 28, thanks to a three-game stretch where he became the first player since 1983 to score 30 points in three consecutive conference games.

A-10 Basketball

Temple will look to see if its offensive mojo can outpace its defensive woes when the Owls host their roommates in the basement of the A-10 standings, the lowly Richmond Spiders on Wednesday night. Richmond is averaging just over 60 points per contest, but hasn't been a slouch on the defensive side of the ball, surrendering 67 points a night to its opponents.

EAT YOUR HEART OUT DOROTHY

Teams who have the home court advantage more often than not find themselves on the winning end of close ball games. You don't have to tell that to visitors traveling to the home courts of the Xavier Musketeers (5-6, 5-2 A-10) and the George Washington Colonials, who have had as much luck as Macaulay

See M. BASKETBALL on page 9

Young River Hawks struggle

Providence clings to final HEA Tournament berth

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

With consistent basement-dweller Merrimack (3-18-4, 3-13-2 Hockey East) riding relatively strong play from its troika of goaltenders, UMass Lowell (3-19-5, 2-14-2 HEA) is quickly establishing a new level of futility in the league.

The River Hawks have only six points in Hockey East, putting them two behind Merrimack and 23 behind first-place New Hampshire (19-4-1, 14-2-1 HEA). The results are a significant decline from their 14-20-2 overall record and seventh-place conference finish last year.

Hockey East

But the most troubling statistic is that UML has not won a game since Nov. 4. At that point in the season, the team was tied for first place in the conference. River Hawks fans were wondering if they could maintain their success after losing their top 10 scoring forwards and starting goaltender from last year.

It's now painfully clear that they could not. The River Hawks have lost their last 16 league games, with the only positives being ties against two non-conference opponents – No. 17 St. Lawrence (14-10-2) and Brown (8-9-4).

Yet, coach Blaise MacDonald understands the growing pains that come with having a young team.

"We've been playing 11 freshmen and four sophomores essentially every night, including goaltending," MacDonald said in a conference call on Jan. 9. "I think we've played very, very well, for example, we've played three games against UNH, and we get 100 shots on net and they get 70, but they beat us handily. They got 14 goals, we got four. So that's kind of how the season has gone.

"We've played well against some terrific opponents. But our youth has shown up at inopportune times and we haven't really been able to define key moments in the game."

However, one positive constant out of the inconsistent play of the team has been the leadership and

See HOCKEY EAST on page 10

Senior Jeremy Hall and UMass Lowell find themselves in last place. The River Hawks played 11 freshmen in a game against UMass on Jan. 26.

COURTESY ATLANTIC ROOM

Temple Owls head coach Dawn Staley was recently honored with the Henry P. Iba Citizenship Award. Past winners of the award include the Dallas Cowboys' Drew Bledsoe and former WNBA player Rebecca Lobo.

Owls surprise A-10 opponents

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

The Temple Owls (16-5, 6-0 Atlantic 10) are off to a great start in A-10 play. A large reason for the Owls six-game conference win streak is the play of senior forward Kamesha Hairston.

Hairston earned A-10 Player of the Week honors, averaging 23 points and more than nine rebounds per game last week.

The Owls were 1-1 in that span – defeating Big Five rival Saint Joseph's (11-9, 3-3 A-10) and dropping their final non-conference game of the season to Rutgers.

A-10 Basketball

The Scarlet Knights kept the usually high-scoring Owl offense grounded – holding them to just 48 points. Hairston accounted for 20 of the 48 and was the only Temple player in double figures.

Temple then trekked across Philadelphia and defeated St. Joe's. Hairston scored 26 points and grabbed 13 boards in the 78-71 victory. Senior center Lady Comfort chipped in 23 points for the Owls.

Hairston wasn't the only member of the Temple women's basketball program to win an award

See W. BASKETBALL on page 9

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

FLURRIES : HI: 37 LO: 24 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 2007

MINUTEMEN HOST RICHMOND | PAGE 12

'THE GRIZZLY BEAR' ROARS | PAGE 7

Report addresses climate change

Warming to intensify for thousands of years

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

In what may heighten concern of the dangers of global warming nationwide, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) will release the first part of its Fourth Assessment Report to the international community today at a press conference in Paris.

According to Canada's The Globe and Mail, which says it has seen a draft of the report to be released, scientists will claim that the effects of global warming will be felt for a thousand years.

"Evidence the world is heating up is now so strong it is 'unequivocal' and [the draft] predicts more frequent heat waves, droughts and rain storms, as well as more violent typhoons and hurricanes. It concludes the higher temperatures observed during the past 50 years are so dramatically different from anything in the climate record that the last half-century period was likely the hottest in at least the past 1,300 years," according to the news report printed yesterday. "Moreover, 11 of the past 12 years rank among the warmest since humans began taking accurate temperature measurements in the 1850s, a record of extremes so pronounced it is unlikely to be due to chance."

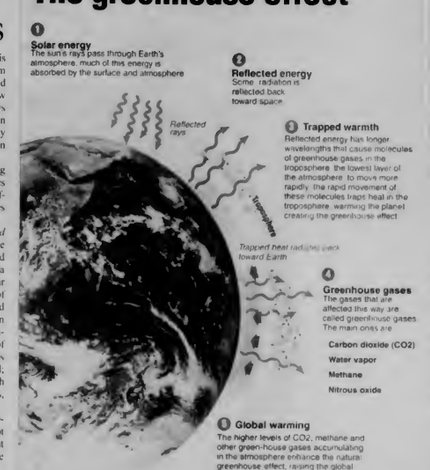
"Warming of the climate system is unequivocal, as is now evident from increases in global average air and ocean temperatures, melting of snow and ice, and rising sea level," says the draft, which is being reviewed in Paris before its formal release Friday by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change.

The report submits an unnerving analysis illustrating the consequences the planet could feel and see if specific environmentally-friendly avenues are not taken.

According to The Globe and Mail, the report submits that sea ice will shrink in both the Arctic and Antarctic. Also, in late summer, sea ice in the Arctic could disappear almost entirely by the latter part of the 21st century; heat waves and storms involving heavy precipitation will continue to become more common, as will droughts; the number of hurricanes will decrease, but the ones that do occur will be more powerful; ocean currents responsible for such things as the Gulf Stream will slow, possibly by as much as 25 percent.

The report says it's "very unlikely" that currents will have abrupt changes during the 21st century, but longer-term alterations "cannot be

See GLOBAL WARMING on page 3



The greenhouse effect
1 Solar energy
The sun's rays pass through Earth's atmosphere, much of this energy is absorbed by the surface and atmosphere
2 Reflected energy
Some radiation is reflected back toward space
Reflected rays
3 Trapped warmth
Reflected energy has longer wavelengths that cause molecules of greenhouse gases in the troposphere, the lowest layer of the atmosphere, to move more rapidly. The rapid movement of these molecules traps heat in the troposphere, warming the planet creating the greenhouse effect
Stratosphere
Troposphere
Trapped heat radiates back toward Earth
4 Greenhouse gases
The gases that are affected this way are called greenhouse gases. The main ones are Carbon dioxide (CO2)
Water vapor
Methane
Nitrous oxide
5 Global warming
The higher levels of CO2, methane and other green-house gases accumulating in the atmosphere enhance the natural greenhouse effect, raising the global temperature

Immigration officers monitor U.S. jails

Federal agents are closely watching local jails for tens of thousands of immigrants potentially subject to deportation, and are enlisting local authorities to do background checks of those arrested.

Illegal immigrants caught and deported when released from jail

By Gillian Flaccus
Associated Press

SANTA ANA, Calif. — Juan Martinez was looking forward to returning to his construction job after a one-month sentence for violating probation on drug charges.

But when he got out of the Orange County jail, he was met by immigration agents bent on deporting the 23-year-old illegal immigrant with $68 in his pocket and few prospects.

"I just probably won't come back," he said about being sent to Tijuana, Mexico. "If I do, I'll keep coming back to prison and I don't want that."

U.S. jails and prisons have become strategic choke points in the search for illegal immigrants.

More federal agents are more closely watching local jails for potentially tens of thousands of immigrants subject to deportation. Federal officials also are enlisting local authorities to do background checks on people under arrest.

U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement officials say more jail checks are crucial to preventing serious crimes by illegal immigrants. In December, for example, an illegal immigrant with a history of arrests for assaults and drug offenses shot two Long Beach police officers before he was killed in a gun battle.

"This isn't really an immigration issue. It's a public safety issue," ICE spokeswoman Virginia Kice said.

"You can be sure there'll be a finger-

See IMMIGRANTS on page 3

Patrick considers education consolidation

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. Deval Patrick, who is conducting a wide-ranging review of public schooling in Massachusetts, is considering consolidating the educational hierarchy under a single, Cabinet-level secretary of education, according to a top lawmaker and government aides.

Currently, education leadership in the state is split among three agencies, each with its own board of directors: the Department of Early Education and Care, which handles children prior to kindergarten; the Department of Education, which handles students through Grade 12, and; the Board of Higher Education, which oversees the 29 state campuses of higher education in Massachusetts.

Rep. Kevin Murphy, the Lowell Democrat who serves as House chairman of the Joint Committee on Higher Education, said he has been told one idea is to merge the boards under a single leader. Such a change would require legislative approval.

"The old theory was that you just needed a high school diploma to succeed in our society. That isn't true anymore. You need some kind of degree, so you need to consider education as a continuum from pre-K through Grade 16," Murphy said Thursday.

Patrick's education adviser, Dana Mohler-Faria, has taken steps to establish himself as an authority figure on education matters.

Mohler-Faria, who serves as president of Bridgewater State College when he is not in his part-time role advising the governor, has established an office within the Board of Higher Education offices at One Ashburton Place, the main state office building.

He also has hired a chief of staff, former Patrick campaign aide Kendra Medville, as well as five other staffers. In addition, Patrick asked the three existing agencies to provide $40,000 in startup funding for Mohler-Faria's operation.

The Department of Education contributed $20,000, while the other two agencies contributed $10,000 apiece.

The new governor was noncommittal when asked whether he was considering a push for an education secretary, however.

"We are working on an education package which will have both substantive and organizational pieces in it, so wait for that, just wait for that," Patrick said during a brief Statehouse interview.

His aides did not dispute that an education secretary might be part of that package, but called further discussion "premature."

Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick said that the state is working on an education package, but wouldn't discuss plans to create a single, Cabinet-level Secretary of Education position.

UMass to crack down on dorm security during Super Bowl

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

Following the violent riot on the University of Massachusetts campus, University officials are taking extra, and what some students are calling "extreme," precaution in preparing for any possible student disturbances that may occur at the end of Super Bowl XLI on Sunday.

UMass Police, prepared in riot gear, will patrol the campus during and after the game, according to the UMass News Office. Amherst Police and Massachusetts State Police will also be on hand to provide support.

Administrators will emplace a special residence hall guest policy for Super Bowl Sunday. Only current UMass students with valid identification will be allowed in all residence halls after 4 p.m. on Sunday, and each resident will be restricted to signing in two UMass students who are not residents in that residence hall. Only residents will be allowed into dorms upon conclusion of the game.

"The school is taking away our freedom. Because of the past riots, they feel they have to take action. But hopefully, these restrictions in the dorms are just a one-time thing. If the Pats were playing, these rules wouldn't prevent anything," said UMass sophomore Vanessa Patry, a Southwest resident. "Once I heard about these new rules, I decided to party off-campus. I'd rather not deal with it."

Some UMass students think the new restrictions are unlikely to be a deterrent to student riots.

"It's totally understandable why the school is doing this, but I think they're going a little overboard," said freshman Caitlin Dunn, who lives in the Cashin building in Sylvan. "If they think this is going to prevent riots from occurring on campus, it's not going to happen. There's no way to stop it because if students want to riot, then they're going to riot. But at the same time, I can't think of a good way to deal with this situation, especially with the students in Southwest."

UMass junior Mike Goykhman thinks rioting is inevitable.

"Even if the Patriots were in the Super Bowl, students would still riot. And if they were in the game and lost, we'd still riot. If they won, we'd still riot," said Goykhman.

In an e-mail addressed to every undergraduate student, UMass Vice Chancellor Mike Gargano and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Charlena Seymour condemned the student rioters and urged students to take an active

See SUPER BOWL on page 3

UMass police, prepared in riot gear, will patrol the campus during and after the Super Bowl game.

MySpace posts missing child reports on site

By Stephanie Pehr
The Daily Vidette (Illinois State U.)

NORMAL, Ill. — MySpace will begin distributing Amber Alerts via their social-networking Web site this week.

The alerts will be posted at the top of profiles in a small text box that can be clicked on for more information about the child and suspect.

Amber alerts are activated by the police, and notifications will be sent to any user on MySpace with a profile in the given zip code that the alert is generated.

According to the Amber Alert Web site, missingkids.com, the goal of an Amber Alert is to instantly galvanize the entire community to assist in the search for and safe recovery of the child.

According to Keith Gehrand, patrol division captain with the ISU police, Amber Alerts are issued by the state police and are displayed on interstates, public access television and now MySpace.

Gehrand said that he feels these notifications on MySpace will be of some help.

"With that kind of information getting it out to the public and in a timely and authoritative way can certainly be helpful, the

See MYSPACE on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 75

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Stagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pent
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Poldlester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sydney Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolsanitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ACACIA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN WAS BOTH BROADSHEET AND TABLOID FROM 1994 FOR ADVERTISING, RATES, AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Courtney Souza

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

www.DailyCollegian.com

Mayor makes public apology for having affair with aide's wife

By Lisa Leff
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Confronting a political scandal that sounds more like a soap opera, the city's handsome young mayor made an emotional apology Thursday for an affair with the wife of his own campaign manager.

"I want to make it clear that everything you've heard and read is true and that I'm deeply sorry about that," Mayor Gavin Newsom said during a hastily called City Hall news conference at which he went on to apologize to the aide, his staff, his family and San Franciscans.

Political observers said the divorced mayor's effusive apology, which came only hours after the story broke on a newspaper's Web site, may have helped defuse a scandal that threatened to haunt his bid for re-election in November.

Newsom's former deputy chief of staff, Alex Tourk, 39, resigned as manager of the mayor's re-election campaign Wednesday after approaching Newsom about his relationship with his blond attractive wife, Ruby Rippey-Tourk, 34, who worked as the mayor's appointments secretary until last spring.

The brief relationship first reported Wednesday night on the San Francisco Chronicle's Web site took place a year-and-a-half ago while the mayor was getting divorced from his wife, Fox News Channel host Kimberly Guilfoyle, a former prosecutor and lingerie model.

Tourk, who had worked at City Hall since Newsom's 2003 election, was one of Newsom's top advisers and became manager of the mayor's re-election campaign in September.

Before the affair became public, the mayor's office released a statement in which Tourk said it had been "an honor and a privilege to serve the Newsom campaigns and the city of San Francisco and its residents."

When he was elected in November 2003, Newsom was considered a rising star of the Democratic Party, but he was criticized within weeks of taking office after directing his staff to issue marriage licenses to same sex couples.

Since his divorce became final last March, Newsom has half-heartedly lamented his appearances in gossip columns, where his active love life has been frequent fodder and included associations with a 20-year-old model and two actresses.

But in his first public statements since the affair was reported, a poised but emotional Newsom did not offer any excuses.

"I hurt someone I care deeply about, Alex Tourk, and his friends and family, and that is something I have to live with and something that I am deeply sorry for," he said. "I am accountable for what has occurred and have now begun the process of reconciling it."

Neither Tourk nor his wife immediately returned phone calls and e-mails from The Associated Press seeking comment.

To many observers, the scandal stirred memories of President Clinton's affair with a young intern and his subsequent impeachment. But in contrast to Clinton, who famously denied "sexual relations with that woman," Newsom quickly confessed and accepted responsibility.

Newsom "did a good thing, he told the truth," said Neel Lattimore, the one-time press secretary to Hillary Rodham Clinton when she was first lady. "By the mayor telling the truth immediately, it begins a healing process now, as opposed to leaving a wound open and continuing to fester."

Newsom spokesman Peter Ragone said the revelation would not affect the mayor's plans to seek re-election.

A handful of San Francisco residents interviewed Thursday said the mayor's dalliance had little bearing on their opinion of him as mayor.

"I could care less," said Lee Simmons, 79, at a downtown bank. "Newsom is great. I voted for him last time and I'll vote for him again."

Tom Abbott, 36, an executive recruiter, said that having an affair with a loyal aide's wife was "a total slime ball move."

"Any guy who puts that much mousse in his hair can't be trusted," Abbott said. "You don't screw over your own boys."

However, Abbott said, he would probably vote for Newsom.

San Francisco mayor, Gavin Newsom apologized publicly to his aide, his staff, his family, and the people of San Francisco for his affair with an aide's wife.

NYC halts use of 'n-word' for Black History Month

By Sara Kugler
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The city council is considering a symbolic resolution calling for New Yorkers to stop using the n-word, and supporters say Black History Month is a relevant time to call attention to the racial slur.

Queens Councilman Leroy Comrie spearheaded the non-binding measure before the New York City Council Thursday. He appeared with hip-hop pioneer Kurtis Blow Walker on Thursday and said the slur has gained a level of acceptance among entertainers and youths that is troubling.

"So I challenge the hip-hop community, I challenge you to abolish that word during the month of February — Black History Month — and beyond," Walker said.

For centuries, the slur has been used to humiliate and degrade blacks, but more recently it also has become a term of endearment and camaraderie among some Hip-hop culture in particular has been singled out for its use of the word in music and entertainment, which some say is helping convince an entire generation that the word is acceptable.

National attention increased after an incident last year involving actor Michael Richards, who played the Kramer character on "Seinfeld." Richards blew up at black patrons in a comedy club with a profane tirade that included the slur.

After the Richards episode, black leaders challenged the public and the entertainment industry — including rap artists, actors and movie studios — to stop using the insult.

The resolution is expected to go to a vote by the end of February.

Comrie said he and the Abolish the N Word organization will also organize an essay contest for February, asking schoolchildren to write pieces on the topic.

Dennis Walcott, Mayor Michael Bloomberg's deputy mayor for education, pledged his support for the movement.

Man convicted of killing three children

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — A man was convicted Thursday of killing three of his girlfriend's four children after she asked him to move out of her apartment.

Vuthy Seng of Lowell was first convicted in 1997 but won a retrial. On Thursday, a Middlesex Superior jury deliberated less than two hours before convicting him on the same charges — three counts of first-degree murder.

Sovanna Men, 9, Visal Men, 15, and Virak Men, 12, died of their wounds in the week after the gun and machete attack on Nov. 12, 1995, in their Lowell apartment.

Seng faces a mandatory life sentence for each first-degree murder conviction. He is being held without bail and will be sentenced Feb. 12.

In 2002, the state Supreme Judicial Court overturned Seng's conviction and ordered a new trial. The court ruled that a Khmer translation of his Miranda rights, which were also delivered in English, didn't properly inform him of his right to remain silent.

Middlesex District Attorney Gerard Leone Jr., who announced the verdict, credited Sathy Men for her testimony. She identified Seng as the gunman in the deaths of her three brothers. Sathy was also shot in the attack.

"I want to commend the

See KILLING on page 3

Is your room more unique than this?
Do you have the BEST room?
Here's your chance to strut your stuff in the "Collegian Cribs" Contest for a chance to win a grand prize!
Submit up to three pictures online at TheCollegian@gmail.com
Deadline Feb.14 Voting beginning Feb.15

Top U.S. general says troops ordered for Iraq aren't needed

General George Casey told Americans that President George W. Bush has ordered more troops in Iraq than are actually needed.

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The outgoing top U.S. general in Iraq diplomatically aired his differences with the commander in chief on Thursday, telling lawmakers that President Bush has ordered thousands more troops into Iraq than needed to tamp down violence in Baghdad.

Gen. George Casey quickly added he understood how his recently confirmed successor, Lt. Gen. David Petraeus, could want the full complement of 21,500 additional troops that Bush has ordered to Iraq. Casey said they could "either reinforce success, maintain momentum or put more forces in a place where the plans are not working."

As the general spoke at a Senate confirmation hearing into his nomination to become Army chief of staff, the full Senate lurched toward a widely anticipated debate on the administration's policy, the first since midterm elections in which opposition to the war helped install a new Democratic majority.

One day after critics of Bush's revised war strategy merged two competing Senate measures, the White House worked to hold down the number of GOP defections while two liberal Democrats attacked the compromise as too weak.

"It is essentially an endorsement of the status quo, an endorsement I simply cannot make in light of the dire circumstances in Iraq and the need for meaningful action now," said Sen. Christopher Dodd of Connecticut, who is seeking the 2008 Democratic presidential nomination.

Casey endured occasional sharp criticism as he appeared before the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"I do not in any way question your honor, your patriotism or your service to our country. I do question some of the decisions and judgments you have made over the past two and a half years as commander of Multi-National Forces in Iraq," said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz. "During that time, things have gotten markedly and progressively worse, and the situation in Iraq can now best be described as dire and deteriorating."

So far, no senators have announced plans to oppose Casey's elevation to chief of staff, although McCain, as well as Sens. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C. and Joseph Lieberman, I-Conn., said they were undecided how to vote.

In the peculiar politics surrounding the Iraq War, the three lawmakers are among the strongest critics of the nonbinding legislation. It would criticize the president's decision to increase troop levels as a way of stabilizing Baghdad nearly four years after Saddam Hussein was forced from power.

They said they intend to advance an alternative measure setting out the goals that should be met by the Iraqi government, and pledging whatever resources Petraeus requests. "We've come to the conclusion that the Petraeus strategy ... to buy some time for political reconciliation is our best chance for victory," said Graham.

Critics of the war, including most Senate Democrats and several Republicans, appeared to be coalescing around a revised measure advanced by Sen. John Warner, R-Va., and a group of lawmakers of both parties. It says the Senate "disagrees with the 'plan' to augment our forces by 21,500, and urges the president instead to consider all options and alternatives."

Many Democrats had been supporters of a stronger measure, one declaring that Bush's plan for more troops was "not in the national interest."

That criticism was jettisoned Wednesday night when the revised measure was unveiled, as Majority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada maneuvered to pick up Republican votes. Additionally, the new measure says Congress "should not take any action that will endanger United States military forces in the field, including the elimination or reduction of funds for troops in the field," a provision that

See IRAQ on page 3

Panel on climate change to release 600 page report

Scientists claim that the sea levels will shrink in the Arctic and the Antarctic, and the effects of global warming will be felt for thousands of years.

GLOBAL WARMING from page 1

assessed with confidence."

Global temperatures in 2090-99 are likely to be 1.7 degrees to 4 degrees warmer than the period from 1980-1999. Current models suggest global warming of 1.9 to 4.6 degrees would lead to a "virtually complete" elimination of the Greenland ice sheet and a rise in sea levels of about 7 meters, if sustained for millennia. Sea levels will probably rise from between 0.28 meters and 0.43 meters, although there is a chance the increase will be larger if Greenland and Antarctic ice discharges continue to grow.

The first 1,600 pages of the report, written by 600 scientists, reviewed by 600 experts and edited by representatives from 154 countries, will be released today. The next three segments of the report will be released throughout the year. The next segment will not be released until months after the first one is introduced.

Increasing greenhouse gas concentrations tend to warm the planet.

IPCC has stated that "there is new and stronger evidence that most of the warming observed over the last 50 years is attributable to human activities" (IPCC, 2001). In short, a number of scientific analyses indicate, but cannot prove, that rising levels of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere are contributing to climate change (as theory predicts).

Corrections

Yesterday's Feb. 1, 2007 front page article (and on the inside) regarding the mutual aid agreement between the University of Massachusetts and the Town of Amherst was given the incorrect headline, "UMass and Amherst Merge." The deal is in fact not a merger, but an agreement.

Yesterday's Feb. 1, 2007 front page Associated Press article about Boston's "bomb hoax" was given the incorrect headline, "Nine packages planted around Boston in failed marketing ploy." Devices, not packages, were placed around the city.

READ THE DAILY COLLEGIAN...DAILY

Students react to dorm rules

SUPER BOWL from page 1

role in preventing future disruptions.

The University also distributed approximately 7,000 door hangers inside student residence halls that featured a letter authored by a "regretful" student who faces sanctions for involvement in the riots, reflecting on "my poor judgment" that night.

The Curry Hicks Cage will be open at the end of the game "to provide a warm space in the event a resident is blocked by a large gathering of students," according to the News Office.

Matt Bellveau can be reached at mbbellve@student.umass.edu.

Nicole Boonjakuakul contributed to this report.

Only current UMass students with proper identification will be allowed into residence halls after 4 p.m. Sunday.

2008 presidential hopefuls weigh in on issue of deployment

IRAQ from page 2

Republicans said was designed to outflank Democrats eager to rein in Bush's policy.

Several officials said Reid told a closed-door caucus during the day that lawmakers would have an opportunity to vote for binding restrictions on Bush's war policy in the coming months.

"For me it was a reassurance" that the Senate's hands would not be tied to end the war but troops would still be protected, said James Webb, a Virginia Democrat elected last fall as a critic of the war.

Two veteran liberals, Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and presidential hopeful Joseph Biden, D-Del., were among Democrats who said they were ready to accept the watered-down non-binding measure as a first step.

Not so Dodd and Sen. Russell Feingold.

Feingold, D-Wis., issued a statement saying the measure "misunderstands the situation in Iraq and shortchanges our national security interests. The resolution rejects redeploying U.S. troops and supports moving a misguided military strategy from one part of Iraq to another."

Two other presidential hopefuls remained silent on their plans. Sens. Barack Obama of Illinois and Hillary Rodham Clinton of New York both said they were undecided on whether to support the Warner measure. Both have called for binding legislation to force a change in policy toward Iraq.

Casey's comments marked a rarity, a four-star general pulling back the veil on high-level differences expressed in advance of a presidential decision.

The White House seemed unperturbed. "What General Casey was talking about is some suggestions he'd made earlier. The president has made his decision, and it does reflect the wisdom of a number of combatant commanders and it does have the assent of General Casey," said presidential spokesman Tony Snow.

Two Republicans on the committee expressed skepticism, though.

"I'm not certain five additional brigades in Baghdad and one more in Anbar province are sufficient to do the job," said McCain. "I am certain, however, that the job cannot be done with just two additional brigades, as you, General Casey, had advocated."

Defense rejects responsibility because of man's mental health amazing courage of the boys' sister, Sathy, who bravely came forward to testify in both trials against the man who shot her and her brothers," Leone said in a statement.

KILLING from page 2

Sathy Men said she ultimately escaped the attack by kicking out a screen and jumping out a first-floor window.

At the first trial, Seng's attorneys conceded he shot the children, but said he should not be held criminally responsible because he was a "destitute and broken" man who was hearing voices. Prosecutors said the murders came after Seng had a falling out with the children's mother, Chhong Yim, and she insisted he move out despite his pleas to stay.

At the second trial, Seng's lawyer said his client didn't kill anyone. Attorney Larry Tipton argued that police ignored key evidence and other suspects, including gang members who in March 1995 broke into the apartment and threatened to kill anyone who reported them — which Seng did.

Seng also was convicted Thursday of armed assault with intent to murder, two counts of assault and battery by means of a dangerous weapon, and one count of possession of a firearm.

Associated Press

Jail checks may backfire

IMMIGRANTS from page 1

pointing drill at the end of the day if they do something evil."

About half of the nearly 190,000 illegal immigrants deported last year had criminal records, U.S. authorities said.

Sweeps of jails over the past seven months by ICE agents have netted more than 5,500 people nationwide, and a new system designed to track federal inmates has flagged about 6,000 people at 119 prisons, the agency said.

Past efforts to identify illegal immigrants in jails were haphazard, with federal authorities checking inmate rosters at some lockups weekly at best. Some of the worst immigration violators were allowed back on the streets after doing their time.

Conservative groups are pleased with the new strategy but worry that the emphasis on jail checks is a political gimmick that could divert much-needed personnel and other resources from stopping illegal immigrants at the border.

"This is a way to do it that everybody is for but has no real effect on the overall immigration flow," said Mark Krikorian, executive director of the Center for Immigration Studies, a conservative think tank. "It shuts up the critics."

Immigrant rights groups say illegal immigrants might stop reporting child abuse or domestic violence to protect husbands or fathers from deportation. They also worry that people who have been stopped for minor offenses or wrongly arrested will be deported.

"It's a practice that leads to weakening or eliminating civil liberties," said Native Lopez, president of the Los Angeles-based Mexican American Political Association.

Dear Students,

As you begin the first weekend of this spring semester, please remember that the way we present ourselves and engage our community will project a powerful image of the entire campus. The quality of our student body is very high and the commitment of our students to a wide range of first rank academic and extracurricular activities is a remarkable testimony to that quality.

As we participate in the many activities of the campus and the community over this semester, we must all recognize our personal responsibility to participate in our campus' academic and extracurricular life in ways that reflect credit on the entire campus community.

Sincerely,

John V. Lombardi
Chancellor

Charlena Seymour
Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs

Experts discuss safety concerns of MySpace, Facebook sites more people who know and the more eyes and ears available, the better," Gehrand said.

MYSPACE from page 1

The Amber Alert Web site also offers a sign up for wireless Amber Alerts, in which individuals can be notified of missing children via text messages.

With MySpace recently dealing with multiple lawsuits against them in regard to sexual assaults in which the predators met the young girls on the site, they have made efforts to boost security by requiring a user to confirm their identity by responding in an e-mail and also not allowing any user who is posted as under 18 contact with adults.

According to Julia Affrunti, a sophomore public relations major, the appeal of MySpace is the creativity and social opportunities it allows for.

"I think MySpace is pretty entertaining and a lot of people like creating their own pages for fun, it's a good way to network and talk with other people," Affrunti said.

Gehrand explained sites such as MySpace and Facebook are very popular amongst college campuses, and people need to be aware of the risks associated with being involved in them.

"Don't give out biographical information such as telephone numbers and addresses, you have to be very careful about giving out such information," Gehrand said.

Affrunti said she realizes there are risks involved when participating in such Web sites.

"I don't think it's very safe, and younger kids definitely shouldn't be on it unless they have a really restricted profile.

I think you definitely have to be careful and skeptical about who to trust," Affrunti said.

Gehrand explained that giving out such information could not only lead to sexual assaults, but identification theft and harassment.

Affrunti said that she does not feel the new security measures that MySpace is taking will be very effective.

"A lot of kids will lie and say that they're a lot older than they are. Creepy predators on MySpace are always there and will look for anyone, no matter how old they are," Affrunti said.

Gehrand said there are some precautions people should take if they do decide to meet someone in person from one of these sites.

"Stay in public places and go with friends that you know, don't meet someone at a party, get drunk and leave yourself vulnerable," Gehrand explained.

Affrunti said college students should know how to protect themselves from predators while using Web sites like MySpace.

"We are old enough to know what is right and wrong, it's our responsibility to be careful and not too trustworthy of random people," Affrunti said.

House votes to increase aid amount for Federal Pell Grants

By Carly Katz
Columbia Daily Spectator
(U. Wire)

NEW YORK — The U.S. House of Representatives approved a spending bill Wednesday that would increase the maximum amount of Pell Grants that a student can receive each year.

As a result of the legislation, the new maximum Pell Grant an individual will be able to receive is $4,310, an increase of $260. The continuing resolution, H.J. 20, passed by a vote of 286-140, contains many components that would provide funding for various federal programs and agencies, including the grants for undergraduate, low-income students, which do not need to be repaid. This would be the first such increase since 2002, according to a press release from Mike Swarthout of the U.S. Public Interest Research Groups.

Ellen Smith, director of Columbia's Government Relations, said that it is often difficult to know what type of impact this type of legislation will actually have, but she is pleased nonetheless. "It'd be great if they could be increased more, but they're doing the best they can," she said.

If signed into law, the increase would take effect in time for the 2007-2008 school year. Though Columbia does not disclose the number of students who receive Pell Grants, a spokesman for U.S. Rep. Charlie Rangel, D-N.Y., estimated that the increase would aid 5.3 million college students across the country.

Chloe Faux, CC '10, said that the grant increase is welcome because of the high cost of higher education in the U.S.

"The only way to have equality in people would be to have equality in education," Faux said. She added that though there are more steps that could be taken to improve the accessibility of college, the grant increase "wouldn't be dramatic, but it would be helpful."

"We're delighted they were able to squeak it out because this was a tight bill," Smith said, referring to the many other demands for funding encompassed in the bill.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

THE CAMPUS SCENE

A WEEKLY LOOK AT THE UNIVERSITY LIFESTYLE

Fun is a flutter with "Magic Wings"

Butterfly conservatory and gardens beat the winter woes

BY MELISSA D'AMICO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Imagine for a moment, a place where it is always 80 degrees and tropical; a place where one is greeted by the sight of beautiful gardens, a pond filled with Japanese koi, waterfalls, and hundreds of different and colorful butterflies floating by. This place seems too good to be true, right? One may think it is not a place that could exist in the middle of winter in western Massachusetts but it does in fact exist.

Located in nearby South Deerfield, is the perfect place to shake off the winter chill and enjoy some simple springtime pleasures. With its koi filled pond, small waterfall, and beautiful gardens, Magic Wings Butterfly Conservatory and Gardens is a place to have fun, relax, and enjoy the beauty of nature, especially when it is a little too cold to be outside in it.

Magic Wings Butterfly Conservatory and Gardens was opened in October 2000, and after being expanded in 2004, now includes an over 8,000 square foot conservatory filled with over 4,000 butterflies, moths, and tropical vegetation.

"The sun shines through the glass walls and heats up the conservatory to an 80 degree tropical-like environment all year round. The heart-shaped pond with Japanese koi graces the center of the conservatory. The sound of the waterfall, peaceful music and hundreds of butterflies fluttering freely through the air creates a tranquil and serene atmosphere," according to the Magic Wings Web site.

It is an exciting and unique experience for anyone – children, students, grandparents – to see so many different varieties of butterflies flying throughout the gardens. Visitors are told that they should stand still, and perhaps a butterfly will gently land on their shoulder, thinking that they are a flower for it to taste. Although they can't guarantee visitors the rare experience of a butterfly landing on them, they do want everyone to enjoy the peace and tranquility that is created with the butterflies inside the glass house.

The atmosphere created throughout the entire conservatory is one which promotes relaxation. On cold days throughout the winter, visitors are welcomed by an ongoing fire in the building's fieldstone fireplace. Visitors are encouraged to warm up by the fire and get rid of their winter chills before moving on to enjoy the rest of their experience.

"This seems like a great place to come and relax. You can't really be stressed-out here. It's warm, and everything is really beautiful to look at," said Sarah Tumbleton, 19, during her first visit to the conservatory. "I can definitely see myself just sitting on a bench, and enjoying the whole environment. Who wouldn't like to just sit down in a nice, warm garden? It's almost like summer time."

As one moves throughout the entryway, it is easy to notice the colorful and fun butterfly theme. Hung above the admissions counter is a large butterfly kite, and on the wall is a handmade quilt. Trying to find the words "Magic Wings," which is on five different spots on the quilt, can be the first thing to inspire some fun during a visit.

Visitors initially enter into the exhibits and display area, where you can watch butterfly videos and browse through exhibits showing the history and evolution of butterflies.

"I like this room, it's fun. Where else can you learn that a butterfly egg is the size of a pin head?" said Grace Hiller, 35, as she brought her son around the exhibit.

Yet, it is what comes after the exhibits and videos which attracts and amazes most visitors. Through a set of double doors is the conservatory, where the thousands of butterflies live.

"Sure, most people can say that they have seen a butterfly before, but this is completely different. I doubt many people have seen something like this," said Amherst College student Mary Antron.

"I mean, I might only enjoy it here because I love photography and the different colors and patterns you see here make some really great pictures, but I don't think anyone could come here and not enjoy what they see," she added.

While walking through the conservatory, visitors can talk with "Flight Attendants," workers at Magic Wings who can answer questions and help identify the different butterflies that are seen. This is the perfect time to take pictures, or just find a bench enjoy the warmth and relax. During warmer months throughout the year, when the weather is nice, visitors can also enjoy the Iron Butterfly Outdoor Gardens. The Iron Butterfly Outdoor Gardens are a one-acre outdoor garden area where many types of native flowers and trees have been planted. During the warm weather, these plants attract native butterfly species, allowing you to see them in their natural habitat. Tips are also available on how to create your own butterfly garden.

Simply watching the butterflies is not the only way to enjoy Magic Wings Butterfly Conservatory. The beauty of the area has inspired many people to have their weddings, family reunions, birthday parties, and other special events at the conservatory. The Art Gallery Café and Atrium are open, and frequently used for these types of events.

In April of 2006, Magic Wings opened their own restaurant, Monarchs Restaurant, to add another option to their visitor's experience. Monarchs Restaurant is open for casual dining Wednesday through Saturday from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m., and Sunday brunch from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. The restaurant seats up to 100 guests, and offers everything from soup, to burgers, to butterfly pasta.

Magic Wings Butterfly Conservatory and Gardens is located at 281 Greenfield Road in South Deerfield, and is open seven days a week, year round.

Nobel Prize Celebration
January 26, 2007, DCU Center, Worcester

A Thank You!

University of Massachusetts Medical School
UMASS

On January 26, the UMass Minuteman Marching Band fulfilled a request made by UMass Medical School Professor Craig C. Mello, co-recipient of the 2006 Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine, when they performed at a gala community celebration honoring Dr. Mello. The band also inducted a delighted Dr. Mello into its ranks as an honorary member and gave him a chance to show his musical stuff by conducting them before the 600 cheering guests.

From all of us at UMass Worcester, we extend our warmest thanks to UMass Minuteman Marching Band Director George Parks, UMass President Jack Wilson, UMass Amherst Chancellor John Lombardi and Executive Director of Alumni Affairs Robert Goodhue.

And most of all, thank you, UMass Minuteman Marching Band!

The event will long be remembered as a spectacular celebration of UMass pride.

Aaron Lazare, MD
Chancellor and Dean
UMass Worcester

UMass Medical School • 55 Lake Avenue North • Worcester, Massachusetts 01655 • www.umassmed.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

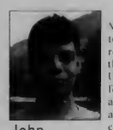
EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rated R: for restricted



John Gruenenfelder

For a New Year's resolution, the Massachusetts state legislature hopes to push forward video game sales regulation. Perhaps they hope that their bill will actually pass muster. Unfortunately for them, over the past few years several other states have attempted to pass similar legislation and all have been struck down by the courts. To make matters worse, for their effort the state has enlisted the help of lawyer Jack Thompson, a man known more for his belligerence and desire for attention than practical legislation.

The rating system used by the video game industry is set by the Entertainment Software Ratings Board (ESRB) and has some similarities to the well known system used by the Motion Picture Association of America. The most common ratings are E (Everyone), E-10+ (Everyone over 10), T (Teen), M (Mature 17+), and AO (Adults Only 18+). The problem area which provokes most of the new legislation is the M rating. While the guidelines set what constitutes an M rating, some people argue that many games receiving an M rating should instead be rated AO.

> Weighing heavily against the proposed legislation is the fact that all of the other states which passed similar laws have had them struck down by higher courts.

As an example, the game Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas originally had a rating of M until the so called "Hot Coffee" incident occurred after which it was re-rated as AO.

This is an important distinction for publishers as some large stores such as Wal-Mart will not stock AO but will carry M rated games.

Further complicating the matter is that the age distinction between the M and AO ratings is just one year, 17 and older versus 18 and older. How much sex or violence is enough to move from M over the line to an AO? Furthermore, is a 17 year old really going to be damaged while an 18 year old is not? However, despite this ambiguity most of the proponents of a legislative solution argue it is to protect children – while being unclear about how many are affected and from what age group.

At the heart of the new legislation is the desire to criminalize the sale of M (Mature) rated games to minors. For the most part, however, the game retailers do a good job of following the industry's self imposed rules. Being over 17 I, and most likely all of you, are not subject to any of these restrictions, but I have overheard clerks on numerous occasions telling minors that they cannot purchase a particular game and to come back with a parent.

These youths often do come back with a parent. I've seen good parents look at the games their children wish to buy and I've also seen bad parents buy whatever game their child might point at without giving it a second thought.

Weighing heavily against the proposed legislation is the fact that all of the other states which passed similar laws have had them struck down by higher courts. Not only does this waste time in the judicial system, but last year the Entertainment Software Association was awarded legal fees for their successful lawsuit to overturn an Illinois video game law.

The proposed law is also another example of trying to legislate good parenting, as though making the sale of Grand Theft Auto to a 16 year old a criminal act will keep the game away from children altogether. As long as parents, or even older siblings, buy the game then minors will find ways of getting a hold of it. This is an issue that can only be solved by parental involvement; legislating a fix will not work.

Perhaps more worrisome a concern is the enlistment of Jack Thompson to help the state write the new law. He was one of the main driving forces in the 1990s litigation against explicit rap music. More recently he has made the restriction of violent video games his prime quest. If you've read about the Grand Theft Auto "Hot Coffee" incident at all then his name has probably come up along with his notoriously hostile attitude towards video game enthusiasts. Anger aside, though, seeking help from somebody who consistently refers to violent games as "murder simulators" shows that the state has done almost no research into this issue. Even if this law were a good idea, asking Mr. Thompson for assistance is a mistake.

Is this law doomed to failure? I certainly hope so. In addition to Illinois, similar legislation has been overturned in Louisiana and Utah. In that respect, maybe having Mr. Thompson help write the bill wasn't such a bad idea. They asked him because he was one of the authors of both Utah's and Louisiana's failed bills. So, little is likely to change, but we'll get to waste some money in the process.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist

Show some appreciation

Frank Godinho

Every morning, five days a week, a member of the custodial staff is cleaning up your mess. Whether they are picking up the garbage found in elevators, scooping pasta noodles out of the sinks, or even flushing the toilets, one thing is for certain: college students still don't know how to pick up after themselves.

With this upcoming weekend being the Super Bowl, the custodial staff is more than a bit uneasy about returning to their jobs Monday morning. The days after a late night sporting event are the days that they least look forward to coming back to work. Remember when the Red Sox won the World Series in 2004? How could anyone ever forget a moment like that? Ho-Woo Park, a dormitory janitor in the Southwest residential area at Washington Tower, wishes he could.

> It's easy to forget that a lot of hard work goes into cleaning the University every single day.

"It was a nightmare. It looked like a bomb had gone off," he said, describing the vandalism and destruction that occurred during the week that the Red Sox were in the World Series.

Park, who has been working as a dormitory janitor full-time at UMass for five years now, puts up with a lot that he shouldn't have to. After all, he is cleaning up after grown adults. His day begins at 7 a.m., in which he has three floors assigned to clean. Park and the rest of the custodial staff clean the areas outside of the dormitory halls, the ground floor lobby, the hallways, the elevators, the stairwells, in addition to emptying all the trash barrels from the building, and of course, cleaning the bathrooms. Oftentimes, Park will end up on many occasions staying longer than his shift to complete the job.

"The most aggravating thing for me is cleaning the bathrooms. People never flush the toilets," he said, later adding that he can't remember the last time he went into a bathroom with all the toilets flushed.

In fact, at the beginning of this semester, Park had signs printed and hung on the bathroom stalls specifically requesting that the students "please flush the toilets." Just one day later however, he found that someone ripped them all down. Another matter that makes for a messy clean up is when students empty their leftovers into the bathroom sinks. Most commonly, Park will find ramen noodle soup clogging the drains. Also, even though there are clearly visible signs outside of each bathroom to specify cleaning times, people ignore them.

"I will walk into the bathroom to begin my work, and there will be someone in there taking a shower. It delays my whole schedule for the day," he said.

Furthermore, Park expressed how some of the messes students leave could be potentially dangerous. He's found shattered beer bottles practically everywhere throughout the dormitory halls, from the elevators to the stairwells. If someone by chance happened to be walking around barefoot, the consequences could be painful.

"If there were three simple things that students could do to make my job a little bit easier they would be; flush the toilets, obey the signs, and stop putting garbage into the sinks."

This weekend, practically everyone on campus will be watching the Super Bowl. And it's no secret that after the game, celebrations will follow. However, before partying this weekend, try to put yourself into Ho-Woo Park's shoes. How would you like to be flushing the toilets of fully-grown adults or cleaning up intentional messes that disrespectful students leave behind? Unfortunately, many of us take the custodians' effort for granted. It's easy to forget that a lot of hard work goes into cleaning the University every single day.

Perhaps if each student did their part to help keep the dorms clean, the tedious work of Park [and others] might not appear to be as unappreciated as it currently seems. This helping hand that students can easily lend to the custodians could make a big difference in their day, and show them that their work isn't completely unnoticed.

Frank Godinho is a UMass student

TWO NEW BOOKS SAY GLOBAL WARMING IS NATURAL; NOT CAUSED BY HUMAN ACTIVITY
I'M GLAD WE HEARD ABOUT THOSE BOOKS BEFORE WE RAN OUT TO PICKET TODAY!
STOP GLOBAL WARMING
STOP GLOBAL WARMING
STAY REAL

Where do you stop?

Domenic Poli

Guilty by association.

According to thefreedictionary.com, this legal term is defined as "the logical fallacy of claiming that something must be false because of the people or organizations that support it." Some examples are, "My friend likes violent gangster movies. My friend is Italian-American. So, all Italian-Americans like violent gangster movies," and "My history professor smells like limburger cheese. My history professor is a man. Therefore, all men smell like limburger cheese."

Both of these victims (Italian-Americans and history professors) are "guilty by association." They are accused of something that is probably not true, simply because of the company they may have indirectly kept.

This is an unfair way of grouping people together who may not deserve an ethnic stereotype or the rancid smell of cheese. It is no more appropriate when dealing with unruly behavior.

> Punishing people that video and photos show were near the bedlam as it ensued is hypercritical.

Case in point: How the UMass Police Department plans on handling the now-infamous December riots in Southwest. According to two separate articles that ran in The Daily Collegian last Monday, the UMPD has, thanks to photo and video analysis, identified 70 students involved in the mayhem that ensued after our beloved football team lost 28-17 to Appalachian State in the Division I National Championship game.

It was an appalling display. One that we all know and we should all be ashamed of.

In the initial aftermath, eleven students – 10 of whom were UMass pupils – were apprehended at the scene and five were punished with expulsion.

I applaud the performance of the UMPD and university officials in enacting swift, harsh punishment to the guilty parties – rioting is 110 percent inappropriate and justice had to be served in order to send a message to the rest of campus.

I do not agree, however, with disciplining a large body of students (70 so far) that the powers that be feel are "guilty by association."

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Mike Gargano is reported to have said, "Whether [students] were active participants, urging on lawbreakers, or being bystanders, they in some way contributed to what transpired."

I respectfully disagree, sir. Bystanders to a calamity like the Southwest riots cannot, if not having taken an active role in the mayhem or provided wrongful assistance, be held accountable for the actions of others.

Southwest houses 5,300 Maroon and White students – it's only natural that innocents will be in the proximity after a devastating Championship loss on, of all nights, a Friday. It is unfair to punish pupils simply because they were 'close' to those guilty.

It's just like you later mentioned yourself, Mr. Vice Chancellor – "It's important to emphasize that the great majority of UMass Amherst students had no involvement in this riot, and in fact some stepped forward to assist the police in their investigation." You went on to thank them for their "support of the campus community."

Amidst all the chaos, how many of the kids that police have arrested were just standing around or trying to get back to their own dorm? Also, how about everyone who was staring, pointing, and yelling out their windows? Were they not also, by having watched the commotion, actively encouraging the actual rock-throwers? If that is true, then perhaps they are guilty by association as well.

Punishing people that video and photos show were near the bedlam as it ensued is hypercritical. If these 70 kids are guilty, then everyone in Southwest is guilty.

Should the dude sitting courtside on Nov. 19, 2004 – the day Ron Artest decided to pay a visit to a few troublesome fans and start throwing punches? He was in the vicinity. Guilty by association?

How about the mother of a convicted rapist? Is she 'guilty by association'?

The answer to both is no.

Dishing out penalties to those immersed in the crowd that exceeded 1,800 that night is mass punishment and it is unjust.

Use the videos and photographs to identify the throwers of the rocks, the lighters of the fires, the breakers of the windows and/or the assistants to the mayhem and make them all pay.

As for the others, i.e. the bystanders and the passers-by?

Don't touch them.

They didn't do anything wrong. They are merely 'guilty by association.'

Domenic Poli is a Collegian columnist.

MICHAEL THE (NOT DAILY) COLLEGIAN

Are all students culpable, or only those who threw the rocks to break this window?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A PLEA FOR RATIONALITY

Please, Governor Patrick don't be party to the cultures of fear and irrationality that lead to the arrest of Peter Berdovsky. It's bad enough that state and federal officials blew up a glorified Lite-Brite, but it's even worse that no one is fessing up to making the mistake of over-reaction.

Your spokesperson called this guerrilla-marketing firm's attempt at manufacturing cool a "hoax," but that is patently wrong. If I mistake the sudden appearance of short shiny garbage receptacles all over the city for a sudden invasion of hell-bent R2D2 wannabes, I was not "hoaxed" into that belief. I was being paranoid and delusional.

The point I'm trying to make is that these things looked nothing like bombs unless, perhaps, you're someone who watches "24" religiously. Given the absurdly bright, cartoon-like nature of the objects in question, the person in question may also be scared to death by the maniacal plotting of The Riddler in "Batman Forever."

Stand against the tide of fear and irrationality, lead the people who led this foolish charge out of the pit they've been digging, ask for apologies and let then let them know they're forgiven. Right now, I'm embarrassed for our state and its capital. Please do something so I don't regret voting for you.

Ian Callahan
UMass Graduate Student

CONCERNING THE 'GUILTY'

I feel badly for the arrested men. This homeland security stuff gets really stupid. The enforcement agencies need to get some perspective. It's hysteria. Turner Broadcasting's statement said the objects had been in place for two to three weeks in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Atlanta, Seattle, Portland, Austin, San Francisco, and Philadelphia.

Of course, people freak in Boston...get a grip. When I saw the photos of these "devices" I realized how absurd this whole incident has been. I can't believe the overreaction that the police and the mayor's office just went through. Why didn't the bomb squads call it off after discovering the first "Suspicious" package?

I am also disappointed in Patrick and Mumbles for using this horrible situation to look tough against terrorism for a city full of fools...kinda like brain-washing? Anyone who thinks these people deserve to be arrested need to grow a brain and maybe describe to me how persecution of public artists is ultimately not a disservice to society. Some people walk around afraid every day of their life. Some people don't.

Grant Cerulo
UMass student

The "bomb" that's causing all the fuss.

WRITE A LETTER TO THE EDITOR!

RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT, AND GET PRINTED IN RETURN!
(550 WORD LIMIT)

Send letters to editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Grizzly Bear roaring to Noho

Iron Horse sets up growl of a time

BY COREY CHARRON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A noticeable buzz of curiosity has begun to build about the upcoming year in music that hasn't been felt in a long time. The new Of Montreal album, "Hissing Fauna, Are You the Destroyer?," has already been released to much critical acclaim and fan appreciation. It is easily the band's best efforts yet. The promise of new albums from legends such as The Arcade Fire, Modest Mouse, Wilco, Dinosaur Jr., Andrew Bird, and even Radiohead make 2007 appear to be a year to be reckoned with.

Adding to the excitement is a full calendar of concerts in Northampton. The Rapture, Sonic Youth, and a reunited Sebadoh are only a few in a long list of bands to look forward to in the upcoming months.

To start off the semester on a tremendously high note, Grizzly Bear and the Dirty Projectors are playing at the Iron Horse Music Hall, in Northampton, this Saturday. Both bands are from Brooklyn, NY and feature beautiful arrangements, unique vocals, and are two of the best young bands in America.

Grizzly Bear began as the side project of lead singer Edward Droste. Born in Boston, Droste started putting together various electronic sounds with layered vocals on a tape recorder. Eventually Droste moved to New York and met Christopher Bear who added his musical expertise to the project. The album that they produced was "Horn of Plenty," which gained its reputation through the underground rock scene in New York.

Clarinet and bass player Chris Taylor and guitarist Chris Rossen were added to the band to complete a full sound on stage for concert dates. After copious amounts of touring and positive reviews, Grizzly Bear was signed to Warp Records.

The many instruments used by Grizzly Bear, which include a piano, banjo, and clarinet, create a deep, atmospheric sort of noise. It's an echo that's hard to pinpoint. Their quiet vocals are greatly complemented by interesting musical compositions. Grizzly Bear has been compared to Animal Collective, mostly for their intimate sounds and anti-folk basis.

THE GRIZZLY BEAR
IRON HORSE
FEB. 3
$11/$14

Grizzly Bear's 2006 release "Yellow House," released on Warp Records, found itself on many year-end best of lists, including reaching number seven on Pitchforkmedia.com's Top 50 Albums of the Year and number nine on Cokemachineglow.com's Top 50 Albums of the Year.

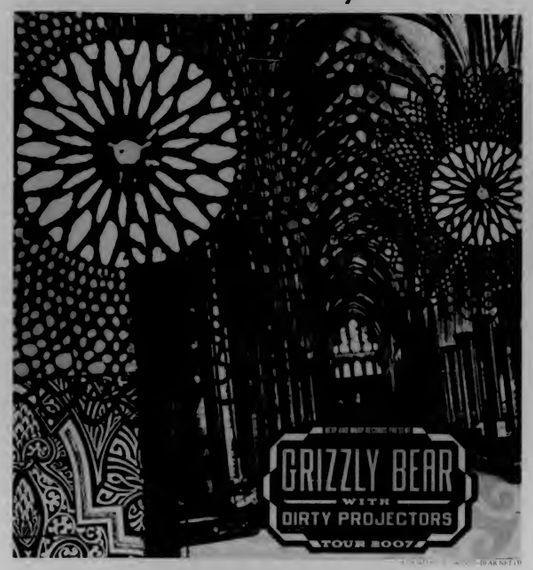
The new phenomenon of blogs has made Grizzly Bear even bigger, as many picked the album as the best album of the year. TV on the Radio picked Grizzly Bear to open for them during their tour last year in support of their hugely popular album "Return to Cookie Mountain." They will make an appearance at this year's Coachella Music Festival in Indio, Calif. on April 29, an addition to an already exciting lineup, including a reunited Rage Against the Machine.

Recently Girl Talk, a mash-up artist DJ from Pittsburgh, remixed Grizzly Bear's song "Knife," with verses from hip-hop duo the Clipse, off their newest release "Hell Hath No Fury." Cansei De Ser Sexy, a Brazilian dance group will also remix "Knife."

The opening band this Saturday is The Dirty Projectors, lead singer Dave Longstreth formed the band in 2003 after dropping out of Yale University. Three albums out and one more to look forward to in 2007, The Dirty Projectors sound evolves with each record. "Slaves Graves and Ballads" released in 2004, features a ten-piece chamber group while earlier record ings featured primarily electronica and traditional instrumentals. Their new album "Rise Above," will be influenced by Black Flag's classic "Damaged." While the sound of the band changes, Longstreth's distinctive singing rarely wavers. Pitchfork traved best as a type of crooning mixed with the vocals of Antony and the Johnsons. Longstreth's voice is the most recognizable part of The Dirty Projectors.

Longstreth has recorded and toured with lo-fi heavyweights such as the Microphones, as well as Wolf Colonel, also known as Jason Anderson. The Dirty Projectors have also toured with Nu Nu.

The Dirty Projectors and Grizzly Bear will be playing at the Iron Horse Music Hall at 10 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 3. Tickets are $11 before the show and $14 at the door.



Grizzly Bear will be performing tomorrow night at 10 p.m. at the Iron Horse with supporting band the Dirty Projectors.

Grizzly Bear is touring with Dirty Projectors in support of their new critically acclaimed album 'Yellow House,' which was released in 2006 by Warp Records.

Brazil plagued by corruption

BY JO PIAZZA
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

NEW YORK — How does a nice Jewish boy from Long Island end up creating one of the most controversial documentaries to hit the Sundance Film Festival this year?

Jason Kohn is a New Yorker born and raised, but his family's Brazilian heritage inspired him to travel to South America and document the corruption and poverty in São Paulo.

"Manda Bala," Portuguese for "Send a Bullet," took Kohn five years to complete. Last week, he traveled to Park City, Utah, to screen his documentary, a movie so graphic that it can't be shown in Brazil.

In 1972, Kohn's grandfather opened the Brazilian department store Berta Brazil Boutique on 46th Street between 6th and 7th avenues. The store closed in 2001, but for nearly 30 years it was a destination for Brazilian immigrants in New York City.

"I basically grew up there on weekends," Kohn remembers. "I used to clean the display windows."

At age 17, he traveled for the

See BRAZIL on page 8

MANDA BALA

DIRECTED BY JASON KOHN

BRAZILIAN DOCUMENTARY

UNRATED

'Manda Bala' is a documentary about the corruption of Brazil at a governmental level. Brazil is the homeland of director Jason Kohn's father.

Faccini gets love from Ben Harper

Piers Faccini released his first album in 2004 and now has fans such as musician Ben Harper.

BY MICHAEL DEEDS
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

The first thing you notice about Piers Faccini's music is his hushed voice, like a father's bedtime story, it is soothing and inwardly beautiful, almost as if he's singing to himself.

That's no coincidence. The British-born singer-songwriter – the latest to be taken under the wing of the Ben Harper camp – learned his craft as a solitary teenager growing up in France.

"I was very shy, and I didn't play music in public ever," explained Faccini, 36, who lives near Paris. "So I got a real feel and sort of habit for just sort of playing for myself in my bedroom. I think you just develop a very soft way of playing, because you haven't got an audience. By the time I did start playing in front of an audience, I sort of realized where my tastes were."

Faccini's vocal approach may be understated, but his audience is not. His growing fan base includes Harper, whom Faccini has opened for and performed with on European dates.

Harper sang backing vocals on the first track of Faccini's elegant 2006 CD, "Tearing Sky," which was produced by Harper's manager-producer, JP Plunier, who is French. Plunier – who also produced Jack Johnson's debut, "Brushfire Fairytales" – surrounded Faccini with able-bodied musicians: Juan Nelson, longtime bassist for Ben Harper's Innocent Criminals, played on Faccini's album. So did Jack Johnson's drummer Adam Topol, who is part of Faccini's backing band.

A veteran performer in London, Faccini is thankful for the exposure jolt from Harper, however he is also not expecting overnight success during his first tour as a headliner in America. Nor will he be disappointed if audiences aren't consistently large.

"You can't think like that," Faccini says. "It's a dead end. I actually had a conversation with Ben Harper about that. We were talking about that while we were touring France. He was just saying that actually success is so relative. If you take out these facts and figures that you sold 100,000 (albums) — or that you played in front of 10,000 (people), the important thing is what you're communicating and what the people who see you are taking away. If it's one person, it's one person."

Harper and company are enamored of Faccini for a reason. His hypnotic songs are organic and gypsy-like, combining global influences ranging from Mississippi Delta blues to English folk and world-beat flourishes. Some may find Faccini's sparse melodies applicable to the psych-folk genre of Devendra Banhart, but Faccini says he's not wild about that scene. ("It's somehow about style," he noted.) Instead among modern singers, Faccini admires the work of Lucinda Williams and Bonnie "Prince" Billy. "To me, Bonnie 'Prince' Billy is about the music — and nothing else matters," Faccini says. "And that's what I like."

As dreamy as Faccini's vocals can be, his lyrics carry significant weight. The songs on "Tearing Sky" are not about quick flings or trivial concerns. Faccini's deep approach to subject matter was triggered, he said, when he heard music from pioneers such as the American bluesman Skip James.

"It was about life," he explained. "It was about the total essential cornerstone of what life is about, which is being born and dying, and loving and hating, God or whatever. And those are the themes I like to deal with."

Faccini knows that these topics may take time for listeners

See FACCINI on page 8

SOURCE

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of UMass Amherst

Friday February 2

ART
Fine Arts Center presents painter John Clarke at the Central Gallery. Clarke's work includes flower prints on paper. Starting at 4 p.m. there will be a gallery talk with the artist. The opening reception starts at 5 p.m. and lasts for two hours. All events are open to the public and free of charge. The Central Gallery is located in Wheeler Dormitory in Upper Central.

MUSIC
New York singer-songwriter Rachel Loshark brings her act to Elevens in Northampton. Loshark has performed with several artists across the nation including Norah Jones. The concert starts at 10 p.m. Zebu and Mystafine will be performing.

Saturday February 3

MUSIC
UMass alumna Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers come to Club Helsinki in Great Barrington. This is Kellogg's only area performance until April so do not miss out. For directions please call 413-528-3394.

COMEDY
Mission: IMPROVable starts off their semester with a performance in Herter 231. Mission: IMPROVable is the longest running show on campus. Admission is free and is first come first serve. The fun starts at 8 p.m.

Sunday February 4

FACULTY LECTURE
Distinguished Faculty Lecture Series presents Joseph I. Goldstein, Department of Mechanical and Industrial Engineering, speaking on "Extraterrestrial Metals: New Clues on Asteroids and the Early Solar System." Goldstein will be speaking in the Massachusetts Room located in the Mullins Center. Admission is free.

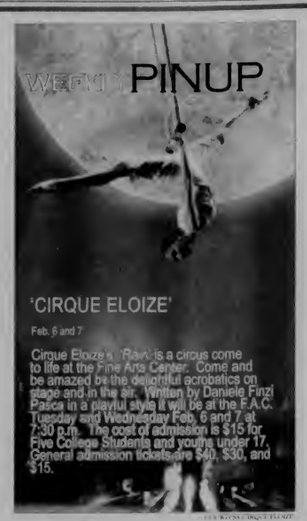
Monday February 5

ART
The UMass W.E.B. Du Bois Library opens a new exhibit, Spies and Lies: Maps from the World War II Era. This exhibit is located in the lower level of the library and is free and open to the public.

ART
Fashioning Tradition: Japanese Tea Wares from the 16th and 17th Centuries. The tea ceremony has become a metaphor for Japanese culture and Japanese aesthetics both in Japan and the West. Objects associated with this ritualistic preparation of tea, including iron kettles, lacquer containers for powdered tea, works of calligraphy and painting, among others, will be on display. The exhibit is located in the Museum of Art on the Smith College Campus.

Tuesday February 6

FACULTY RECITAL
The Music Department's Elizabeth Chang and Nadine Shank on violin and piano respectively will play Shostakovich: Four Preludes Op. 34, No. 10; Bartok: Solo Sonata for Violin; and Beethoven: Sonata Op. 30, No.1 in A major. The performance will begin at 8 p.m. at the Bezanson Recital Hall and is $3 for students.



WEEKLY PINUP
'CIRQUE ELOIZE'
Feb. 6 and 7
Cirque Eloize's "Rave" is a circus come to life at the Fine Arts Center. Come and be amazed by the delightful acrobatics on stage and in the air. Written by Daniele Finzi Pasca in a playful style it will be at the F.A.C. Tuesday and Wednesday Feb. 6 and 7 at 7:30 p.m. The cost of admission is $15 for Five College Students and young under 17. General admission tickets are $40, $30, and $15.

'Manda' shows corrupt truths

BRAZIL from page 7

first time to Brazil with his father, a trip that inspired "Manda Bala."

"After spending time there, I became fascinated and wanted to create a documentary that looked like a film and uncovered the fact that corruption is not a victimless crime," Kohn says.

Kohn employed a predominantly local crew, as well as his father, who lives in Brazil. "It was five years, and during that time I was back and forth between here and Brazil," he says. "There are times when you are doing it that you worry and think 'Wow, this might just not get made.'" Kohn tells the Daily News.

Much of "Manda Bala" is concerned with Jader Barbalho, a Brazilian politician who has held every national office save the presidency. "He is essentially the equivalent of Nancy Pelosi in America in terms of power," Kohn says.

Though Americans are largely unfamiliar with Barbalho, who had to resign from the Senate several years ago after being implicated in an Amazon development scandal, he has been making headlines in Brazil for years.

Kohn uses him as a starting point to examine Brazil's widespread corruption, including politically motivated kidnappings.

Kohn was even able to get an on-camera interview with a São Paulo kidnapper, who disarmingly says that making a living as a kidnapper and killer is more lucrative than any other job in his city — a place plagued by a staggering gap between rich and poor and where abductions are common.

Most of the people living in his slum are from northeastern Brazil, one of the poorest areas in Latin America, and come to São Paulo for jobs and a chance at a better life.

The kidnapper was killed shortly after the documentary was completed.

The footage Kohn managed to shoot is terrifying. One scene shows a kidnapper slicing a man's ear and making him beg for his family to save him. In another, a kidnapping victim describes being held in a box for nearly a month as she was tortured by her captors.

Corruption and violence dictate the documentary 'Manda Bala.'

"At times I worried for my life," Kohn admits of his time spent filming. In the last years of production, he says, he began to see parallels between what's happening in Brazil and the political climate in the United States.

"In the U.S. it is the corporations that are corrupt and controlling the people. The only difference in Brazil is that it is the politicians," he says.

"Manda Bala" competed with 15 other documentaries at the film festival, which ended last weekend.

"Sundance really is as tiring as everyone says it is," Kohn says with a sigh.

Save $$ on Textbooks at the Jeffery Amherst College Store

Check out our website at www.jeffbooks.com to order books online!

All These Courses and More at Discounted Prices:

[illegible]	Intro to Financial Accounting	HTH-MGT	240-1	Hotel Operations
[illegible]	Business Appl. of Comp.	HTH-MGT	250-1 -2	Food Service Management
[illegible]	Intro to Animal Management	HTH-MGT	260-1	Hospitality Pers. Management
[illegible]	Archeology & Prehistory	HTH-MGT	320-1	Hospitality & Tourism Law
[illegible]	Survey: Renaissance-Modern Art	HTH-MGT	355-1	Menu & Food Production MGT
[illegible]	Exploring the Universe	Human Dev.	270	Child Development
[illegible]	Exploring the Universe	Italian	120	Elementary Italian II
[illegible]	Weather & the Atmosphere	Italian	126	Intensive Elementary Italian
[illegible]	Stars & Galaxies	Kinesiology	100	Intro. to Exercise Science
[illegible]	Cellular & Molecular Biology	Kinesiology	110	Human Performance & Nutrition
[illegible]	Intro. to Biology	Kinesiology	560	Exercise Neuroscience
[illegible]	Intro. to Animal Biology	Math	100	Basic Math Skills
[illegible]	General Genetics	Math	101	Precalculus/Algebra
[illegible]	Cellular & Molecular Biology	Math	102	Analytic Geometry
[illegible]	Intro. to Ecology	Math	104	Alg. Analytic Geometry Trig.
[illegible]	[illegible]	Math	113	Math for Elem. School Teachers
[illegible]	[illegible]	Math	127	Calc. I Life/Soc. Sci. I
[illegible]	[illegible]	Math	128	Applied Calculus
[illegible]	[illegible]	MGT	260	Introduction to Law
[illegible]	[illegible]	Microbiology	160	Biology of Cancer and Aids
[illegible]	[illegible]	Microbiology	310	General Microbiology
[illegible]	[illegible]	Microbiology	330	Microbial Genetics
[illegible]	[illegible]	Nutrition	130	Understanding Nutrition
[illegible]	[illegible]	Philosophy	100	Intro. to Philosophy
[illegible]	[illegible]	Philosophy	110	Intro. to Logic
[illegible]	[illegible]	Physics	100	Conceptual Physics
[illegible]	[illegible]	Physics	114	Theory of Sound
[illegible]	[illegible]	Physics	115	Physics of Music
[illegible]	[illegible]	Physics	131 & 132	Intro. to Physics I & II
[illegible]	[illegible]	Physics	151	General Physics I
[illegible]	[illegible]	Physics	152-1 -2	General Physics II
[illegible]	[illegible]	Political Sci.	101-A	American Politics
[illegible]	[illegible]	Political Sci.	111-A	Comparative Politics
[illegible]	[illegible]	Political Sci.	121-A	World Politics
[illegible]	[illegible]	Psychology	100-1 -2 -3	Intro. to Psychology
[illegible]	[illegible]	Psychology	241-1	Methods of Inquiry in Psych
[illegible]	[illegible]	Psychology	305-1	Educational Psychology
[illegible]	[illegible]	Psychology	320	Learn & Think
[illegible]	[illegible]	Psychology	330	Phys. Psychology
[illegible]	[illegible]	Psychology	335	Behavioral Endocrinology
[illegible]	[illegible]	Psychology	350	Child Behavior & Dev.
[illegible]	[illegible]	Psychology	355	Adolescent Psychology
[illegible]	[illegible]	Sociology	106	Race, Gender & Class
[illegible]	[illegible]	Spanish	120	Elementary Spanish II
[illegible]	[illegible]	Spanish	240	Intermediate Spanish II
[illegible]	[illegible]	Spanish	246	Intermediate Intensive

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect Street, Amherst 253-3870
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop in downtown Amherst)

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
Aerobics · Free wts · Mixed Martial Arts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 90 AMHERST

Faccini says life is about birth, death, love and hate

Piers Faccini's 2006 album, 'Tearing Sky,' featured Ben Harper on back ups and utilized famed producer J.P. Plunier.

FACCINI from page 7

to digest. It's one of the reasons that he has realistic expectations about being a musician. Faccini is experienced in the realities of the "starving artist." Along with singing for a living, Faccini also is a modest but successful painter.

"It's a lethal combination," he admitted with a laugh. "Obviously, I have to live. And I have a family to provide for, so there is economic realities. But I don't have to have a huge amount of money. If I can live simply and earn enough money doing what I do then, good. I don't have to think about it too much. I just want to think about writing great songs and making beautiful paintings."

Become a School Psychologist at MSPP

Visit www.mspp.edu/school or call 617-327-6777 x210

The Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology offers a comprehensive graduate program in School Psychology, leading to a master's degree and certificate of advanced graduate study, in an intimate and supportive learning environment. This innovative program integrates coursework with expertly supervised fieldwork to ensure that graduates enter the field with practical knowledge and confidence. The curriculum emphasizes the clinical skills schools need and value: counseling, system interventions, psychodiagnostics, and consultation.

"One of the top ten hot professions"
(U.S. News and World Report)

Applications are still being accepted for Sept. 2007

Next Open House is Feb. 6, 2007, 6:00-8:30 pm*. RSVP to* admissions@mspp.edu or call toll free 888-664-6777 x210*.*

For details, visit www.mspp.edu.

MSPP
221 Rivermoor Street, Boston, MA 02132

UM hosts Spiders at Mullins Center

M. BASKETBALL from page 12

business and being on top of my game," Freeman said. "As a captain, I have to be that spark that we need to get us a victory.

"That's all that really matters. I'm not worrying about how many times we beat them, or how many times we lost. I'm just concerned about getting it done on Saturday."

The Spiders are led by freshman forward Dan Geriot. Geriot leads the team in scoring with 11.8 points per game. Other than him, no other Richmond players averages double digits in scoring on the year, as opposed to UMass' four players (Freeman, Stephane Lasme, James Life and Gary Forbes) averaging over 12 points per game.

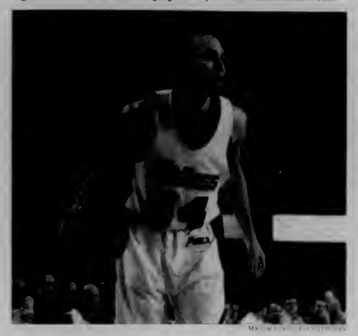
Richmond is the worst offensive team in the conference, averaging only 60.4 points per game. It is also one of the worst rebounding teams in the A-10, averaging 6.29 offensive rebounds (14th) and 18.95 defensive rebounds (13th) per contest.

UMass certainly has more momentum than the Spiders heading into Saturday's matchup. Coming back from a 25-9 first-half deficit to defeat Charlotte on the road is something the Minutemen would like to use as a springboard to a successful A-10 stretch run.

"That game was going to tell us what direction we were going to go in," Freeman said about Sunday's win. "If we had lost that game, we would have been in a really tough position, and we would have had six days off just thinking about a loss.

"It's good because we needed the time we had off," he said. "We've had a lot of games this year, and with the rest that we got, I think that could lead to a good end of the season."

Danny Picard is a Collegian Sports Editor. He can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.



Senior guard James Life ranks third on U Mass in scoring with 13 points per game. His 43 percent shooting from three-point land is a team high.

Minutemen try for third straight win

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Correspondent

UMass skiing is gearing up for another big weekend. The men's team is looking to continue its dominance by winning a third straight carnival, and for the women, they are aiming to get their first overall win of the season.

Last weekend, senior Rush Hawkins took first place and junior Jason Small finished third in the slalom and the giant slalom, respectively. These two top finishes have helped UMass secure the top spot in the conference, and added to the winning streak of four races over the last two carnivals.

"We've taken the last four races by a good margin. The margin is about a three second team total over the next closest team," coach Skip Fox said.

"I think on any given day they can go one and two," Fox said about Hawkins and Small.

Fox talked highly of all the men skiers, saying that they have all been training great and skiing consistently.

"We have about six skiers who consistently finish top 20," Fox said.

With strong finishes in the last two races and perfect conditions on both Friday and Saturday, the men should have no problem adding to their win streak and getting closer to a championship.

For the women, junior Elizal Hawkins and freshman sensation Emily Shilletto continue to keep the Minutewomen in contention. Shilletto has placed in the top five in every race so far.

The two have both had top five finishes in the last two races. Shilletto took first in the slalom and Hawkins took fifth place. In the giant slalom, Hawkins got the upper hand with a second place finish, followed closely by Shilletto in third.

While the two continue to place high, there is a steep drop off to the next closest place which is 31st. That leaves a huge void that needs to be filled and Fox believes that it can be accomplished.

Freshman Ashley Hawes was set to be the third piece of the puzzle, but an ACL injury has sidelined her. When asked who would step up, Fox said that he thinks Lauren Levey, Katie Weissman and Emily Zimmerman are ready to fill in.

"They're all skiing well and I think one or all three of them could step up and make the top 20," Fox said. "[Our team] is coming on strong and I have high expectations for them."

Currently the UMass women sit in fifth place in the conference. The top five teams get invited to the finals and UMass is right on the bubble of missing them.

"Being in fifth is a little scary and Smith College is sneaking up on us, but I'm still confident that we can pull it out and make it to the finals," Fox said.

The weekend proves to be pivotal for both teams. With a victory on the men's side, they can securely hold the top spot in the conference and show that they are a championship caliber team. The women can get that elusive first team victory and prove that they are serious contenders as well.

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Fri 2/2/07 - Thurs 2/8/07
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Brevenant (R) 11:56pm FRIDAY ONLY
Epic Movie (PG-13) 1:40 4:50 7:50 10:05
Beacuse I Said So (PG-13) 1:00 4:00 7:00 9:30*
Freedom Writers (PG-13) 4:10 7:30 10:15
The Messengers (PG-13) 1:45 4:55 7:45 10:20*
Night at the Museum(PG) 1:10 4:40 7:25 10:00
The Queen (PG-13) 1:30 4:25 7:15 9:40*
Smokin' Aces (R) 1:25 4:35 7:40 10:20
Catch and Release (PG-13) 1:20 4:20 7:10 9:55
Stomp the Yard (PG-13) 1:05 4:40 7:35 10:20
Charlotte's Web (G) 1:35
The Departed (R) 12:40 7:05
Children of Men (R) 4:15 10:30
The Pursuit of Happiness (PG-13) 1:15 4:30 7:30 10:15
Dreamgirls(PG-13) 12:50 4:05 7:10 10:10
* no passes or superpasses
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Showtimes available at cinemark.com

Minutewomen invade Philly

W. BASKETBALL from page 12

think they're still confident and the coaches certainly believe in them."

The team's confidence level will really be put to the test if senior forward Tamara Latham is unable to play due to an ankle injury sustained in practice on Wednesday.

"Right now I don't know if she's going to play," Dacko said. "It's touch and go right now. She didn't practice on Wednesday after the injury, or on Thursday."

If the Minutewomen are forced to play without Latham — the squads leading rebounder and second-leading scorer — the plan to pound the ball inside against Saint Joseph's may have to be altered.

"Well, we want to get inside and the plan is to attack the middle," Dacko said. "[Erica] Pollock is their only post player per se, so we have to be able to get the ball inside, but we need Tamara to be healthy to do that."

While the Minutewomen find themselves looking up at Saint Joseph's in the standings, the Hawks have their eyes set on leapfrogging a few teams to maneuver into the top half of the conference. They'll likely rely on what they usually do — launching and draining countless three-pointers — to do just that.

"They like to shoot the three and we need to defend against that," Dacko said. "There's not necessarily a game plan to defend the three-point shot. We just need to defend."

UMass will have to defend the perimeter against a team that has knocked down a staggering 131 trifectas — more than 6.5 per contest — which is good for 57 more triples than the Minutewomen have hit.

Leading the way for the Hawks from the outside are sophomores Jenna Loschiavo and Jen Oyler, each of whom have hit over 40 shots from downtown. Loschiavo is particularly deadly, connecting on a robust 43.6 percent on her 101 attempts.

As if that wasn't enough for the Minutewomen to deal with, neither of those two players even lead the team in scoring — that honor goes to senior guard Ayahna Cornish, who averages 15.7 per night.

These two teams have met a total of 47 times, and the Maroon and White has only escaped with a victory in eight of them. The Hawks repeatedly dismantled the Minutewomen, claiming each of the first 20 encounters in the history of the matchup. From 1999-2004, they met 11 times, with UMass failing to come out on top even once.

Don't blame any of this on Dacko, though. She has led the Minutewomen to three straight triumphs over their nemesis from Philadelphia, including one at Alumni Stadium two years ago.

Eli Rosenstraike is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at eroseno@student.umass.edu.

Rosanio named UMass Athlete of Week

Tenacious guard puts winning ahead of personal achievements

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team (12-10, 2-5 A-10) left the Mullins Center last Sunday feeling incomplete.

They succumbed to a disappointing 67-60 defeat at the hands of Charlotte, after entering the locker room at halftime with a 31-24 lead. The loss, which snapped a two-game winning streak, frustrated the Minutewomen, who felt they might finally have gotten on a roll after dropping seven of their last eight games.

The discontent was evident on the face of UMass coach Marnie Dacko, who said that her team displayed poor ball-control and took bad shots, leading them to the second-half choke.

One of the only satisfying aspects of the Maroon and White's 10th loss of the season was the performance of junior forward Pam Rosanio. Rosanio tied her career-high for points in a game (24), as well as recording seven total rebounds.

That solid game won the psychology major the Dinn Bros. UMass Athlete of the Week award — a weekly honor bestowed upon an athlete that a UMass selection committee feels gave the best athletic performance.

It's not quite the type of accomplishment a Massachusetts athlete works his or her entire career for, but it's still very satisfying to be chosen.

"I appreciate it," Rosanio said. "It's really good to get recognized by them. It was just nice. I'm happy I got it.

"It was nothing really big," she added. "Marnie just said, 'Congratulations.' We went to the luncheon [at the Campus Center on Wednesday] and I just spoke in front of them and thanked them for it."

It still wasn't much consolation for the loss to the 49ers, however.

"I'd rather get a win and not score than lose and have 50 points," Rosanio said. "It's good that I got it, but I'd just rather win more than anything."

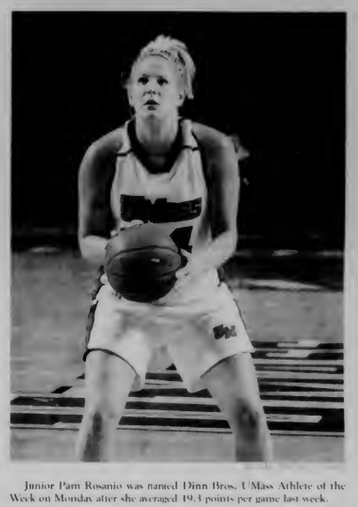
Dacko appreciates the stellar performances of Rosanio, but she too would rather get a "W" than watch her players set personal records.

"I'm happy for her. The last couple games she's played very well and I think it's a very deserving award for her," Dacko said. "I think it was warranted, but if we can get a few more wins I'd be happy."

Rosanio is known for her vocal leadership and tenacious defense. She plays with a fiery passion for the game that makes itself perfectly clear in most post-game stat sheets — and even though it will be against a hometown crowd — nobody thinks her approach will be any different in today's game at St. Joe's [11-9, 3-3 A-10].

"She's playing before her hometown fans. She's going home. Both her and Kim [Henton] are going home — they're both from [around] Philly," Dacko said. "And hopefully they'll both be able to perform well.

"I think we've got to go out and execute against St. Joe's," she added. "And, provided we do well, just carrying that on to [St. Bonaventure's] Sunday."

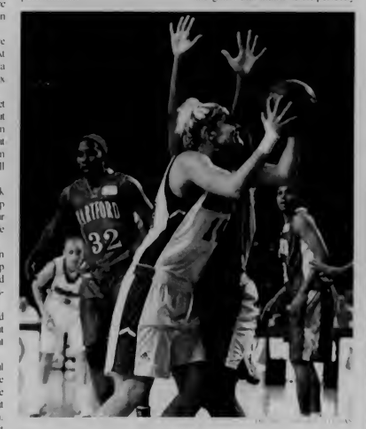


Junior Pam Rosanio was named Dinn Bros. UMass Athlete of the Week on Monday after she averaged 19.4 points per game last week.

Rosanio is the Minutewomen's third-leading scorer with 258 points and is the runner-up in the steals category with 26. The Southampton, Pa., native has also amassed 49 assists and averaged 5.5 boards per game this season.

Dacko — and the rest of women's program — hope that Rosanio continues her dominating, hard-nosed play and proves to her hometown that their 20-year-old local girl is, and always will be, a Massachusetts Minutewoman.

Dominic Poli is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.



Rosanio ranks third on the Minutewomen in scoring with 12.3 points per game. She averages 5.5 rebounds and 2.4 assists per contest.

Cut out this ad receive your FREE $10 gift card!
$10 Gift Card

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413-593-5222
705 Memorial Drive In Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
MARCH 17TH
From HBO's "Tourgasm" and NBC's "Last Comic Standing 2 & 3"
GARY GULMAN
MARCH 10TH
JOHN VALBY
FEB. 23RD
JEFF DUNHAM & FRIENDS
APRIL 21ST
ADELE GIVENS

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
A STUDENT COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored project)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Spring Semester 2007 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. Interviews optional, and if you have questions beyond
6:00-8:00 PM
Campus Center Ball Room • Feb. 5 (Mon) • Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 6 (Tues) • Feb. 7 (Wed)
• Assignment notification ONLY. Email Feb. 8th to Boltwood table @ Concourse
No telephone inquiries. All info re: criteria, assignments, etc. will be sent via email.
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Family reunion: Capraro brothers face off

Senior forward Chris Capraro plays against his younger brother and the UMass Lowell River Hawks on Saturday night at the Mullins Center. Capraro leads UMass in scoring with 22 points on six goals and 16 assists.

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow's contest against University of Massachusetts Lowell means a little more for UMass senior Chris Capraro. Not only are the Minutemen in the thick of the Hockey East playoff chase, but he'll be opposing his younger brother, Steve Capraro, for the third time this season.

Until two weeks ago, the Capraros had never met competitively on the ice. While Chris is in his fourth year in Amherst, Steve finds himself in the midst of his rookie campaign on a team that currently resides in the conference basement.

"It was good, it was fun," said Chris, about him and his brother's first game against each other.

But while he enjoyed facing off against his younger brother, right now Chris said he's focused on gaining Hockey East points.

"It's just important to focus more on the game and not really make it that big of a deal," he said.

So far Chris' focus is paying off. The Minutemen have taken the previous two meetings from the River Hawks on the season, and the elder Capraro has faired well in both of them.

On Jan. 26, Chris netted his sixth goal of the season, and his third on a power play. The tally helped propel the Minutemen to a 6-3 victory, but the final score doesn't tell the whole story. Capraro's goal turned out to be the game-winner after UMass came back from being down 3-2. Chris then assisted on Mike Kostka's empty-netter with the game already in the Mass Attack's hands.

On the other side, Steve didn't fair too well. While playing as a third-line defenseman, he ended the game with a minus one rating.

A week earlier, again it was Chris who turned in the better night of the two Capraros. In a 5-1 win, he earned the second assist on David Leaderer's goal, two minutes into the third period. The score gave the Minutemen some insurance, putting them up 3-1.

"I played OK," the older Capraro said, concerning his performances against UML. "There's always room for improvement."

The pair didn't talk too much on the ice during their first game opposing each other, or face each other for that matter – Chris was on the top line – but they still sought each other out after.

"I was just focused [during the game]," Chris said. "Obviously you say 'What's up?'"

It's an awkward situation for any parent with competing sons, but Chris says his mother and father are taking it well. They want both of their sons' teams to succeed – except for maybe when they're playing each other.

"I'm a little bit older so maybe they root for me a little bit more," he joked.

While his brother and the rest of the River Hawks are focused on improving and gaining valuable experience, Chris and the Minutemen have their sights set on the postseason. Given UMass' current standing – fifth, two points behind Vermont – the Minutemen have a chance at nabbing a home-ice berth.

"All the games are important in January and February," Chris said. "They're all league games. No matter who you're playing, it's always a tough game."

Jon Pelland is a Collegian Sports Editor. He can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu.

UM heads to Rhode Island Mega Meet

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams have one thing on their mind: improvement. At this point in the season both teams have their legs under them as they try to advance to another level.

Tonight the Minutemen will be traveling to Kingston, R.I. for the Rhode Island Mega Meet. The Minutewomen will race on Saturday morning. Last year, both the Minutemen and Minutewomen finished third overall.

The Minutemen posted an impressive race last week at the Boston Indoor Reebok games hosted by Northeastern University. They finished fourth overall in a field of 13 teams. Senior James Godinho placed first in the 500 meters (1:05.07). Godinho's time qualified him for the IC4A Championships later this season. Sophomore Steve Gerome also had a first place finish in the long jump event (22 feet, seven inches).

UMass track coach Ken O'Brien was a little concerned that his team might be behind as the Minutemen started their season later.

"I think they are starting to turn that corner in terms of having only a few meets under their belt now," O'Brien said. "We are starting to make up some of that lost ground."

The Minutemen have had hard workouts the last couple of weeks and last week they did not have tired legs.

"It was especially encouraging because we did just finish two weeks of double workouts and they still competed pretty well for a team that had to do all that work," O'Brien said.

Last year at the Mega Meet, the Minutemen did not have anyone compete in the Pole Vault event and the Weight Throw event. This year the Minutemen will not compete in every event, which again will hurt the team in the standings.

"It's difficult for us to be on the winning side simply because we have so many events where we don't have people in those events," O'Brien said.

O'Brien is only concerned on his team improving in the events that they are running in. He isn't concerned about filling spots but rather getting his top runners and jumpers to qualify for championship meets.

"We just have to focus on the kids that are doing well in their events," O'Brien said.

The Minutemen do not have any significant injuries and with the meet around the corner it cannot be a cause for concern. Again the focus will be on the runners on the field.

"We just keep pecking away at it and focus on the people that are in the ballgame," O'Brien said.

For tonight, the expectations are not concerned with winning the entire meet, however, they do look to improve in every event. The concern for the team is not where it finishes but how it finishes.

"I think we can finish third and still improve," O'Brien said. "However, we could end up in the same place but we could also be registering performances at a higher level."

The Minutewomen are in mid-season form and they look to improve upon their 10th place finish in a field of 13 teams. The Minutewomen, however, did have runners achieving some of their best times of the season.

Posting their best times in the 200-meter dash was sophomore Dionise Miranda, who finished 10th (26.74). And behind her was Holly Heinricher (26.94).

In the 500 meters, three freshmen and junior Jennifer Curtin ran their best times. Nicole Serapiglia placed 19th (1:20.67). Curtin finished 21st 1:20.98. Brittany Bakanowski came in 25th (1:22.52) and Michelle Finley came in 32nd (1:25.51).

Steve Games is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

Junior Chris Masse (above) and senior Erin O'Donnell (below) travel to Kingston, R.I. for the Rhode Island Mega Meet this weekend.

Swimming teams focus on Fordham

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

It's a stressful and tiring part of the season for the Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving teams.

With the season defining Atlantic 10 Championships less than three weeks away, one would think that Saturday's dual meet with Fordham would be in the back of the swimmers' and coaches' minds. But they are treating the meet as one final opportunity to prepare for the season ending event.

However, that does not mean that the teams are altering their training schedule for the competition with the Rams. In fact, the swimmers are practicing as hard as they have all season.

"The reason I like to do two hard days [of practice] in a row this time of year is because A-10's are a three and a half day meet," men's coach Russ Yarworth said. "So I want to get them used to stressing, coming back and stressing again. I just want to make sure they can recover and be ready to go."

The difficult training cycle is taking its toll on the women's team as well. It involves the process of alternating periods of rest with those of intense physical exertion, referred to as tapering.

"We have people in different spots," women's coach Bob Newcomb said. "Some are sore, while some are ready to be done with taper. The range of emotions right now is phenomenal. We're 20 days out from A-10's and we have a long way to go, but we're in a great spot."

The fact that the teams are competing against an A-10 opponent does not affect how they will approach the meet. Most of the swimmers will be competing in their main events, while others will swim in alternate events to give them a change of pace at this point in the season.

Fordham's male squad finished fifth at the A-10 Championships in 2005-06, but the A-10 coaches picked the team to finish sixth this season. In their last competition, the Rams fell to conference rival La Salle, 142-100.

"They're a solid team, but they're in the same phase that we are," Yarworth said. "They are very strong in the freestyle events, but I think we're stronger in the stroke events. I think we match up well with them."

The Minutemen faced the Rams earlier this year at Yale's Nutmeg Invitational in early December. Senior A.J. Vozella won the only event for UMass, the 50-yard freestyle.

The Rams failed to win any individual events at the meet, but their relay teams swam well, posting third place finishes in both the 400-yard medley and the 200-yard freestyle. However, the Maroon and White did not enter teams in any of the relay events at the invitational.

Fordham's women's team hopes to improve on a seventh place finish in the conference last season. The A-10 coaches seem to agree, as they picked the Rams to finish fifth this year.

The team crushed La Salle 152-83 its last time in the pool, a performance that bodes well for their conference championship hopes.

"Fordham is probably the most improved team in the conference," Newcomb said. "[Fordham coach, Steve Porsklan] had a great recruiting year; he has a good, solid group in every event. They're a very, very good team."

The month of November was very memorable for two of Fordham's freshmen. On Nov. 18, Caitlin Napoli broke the school record in both the 200-yard butterfly and the 200-yard freestyle against A-10 foes Duquesne and Rhode Island.

Two days later, Nicole Marshall set a new mark in the 200-yard breaststroke in a meet against Columbia.

Although the results of the meet are not paramount, its importance cannot be overlooked. It's more important to the coaches how the athletes swim, instead of whether or not they actually win their individual races.

"If you race well, things will take care of themselves," Newcomb said. "I'm looking to get the team up and excited about swimming against a conference opponent. It's the last meet for four of our swimmers that aren't going to [the A-10 Championships], so that's a big thing for them. We have a lot things going on this weekend."

Michael King is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

THE BEST SPRING BREAK EVER!
Mexico
Creative Writing & Yoga
Sun salutations just after dawn, writing by the sea,
exploring jungle hills
where the river meets crescents of sand.
March 17 - 24
www.writingretreats.org
Patricia Lee Lewis
(413) 527-5819
patricia@writingretreats.org

UMass
YOGA
In Boyden 10
Spring 2007
(Monday, February 5 - May 15)
FREE Intro Classes
Mon-Thur
Jan. 29 - Feb. 1
Mon/Wed
2:00-3:15 pm Power Yoga
3:30-4:45 pm Yoga Basics
Tues/Thurs
1:00-2:15 pm Yoga Basics
2:30-3:45 pm Intermediate
4:00-5:15 pm Yoga Basics
Early Bird Special!
1 class per week -$80 Only $65!
2 classes per week $150 $120!
For more info or to register
Campus Recreation ▪ Boyden 215
413-545-0022 ▪ umassyoga.com

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

Student Special
4 MONTHS
$149
Aerobics
Free wts
Mixed Martial Arts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0000
POMEROY TERRACE, AMHERST

NOW SHOWING
Feb. 2 - Feb. 8
amherst cinema
VOLVER
Academy Award Nominee Penelope Cruz Best Actress
FRI 1:00-4:10-7:00-9:40
SAT & SUN 11:10-1:00-4:10-7:00-9:40
MON-THURS 1:00-5:30-8:00
THE LAST KING OF SCOTLAND
Academy Award Nominee Forest Whitaker Best Actor
FRI 1:40-4:10-6:40-9:10
SAT & SUN 11:10-1:40-4:10-6:40-9:10
MON-THURS 1:00-5:30-8:00
Pan's Labyrinth
Academy Award Nominee Best Foreign Language Film
FRI 1:30-4:00-7:30-10:00
SAT & SUN 12:00-2:30-5:00-7:30-10:00
MON-THURS 1:30-6:00-8:30
28 AMITY STREET
DOWNTOWN AMHERST
413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		3				8	7
8		4	7	2
	5				1		2 6
	8			4	7
			3	6			1
4	9		8			7
				7	6	9	4
2		5				1

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Eighty-six percent of all statistics are made up."
-Matthew R. Janko

WOMBAT By Neil Bryer

I CAN'T BELIEVE THIS MP3 PLAYER STILL ISN'T WORKING CLICK CLICK COME ON!
CLICK CLICK CLICK CLICK CLICK
NEIL! YOUR GARAGE DOOR IS GOING CRAZY!!!

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

SO PENNY, SAY I WERE TO, YOU KNOW, END THINGS WITH MANDY, AND WE GAVE IT ANOTHER-- NO
AND FOR FUTURE REFERENCE, ANY QUESTIONS YOU'RE GOING TO ASK, RIGHT NOW AND IN THE HUNDRED YEARS THAT FOLLOW... ALSO NO.
WELL THAT'S FINE. JUST FINE! BECAUSE I WAS GOING TO ASK YOU IF YOU'D EVER DATED ANYONE BETTER THAN ME? I GUESS YOU HAVEN'T THEN? WELL GOOD!
THEN WHY ARE YOU CRYING?
BECAUSE I'M HAPPY!

THE FAMILY MONSTER By Josh Shalek

May I accompany you to your appointment, Mister Rabbit?
Er, but we must hurry! I'm late
Ah, Rabbit Bird has just begun to outline his latest project
What sort of class is this?
We're the League of Animal Researchers
You're so cute! You act like people
Hate to break it to you, ma'am, but we don't consider that a compliment

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

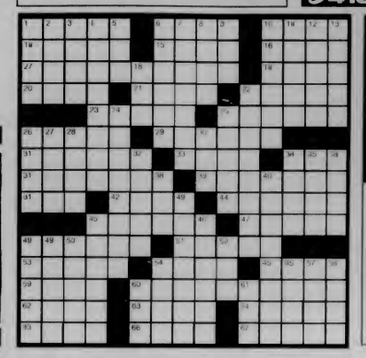
How do you like being a ranger here, Dee?
I love this park
I grew up near here. So coming back to work is like a dream
So um... what kind of lizard are you, exactly?
I get that all the time. My parents grew up on the nuclear testing grounds in Nevada
You're a hideous deformity, not a species
Exactly

ACROSS
1 Room at the top
6 Objectives
10 Ridicule
14 Equality grp.
15 Retarding force
16 Stratford's river
17 Lab class assignment
19 Philosopher Descartes
20 Desired object
21 Loathsome
22 Mournful song
23 Mussenet work
25 Intellectual
26 Profoundly disturbing
29 Surround completely
31 Carver's tool
33 Befuddlement
34 Turn sharply
37 Makes known
39 Fragrant spray
41 Storm center
42 Rice wine
44 Soviet dictator
45 Household
47 Circumvent
48 Beach bathhouse
51 Shift options
53 Have life
54 Sound like a rooster
55 Send off
58 Navel fuzz
60 Easy as ABC
62 Front balcony
63 Isinglass
64 Engaged in battle
65 Warning sign
66 Once — time
67 Wailed

DOWN
1 Freshly
2 Metered vehicle
3 Lights out!
4 Refrigerator precursor
5 ER lifesaving action
6 Look up to
7 Shamrock nation
8 Thick head of hair
9 E. Biko, e.g.
10 Of the sea
11 Out in the open
12 Line dance
13 Prepare to propose
18 __ gotcha now!
22 Mil. runaway
24 Agreeable
25 Hedged puzzles
26 Parcel of land
27 Miss Muffet diet item
28 Basketball team
30 Beret or beretta
32 Andes grazer
34 Baltic language
35 In the center of
36 Hereditary unit
38 Hit the slopes
40 Artificial male voice
43 Spanish painter born on Crete
45 Attach firmly
46 Naval petty officer
48 String quartet member
49 Universal principle
50 Spree
52 Wonder
54 Money holder
56 Bryn — College
57 Teheran land
58 Phoenician port
60 Rattle bird
61 Apprehend

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
THE RAPTURE
plus Under The Influence of Giants, Locksley
SAT. FEB. 10 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub
10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
ALL AGES (18 & OVER TO DRINK)
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL:
WWW.IHEG.COM
OR 413-586-8686



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
I am sorry to tell you that you will never have relations with Patrick Dempsey.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Can a horoscope that ends with a question mark ever be helpful?

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
STOP CHECKING YOUR PULSE! You are not having a heart attack.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Think about this: Fruit Loops and Cheerios share a common ancestor.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Don't fret sweet thing, panda bears are making a comeback.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will rock the socks off of Amherst tonight.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will drink the sweet nectar of success.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Give in to your urge to eat a whole bunch of bananas.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Check your e-mail if you know what's good for you.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
This weekend is a great opportunity to get frostbite.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Forget organization. Try disorganization.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
People will like you more if you refer to them as "Muffin."

Wouldn't you like to see your comics published?
Why don't you send them in?
What do you have to lose?

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Global Express Tours Spring Break Montreal Party Weekends from $99 Complete bus, hotels, & clubs. Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town, 1,2,3 Bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CHILDCARE

After school Childcare. Seek responsible, patient and playful babysitters for beautiful 10year old girl with mild Cerebal palsy. $11.00 per hour. We are in North Amherst, 4 miles from UMass. 253-0779. highpoint@comcast.net

EMPLOYMENT

Chicago Pizza. Drivers Wanted pay $7.00 per hour plus tips. Weekends required. Cashiers pay $8.50 per hour. Weekends required. Apply in person 150 Fearing St. Amherst 549-6073

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Become a summer orientation counselor and make a difference in the lives of over 4000 new students. Additional information and applications can be found at www.umass.edu/newstudent/contact/studentjobs/counselor The application deadline is February 16, 2007

Moving: Local Moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Campus Representative Job Earn $200/4 hours of work Distributing Door Hangers in dorms If interested email: joerivard@collegemarketplace.com

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Cape Cod Summer Near Hyannis. $150/week. 508-428-3456 CapePhotoArt@aol.com

ENTERTAINMENT

The Pushkin Emerging Artists Showcase Saturday Feb. 3rd 7pm Featuring Cold Duck Complex & DJ Henry C. Downtown Greenfield 4 Federal St. www.thepushkin.com B.Y.O.B

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Tutoring, Risk Free Trial $15 per hour. Customized programs in Math & Science. Highest Quality! 866-993-2263 ext.51 www.tutorowl.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

ROOM FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 5 minutes from UMass. Looking for roommate(s) for Winter and/or Spring. Washer, Dryer, Parking. vwright@student.umass.edu (413) 461-1039

Submit your classified ads online at www.daily collegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Richmond crawls into Amherst

Minutemen host Spiders after a restful six-day layoff

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There was plenty of time to let the come-from-behind win over Charlotte sink in. The Massachusetts men's basketball team will have had six days to think about Sunday's 66-61 victory by the time Saturday's battle with Richmond rolls around.

The Minutemen host the Spiders (5-16, 1-7 Atlantic 10) tomorrow at noon at the Mullins Center.

UMass coach Travis Ford rewarded his team with two days off from practice (Monday and Tuesday), but the extra long layoff in between games isn't something he wants every week, especially after a big win.

"It was a positive and negative thing for us," Ford said on the six days off. "The positive was that we got our guys to get acclimated to going back to school. The negative part was, I really liked the way we finished the Charlotte game, so I'd like to have gotten right back on the court and played a game somewhere in between."

Ford liked the mentality his team played with on Sunday, and wanted to carry that into the week by playing more games.

"It was kind of two-fold, but we'll deal with the situation that was presented to us," Ford said. "This time of year I really don't like to be off that long. I'd rather be playing games."

UMass (15-6, 5-2 A-10) now finds itself with back-to-back games at home, with Saturday's contest being against the lesser of the two teams. Richmond is in last place in the A-10, and has only one win in conference play.

The Spiders have had their fair share of troubles this season. They have lost 13 of their last 14 games, and are currently on a six-game losing skid.

However, the Minutemen have made it a point that underestimation is not one of their qualities.

"Every game is big for us because we're not good enough to overlook anybody," senior captain Rashaun Freeman said. "We're only good enough to where, if we take every game serious, like a Richmond game, then I think we'll be in good shape."

"There haven't been any easy games for us," Ford said. "I think we understand that we're not a team that's going to go out and overlook anybody. We're fighting for our lives. This game is not going to be easy. It's very much a big concern for me right now because you can throw records out the door. Richmond can win on any given night, so we just have to step up and play some defense."

Saturday's game will mark just the seventh meeting between UMass and Richmond. The Spiders hold a 5-1 advantage in their last six games, including three straight.

The Minutemen haven't beaten Richmond since Feb. 12, 2003, but the UMass veterans aren't using that as a motivational tool.

"I'm really not thinking about that, but more so just taking care of

See M. BASKETBALL on page 9

MICHAEL THIBODEAU/COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Stephane Lasme became UMass' all-time leader in blocked shots in Sunday's 66-61 win over Charlotte. Lasme now has 339 career blocks, just three more than the former leader, Marcus Camby. The Minutemen host Richmond on Saturday at noon.

BC, UML on tap for UMass

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts hockey team has just 10 games remaining on its schedule before hockey's version of March Madness sets in. And what a way to start the home stretch, with a return to Kelley Rink to face Boston College (14-9-1, 11-7-1 HEA) in the rubber match of the season series.

In early December, the Mass Attack (12-8-4, 9-6-2, HEA) took the first game from the Eagles in a hard-fought 2-1 win at home, only to have BC flex its muscles on its own ice back in Boston and take back a 5-2 victory.

On Saturday, the Minutemen will look to sweep UMass Lowell (3-19-5, 2-14-2), playing their sister school for the third time in four weeks.

UMass currently sits in fifth place in Hockey East, sandwiched between Vermont and Maine, both of which have two games each to play against the Maroon and White.

Tonight's matchup with BU kicks off a five-week stretch where the Minutemen's playoff aspirations are in their own hands.

"Every game is going to be so competitive, as it always is," said UMass coach Don Cahoon. "But even more so with the way the standings are balanced and home ice legitimately being attainable.

Cahoon's squad plays at least one more game against each team ahead of them in the standings, except for New Hampshire, which UMass has taken two of three games from this season.

"You control your own destiny," said Cahoon. "Every game is going to be a slugfest, and we can't afford to look by any one of them. I'm looking to win as many games as we can win, with the objective being home ice for the playoffs, and it can only start with what we do on Friday."

The Eagles are coming off a rough stretch, in which they've gone 2-3 in their last five games, but have struggled to gain momentum all season, whereas the Mass Attack has picked up the slack from its struggles over the holiday break, going 4-1-1 in its last six.

Cahoon hopes this season will be different from the last few, where his team struggled over the back half of the schedule, though Cahoon made no excuses for that trend.

"The second half of the season hasn't always been kind to us," he said. "Some of that was just athletically not measuring up, and not having the mentality that it takes to succeed at this point in the season. We've still got to struggle to get through it. We can't go beyond that first game. [We have to] get whatever we can out of that, and then bring it back here on Saturday and take care of business."

One reason for the improvement in the past month is the Minutemen's two wins over UMass Lowell. Saturday, the Mass Attack will try to complete the season sweep over the River Hawks.

However, this time the game comes one day after facing a different opponent, something Cahoon admits is the most difficult part of each season's schedule.

"The good news is we've played Lowell twice in the last three weeks, so that allows us to be able to deal with it," Cahoon said.

One player that has had the hot hand for the Minutemen in recent weeks is senior Kevin Jarman. The forward has scored four points in the last three games, good enough to convince Cahoon that he was the man to take the penalty shot at the end of regulation against Boston University.

"I think he's a senior who's playing with more confidence," Cahoon said. "He's bigger, stronger and more physical than a lot of the guys he's competing against. Those guys are good athletes and they all get into rhythms, and I think he's in a better rhythm than he's ever been in."

Another Minuteman that's been solid as of late is goaltender Jon Quick. Well, except for that one play. Quick made the mistake that every goalie seems to make eventually, allowing a goal on a mere dump in.

Quick tried to make a play on the puck, but it bounced at a funny angle, hit his stick and slid straight into the net. The sophomore made a fast recovery, though, stopping a breakaway attempt less than a minute later. The play hasn't been on his mind since.

"That goal is ancient history," said Cahoon. "Huke goals go in on the best of goaltenders. Those plays occur in the National Hockey League. Jon, someday, might be in the National Hockey League, and I think he understood the importance of responding to that play as opposed to being affected by it."

Cahoon reiterated his feelings from after the game, expressing how impressed he was that Quick refused to give up on that game.

"Like any good athlete, [the goal] probably gnawed away at him, but his ability to be able to just put it aside. I think that speaks volumes about him."

—Jeremy Rice is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Sophomore forward Scott Crowder and the Mass Attack face Boston College in the rubber match of a three-game season series tonight at 7 p.m.

KAREN WINOGRON/COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Kevin Jarman has 13 points on the year. He ranks fourth on U Mass in goals scored with seven on the season.

Minutewomen try to exorcise demons

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It may be in the city of brotherly love, but Alumni Stadium – the home of Saint Joseph's, and tonight's opponent – has been anything but welcoming to the Massachusetts women's basketball team (12-10, 2-5 Atlantic 10).

UMass will look to exorcise its demons – it has three wins and 20 losses at Alumni Stadium – when the ball is tipped off at 7 p.m. in a crucial conference matchup for both teams.

If the Maroon and White wish to garner respect from within the conference, it needs to register the win against a tough Hawks (12-10, 3-3 A-10) team. The game's importance is not lost on UMass coach Marnie Dacko.

"I think every game is essential," she said. "We're in it to win it, but I think we've got to be able to manage the ball more and believe in ourselves."

Due to the team's recent struggles, the confidence level of her players has left Dacko a bit concerned.

"When you don't win ballgames and you lose leads, that will cause the players to doubt themselves," she said. "It becomes difficult when you don't have someone that carries your team day in and day out. I think there's a little doubt, but I

See W. BASKETBALL on page 9

MICHAEL THIBODEAU/COLLEGIAN

Freshman guard Diatiema Hill and the Minutewomen host Saint Joseph's tonight at 7 p.m. UMass has won two of its last three games.

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

Indianapolis Colts wide receiver Marvin Harrison has only two post-season touchdown receptions. Both came in a 41-10 wildcard win over the Denver Broncos in 2003.

MINUTEMEN SQUASH SPIDERS | PAGE 10

A3 UNVEILS ART WITH A MESSAGE | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 17 LO: 9 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2007

All's quiet on the Southwestern Front

A police officer blocks off an entrance to John Adams dormitory during the Super Bowl last night. UMass officials took great lengths to ensure there would be no student riots at the conclusion of the game.

'Super ads' fall flat

Many students are left wanting more from ads

BY VINCENT CAPONE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Forget the football, there are some people who watch the Super Bowl solely for the advertisements. Big money, $2.7 million for 30-seconds, is rolled out for that special and vast audience. The idea is to sell viewers their product during TV's most watched event.

However, at the University of Massachusetts, the majority of students thought this years' commercials seemed to lack a certain zest and could not quite hold up to previous years.

"I was really disappointed this year because the commercials were neither new nor enticing," said Sharmin Rahman, a UMass sophomore. "I had seen most of the commercials previously during the coming attractions at movie theaters. But I love Prince, so that was a plus."

There were a few commercials that the viewers walked away remembering.

The fan-created "Doritos distraction" commercial, in which a man crashes into a steering wheel, was one of the funniest that aired during the game's thrilling first quarter, according to students.

One commercial that had a lot of pre-Super Bowl hype behind it was a commercial by Nationwide Life Insurance that featured music artist

See SUPER ADS on page 3

$2.6 MILLION

To better grasp the mass appeal of Super Bowl commercials, consider that the cost for some 30-second spots during this year's game has skyrocketed to $2.6 million. In 1997, that amount was $1.2 million, according to research firm TNS Media Intelligence. Here are a few more things you can buy for $2.6 million:

260,000 AirCraft Carrier Combo Packs from Wings ($99.99 each)

461 Philips Cineos 63" Flat-Panel Plasma HDTV's ($5,399.99 each)

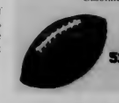
108,378 30-Packs of Bud-Light ($23.99 each)

14 2006 Lamborghini Gallardo ($175,900 each)

4,952 Dolce & Gabbana Point Toe Top shoes ($525 each)

136,986 The Encore Remix {Original Recording Remastered} by Deion Sanders CD ($18.98 each)

962,962 Gallons of Unleaded Gasoline ($2.17 each)



521,042 V-Sport Official Size Vinyl Footballs ($4.99 each)

No Pats, but parties still on

Students gather to watch Bowl, sans Patriots

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A mostly apathetic University of Massachusetts student body relaxed and took in last night's game with little emotion as Peyton Manning and the Indianapolis Colts cruised to victory on a night where students usually plan big things.

Whether it be the stern warning issued to students via e-mail or the bulky presence of Residential Advisors and dorm security, the underclassmen and those upperclassmen who live on campus settled for a tame night of football and take-out.

The fact that the hometown New England Patriots were not playing certainly played into the mildly mannered night.

"I don't know what I'm doing or where I'm going," said Maha Mudawar a freshmen who resides in Southwest. "Because who cares about the Colts and the Bears?"

"If you are going to beat the Patriots, you better go all the way," said UMass student Kelsey Lundgren.

While some students waited to plan for the night, others were more prepared.

On the 17th floor in Kennedy residents brought in a big screen TV, futons, easy chairs, and snacks as they tried to create an atmosphere more like home than the cramped quarters of the rooms to which they are generally more accustomed.

Nachos and dip were replaced with dry tortilla chips, soda was replaced with water from Gatorade bottles; but if one were to judge solely from the soundtrack of the night, it would be reflective of many of the more lively night spots in New England.

Arguments were created among viewers, Peyton Manning was compared to parts of the female anatomy, but a good time seemed to be had by all.

The only catch was the food situation. Many relied on the services of local vendors but were disappointed when they could hear nothing but busy signals on the other end. A debate the length of the game's first quarter occurred as three people continuously tried to order Wings, only to be repeatedly let down.

Whether not to resort to Domino's was the major question as football was ignored to make calculations that involved price per wing, price per person, and effort involved in attaining the food.

Ultimately, a different vendor was chosen, and the group looked on enviously as the crowd across the room devoured the honey BBQ morsels of unattainable goodness.

Before the game, during commercials, and during halftime, video games were played to try and predict the events of the night as if a contest in Madden would determine the carriers of the players involved.

The talents of Peyton Manning and Brian Urlacher were compared as non-physics majors tried to weigh an unstoppable force against an unmovable object. Guacamole was spilled; Vinatieri was given the finger at the coin toss; and jokes were made at Manning's continuous grimaces as students allowed brief interruptions of conversations to watch the game.

At halftime, across the windy plain of Southwest inside Cance, futons were replaced by desk chairs and mattresses, and the big screen was smaller but the atmosphere was more representative of the average UMass student's.

Chips and salsa were switched to fun sized bags of Fritos but food was still ordered. While some were initially annoyed by the flood of food flyers slid under the doors of dorm rooms, the inhabitants were later thankful when less popular vendors were chosen and coupons were used throughout campus.

Few people ventured very far from their rooms, other than to meet friends and pick up food from the continuous flow of delivery people in the lobbies of dormitories. Many were disappointed as the Lombardi Trophy was hoisted hy the enemy, but a certain level of respect was exuded.

Overall, last night was a night filled with weary weekend warriors who were more concerned with seeing friends than the outcome of the game.

During a contest in which the weather conditions seemed to be the most formidable obstacle, disinterested fans settled for the light entertainment of the game and more interesting conversation of stories involving the individual exploits of the weekend.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu

Texas law: middle school girls must receive HPV vaccine

BY LIZ AUSTIN PETERSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN, Texas — Some conservatives and parents' rights groups worry that requiring girls to get vaccinated against the sexually transmitted virus that causes cervical cancer would condone premarital sex and interfere with the way they raise their children.

By using an executive order that bypassed the Legislature, Republican Gov. Rick Perry – himself a conservative – on Friday avoided such opposition, making Texas the first state to mandate that schoolgirls get vaccinated against the virus.

Beginning in Sept. 2008, girls entering the sixth grade will have to receive Gardasil, Merck & Co.'s new vaccine against strains of the human papillomavirus, or HPV.

Perry also directed state health authorities to make the vaccine available free to girls 9 to 18 who are uninsured or whose insurance does not cover vaccines. In addition, he ordered that Medicaid offer Gardasil to women ages 19 to 21.

Perry, a conservative Christian who opposes abortion and stem-cell research using embryonic cells, counts on the religious right for his political base. But he has said the cervical cancer vaccine is no different from the one that protects children against polio.

"The HPV vaccine provides us with an incredible opportunity to effectively target and prevent cervical cancer," he said.

Opponents say Perry should have let the Legislature decide whether to impose a mandate.

"He's circumventing the will of the people," said Dawn Richardson, president of Parents Requesting Open Vaccine Education, a citizens group that fought for the right to opt out of other vaccine requirements. "There are bills filed. There's no emergency except in the boardrooms of Merck, where this is failing to gain the support that they had expected."

Texas allows parents to opt out of inoculations by filing an affidavit objecting to the vaccine on religious or philosophical reasons. Conservative groups say such provisions still interfere with parents' rights to make medical decisions for their children.

The executive order is effective until Perry or a successor changes it, and the Legislature has no authority to repeal it,

See HPV on page 3

Beginning September 2008, schoolgirls in Texas must be immunized with the HPV vaccine Gardasil, to help prevent the virus that causes cervical cancer.

Orlando, Fla. laws aim at reducing homeless population

New ordinance punishes helping the homeless

BY TODD LEWAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. — At Lake Eola park, there is much beauty to behold: robust palms, beds of cheery begonias, a cascading lake fountain, clusters of friendly egrets and swans, an amphitheater named in honor of Walt Disney.

Then there are the signs.

DO NOT LIE OR OTHERWISE BE IN A HORIZONTAL POSITION ON A PARK BENCH ... DO NOT SLEEP OR REMAIN IN ANY BUSHES, SHRUBS OR FOLIAGE ... per city code sec. 18A.09 (a) and (o).

Visit the park's restrooms, and you'll find this sign on the wall above the hand dryers:

BATHING AND/OR SHAVING IN RESTROOM IS PROHIBITED ... per city code 18A.09 (p) ... LAUNDERING CLOTHES IN LAKE EOLA PARK IS NOT PERMITTED.

Since joggers and dog walkers tend not to snooze in flower beds, and because employees at the glittering office towers around Lake Eola don't scrub laundry in park sinks, it's clear, says Monique Vargas, at whom the notices are targeted.

"They're talking to us, to the homeless," says Vargas, 28, who says she has lived on the streets, in parks or under overpasses, since age 16. "It's a way of saying, 'Your kind isn't wanted in our city.'"

See HOMELESS on page 3

A new law in Orlando requires those who wish to feed more than 25 hungry individuals in public within a 2-mile radius of City Hall, obtain a "Large Group Feeding Permit."

MTV U ecomagination CHALLENGE

Congratulations!
UMass is a finalist in the mtvU GE ecomagination
Challenge

Vote now

The mtvU GE ecomagination Challenge asked college students to develop and submit new, creative ways to green their campus. A panel of judges reviewed the applications and evaluated each application based on its potential environmental impact, economic viability, and overall creativity.

To determine the winner, our judges need your input.

Go to ecocollegechallenge.com to vote for UMass.

You could win an Angels and Airwaves on-campus concert as well as a $25,000 grant to bring your energy generation project to life.

Interested in a career at GE? Visit gecareers.com.

FDA: no warnings put on food made from cloned animals

By Libby Quaid
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Cloneburgers won't come with warnings. When the government approves food from cloned animals, expected in the next year, the Food and Drug Administration doesn't plan special labels. Government scientists have found no difference between clones and conventional cows, pigs or goats.

However, shoppers won't be completely in the dark. To help them sort through meat and dairy products, one signal is the round, green USDA organic seal, says Caren Wilcox, who heads the Organic Trade Association.

While many people choose organic to avoid pesticides or antibiotics, Wilcox says the U.S. Department of Agriculture label also means clone-free.

"Organic animal products will not come from cloned animals," she said.

Cloning is taboo to Organic Valley, the country's biggest organic farming cooperative.

"This is absolutely prohibited in our world. It goes against everything we believe," said George Siemon, CEO of the 700-member cooperative. "Organic is based on having plenty with what nature's given us."

"Clone-free" labels are also likely on some nonorganic food, such as ice cream made by Ben & Jerry's Homemade Inc.

Still, it's unclear how much cloning will matter to consumers.

The nation's milk industry worries that people might reject food from clones or turn away from dairy products altogether. But so far, public opinion appears mixed. In a September poll by the Pew Initiative on Food and Biotechnology, 64 percent said they were uncomfortable with animal cloning.

In a December poll by the University of Maryland, the same percentage said they would buy, or consider buying, such food if the government said it was safe.

"The answers weren't yuck versus yes, not for the consumers that are provided information," said Barb Glenn, director of animal biotechnology for the Biotechnology Industry Organization.

People who can afford it will pay more for organic products, which are grown without toxic pesticides and fertilizers, antibiotics or synthetic growth hormones. Organic food is also grown without genetic engineering.

Organic is a rapidly growing segment of the nation's food market. Organic sales have grown by up to 20 percent annually, overall growth in food sales is around 3 percent.

Some in Congress want to require labels on food from clones. Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., has introduced legislation to require this note on packages: "This product is from a cloned animal or its progeny."

Mikulski and other critics disagree with FDA, which has said labels probably are unneeded because clones and their food are as safe as conventional versions.

"The FDA has gone astray, insisting that anytime they say a food is safe, consumers are obligated to eat it," said Carol Tucker Foreman of Consumer Federation of America.

The dairy industry says the bill would hurt their business.

"A huge burden would be on every single milk, cheese and ice cream company in this country, large and small, to provide 100 percent traceability and segregation and labeling of their milk," said Susan Ruland, spokeswoman for the International Dairy Foods Association.

"This is for a kind of milk that isn't even out there yet and that we're not even sure anyone is going to produce," Ruland said.

According to biotech companies, it may be difficult to promise that food is clone-free.

The purpose of cloning is not to put lots of cloned livestock into the food supply. The purpose is to make a genetic copy of a superior animal and put its offspring into the food supply.

Scientists have found no difference in clones or their offspring, and they have detected no difference in the animals' meat or milk. That could make it tough to keep offspring, and their progeny, out of production.

"You can't distinguish these animals from other animals," Glenn said. "It's almost mind-boggling, when you start talking about the granddaughters of granddaughters of granddaughters."

For organic, some question whether clones or their offspring really go against the rules.

The Agriculture Department was asked to address cloning when the organic standards were written, a process that drew comments from more than 300,000 people and organizations. The standards, which took effect in 2002, do not mention clones or their offspring; instead, they say genetic engineering is not allowed.

That is a source of disagreement between the department and the cloning industry.

Department officials say cloning is forbidden in organic animals. The process is incompatible with the standards, says Lloyd Day, head of the Agricultural Marketing Service, which governs the organic industry. The department still must decide whether the offspring of cloned animals are allowed, Day said.

Cloning companies disagree. They note the FDA says cloning is not genetic engineering. The idea of genetic engineering is to take away or add genes, while cloning leaves the gene sequence intact.

"Our interpretation is that cloning is not excluded at this time," Glenn said.

Rather, FDA says cloning is a technology that help animals reproduce, similar to in-vitro fertilization and artilicial insemination. And in-vitro fertilization is allowed under organic production rules.

The government has asked producers to voluntarily keep clones away from the food supply until final approval is granted.

George Siemon, the chief executive officer of Organic Valley, the country's largest organic farming cooperative, believes cloning is taboo.

iTunes incompatible with Windows Vista

By May Wong
Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Apple Inc. is urging some iPod and iTunes users to hold off on upgrading computers to Windows Vista, warning that the iTunes music software may not work well with the new operating system from rival Microsoft Corp.

Apple said iTunes may work with many Vista computers, but the company knows of some compatibility problems and recommends that users wait until it resolves the issues with an iTunes update in the next few weeks, the company said in a statement provided Friday by spokesman Derick Mains. The iTunes software is key to synching music on computers with iPod portable players.

Microsoft launched Vista, its first major overhaul of Windows in five years, on Tuesday.

According to a notice posted on Apple's Web site, compatibility problems include the inability to play music or video purchased from the online iTunes store, difficulties synchronizing contacts and calendars and possible failures of iPods plugged into a Vista computer. Apple also outlined precautionary steps users could take to try to minimize any problems should they upgrade to Vista now.

The company said it is working with a long list of partners, including Apple, to make sure their software is compatible with Vista. When the new operating system launched, Microsoft claimed more than 5,000 hardware and software products were already Vista-compatible.

Apple has sold more than 90 million iPods since the product was launched in October 2001.

Learn More About GCC's Health Career Programs:

Licensed Practical Nursing Certificate Program
Location: VA Medical Center, Leeds
Thursday, March 22, 2007 ..... 7 p.m.
Thursday, May 10, 2007 ..... 7 p.m.

Stillpoint Massage Therapy Certificate Program
Location: Dowtown Center, 270 Main St., Greenfield
Wednesday, March 7, 2007 ..... 6:00 p.m.
Wednesday, April 11, 2007 ..... 6:00 p.m.
Wednesday, May 9, 2007 ..... 6:00 p.m.
Wednesday, June 13, 2007 ..... 6:00 p.m.

Paramedic Certificate
Location: Dowtown Center, 270 Main St., Greenfield
Tuesday, March 20, 2007 ..... 6 p.m.
Friday, March 30, 2007 ..... 4:30 p.m.
Monday, April 9, 2007 ..... 5 p.m.
Wednesday, April 25, 2007 ..... 6 p.m.
Thursday, May 3, 2007 ..... 4:30 p.m.

Associate Degree Nursing
Location: Dowtown Center, 270 Main St., Greenfield
Wednesday, April 18, 2007 ..... 4 p.m.
Tuesday, June 12, 2007 ..... 3 p.m.

GREENFIELD Community College

For more information contact (413) 775-1802 or visit www.gcc.mass.edu

21930070

Cities create laws to prohibit feeding the homeless

HOMELESS from page 1

Orlando, population 200,000, works hard to conjure the image of a true-life Pleasantville: a safe, welcoming place where visitors can soak up year-round sunshine and devour choreographed experiences at palm-ringed theme parks. But its spotless sidewalks, sparkling lakes and twinkling skyline belie a real city with real maladies – most notably, a surging homeless population that authorities are struggling to control.

After a law that banned panhandling was struck down by the courts, the city tried to discourage aggressive beggars by obliging them to carry ID cards, and later by confining them to 3-by-15-foot "panhandling zones" painted in blue on sidewalks downtown.

Despite these laws, the number of people living on the streets of the Orlando metro area swelled, from roughly 5,000 in 1999 to an estimated 8,500 today, dwarfing the city's shelter capacity for 2,000 people.

So in July, the city commission tried a "supply-side" approach: It passed an ordinance regulating the feeding of large groups of people in Orlando's downtown parks.

Those who wished to feed more than 25 hungry individuals at parks within a 2-mile radius of City Hall could do so, but only if they obtained a "Large Group Feeding Permit" from the parks department — and no one would be granted more than two feeding permits a year.

No exceptions.

For the first time anyone in Orlando could remember, not only would panhandlers find themselves in the crosshairs of the law, but so would those trying to help them.

"It's now illegal to feed the homeless in Orlando, Florida," Jay Leno, host of NBC's "Tonight Show," told a studio audience last summer in Burbank, Calif., during his opening monologue. "Have you seen the fat people walking around Disney World? We should make it illegal to feed THEM."

But when the Orlando Sentinel posted Leno's wisecrack on its Web site, local bloggers weren't laughing.

"Feeding the homeless only encourages more homelessness," one resident, with the moniker "Justin Credible," wrote. He then summed up his argument in an equation. "Less Homeless Less Problems Better Place to Live."

Another, "TG," didn't oppose feeding the destitute. "But there are places set up for this. Soup kitchens exist ... It is not unreasonable to want to keep Lake Eola Park from becoming a homeless cafeteria."

William Beem added: "For what it's worth, Las Vegas enacted a similar law at the same time as Orlando. Tourist towns think alike."

Indeed, a week before Orlando's ordinance took effect, Las Vegas criminalized giving food to even a single transient in a city park.

In August, the American Civil Liberties Union filed suit challenging the Las Vegas ban, saying it violated constitutional protections of free speech, right to assembly and right to practice one's religion. A federal court in Nevada has prohibited the city from enforcing the ordinance until a final ruling is issued.

Advocates for the homeless feared it wouldn't be long before other cities passed similar laws. As it happens, they were right.

Already, the cities of Dallas, Fort Myers, Fla., Gainesville, Fla., Wilmington, N.C., Atlanta, and Santa Monica, Calif., have laws restricting or outright prohibiting the feeding of the homeless. In Fairfax County, Va., homemade meals and meals made in church kitchens may not be distributed to the homeless unless first approved by the county.

Other cities, including Miami, are considering similar anti-feeding measures.

"We've seen cities going beyond punishing homeless people to punishing those trying to help them, even though it's clear that not enough resources are being dedicated to helping the homeless or the hungry," said Maria Foscarinis, executive director of the National Law Center on Homelessness and Poverty, NLCHP, a non-profit in Washington, D.C.

A 2006 report on 67 cities by her group and the National Coalition for the Homeless, a nonpartisan, non-profit network, found an 18 percent increase since 2002 in laws prohibiting aggressive panhandling; a 12 percent jump in laws outlawing "passive" begging; a 14 percent rise in laws defining sitting or lying in public places as criminal acts.

Says Michael Stoops, the coalition's executive director in Washington, D.C.: "The idea is to drive the visible homeless out of downtown America, so that cities can attract developers, big money."

What's wrong with attracting investment?

Nothing, Stoops says — unless it comes at the expense of decency. "It's a sorry state of affairs when you can feed the squirrels, the doves and pigeons at Lake Eola, but not a hungry guy down on his luck."

Chelsea England (right) of the group "Food Not Bombs," serves dinner to a homeless woman in downtown Orlando, where new laws punish panhandlers and those who help them.

It's ideal apple-eating weather, coppery sunlight descends the purest of skies, and a warm breeze rustles the silvery moss in the live oaks above the 22 or so men and women waiting in a crooked line along the sidewalk.

Winter rewards the homeless who have persevered through Orlando's humid summer months, and now Suzanne Peters, a volunteer with Food Not Bombs, a group that feeds the homeless here once a week, wants to reward their patience.

It's nearly 5:15 p.m. when her tan, Chevy Blazer rolls up to the corner. The homeless stir, chatter, as Peters opens the hatch.

Out comes a serving table, vats of stew, eggplant, mashed potatoes and salad, ladles, stacks of paper plates, plastic cutlery, cartons of fruit juice, and boxes half-filled with apples, bananas, oranges, bagels and French rolls.

"Folks!" she calls out, "you can't sit on that wall. That's private property. The big, bad men will come and arrest you." She motions to the curb. "You can stand on the sidewalk, or sit on the curb here. Sorry."

Peters and her partners used to feed 75 to 150 homeless people at a time in Lake Eola Park, just a block north. Then, after the ordinance took effect, patrol cars, four at a time, would roll up, officers would step out and ask who was in charge.

"They'd tell us it was a 'no-feeding zone,'" says Brett Mason, a 19-year old college student, who joined Food Not Bombs when it came to Orlando in January 2005.

The officers, he says, would "park nearby and watch us, in unmarked cars with tinted windows. Sometimes they'd take pictures of us, shoot video of us. Then they'd say, 'You have to get a permit to feed here,' and shoo us away."

So the group retreated to this street corner and began feeding out of the back of members' cars. On occasion, to show defiance, Food Not Bombs fed in front of municipal buildings, even City Hall.

That's because the ordinance, says Ben Markeson, who belongs to the group, is based on a misguided premise.

City officials "think groups that share food with the homeless are attracting the homeless to downtown neighborhoods. But the homeless are already here. And they'll be here with or without the food."

That opinion is shared by Paul Johnson, 34, and his fiancee, Ericka Holder, 26, of San Diego; Dave Whipkey, 37, of Kissimmee, Fla.; Carlos Gonzales, 64, of Orlando; Scott Phillips, 30, and his wife, Sherri, 39, of Lorraine, Ohio; Broderick Williams, 42, of Tampa; and, Derrick Wiley, 31, of Daytona Beach – all of whom have no place to live, all of whom are grateful for the hot meal they're getting.

Some days of the week, says Johnson, are "good food days" – meaning he and other homeless people can find three squares a day by hopping from church to church, charity to charity. "But there are lots of days – Mondays and Tuesdays are the toughest – when it's hard to get one meal."

Wiley, a part-time cook at a downtown eatery, came to Orlando in 1998. What keeps him here? "It's a beautiful city. There are jobs. And there are people like this, who help others out of the goodness of their hearts."

The feeding ordinance, however, was a shock. "They are trying to make downtown beautiful, which is cool. But, please, don't step on me, just 'cause I'm trying to make it."

He smoothes out his black T-shirt, looks down at his gray sweat pants, sky-blue socks and bedroom slippers. "I guess to them, I'm an eyesore. They don't want to see me around the prestigious areas anymore."

A police car crawls past. Wiley waits for it to turn the corner, then adds, "It's discrimination."

So far, no one has been arrested in Orlando for feeding a hungry person. But the day it happens, says Sgt. Barbara Jones, a police spokeswoman, "we know we're going to look like the bad guys."

Still, an ordinance is an ordinance, she says, and "our job is to enforce the law."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 76

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jaimeson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Adam Seagrin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Danny Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Penz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Pedchester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolantis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING IN ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AN AWARD-WINNING PAPER FOR MORE THAN FORTY YEARS. FOR MORE INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:00 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sherel Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Callie Williams

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

Students disappointed with Super Bowl ads

SUPER ADS from page 1

Kevin Federline.

Federline poked fun at his own downfall from fame and sputtering rap career with a spot for Nationwide Insurance showing him dreaming about being a big-time rapper. A shout of "Fries, Federline!" from his manager brings him back to reality, as an employee in a fast-food joint.

"I didn't think they weren't very good this year," said sophomore Heather Deliago. "Nothing really seemed new and nothing held my attention. But I did enjoy the Bud Light commercials; they seemed to be the funniest."

The spot, called "Classroom," shows comedian Carlos Mencia portraying a teacher educating his students on the proper way to pronounce Bud Light in the South.

Within minutes of airing on television, the Super Bowl advertisements could be viewed on MySpace.com, and viewers could vote on their favorites and rate each commercial based on a rating of one to five.

Anheuser-Busch continued its Super Bowl ad supremacy with a commercial that intended to make folks smile.

For a record nine years, the beer giant won USA Today's exclusive Ad Meter real-time consumer focus group ranking of Super Bowl commercials.

The winning ad featured a group of computer-generated crabs on the beach bowing down at the altar of an ice chest filled with Budweiser. The red chest with two Buds for antennae looks like a giant crab – which a crab army worships as the sun sets behind it.

By the end of the halftime show, most of the commercials seemed to lose their appeal.

"So far I'm not at all impressed," said sophomore Ally Clarke at the conclusion of the third quarter. "I especially didn't like that Sheryl Crow commercial. It just didn't fit."

Revlon was one of a rare few to appeal to the female audience, unveiling a spot with scenes of the singer Sheryl Crow on tour and doing a rendition of Buddy Holly's "Not Fade Away."

Running a 30-second commercial during the Super Bowl set advertisers back a hefty $2.7 million, the cost having doubled since 1997.

A police van sits next to Washington dorm during last night's Super Bowl. UMass Police, prepared in riot gear, patrolled the Southwest campus during and after the game.

Texas girls must get HPV vaccine said Perry spokeswoman Krista Moody. Moody said the Texas Constitution permits the governor, as head of the executive branch, to order other members of the executive branch to adopt rules like this one.

HPV from page 1

The federal government approved Gardasil in June, and a government advisory panel has recommended that all girls get the shots at 11 and 12, before they are likely to be sexually active.

Merck could generate billions in sales if Gardasil – at $360 for the three-shot regimen – were made mandatory across the country. Most insurance companies now cover the vaccine, which has been shown to have no serious side effects.

The New Jersey-based drug company is bankrolling efforts to pass state laws across the country mandating Gardasil for girls as young as 11 or 12. It doubled its lobbying budget in Texas and has funneled money through Women in Government, an advocacy group made up of female state legislators around the country.

Perry has ties to Merck and Women in Government. One of the drug company's three lobbyists in Texas is Mike Toomey, Perry's former chief of staff. His current chief of staff's mother-in-law, Texas Republican state Rep. Dianne White Delisi, is a state director for Women in Government.

The governor also received $6,000 from Merck's political action committee during his re-election campaign.

A top official from Merck's vaccine division sits on Women in Government's business council, and many of the bills around the country have been introduced by members of Women in Government.

Merck spokeswoman Janet Skidmore would not say how much the company is spending on lobbyists or how much it has donated to Women in Government. Susan Crosby, the group's president, also declined to specify how much the drug company gave.

Texas is the first state to require girls entering the sixth grade to receive the HPV vaccine, Gardasil.

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

Your life will NEVER be the same!

••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Spring Semester 2007 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. Applications CLOSE Feb 6th (no applications accepted before)
6:00-8:00 PM
Campus Center Ball Room • Feb. 5 (Mon) • Campus Center Room 101 • Feb. 6 (Tues) • Feb. 7 (Wed)

• Assignment notification (NO) ... Feb 8th • Bolttwood Table (CC Concourse ... Feb 9th • Interviews ... Feb 12th-16th • Orientation ... Feb 20th • Training ... Feb 21st-23rd • Projects ... Feb 26th-May 4th

Volunteer, while earning credit!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Coalition not collision

The Mutual Aid Agreement, a cooperative measure passed last week between the University of Massachusetts and Town of Amherst police departments, may sound to the average student like yet another step in our school's "crackdown" policy. Even the bureaucratic language of James Mathews its name suggests undue traffic stops, dorm room searches, officers in riot gear, and the usual laundry list of undergraduate-rights violations. The Agreement, however, is no more than it claims to be: it is a carte blanche, so to speak, for officers of either department to go about the duties of law enforcement throughout the Town of Amherst, on both town and University ground. What this means for life at UMass is up (for the most part) to the student body.

Until now, the two Departments were quite similarly cooperative, the only major difference being that officers were required to call for approval before entering alternate jurisdictions. The Agreement, drawn up in response to last fall's particularly rowdy back-to-school party scene, simply does away with this step. Although such a change may seem unworthy of comment or controversy, it is more than relevant as a sign of the times in a community composed of students, teachers, workers and families.

In the past decade, the landscape of the Town of Amherst has seen quite a bit of change. Off-Campus housing has consolidated in traditionally residential areas such as Main and Amity Streets, and more and more family houses have been converted into duplexes and the likes for the purposes of student rental. In recent years, this trend has come visibly to a head in the form of increased crackdowns on off-campus gatherings. This fall it was marked by the many arrests of student residents made by the Amherst Police Department. In a time when off-campus residency is becoming more and more of a prevalent trend in town, the widened jurisdiction given to both the UMass and Amherst police by last week's agreement is quite inevitable, and should be seen as a necessary step for both departments to do the job of keeping the peace in a growing, changing area.

Neither the University nor the town should forget that they each rely on the other for their survival.

However, neither students nor officers of the law should, in this relatively new era of Amherst life, conduct themselves with the least bit of animosity, be it towards the law, towards unruly students, or towards town residents who make calls for quiet, sometimes to the police. It is up to the State, the University, the Town of Amherst and their respective leaders and officials to decide how, in the long run, the area will be managed to sustain both a vibrant, small-town environment and a large student population. Neither the University nor the town should forget that they each rely on the other for their survival. UMass on the town as an attractive cultural center, the town on UMass as a cornerstone of economic support. As students, however, these are not our struggles.

Living off-campus, as many of us have learned, is an important step in the life of any undergraduate, and a vital part of the road to adulthood. There are many multiple invaluable lessons to be learned by living on one's own, and added to the list should be the basic task of living respectfully in one's own neighborhood, and treating one's neighbors with respect. Students, as the town's temporary residents, may have to be the first to take steps towards a more peaceful Amherst environment, but those who do may be surprised by a reassuring community response – in the fabled fight for the right, an inch of kindness is often the key to a mile of late-night freedom.

At its best, the Mutual Aid Agreement is a show of good faith between the law-enforcement branches of the University and the town. As students, we should take the agreement as a call to show similar good faith, and to live in the greater community not only as students, but as respectful fellow citizens. If such a show of faith is in any way returned, we will have made the first steps towards building of better, stronger, more tightly woven Amherst community. In a college town, nothing could be more valuable.

James Mathews is a Collegian columnist

The smell of Soy Sauce in the morning

Caroline Moretti

Being a student at a university grants you a certain level of privilege and inclusiveness. Upon receiving your letter of acceptance you become part of an educational establishment, complete with its own social groups, reputations, and rites of passage. Every single student goes through stages of development as they pass through college from the wriggly caterpillar-esque freshman, to a majestic butterfly of seniority. As each year of your college education passes, you become more aware of the University system that surrounds you, and you subsequently get much cooler.

One rite of passage that every student experiences here at UMass begins as soon as the temperature drops below freezing. When the first frosts start to crystallize on cars in the purple lot, the great immortal question of the season can be heard on the lips of freshmen far and near: "Eww! Who put all this soy sauce all over the stairs?"

Usually the sauce makes its appearance late in the first semester, when winter weather begins to rear its ugly head. However, the winter of '07 has proved to be unseasonably warm. As a result, the full effects of the "goo" have been hidden until this last weekend, which brought the first actual significant snowfall of the season. For the veteran student, the so-called "soy sauce" is a recognizable and avoidable enemy. We know to avoid direct contact with it and its sticky, syrupy properties. When we see a sidewalk slathered with it, we know to choose another route, for the sake of shoes and our noses.

However, the puzzled and uninformed freshman lacks this knowledge. It can only be wrought through prior experiences of sticky sneakers and foul-smelling footwear. Also, they don't realize that the spreading of this "goo" is a constant process, happening all winter long. During my first winter at UMass, the "soy sauce" was a hot topic of discussion amongst my fellow all-freshmen-dorm-dwellers.

We automatically assumed it was a really awesome prank, carried out by some disgruntled DC student workers. Who else would have had access to such monumental amounts of condiments, and the will to subject their fellow students to such mucky antics? We decided they were channeling some sort of inner Animal House. However, when the snow fell again and more sticky liquid appeared uniformly spread across the entirety of campus, our "soy sauce bandits" theory began to fall through.

The understanding of this winter phenomenon is something that arises over time, though I'm not exactly sure when or how I learned the truth.

The understanding of this winter phenomenon is something that arises over time, though I'm not exactly sure when or how I learned the truth about the sauce. I suppose somebody told me, though I like to think that it was at least some part personal deduction. For those of you who haven't figured it out yet, and even for those of you who didn't care in the first place, I'd like to take the time to clarify and debunk the myths of the ever-present sauce right now.

First of all, the "soy sauce" isn't really soy sauce, so don't try to put it on your lo mein. It's actually a delicious bi-product of agricultural processing, often found in your friendly neighborhood distilleries. When you step in this gunk, you're dipping your toes into molasses solids (hence the stickiness) mixed with some good old fashioned magnesium chloride.

Second, this substance isn't just here to make us stick to the pavement. It's actually an environmentally friendly deicer, and often marketed as "Ice B' Gone." It's used as an alternative to its notoriously acrid brother-in-law, salt. It turns out that this stuff is less corrosive than water, non-toxic, and totally biodegradable.

Who knew that the University had Mother Nature's back? Maybe I can muster up the energy to be a little more forgiving of the disgusting side-effects of the sauce, if I keep in mind its beneficial side-effect on the environment.

Also, lovable pranksters are not responsible for the distribution of the "goo." Believe it or not, the University pays hard-working Joe Public to spread this stuff around. I'm a little curious as to how this actually happens, as I don't think I've ever seen the distribution process. Is there some special fleet of sprayer-cars that get driven around at 4 a.m.? Or is it just some underpaid guy with his bare hands? I don't think I'll ever get up early enough to find out.

And there you have it, the true story of "soy sauce." I hope that this column helped demystify the mystery of the suspicious "goo," at least until next year. Then a fresh crop of kids will pour out of their dorms on a frosty December day, and unwittingly step right into a great big pile of gross. As their brand new white sneakers stick fast to the pavement, and the brown smelly substance latches on to their feet for the rest of the day, they'll wonder, just as we all wondered once upon a time, "What sort of lame jerk puts soy sauce on the stairs?"

Caroline Moretti is a Collegian columnist.

UMASS FYI

Thanks to a smelly and sticky substance, these students are smiling and not stumbling.

Education through experience

Katy Bruck

College gives a student the opportunity to learn inside and outside of the classroom. Even when walking to class, students can see, experience, and learn about subjects they never thought to know. Even interactions with animals can have this effect. How many people can honestly say that they've seen a flying squirrel up close? Or a baby eagle eating a squirrel above a frequently trafficked footpath? At UMass this idea expands to issues that students interact with everyday. Issues like construction, protesting and most presently rioting, that really helps to create a hub of learning for all of us.

There's been a lot of talk about UMass lately, on campus, in national papers, online, and naturally among parents and families and those involved in the college community. There is definitely a palpable apprehension about UMass. But this isn't new. That impression of UMass's city-like, potentially chaotic atmosphere has been around since my aunts went to school out here in the sixties and seventies. I had heard about the Super Bowl riots and the Red Sox versus Yankees riots when I applied. And the administration has a right to be disturbed by these events – events that have heartily contributed to this university's reputation as a chaotic, student-run Sin City.

You don't have to take a class to find out that these squirrels are nocturnal.

Though this column has wandered in a different direction, you might still be curious as to the connection to flying squirrels. It's safe to say that it does relate. Walking up the path behind Worcester towards Orchard Hill, I was fortunate enough to see this tiny, large-headed, big-eyed grey rodent creature skittering along the ground and halfway up the trunk of a tree. Upon closer inspection, I realized that this spastic little animal couldn't be anything but a flying squirrel. A friend and I stood and watched it (and maybe tried to catch it a few times), until finally, confirming my suspicions, it flew across the road and up into a tree across the street. Though this animal could've very easily been someone's escaped pet, after looking it up online, my friend and I discovered that flying squirrels are in fact native to this area, but being primarily nocturnal, casual sightings aren't exactly common. This is just one of many bizarre learning experiences I've had the luck of stumbling upon since coming to college.

We're encouraged to learn more about ourselves, and our place in the world.

All this by way of saying that people, even college students, are more open to learning (even accidentally) than is at first apparent. For example, another unlikely educational experience I bore witness to recently was a little less cute and aerodynamic than the flying squirrel incident. Walking up the same path behind Worcester, a small group of giggling girls were gazing up into a tree as a rather large juvenile eagle glared down at them past the disemboweled body of a grey squirrel. Yeah, no kidding. I'm not entirely sure why they were giggling, but I got the impression that this wasn't something typically witnessed by this particular group. Undoubtedly, this sight resulted in maybe a phone call to a friend at another school, or even just a few moments of conversation on the way to class.

In a weird way, I think that this bizarre little apex of wildlife is reflective of the learning environment at UMass in the same way that the riots are. People don't go away to college just to learn from books or listen to professors' lectures. Sure that's a part of why we come – to fulfill requirements and get a degree – but those things could easily be done online, at night school or at a commuter school. Just like it's not easy to see how seeing a flying squirrel on your way back from dinner is a relevant learning experience. It might be hard to see how going to a school that riots would somehow be educational.

The progression of the events of last semester, the organized protest of increased police presence almost immediately followed by one of the most dangerous campus riots witnessed in years, provides a unique (if not ironic) opportunity for the students on this campus to learn something really important. We live in a college environment. We're encouraged to learn more about ourselves, and our place in the world. We compound all of the things we learn in college, from courses to interactions, and somehow transform all this information into an identity. Though skeptical, I was impressed by the initiative students took earlier in November to exercise their rights as students – to protest against what they felt to be inappropriate police presence on campus and in dorms. But only at a living, breathing, constantly changing environment like UMass could those same convictions come to be tested by the peers of those who held them.

Not even a month later, those who protested are now (or should be now) asking themselves if they can stand behind those convictions, having been so contradicted by the behaviors around them. These are tough lessons we're learning here; personal accountability, self-respect, and transferring that self respect into respect for your environment, your peers, and your school. This is why people come to college, and this is what true learning is all about; facing ourselves, and those who have expectations of us with dignity and respect. I certainly hope we're up for the challenge.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT AND GET PRINTED IN RETURN! (550 WORD LIMIT)

Send letters to: collegianeditorial@yahoo.com.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

WHITE COLLAR WHINING

I want to start by saying that I do sincerely appreciate the janitorial services provided by the staff here at UMass. Yet, that's the only thing I will agree with in this article. This is a college, kids are going to be a little messy, and this probably won't change.

I'm sure Mr. Park is a great guy and I'm sure he gets paid for staying the extra time to "complete the job" as your article states. I am also sure that in the job description it more than likely stated that elevators, hallways, and stairwells had to be cleaned along with barrels being emptied.

Also, we PAY to live here. If I want to take a shower and it falls within the window of the bathroom being cleaned, I'm taking a shower. No one is forced into this job. I don't expect extra accolades when I do what I get paid for.

George Jung
UMass Student

NEWS: SWITCHING OFF TV WILL SWITCH ON MEMORY
OKAY... I SWITCHED OFF THE TV... DID YOUR MEMORY SWITCH ON?
YES... 'WITHOUT A TRACE' IS ON AT 9:00!
STAYSKAL TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES '07

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

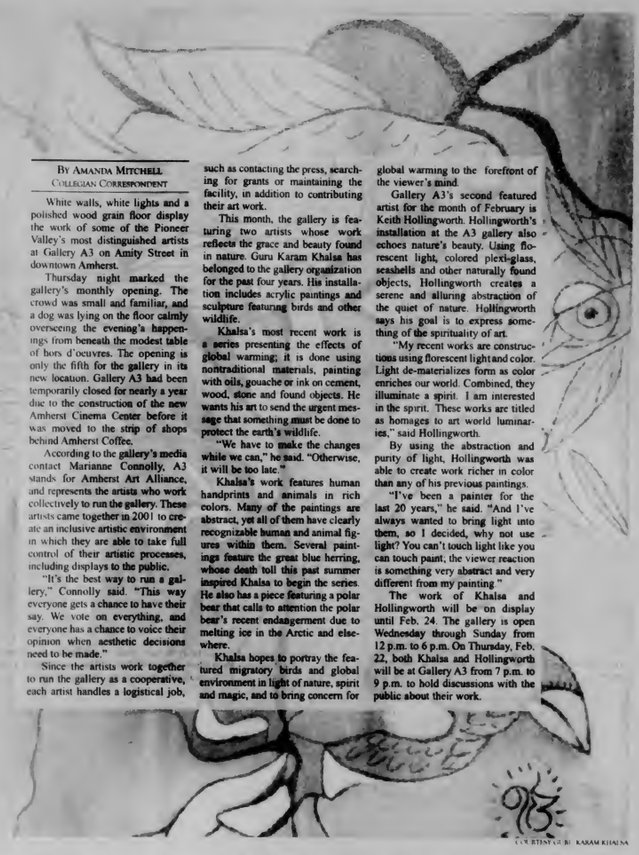
MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A3 exhibits art with a message

Local cooperative gallery unveils local and guest artwork

The staff of Gallery A3 gather outside the gallery's location in downtown Amherst after a one year hiatus.



CONTRIBUTED BY: KARAM KHALSA

The above artwork, entitled "Rain Forest," was done by the artist Guru Karam Khalsa. The piece was made with paint and ink on cement. Khalsa's work explores images of migratory birds and the global environment through reliefs and paintings on wood and concrete.

By Amanda Mitchell
Collegian Correspondent

White walls, white lights and a polished wood grain floor display the work of some of the Pioneer Valley's most distinguished artists at Gallery A3 on Amity Street in downtown Amherst.

Thursday night marked the gallery's monthly opening. The crowd was small and familiar, and a dog was lying on the floor calmly overseeing the evening's happenings from beneath the modest table of hors d'oeuvres. The opening is only the fifth for the gallery in its new location. Gallery A3 had been temporarily closed for nearly a year due to the construction of the new Amherst Cinema Center before it was moved to the strip of shops behind Amherst Coffee.

According to the gallery's media contact Marianne Connolly, A3 stands for Amherst Art Alliance, and represents the artists who work collectively to run the gallery. These artists came together in 2001 to create an inclusive artistic environment in which they are able to take full control of their artistic processes, including displays to the public.

"It's the best way to run a gallery," Connolly said. "This way everyone gets a chance to have their say. We vote on everything, and everyone has a chance to voice their opinion when aesthetic decisions need to be made."

Since the artists work together to run the gallery as a cooperative, each artist handles a logistical job, such as contacting the press, searching for grants or maintaining the facility, in addition to contributing their art work.

This month, the gallery is featuring two artists whose work reflects the grace and beauty found in nature. Guru Karam Khalsa has belonged to the gallery organization for the past four years. His installation includes acrylic paintings and sculpture featuring birds and other wildlife.

Khalsa's most recent work is a series presenting the effects of global warming; it is done using nontraditional materials, painting with oils, gouache or ink on cement, wood, stone and found objects. He wants his art to send the urgent message that something must be done to protect the earth's wildlife.

"We have to make the changes while we can," he said. "Otherwise, it will be too late."

Khalsa's work features human handprints and animals in rich colors. Many of the paintings are abstract, yet all of them have clearly recognizable human and animal figures within them. Several paintings feature the great blue herring, whose death toll this past summer inspired Khalsa to begin the series. He also has a piece featuring a polar bear that calls to attention the polar bear's recent endangerment due to melting ice in the Arctic and elsewhere.

Khalsa hopes to portray the featured migratory birds and global environment in light of nature, spirit and magic, and to bring concern for global warming to the forefront of the viewer's mind.

Gallery A3's second featured artist for the month of February is Keith Hollingworth. Hollingworth's installation at the A3 gallery also echoes nature's beauty. Using fluorescent light, colored plexi-glass, seashells and other naturally found objects, Hollingworth creates a serene and alluring abstraction of the quiet of nature. Hollingworth says his goal is to express something of the spirituality of art.

"My recent works are constructions using florescent light and color. Light de-materializes form as color enriches our world. Combined, they illuminate a spirit. I am interested in the spirit. These works are titled as homages to art world luminaries," said Hollingworth.

By using the abstraction and purity of light, Hollingworth was able to create work richer in color than any of his previous paintings.

"I've been a painter for the last 20 years," he said. "And I've always wanted to bring light into them, so I decided, why not use light? You can't touch light like you can touch paint; the viewer reaction is something very abstract and very different from my painting."

The work of Khalsa and Hollingworth will be on display until Feb. 24. The gallery is open Wednesday through Sunday from 12 p.m. to 6 p.m. On Thursday, Feb. 22, both Khalsa and Hollingworth will be at Gallery A3 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. to hold discussions with the public about their work.

One Grizzly Saturday night

Grizzly Bears performance foreshadows bright future

By Casey Cullinen

The Brooklyn-based foursome performed to the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton on Saturday night, showing off the complex vocals and instrumentals of its current album, "Yellow House."

Grizzly Bear is the fact that their sound is extremely dense and complex with intricate layered vocals and instrumentals.

Any person in the crowd Saturday night at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton could tell you that the four members of Grizzly Bear were up for the challenge.

A mostly quiet and intimate band such as Grizzly Bear, takes full advantage of a venue like the Iron Horse, the perfect venue to showcase their talent to the nearly sold-out crowd.

Each part of the band played multiple instruments perfectly. Chris Taylor took care of the flute and clarinet, sometimes changing the two mid-song. During most of the show, Taylor was found on the ground focusing his woodwinds at microphones on the stage. Bass guitar was also his responsibility. Percussionist Chris Bear played drums, bells and several multi-functional pedals, allowing for distortions, layering of vocals and looping. Lead singer Edward Droste, the founding member of Grizzly Bear and a former Hampshire College student, played keyboard, harpsichord and guitar. Daniel Rossen also played guitar and provided vocals.

Grizzly Bear started off their twelve-song, one-hour set with "Easier," the first track from the album "Yellow House." A harpsichord was brought out for crowd-pleaser "Lullabye," the second track from their last record "Little Brother" featured every man in the collective singing together and "Final Round" found Grizzly Bear at their most energetic. The cover of The Crystals' single, "He Hit Me," and final song "On a Neck, On a Spit," were amongst the best of the evening. Mixing in songs from their first record "Horn of Plenty," including "Fix It" and "Shift," provided for a full overview of Grizzly Bear. A lack of encore didn't faze the crowd, as the band had certainly provided enough musical brilliance for one night.

COURTESY WARP RECORDS

Chris Taylor jams on the bass at the La Route Du Rock festival in Saint-Malo France, 2006. Taylor also does vocals and plays the woodwinds and electronics.

The most impressive part of the show was how incredibly cohesive the band was. It's rare for a band to have all four members singing together and not sounding terrible. Most songs found at least two people harmonizing or whistling, making the band sound nearly the same as their records. In fact, at some points in the night the band sounded better than the recordings, a trait that correlates with a band looking towards a bright future.

After standing in line in the frigid cold for what seemed like days, members of the audience expected an act to literally warm them up. Openers The Dirty Projectors, this time around a four-piece, tried instead to wake the crowd up with their first song, as all three vocalists screamed loudly into their microphones. The rest of the half-hour act was filled with more mellow and sometimes meandering songs.

Lefty guitarist Dave Longstreth, donning a red and blue flannel shirt, provided lead vocals, portrayed best as a distinctive type of crooning. Amber Coffman, guitarist, and Angel Deradoorian, bassist and flute player, sung back-up.

Luckily the women's vocalizations were beautifully rich, balancing the unique sound of Longstreth's voice. Drumming duties were given to talented Brian Mcomber, rounding out the rest of the band.

Overall, the audience was politely responsive to The Dirty Projectors. At some points in the night, the crowd lost interest. The last song of the night found The Dirty Projectors at their most interesting, as they decided to rock out on a high note. It warranted the most applause of their set, and rightfully so.

Minutemen take care of Richmond

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

man Dan Geriot tipped in Butler's missed layup at the buzzer.

"At halftime, I just wasn't happy with the way we played," Ford said. "I thought we were lucky to be only down one.

"We switched to a press, not to turn them over because I didn't think it would turn them over," he added. "I did it just to try and give us energy, but it actually did turn them over."

The full-court press woke Ford's players up, letting UMass play at its own, quicker pace.

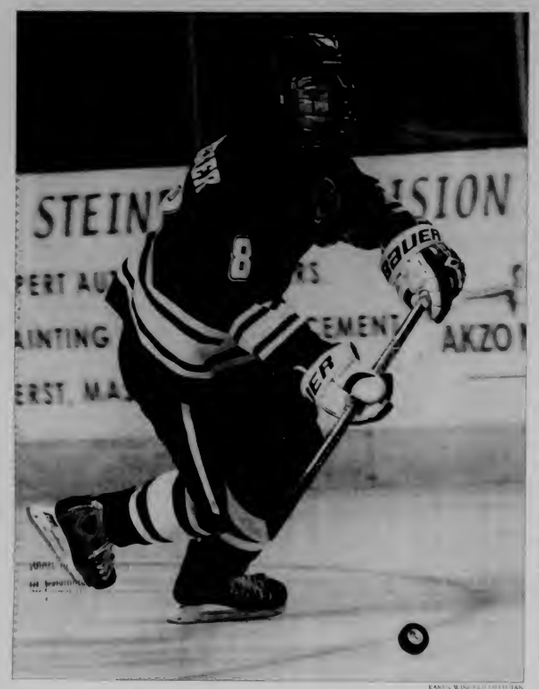
"I don't look forward to playing [Richmond] in the future," Ford said after the win. "It was just a different game than we played all year long. Not just the style of basketball, but how we won the game."

The Minutemen won the game much differently than usual Lowe scoring most of the points, Forbes out-rebounding an entire team and senior James Life being ice cold from the 3-point line. Life had nine points in the win, but shot 3-for-10 from the field, and only 1-for-8 from behind the arc.

Senior Rashaun Freeman was the third Minuteman in double digits, scoring 13 points and grabbing eight rebounds.

Danny Picard is a Collegian Sports Editor. He can be reached at dpicard@student.umass.edu.

Freshman guard Tiki Mayben and the Minutemen held the Spiders to 25 points in the second half of Saturday's game. Mayben had two rebounds in six minutes of action and was 0-for-1 on free throws. He ranks ninth on the team in scoring with 3.3 points per contest.



Junior defenseman David Leaderer has four points this season on a goal and three assists. His lone goal came against UMass Lowell on Jan. 12, his first since his freshman year.

UM loses head-scratcher

HOCKEY from page 10

capitalized on a huge miscue by O'Hanley. The BC defenseman tried clearing the puck from his zone, but it bounced off the end boards and then ricocheted off Schneider. Fenton turned at just the right moment to spot the loose puck and one-timed it in.

"I was high at the blue line and Mark [Matheson] tipped it right out front to me," Fenton said. "The guy went to slide so I put it back-short side and it just beat him."

After gathering themselves in the dressing room between periods, the Eagles came out rejuvenated in the second. Despite tying UMass in the period, 1-1, play was decidedly in favor of BC.

Brock Bradford cut the Mass Attack's lead to 3-1, while Will Ortiz sat in the penalty box for slashing. The man-advantage goal was assisted by Benn Ferriero and Brian Boyle. It also breathed energy into what was previously a lifeless BC squad.

But, unlike a week ago against the Terriers, the Minutemen didn't let Bradford's goal faze them. Ortiz extended the lead back to three goals with the fifth tally of his freshman campaign. Schneider saved Watson's initial try, but Ortiz was there to stuff it in the net with the backhand. Shots for the period ended in BC's favor, 10-9.

"The goal that we got back with Ortiz was a real dirty goal," Cahoon said. "Getting to the rebound and crashing the net. Those are goals that we work for, just like any other club."

The third period began quietly, but ended with a back-and-forth battle with the two teams Nathan Gerbe at the 12:26 mark. Bradford shot the puck, but Quick deflected it aside to his left. However, that is also where Gerbe had positioned himself. The lead was once again cut to a pair of goals.

Matt Burto didn't allow the score to remain that way for very long. Off the ensuing draw, BC brought the puck into the UMass zone before it was kicked out to Burto. He carried the puck into the opposing zone and ripped a slapper from the left faceoff circle. Schneider appeared poised to make an easy glove save, but the puck skipped off the tip of his left hand and went in.

Ben Smith, once again, made the game interesting at 14:07 to bring the score to 5-3. Looking for a spark when play went to 4-on-4 because of Ferriero and Quick penalties, York pulled Schneider with 3:05 to play in regulation. But the Eagles couldn't get anything going, even with the extra attacker.

Returning to the Mullins Center for Saturday night's contest with UML (3-19-4, 3-14-3 HEA), the Minutemen looked ready to make an upward move in the league standings. It also didn't hurt that the River Hawks entered Saturday's game with a 0-17-3 record in their previous 20 outings.

UMass looked sluggish in the early going, recording a mere two shots on goal in the first period. The rest of the Maroon and White's chances either sailed wide, or were poked out of the zone by a River Hawks' stick.

"I think it was more mental than physical," said Anderson, about his team's first-period struggles. "We didn't prepare ourselves well enough as a team."

One of UML's few upperclassmen, senior Todd Fletcher, took advantage of the Minutemen's inabilities on offense. With 12 minutes to go in the opener, the River Hawks put pressure on Quick with traffic in front of the crease. Braun stopped one try from going in, batting away an airborne puck, but Fletcher's goal came mere seconds later.

Then, UMass' first goal, and shot of the night, came late in the first with just over six minutes to play. There was a draw in the UML zone after a Cory Quirk attempt went off the crossbar and into the netting. The sophomore then won the ensuing draw and kicked the puck to Chris Capraro. His slap shot from the top of the right circle beat Nevin Hamilton and knotted the game at a goal apiece.

Play remained sloppy for both sides throughout the rest of the first, and the scored remained tied heading into the dressing rooms.

"We didn't skate [in the first period]," Cahoon said. "You can't play at three-quarter speed just cruising around."

Again the Minutemen came out slow to begin the second period. And again the River Hawks took full advantage. It didn't take long to break the tie, just 55 seconds to be exact.

UML's Kory Lalite was one of many players congesting the front of the crease. After Quick stopped a Ben Holmstrom attempt, Lalite gave the River Hawks the go-ahead goal, his eighth of the season and his young career.

The victory was the first for the freshman Hamilton. He got the win on a relatively quiet night – he only needed to make 25 saves on the night. Quick, on the other hand, made 27 saves while allowing the two goals.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian Sports Editor. He can be reached at jpelland@student.umass.edu.

Loss to another last-place team squanders golden opportunity

Jeremy Rice

They had jumped out to a 3-0 lead on a Hockey East powerhouse. They held on for the astonishing 5-3 upset. When the Massachusetts hockey team left Kelley Rink at Conte Forum, the Minutemen must have felt pretty good about themselves after beating Boston College for the second time this year (a first for the program).

It seemed to all unravel when the team returned home. The team bus arrived back to campus around midnight on Friday, and 19 hours later the Minutemen found themselves tanking in what should have been an easy victory for a team supposedly on the rise in Hockey East.

With a win Saturday night against the River Hawks, the Minutemen could have pulled into a tie with No. 14 Vermont, just two weeks before they head to Burlington for a two-game set with the Catamounts.

Instead, UMass lost a poorly played game, and nearly fell backward in the standings, with Maine still close to beating New Hampshire a second straight time late in the second period.

It began in the first period, when the Minutemen could not get the puck out of their own end, and gave up a hard fought goal to UMass Lowell on a third consecutive scoring chance for the River Hawks.

And it ended with a couple close calls on an empty net, while goaltender Jon Quick watched from the bench as UMass couldn't keep it in the offensive end with six attackers.

The fans seemed to lose interest halfway through the second period, exemplified by the fact that the loudest they got throughout the game was for a 10-year-old boy who was dancing on camera during intermission.

Much like the rest of the season this year for the Minutemen, the trouble has not been winning the big games, or the close games, the games they have a chance to win or the games they shouldn't win. No, the rub for the 2006-07 Minutemen has been the games they should win.

Twice they lost to Merrimack, which has sat in the basement of the league the entire season. The first loss to the Warriors came sandwiched between huge wins over ranked opponents Niagara and BC.

The second loss to the Warriors was the team's first game after the new year, and came just two weeks before UMass shut out the highest scoring team in the nation, UNH.

This time, disappointment comes on the heels of one of UMass' best wins of the season. A win that could have made the season for the Minutemen may have been tarnished by a loss that could very well break it.

The players were sluggish for the first 50 minutes of regulation until a sense of urgency – brought on by the reality of possibly losing to another last-place team – gave UMass a spark that was too little, too late.

"We know about ourselves pretty well," UMass coach Don Cahoon said after Saturday's loss. "We've worked real hard to get to understand ourselves, what makes ourselves tick and what gets in the way."

So far, what has gotten in the way is the reputation of the other team. UMass has played to the level of the team in front of it, which has been great at times, (4-2-2 record against BU, BC and UNH), and utterly disappointing at others (3-3 against MC and UML).

"We just have to be mentally tougher to bring that complete effort every night out, and we haven't been able to do that week-to-week," said Cahoon. "We do it sporadically, and we seem to do it against some of the better teams simply because I think the respect factor is so great."

This team certainly knows how to get up for the big game, which may actually mean a bright future for the Minutemen. Five of their eight remaining games in the regular season come against teams ahead of them in the Hockey East standings.

Only eighth-place Providence poses any remaining chance to trap the very trap-able Mass Attack, while Northeastern has been hot lately, and may wake up the Minutemen just enough to prevent a trap.

Another promising note is that Saturday's loss was just the second inside the Mullins Center this season. UMass is still 9-2-2 at home and plays five of its final eight in the Pioneer Valley.

If respect for the other team has been the issue with the basement-dwellers, perhaps the players should stop looking at the league standings, because as Cahoon himself has said over and over, any team can beat any other team on any given night.

That proved itself true on Saturday, so despite a head-scratching loss to a decidedly lesser foe, the puck is still on the Minutemen's ice, and this is a hurdle they should be able to overcome.

But once again, hasn't this squad already shown time and time again that it rarely does what it "should" do?

Jeremy Rice is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Rd. (At Echo Hill)
Amherst • 256-6446
Off Rte. 9, two miles east of Amherst College
OPEN 6AM-10AM MON-FRI
8AM-9PM SAT & SUN
★Swimming ★Tennis
★Basketball ★Fitness
COMPETITIVE BASKETBALL GAMES w/JERRY Mon/Thurs 6-8pm
OVER 30 FREE CLASSES WEEKLY
HAMPFIT.COM for Rates & Info
Join Now
Winter Special
$188/ 15 Weeks
Student Rate
EFT available

Log on to DailyCollegian.com for audio of Saturday night's UMass hockey press conference

Cut out this ad receive your FREE $10 gift card!
BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS $10 Gift Card
•Limit one coupon per customer •Offer• Expires 02/28/07

CANCUN, ACAPULCO, NEGRIL, MOBAY, NASSAU, S. PADRE, FLORIDA, CRUISES, AND MORE!
Join the Party!!!
SPRING BREAK
STS Flight Finder™ Save Hundreds on Spring Break Packages!!! Search airfares to Mexico and the Caribbean and save up to $300 per person. Best Deals Guaranteed!
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

Minutewomen fall to Hawks for the first time since 2004

W. BASKETBALL from page 10

playing the right kind of defense."

The Hawks renewed their historic dominance versus the Minutewomen, winning for the 21st time in 24 games at their home court against UMass. The win snapped a three-game losing streak against their foes from Amherst.

Sophomore Stefanie Gerardot tied a career-high with 15 points, but it went for not as Saint Joseph's (12-9, 4-3 A-10) Jen Oyler torched the Maroon and White with 20 points – aided by her 5-for-11 shooting from long range – and 10 rebounds. Junior Kate Mills was the only other player in double figures for UMass, scoring 14 points and also adding five blocked shots.

Senior Whitney Ffrench was Oyler's partner in crime, notching 17 points on the strength of 13 free throws. SJU's leading scorer, Ayahna Cornish, was held to a 3-for-11 shooting night, but still had 12 points, three rebounds and six assists.

"Stefanie came in and did what she was supposed to do," Dacko said. "She made some big shots, took it to the heart of the defense and played some inspiring basketball.

"Oyler and Ffrench played very well," she added. "We knew Whitney was going to penetrate and Oyler was a kid who we recruited, so we knew she was a very good shooter. She centered up and hit her open looks, and even when we were right up in her face she was able to knock down shots."

Although the score remained close for much of the game, the Hawks were in the driver's seat most of the night, never trailing by more than two points. Saint Joe's led 31-26 at halftime, and increased their lead to 12 with 11 minutes remaining to take command of the game.

UMass fought back to within three just four minutes later, but Ffrench helped her team maintain the lead with a couple of baskets to preserve the victory.

"We played hard in spots, and I'm happy with the team's effort," Dacko said. "I was disappointed because I thought we had an opportunity to win at the end, but we missed some easy buckets down the stretch."

With just under two minutes left to play, Kim Benton added to her coach's frustration when she was ejected from the game after committing a flagrant foul. UMass could have used her outside shooting – she was 3-for-6 from three point territory – to possibly mount a comeback, but the freshman point guard let her emotions get the best of her.

Benton – who became angered after an opposing players' screen knocked her down to the floor – put her team in a tough spot and without a point guard for the remainder of the game, as backup Sakera Young fouled out earlier.

"One of the players on St. Joe's came up and set a screen in the open floor, but it knocked Kim down to the court," Dacko explained. "It was a dead-on screen, which was legal, that none of our players called. Kim got up dazed, and out of the blue she gave a cheap shot at one of the players who wasn't even the one who set the screen.

"The flagrant foul by Kim added insult to injury," she added. "I was not happy with Kim and what happened in her situation. I just think she needs to keep her emotions in tact, and let it out through her play on the floor. Her anger took her out of the game, and that's not necessary when you have your other point guard on the bench who fouled out."

Dacko in no way blamed Benton for the defeat, but rather pinned the loss more on the free-throw differential and the missed shots down low.

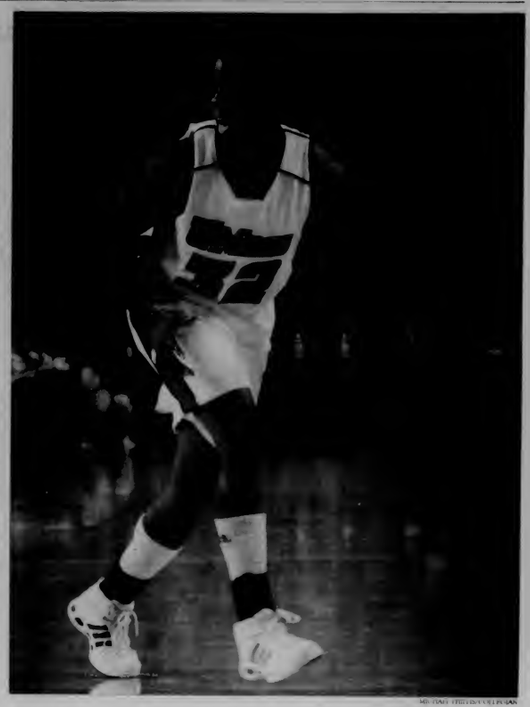
"We had 38 points in the paint but we should have had 58 points," she said. "I think that there were still more opportunities for us to score inside. We shot 45 percent in the second half and 41 [percent] in the first [half], but we missed five or six easy layups again.

"We can't be missing point blank shots at the bucket," she added. "We got to be able to concentrate and finish. Outside of getting the kids eyes examined, I don't know how to get our kids to put the ball in the basket."

With just six games left on the slate, UMass finds itself clinging to what would be the 12th and final spot in the upcoming A-10 conference tournament. Despite their 2-6 conference record, the Minutewomen are actually in a favorable position due to their weaker remaining schedule.

The Maroon and White will square off against four of the five worst teams – in terms of overall record – in the 14-team conference the rest of the way. With Fordham (2-20, 0-8 A-10) all but eliminated, UMass essentially only has to contend with a Saint Louis team they beat by 20 points earlier in the season.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.



Junior guard Alisha Tatham had seven points with five rebounds and an assist on Saturday. She is fifth on the team in scoring with 5.8 points per game and averages three rebounds and two assists per contest.

NCAA proposes motion to ban male practice squads

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

They are considered an essential part of the team. But a new proposal by the NCAA Committee on Women's Athletics may soon change all that.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team's male practice squad is held in very high regard by the Minutewomen, and is thought to be as important as any other part of the program.

The 15-member CWA committee of administrators and athletes from Division I, II and III schools has requested that the routine of having men scrimmage against women in practice be disallowed.

"[Men practicing with women] violates the spirit of gender equality and Title IX," the CWA said in a statement released on Dec. 6.

Title IX was a groundbreaking federal law requiring fair and equal treatment for any educational program that receives federal funding. Part of the Education Amendments of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Title IX was the first piece of national legislature to ban inequity in policies and programs of any educational institution.

The law especially affects collegiate sports. In short, Title IX states that universities that receive federal funding must spend equal amounts of money on athletic teams for men and women.

Supporters of the new measure feel that permitting men to practice against a women's basketball team takes a backward step from the ruling passed 34 years ago aimed at eliminating any discrimination in the world of academia on the basis on gender.

Despite the noble intentions of the law, certain measures taken in order to comply with it are, at times, considered unnecessary – even by the people it was intended to support.

"I'm not happy. I think the men should be able to play with us," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "I think they add a great deal of intensity. They're a great aide in helping women basketball players all over the country and I think [the league] would be doing a disservice if they chose not to allow men to practice [with women].

"I think that somebody out there is complaining," she continued. "You know, they need another cause to complain about and so somebody brings it up and starts something in a negative connotation."

Members of the women's team displayed confusion and disappointment at the idea of the NCAA restricting whom they can practice against.

"I think that it kind of sucks," junior guard and team co-captain, Alisha Tatham said. "We love when the guys come in. They really push us. They give us a lot more than, maybe, if a women's practice team were to come in. The guys are a lot more physical, they're a lot quicker.

"I don't see what's wrong with it," she continued. "There's a lot of people that play against guys all the time. I don't know why they'd take it away."

Neither does junior civil engineering major Ryan James.

James, 21, is one of the six members of the men's practice squad – and he says he's frustrated that the NCAA is trying to interfere with, what he considers, a team's own personal business.

"I can't really see any logic behind this new proposal. At the collegiate level, coaches should be able to prepare their teams in any reasonable way they feel will help their players," he said. "I think the NCAA shouldn't get involved with the structure of women's practice. It should be up to the coaches and the players collectively to decide if men should be allowed to practice or not."

James, a native of South Deerfield, Mass., first donned the uniform of a UMass practice-teamer after seeing a flyer at the basketball courts at the horseshoe in Southwest. After trying it out, he found himself making friends on both the practice squad and the varsity team and decided to stick with it. It's a decision he says he's glad he made.

"I do enjoy scrimmaging against the women. It's fun to play against girls that are just as physical as you are," James said. "I've gone through harder screens playing against the women than I have against most other guys I've played against.

"I'm just happy to be able to play basketball a couple of extra days a week," he said. "And I think [the women] are happy to get an extra challenge a couple days a week."

According to a report by USA Today, though the origin of having males practice against female players can be linked to a few different people, legendary women's coach Pat Summitt is generally credited with instituting the idea at Tennessee in the 1970s.

The strategy paid off for Summitt, now in her 33rd year as head coach of the Lady Volunteers, as she has claimed a record six NCAA titles. Perhaps it is the result of such success that has led to this now-common method being used by basketball programs of countless universities throughout the country.

According to the Daily Hampshire Gazette, this is the third season in which UMass has applied the tactic regularly.

In addition to James, the squad also consists of sophomore Steve Games (20-years old), juniors Ken Parsley (20) and Aidan O'Kennedy (21) and senior Zak Tseytlin (22). A sixth member, junior Morgan O'Loughlin (20), practiced with the team in the fall, but has left for a semester abroad in Australia.

On top of trying to protect the dignity of Title IX, advocates for the NCAA's proposed rule also explain that using male practice teams harm the varsity's back-up players.

"To have talented, capable female student-athletes stand on the sidelines during official practice while the team's starters practice against 'more talented men' is a lost opportunity," the statement said. "To have them sitting out of practice while a full 'scout team' of men comes to practice is costing them the opportunity for growth and betterment that they were promised during recruitment."

James disagrees.

"I guess the reasons for this proposal is that it takes away valuable practice time for other girls on the team. Based on my experience, all the girls get plenty of playing time during practice and seem to enjoy the challenge that we give them," he said.

Junior forward and co-captain Kate Mills, certainly enjoys the challenge. And she wholeheartedly appreciates everything the men do to prepare her and her teammates for upcoming games.

"It's disappointing to hear – that [the NCAA] would [try] do something like that," she said. "I think it's the NCAA thinking that it's taking away from [the men's] school or something like that or they're getting something extra than other students. But, it's their decision to come onto the team, so they get some privileges about it."

Not that many privileges, though.

Members of a practice team are obligated to adhere to the same academic standards as every other student-athlete – they must be full-time students, pass a physical examination and maintain a 2.0 grade-point average. They do not, however, benefit from scholarships or excused absences that varsity athletes do. Therefore, they must work their class schedules around practice times.

Though they may not be on scholarship or travel with the team to away games, the members of the scout team are given the same amount of respect as any of the people permitted to enter the women's locker room.

"We definitely consider them a part of our team and one of the reasons for our success – just as much as the coaches or the [jersey players]," Tatham mentioned. "They're a part of our team as well because they're helping us."

Junior guard/forward Pam Rosario echoes the kudos from her captain.

"I think the guys' team helps. They're a heck of a lot quicker than we are and just stronger, so, I mean, it helps us come gametime when we're playing against people who aren't as quick as [they are]," she said.

The CWA, however, feels that the rule's passing is essential to quell, what it calls a "disappointing" recent trend.

According to the statement, when Title IX was enacted, 90 percent of Division I women's athletic programs and women's teams, were headed by a female. But, in 2006, those numbers had plummeted to eight percent and an all-time low 42.4 percent, respectively.

To add salt to the wound the declined has caused, 82.3 percent of all intercollegiate coaches are men – while a mere 17.7 percent are women.

Those responsible for the proposal feel that prohibiting women's teams from scrimmaging with designated male-scout teams is the only way to increase the number of women active in women's college teams and to gain some of the ground they feel they've lost since 1972.

Tatham, on the other hand, wants everything to stay put.

"I definitely hope it stays the way it is," she said. "I don't want it to go away just because it makes me better as a player."

James seconds that.

"I hope the proposal falls through," he commented. "If it doesn't, then I'll have to go back to playing against men."

Domenic Poli is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

whosyourpadre.com

Does Your Group Need Money?
The UMass Amherst Alumni Association helps RSOs and other student organizations fund projects that will improve and enhance student life.
Awards are limited to $2,000 per applicant group per academic year.
Visit UMassAlumni.com for an application and grant guidelines today or call the Alumni Association at 545-2317.
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Deadline for the next grant review is Friday, February 9!

Stay Tan 'til the End of School!
BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
Spring Special!
Tan from NOW until Memorial Day for $99
63 University Drive • 549-1171

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF ON THE COMICS PAGE
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO

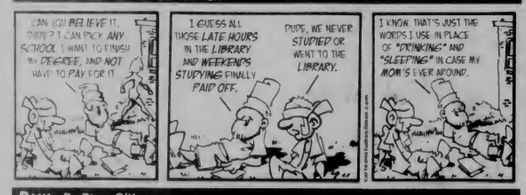
Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	3	9				8	5
		8	3		4	6
6	4						3	1
			4	2	3
				8
			1	5	6
8	6						9	3
		7	9		8	4
	9	4				1	7

Quote of the Day

"I am fast. To give you a reference point I am somewhere between a snake and a mongoose...and a panther."
-Dwight K. Shrute

Two Dudes By Aaron Warner



CAN YOU BELIEVE IT, DUDE? I CAN PICK ANY SCHOOL I WANT TO FINISH MY DEGREE, AND NOT HAVE TO PAY FOR IT.
I GUESS ALL THOSE LATE HOURS IN THE LIBRARY AND WEEKENDS STUDYING FINALLY PAID OFF.
DUDE, WE NEVER STUDIED OR WENT TO THE LIBRARY.
I KNOW. THAT'S JUST THE WORDS I USE IN PLACE OF "DRINKING" AND "SLEEPING" IN CASE MY MOM'S EVER AROUND.

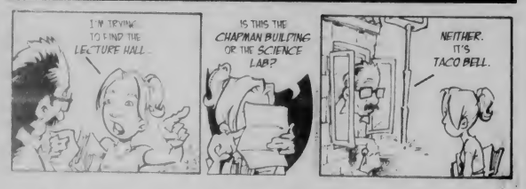
Paul By Billy O'Keefe

I KNOW YOU THINK A MAKEOVER IS THE ANSWER TO ALL YOUR PROBLEMS.
IT IS.
BUT I BET MORE WOMEN WOULD TALK TO YOU IF YOU WERE EMPLOYED
I'D BE AT WORK ALL DAY. WHEN WOULD I HAVE TIME TO PICK UP GIRLS?
SO BY YOUR LOGIC, IT'S THE JOBLESS PEOPLE WHO GET ALL THE CHICKS.
HEY, DO BETTER THAN I DO, I KNOW THAT MUCH.
SLAP!
YOU DO WORSE THAN THAT?
WHAT, THAT? THAT'S NOTHING. LOOK AT THIS!

Wombat By Neil Bryer

NOW I JUST HAVE TO SET THE 121.6GIGAWATTS
PLEASE TELL ME YOU DON'T HAVE ANY PLUTONIUM IN HERE
NOPE. I'M JUST GOING TO HAVE TO DRIVE AROUND UNTIL I GET STRUCK BY LIGHTNING
THIS WILL NOT END WELL

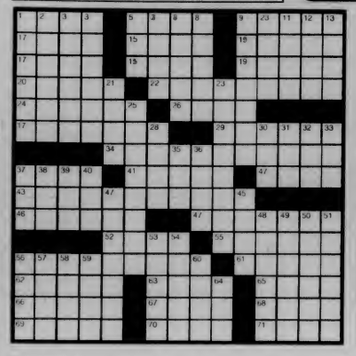
A Girl Named Joe By Aaron Warner



ACROSS
1 Fewer
5 Island near Corsica
9 Deep sleeps
14 ___ Royale, MI
15 Bambi, for one
16 One of the Astaires
17 Onion covering
18 Gathering of guys
19 Stop
20 Shy
22 Busy highway business
24 Western or Denver concoction
26 Pass out cards
27 Rhinoplasty
29 Radio station employee
34 Shiatsu
37 Circle segments
41 Sing like Bing
42 Puts on years
43 Myocardial infarction
46 Waterborne
47 "Ghostbusters" director
52 Clobber
55 Nod off
56 Maine river
61 Toy soldier
62 Legal defense
63 Going by yacht
65 Animal fat
66 Tippy vessel
67 Borscht ingredient
68 Uniform
69 Genuflection joints
70 Rational
71 Trial by fire

DOWN
1 Heavyweight Sonny
2 ___ Pie (frozen treat)
3 Covers in goo
4 Of old age
5 News chiefs, for short
6 Riga resident
7 Stubble
8 Bicker
9 Shrill cries
10 Keats specialties
11 Filthy part
12 As well
13 Ooze
21 ___ vu
23 Rhythms
25 Keyboard compositions
28 Actor Lancaster
30 ISS partner
31 Small pitcher
32 Metric measure
33 Affirmative answer
35 Flower holder
36 Leo's bellow
37 I figured it out!
38 Ump's relative
39 Infielder Ripken
40 No-seats available letters
44 Some cats
45 Stephen of sprite-chillers
48 Bathroom fixture
49 California desert
50 Islands in the Atlantic
51 Can skip
53 Wound surfaces
54 Book after Daniel
56 Load luggage
57 Zest
58 Five after four
59 Clarinet relative
60 Soon-to-be adult
64 Grabbed a bite

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



DELANO'S
TONIGHT: TEAM TRIVIA!
WEDNESDAY NIGHT: DJ/ KARAOKE WITH PAULIE V
PINOCCHIO'S FOOD SPECIALS DURING TRIVIA, MUNCHIES, PIZZA, AND MORE...
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"

UMass YOGA in Boyden 10
Spring 2007
Mon/Wed
2:00-3:15 pm Power Yoga
3:30-4:45 pm Yoga Basics
Tues/Thurs
1:00-2:15 pm Yoga Basics
2:30-3:45 pm Intermediate
4:00-5:15 pm Yoga Basics
Sign Up Now!
Semester Packages:
1 class per week $80
2 classes per week $150
Campus Recreation
Boyden 215 413-545-0022
umassyoga.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Gak can be used to make an astoundingly lifelike farting noise.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your whole day will seem like a show on the Lifetime channel.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Try as you might, you cannot resist the urge to wear Uggs. This is sad.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Find every other Taurus you know. Unite. Rebel. Earn your freedom.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will get a tiny, smelly dog named Scooter. You will love him to pieces.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
It is so hard to find a good sidekick.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You have impeccable taste in everything that you do.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
If you were the president, you would most assuredly be impeached.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Just go on pretending that the Patriots won the Super Bowl.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Most people have no idea what a scorpion actually is. It's an arachnid.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your belly is telling you to eat, you must heed its call.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
I know people say its good to smile a lot, but you're scaring the children.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
Now open for lunch!
HOURS
Sun-Wed 11am-2am
Thurs-Sat 11am-3am
Orders for DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Pleasant Street
Next to Fitzwilly Diner
Amherst, MA 01002

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Global Express Tours Spring Break Montreal Party Weekends from $99 Complete bus, hotels, & clubs. Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

Leave Massachusetts. Stay in the Country! Still time to apply for a Domestic Exchange! Deadline for fall 2007 and spring 2008 is March 1, 2007. Information Sessions Tuesdays and Wednesdays @ 4:45 in Goodell 614 through February 21 or call 545-5351

Apartment for Rent

Center of town. 1,2,3 Bedrooms hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Employment

Chicago Pizza. Drivers Wanted pay $7.00 per hour plus tips. Weekends required. Cashiers pay $8.50 per hour Weekends required Apply in person 150 Fearing St. Amherst 549-6073

Winter/ Spring positions available. Earn up to $150 per day. Exp not required. Undercover shoppers needed To Judge Retail and Dining Establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail 545-6837

Employment

Become a summer orientation counselor and make a difference in the lives of over 4000 new students. Additional information and applications can be found at www.umass.edu/newstudent/contact/studentjobs/counselor The application deadline is February 16, 2007

Moving. Local Moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Employment

Campus Representative Job Earn $200/4 hours of work Distributing Door Hangers in dorms If interested email: joerivard@collegemarketplace.com

Raft Guide Training Zoar Outdoor is seeking applicants for full and part-time summer jobs for raft guides, rock climbing instructors and kayak instructors. Raft Guide training runs weekends in March. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude toward learning new skills. Application deadline:Feb. 15th. For more information call Zoar Outdoor at 800-532-7483 or www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm EOE.

Employment

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Cape Cod Summer Near Hyannis. $150/week. 508-428-3456 CapePhotoArt@aol.com

Services

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Room for Rent

Room for rent in house minutes away from area colleges. $450 + Electric, Washer/Dryer. Call Ali 413-253-4929.

Travel

Global Express Tours Spring Break Montreal Party Weekends from $99 Complete bus, hotels, & clubs. Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

Submit your classified online at www.daily collegian.com

Leader
Bricklayer
Human being*

We believe community service is a part of our job description. Last June, we asked our US staff of 29,000 to take a day away from work and help their neighbors. We called it 29k/30.

Learn more about this project and others.

Visit pwc.com/community

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2007 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Spider extermination

Lowe's 19-point effort lifts Minutemen over Richmond

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Shutting down Stephane Lasme is always part of the game plan for teams coming into the Mullins Center. Actually containing him on his home court usually bodes well for the opposition.

But don't tell that to Chris Lowe.

The sophomore point guard scored a career-high 19 points in UMass' 72-56 win over Richmond on Saturday afternoon.

UMass	72
UR	56

"It's pretty nice, but we won, that's what counts more," Lowe said. "You can't worry about getting stats and everything; you just have to worry about getting W's."

"He played terrific today," junior Gary Forbes said about Lowe's play. "He got in the lane and made big baskets. They really couldn't guard Chris Lowe off the dribble. Not many people can, in the country."

Before Saturday, Lowe was just your everyday playmaking point guard, ranking fourth in the Atlantic 10 in assists with four per game. But his scoring touch took over against the Spiders (5-17, 1-8 A-10). Lowe's quickness and ability to drive to the net got him 12 tries from the foul line, an area UMass has struggled in all season.

The Minutemen went into the game as the worst free-throw-shooting team in the conference, shooting only 61 percent when they get to the line. They got there again on Saturday, and it didn't hurt them.

Lowe hit 11-of-12 free throws, while Forbes made 10-of-15. UMass finished the game 33-of-43 from the charity stripe, 16 percent better than its season average.

"We should be shooting free throws that much," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "I want to shoot free throws. It helped that some good free-throw shooters shot them today, but Steph's going to make them and Ray's going to make them.

"If we're getting to the foul line a lot, that means we're playing the way we want to play. So we're not running from the free-throw line at all."

The Minutemen (16-6, 6-2 A-10) outscored the Spiders, 42-25, in the second half after trailing by one, 31-30, at the break. UMass, and most notably Gary Forbes, dominated the boards all game. Forbes single-handedly outrebounded the whole Richmond team. His 16 boards outdid the Spiders' total of 13. Forbes posted his first double-double with the Minutemen on Saturday, adding 16 points to his totals.

The lead changed eight times, but a Lasme layup to open the second half gave the Minutemen a 32-31 lead, which they never lost. UMass started the second frame on a 17-6 run, but Richmond freshman Ryan Butler nailed a 3-pointer at the 10-minute mark to cut the lead to 49-44.

The Spiders didn't get any closer than that, and the "Put in Pennie" chants – referring to senior walk-on Matt Pennie – were heard throughout the entire final minute. And for the opposing team, that's the sound of defeat.

UMass looked dead in the first 20 minutes, trailing by one at halftime after Richmond fresh-

See M. BASKETBALL on page 6

Sophomore point guard Chris Lowe recorded a career-high 19 points in Saturday's win over the Richmond Spiders at the Mullins Center. Lowe ranks second on the Minutemen in assists with 80 on the season. He averages 6.6 points per game, and shoots 42 percent from the field.

Up and down weekend for Mass Attack

Loss to UMass Lowell leaves team guessing after beating BC

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts hockey team continued its giant-killing ways on Friday night, beating Boston College, 5-3, on the road, then returned to the Mullins Center on Saturday, only to drop its second game of the season there. This time it was 2-1 to last-place UMass Lowell.

UMass	5	UML	2
BC	3	UMass	1

This upcoming weekend the Minutemen won't be leaving Amherst. UMass (13-9-4, 10-7-2 Hockey East) welcomes Boston University to the Mullins Center on Friday night and then Providence on Saturday. Friday night's affair constitutes the annual "White Out Night" at the Mullins Center.

Instead of moving up to a third-place tie with Vermont, the loss on Saturday kept the Minutemen in the middle of the conference pack.

UMass opened the weekend in a big way at Conte Forum. The win against the Eagles was the first on the road for the Minutemen since 2003. Friday night's game began very similarly to UMass' tie with Boston University the previous weekend.

By the time the horn sounded to end the first, the Mass Attack already opened up a commanding 3-0 lead over the Eagles. UMass capitalized on all the chances the opposition gave it, for perhaps the first time this season. And BC gave UMass plenty.

"I think we got off to a real good start and came out of the gates fairly strong," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "We made some nice plays and played with a lot of energy."

The opening period was a struggle especially for BC netminder Cory Schneider. Usually one of the best goalies in Hockey East, the junior didn't look like it against the Minutemen. But going down on a 5-on-3 under a minute into the game didn't help Schneider's cause any. First, Brian O'Hanley was whistled for interference at the 24 second mark, then Joe Rooney was sent off for holding at 48 seconds.

Matt Anderson netted his fourth of the year 23 seconds before O'Hanley's penalty expired. Freshman defenseman Justin Braun fired a shot from the right faceoff circle that Schneider stopped and deflected to his right. The puck found its way to Anderson, who quickly slapped it into the open net.

Six minutes later, Braun beat Schneider for his second goal in two games. It was scored on a shot that was very similar to the one Schneider stopped the first time. Braun's slap shot floated in and beat the goalie on the left side without the help of a tip.

BC then had a chance of its own to steal some of the momentum away from UMass. Brett Watson and Alex Berry were each called for hooking, giving the Eagles a 5-on-3 opportunity of their own. Minuteman goaltender Jon Quick faced several shots on the sequence, but stopped them all – pouring more fuel on his team's momentum-fire.

Resurgent junior P.J. Fenton added his eighth of the year to cap the scoring in the period. He

See HOCKEY on page 6

Senior center Mark Matheson tallied an assist in Friday night's victory over Boston College. The former defenseman is third on the team in scoring with 19 points on 11 goals and eight assists.

Senior Forward Tamara Tatham scored seven points in the loss at St. Joe's. She added eight rebounds and four assists.

UM drops another Atlantic 10 contest

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Scoring five more field goals than your opponent will typically earn you a victory. That is, unless you turn the ball over 19 times leading to a 20-4 disadvantage in points off turnovers.

St. Joe's	72
UMass	65

The 16-point differential in that category, coupled with 13 fewer made free-throws was too much to overcome for the Massachusetts women's basketball team (12-11, 2-6 Atlantic 10) in its 72-65 loss to Saint Joseph's on Friday.

"We put them at the line too many times," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "Allowing them to go to the line 29 times is just far too many. When teams are scoring 22 points from the foul line against us, we're not

See W. BASKETBALL on page 7

Check out tomorrow's MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN for coverage of:
• Women's basketball
• Swimming and diving
• Track

MINUTEWOMEN DEFEAT BONNIES | PAGE 10

DISNEY GIVES CHANCE OF A LIFETIME | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 26 LO: 2 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 2007

UMass students and Delano's raise money for charity

The winning team poses with Mark Power, manager of Delano's. They received $1,000 in donation money to distribute among charities of their choice.

Students give back to the community

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Due to the recent riots on campus, the University of Massachusetts has been cast with a great deal of negative publicity. But Delano's, a local bar on N Pleasant St, has devised a way in which students can still have fun – but in a safe way that is good for the community.

Each Monday during the fall semester, Delano's held a trivia night – similar to Tuesday nights at the Harp – where teams would compete each week to accumulate points. The teams that finished in the top five over the 14-week contest got to choose which charities received the $2,000 donation put up by Delano's.

"Delano's put together a prize pool of $2,000 for the teams of students to compete for," said Mark Power, manager at Delano's. "All of the money goes to charity, and the teams get to decide where and how the money is distributed.

"They picked out some interesting charities to give some of the money to," he continued. "The rules are simple; it has to go to an Amherst area non-profit charity, and it can't be political or religious. But other than that, it's completely up to them."

The Andy B. Anderson Memorial Fund was a popular choice amongst the winning teams, receiving a total of $750 from three teams. The charity was named after Andy B. Anderson, a former UMass professor – nominated for Professor of the Year in 1989 – who passed away in 2001.

"Andy was a very popular professor and was always about teaching little kids to do outdoor activities," said Power. "It's a non-profit charity, and the money will go towards youth sports and educational activities. A lot of the groups chose to donate into that

See DELANOS on page 3

Team members who finished in the top five over the 14-week contest are shown above. Delano's raised $2,000 through weekly trivia night events, which the winning teams donated to local charities.

North Apartments fix heating system

BY JENNIFER HESHION
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Residents of the North Apartments on the University of Massachusetts did not receive a warm welcome back from winter break. A defect with the apartments' thermostats prevented residents from controlling the temperature of their rooms. The problem, which was discovered over the winter intermission, has been recognized as a manufacturer's defect by the Johnson Controls Incorporated, the company who installed the thermostats.

A thermostat defect prevented residents from using their heaters.

According to an email from Jim Hunt, Communications Manager for Facilities and Campus Planning, the initial estimated dates of repair in the North buildings were close to three months into the spring semester. But last Saturday, Johnson Controls downloaded a new program to the thermostat system, which allows tenants to adjust heat settings between 71 to 75 degrees.

UMass Housing Services agreed to set the thermostats to a constant temperature of 72 degrees until the defective devices were able to be fixed, said Hunt. Despite these efforts, the residents still complained that the air coming from the vents was below 72 degrees, despite the freezing temperatures outside. Many described the air coming from the vents as too cold with enough force to move the blinds and creating redundant noise.

Housing Operations decided that the only solution to the problem was to allow staff members access to the apartments to adjust the speed of the fans to provide heat for the bedrooms. Currently, there are seven volunteer apartments adjusted to a lower fan speed, which are being monitored until a plan is fashioned to adjust the others. According to the Housing Operations, students of the apartments seem pleased and say it makes a noticeable difference.

Staff members and contractors will adjust the remaining thermostats. Some of the seven volunteer apartment residents are reporting overheating, which according to Housing Operations, is caused by an open window or closed vent.

Residents are advised to notify the staff for overheating conditions, but only after they've double-checked for open windows and vents. By closing the vents, the residents are causing complications to provide the apartment with constant heat in the rooms of the apartment and creating stronger air flow in the adjoining bedrooms.

Students are urged to call their Apartment Living Advisor if they are receiving no heat in their apartments or to contact the North Offices.

CDC reports increase in children suicides

BY LINDSEY TANNER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO – New government figures show a surprising increase in youth suicides after a decade of decline, and some mental health experts think a drop in use of antidepressant drugs may be to blame.

Suicides climbed 18 percent from 2003 to 2004 for Americans under age 20, from 1,737 to 1,985 deaths. Most suicides occurred in older teens, according to the data — the most current to date from the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

By contrast, the suicide rate among 15- to 19-year-olds fell in previous years, from about 11 per 100,000 in 1990 to 7.3 per 100,000 in 2003.

Suicides were the only cause of death that increased for children through age 19 from 2003-04, according to a CDC report released Monday.

"This is very disturbing news," said Dr. David Fassler, a University of Vermont psychiatry professor.

He noted that the increase coincided with regulatory action by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration that led to a black box warning on prescription packages cautioning that antidepressants could cause suicidal behavior in children.

Fassler testified at FDA hearings on antidepressants during 2003 and 2004 and urged caution about implement-

See SUICIDE on page 3

UMass students take their shot at $10,000

Last Friday, hundreds of hopefuls gathered in the Curry Hicks Cage for the 7th annual Atlantic 10 ShootOut. Participants competed for their chance to win prizes, such as an XBox 360, an iPod, a catered Super Bowl party and gift certificates.

More obese teenagers receive gastric band

Crystal Kasprowicz is one of the few teenagers who has received laparoscopic gastric banding where an elastic collar is installed around the stomach to limit its size.

BY DAVID B. CARUSO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK – As the popularity of stomach surgery has skyrocketed among obese adults, a growing number of doctors are asking, "Why not children, too?"

For decades, the number of kids trying weight-loss surgery has been tiny. The operations themselves were risky, with a death rate of about 1 in 50. Children rarely got that fat, and when they did, pediatricians hesitated to put the developing bodies under the knife. Only 350 U.S. kids had such an operation in 2004, according to federal statistics.

But improvements in surgical technique and huge increases in the number of dangerously obese children have begun fueling a change of heart.

A group of four hospitals, led by Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center, are starting a large-scale study this spring examining how children respond to various types of weight-loss surgery, including the gastric bypass, in which a pouch is stapled off from the rest of the stomach and connected to the small intestine.

Three more hospitals have approval from the Food and Drug Administration to test how teens fare with a procedure called laparoscopic gastric banding, where an elastic collar installed around the stomach limits how much someone can eat.

The FDA has hesitated to approve the gastric band for children, but surgeons at New York University Medical Center reported in the Journal of Pediatric Surgery this month that the device holds promise.

The 53 boys and girls, aged 13 to 17, who participated in NYU's study shed nearly half their excess weight over 18 months, while suffering relatively minor complications.

Crystal Kasprowicz, of St. James, N.Y., said she lost 100 pounds from her 250-pound

See WEIGHT on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 77

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Eric Athas
MANAGING EDITOR Rob Greenfield
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherd Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamieson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPY EDITOR Adam Stamm
EDITORIAL EDITOR Tucker Merrick
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Dawn Picard
SPORTS EDITOR Jon Pelland
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Piotr
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Puddester
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Sidnee Towne
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Delluntis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Brendan Hall
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST SEMESTERS. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED. ADVERTISING REVENUE PROVIDES IN PART FOR THE PUBLICATION'S EXPENSES. ADDITIONAL FUNDING IS RECEIVED FROM A STUDENT ACTIVITY FEE. THE COLLEGIAN WAS FOUNDED AS THE INDEPENDENT IN 1890. IT BECAME THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1934 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLICATION BEGAN IN 1965. THE COLLEGIAN WAS REINCORPORATED AS AN INDEPENDENT IN JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 OR WRITE TO 113 CAMPUS CENTER, UMASS AMHERST, MA 01003.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Bellveau

COPY EDITOR
Jamie Mason

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Tiffany Van Langen

Woman charged in daughters' stabbings

BY SVEN GUSTAFSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHELBY TOWNSHIP, Mich. — A woman who police say was hearing voices was charged Monday with stabbing to death her two young daughters, whose bodies were found side by side in their home.

Jennifer Kukla, 30, was arraigned on first-degree murder charges in the slayings of Alexandria, 8, and Ashley, 5. She was ordered held without bail, and she could get life in prison without parole if convicted.

Police said that Kukla acknowledged killing her daughters and that alcohol may have been a factor.

Officers called to the home by one of Kukla's sisters on Sunday evening also found three dead Pomeranian dogs stacked atop one another inside a cage, as well as a dead pet mouse.

Investigators said they had not determined the motive for the slayings, which they said were committed Sunday morning.

"I don't think evil has an explanation, and it certainly doesn't explain itself," said William Cataldo, chief of homicide for the Macomb County prosecutor's office.

Police said Kukla had been hearing voices.

Kukla told the magistrate she had never been treated for mental illness.

Sheriff Mark Hackel said police found four large, bloodstained kitchen knives in the mobile home 30 miles northeast of Detroit.

The scene was "very difficult," Hackel said. "Even the officers were having a hard time with that one. That was one that left you with not much sleep last night, that's for sure."

An autopsy found that both girls died of stab wounds to the throat area, Hackel said.

The sister who called police said she found the door open and called Kukla's name. Kukla then "came out to the door area and she explained that she had banned the kids," the sheriff said.

Hackel said the sister told police she had visited Kukla on Saturday night to help clean the house out of concern for the children.

Doctor and deer collide on ski trail

CARRABASSETT VALLEY, Maine — Dr. Ray Stone had no warning before he was knocked off his feet last month while skiing down the Haulback Trail at Sugarloaf/USA.

"My first thought was, 'What hit me? ...a (snow) hoarder?' drunk skier? linebacker?'" Stone wrote in a letter to The Irregular, a weekly newspaper in Kingfield.

It was none of the above. A white-tail deer attempting to cross the trail crossed paths with Stone as he was making a turn.

"I just never saw this deer coming," Stone said Friday. "I was going pretty quick down the top half of Haulback, arcing from left to right and all of the sudden I just got knocked right off my feet and I was falling."

The deer also went down.

"Its legs were just pumping away really first, they never stopped moving," said Stone, a family practice doctor who lives in New Gloucester and works at Central Maine Medical Center in Lewiston.

The collision was witnessed by skiers riding in a chairlift, said longtime Maine skier and ski writer Dan Cassidy, whose story about the incident eventually prompted Stone to write in that he was the skier who hit the deer.

Cassidy, who has been skiing in Maine for 45 years, said he had never before heard of a deer-skier collision.

"Never, never, never," Cassidy said. "I've never even heard of anybody encountering a deer on a ski trail, especially an alpine trail. I've seen an animal, like a fox, come out on occasion but never a deer."

Stone recalled people hollering at him from the lift, which prompted him to raise his fist and pump it in the air to let them know he was OK.

Stone said the deer quickly bounced back to its feet and continued across the trail and into the woods.

"It never stopped running even though it was down," Stone said. "Luckily we just glanced off each other. I'm just glad the deer wasn't hurt."

Associated Press

Is your room more unique than this?
Do you have the BEST room?

Here's your chance to strut your stuff in the "Collegian Cribs" Contest for a chance to win a grand prize!

Submit up to three pictures online at
Arts@DailyCollegian.com

Deadline Feb.14 Voting beginning Feb.15

Checks out, plastic and e-pay in

BY JOSH FUNK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

OMAHA, Neb. — Richard Kesterson slid his debit card out of his wallet before the grocery store cashier rang up his total.

Like millions of Americans, he didn't even consider paying by check. Using a debit card or paying online through his bank's bill-pay system is easier, he said — and his bank keeps track of his spending instead.

"I haven't balanced my account in 10 years," Kesterson said.

Check writing has declined sharply since 1995. The Federal Reserve estimates that 49.5 billion checks were paid in the United States in 1995, that figure dropped to 36.6 billion checks paid in 2003, according to the most recent Fed studies.

The growing popularity of plastic is the biggest factor. Between 2000 and 2003, the number of debit card transactions nearly doubled from 8.3 billion to 15.6 billion, and the number of credit card transactions jumped from 15.6 billion to 19 billion.

Increasingly, checks also are being converted into electronic payments by merchants who prefer electronic transfers to dealing with the paper checks.

For Julie O'Neill of Omaha, her credit card is simply more convenient, and all her spending is compiled on a single statement at the end of the month. When it comes time to pay bills, she turns on her computer rather than digging for stamps.

"I procrastinate, so then I can go online and not have to go through snail mail," she said.

Together, credit and debit card use accounted for 43 percent of all non-cash payments in 2003, up from 33 percent in 2000.

In some cases, consumers may still write a check, but increasingly, merchants are scanning those checks and converting them to an electronic payment. The Federal Reserve counts those checks as electronic payments and not as checks; paychecks electronically deposited in employees' bank accounts are also included as electronic payments.

Converting checks to electronic payments allows merchants to get paid quicker, and it may help reduce the number of insufficient funds checks businesses have to deal with. Processing checks electronically is also cheaper. In 2003, about 8.9 billion converted checks were reported, accounting for about 11 percent of all non-cash payments.

At some stores that process checks electronically, such as Wal-Mart and clothing retailers the Gap and Banana Republic, the clerk hands the check back to the consumer with their receipt after scanning it and claiming an electronic payment for the store.

Consumers may not realize that many of the checks they write to utilities, mortgage companies and other businesses are also being converted to electronic payments when the companies receive them, said Terri Bradford, a payments researcher with the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City.

The decline in check writing, combined with the increase in electronic check processing, prompted the Federal Reserve to dramatically reduce the size of its check-processing department, whose operations are covered by the processing fees it charges for handling checks and electronic transfers. Since 2003, the Fed has closed more than half of its 45 check processing centers. By the end of 2008, only 18 will remain.

Checking writing isn't going away, though.

Some transactions are still better suited to checks, such as paying the kid who mows the lawn, making a contribution to a church to have a record of charitable donations at tax time, or payments such as real estate closings, Bradford said.

Demographics also plays a role. Joe Abboud, 90, wrote a check for his groceries at Hy-Vee recently because that's what he always does. He said he occasionally uses a credit card, but checks are just more comfortable.

Another grocery customer, Cheryl Carlson, said she uses checks to keep track of her spending. When she writes a check, she always writes the amount down in her register. With the debit card, that step is easy to forget.

"The only time I use my debit card is when I leave the checkbook at home," said Carlson, who is in her 40s.

Some business payments might also be better suited to checks, Bradford said. For example, writing a check instead of authorizing a wire transfer or making some other electronic payment may help a business better manage its cash flow because there is still some delay between when the check is written and when it is received.

"From a cash management purpose, I imagine some businesses would still prefer checks because of the float," Bradford said.

She doesn't expect checks to entirely vanish.

